The name "Bayer" stamped on tablets positively identifies the only genuine Aspirin—the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada.

Always buy an unbroken package of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which also sell larger "Bayer" packages.

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Mono-acetic acid ester of Salicylic acid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

KEEP YOUR SHOES NEAT

2 IN 1

SHOE POLISHES

PRESERVE THE LEATHER

Liquids and Pastes for Black, White, Tan, Dark Brown or Ox-Blood Shoes

The F.F. Dalley Corporation, Limited Hamilton Ont.

GENUINE DIAMONDS

CASH OR CREDIT.

TERMS: $1-$2-$3 Weekly

We trust any honest person.

Write for catalogue to-day

JACOBS BROS.

Diamond Importers

15 Toronto Arcade

TORONTO.

to the children for a nominal fee. The lunch carried by the children is better packed and prepared by mothers who are Club members. All the Clubs stand ready to help in this much needed improvement.

Many Clubs have provided musical instruments for their schools and the libraries of some are receiving consideration. The beautifying of the school grounds has also a place on the programme for the year in many communities.

NOVA SCOTIA.—In their school work, Nova Scotia has a new feature known as the rural Science Department, which is doing splendid work. They have 12 travelling teachers; each covering a district of about a dozen schools, establishing school fairs, school clubs, home garden contests, hot noon lunches, etc. There is a discouraging lack of good buildings and pleasant grounds. In some localities the Women's Institutes have installed sanitary drinking fountains and conducted sewing classes. The travelling teachers call upon the W. I. to keep their work going, between visits, and in other ways they work together.

These teachers circulate a Travelling Library, and "Magazine Tables" are encouraged.

Just now we are trying to introduce sports and supervised play into the rural schools. Here, too, the local women could secure leaders, equipment, and all the necessary accompaniments.

Often the teacher cannot give instruction in the home-making subjects. Here again, the women can come to the rescue. One woman might teach sewing; another, cooking; another, canning; another, first aid to the injured. The women can also induce men to give demonstrations in grafting, spraying, and seed selection. The good teacher will get this work done; but the average teacher will stick to her book subjects.

In some localities, the Institute has already organized school fairs, installed sanitary drinking fountains, and conducted sewing classes. Much yet remains to be done. Very few rural school buildings have hardwood floors, clean walls, good pictures, proper lighting, heating and ventilation. Outside, the grounds and buildings are unsightly, neglected and unsanitary. The children are unsupervised at the recess and noon periods. Here the good training of the home is too often entirely offset.

In some cases a new school house is to be built. If left to the men, they will put up the customary box shed with no thought of inside conveniences or outside architecture. The most hideously-colored paints will be used for both inside and outside decoration. Here, again, the women with their more artistic tastes must lead in the move for better and more attractive school premises.

SASKATCHEWAN.—Education in the foreign or "New Canadian" districts, is one of the chief problems. A director has been appointed to travel about among these districts, smoothing difficulties, and urging Canadian ideals in every way possible. Teachers' homes furnished, and with a plot of ground, are provided, as well as extra salary, in these sections.

The Department of Education has a staff of four who travel their Province, organizing Short Courses in Household Science in the schools. The noon hour hot lunch is being emphasized in their rural schools. An effort is now being made to arrange for Itinerant Household Science teachers to have charge of regular classes in four or five nearby schools. This is the first Province to have a duly qualified nurse on the training staff of the Normal School, to train the students so that they may carry out hygienic ideas later in their own teaching. The director of school hygiene, with a staff of nine nurses, covers the whole Province and considers in connection with their examination into the health conditions of the pupils, the hygienic conditions in rural schools and surroundings. Summer schools are also held with an aim to link up the teaching of Physical Culture with the Nurses' work. Library work in that Province is carried on under the Libraries Act and the Mechanics' and Literary Institutes Act. They have a system of travelling libraries to rural districts only, with over two hundred in operation at present. They also have libraries, with rest rooms in connection, established in public hotels. But it is felt that though they have the legislation, yet the library work of the Province is not well organized and needs interest awakened in it.

MANITOBA.—Has 74 consolidated schools already with from three to ten teachers in each. There are also a number of graded schools in the Province. The plan there has gradually won its way ever since 1905, when the first two consolidated schools were built. The Manitoba Board of Health, with 22 nurses working in connection with the Public Schools, co-operates with the Women's Institutes in carrying on Medical Inspection of their schools, the Institutes acting in an advisory capacity, although they often do, as a matter of fact, take the initiative, the work being actually done through the school board. Manitoba has made great progress along this line and now has about thirty nurses working in connection with the public schools of the Province, in addition to those in the city of Winnipeg. Exchange Libraries and Package Libraries have been started in Manitoba; the plan for this work is now being remodelled.

In BRITISH COLUMBIA, besides Government Travelling Libraries, there have been established in some centres, Women's Institute Libraries. The report of the Cowichan Women's Institute Library is given below:—

The Library was organized from a nucleus of about 600 books loaned by the city of Duncan.

ADDITIONS.—By Book Teas, gifts from members, friends and purchases. Have also the use of a Provincial Government Travelling Library, changed at intervals.

LIBRARIAN.—The librarian receives an honorarium. Books are changed four times a week at stated hours.

COMMITTEE.—The library is managed by a committee of eight, five ladies and three men, and a monthly meeting is held. The Committee select the new books.

BOOKS.—The books are kept in cupboards with wire fronts, and the cupboards are locked.

MEMBERS.—Members of the Institute pay 50 cents per year for the use of the library. Outsiders, including men, pay $2.00 per year.

FUNDS.—The money received for fees, after payment of expenses, is used for the purchase of books. We have now over 2,000 books.

NEW BRUNSWICK.—The Department of Agriculture gives to each institute which has carefully observed the rules, 6 volumes, four of which bear on Home Economics. Collections of special articles, newspaper magazine clippings, etc., are loaned to the institutes.

ALBERTA has three agricultural schools, Claresholm, Olds and Vermilion, where tuition is given free. The Women's Institutes of Alberta are interested in the scholarship idea, especially for girls. It takes the sum of two hundred dollars to send a girl to one of these schools for a year, this money being needed for sustenance and already two institutes—Daysland and Verdant Valley—have taken up the idea which was only introduced last year and Fleet is intending to send another girl this autumn. The institutes in Alberta have been very active for the betterment of the schools, providing play ground equipment, prints of the old masters, installing bubbler fountains, seeing that the school is cleaned and in many communities forming a committee to meet the teacher and to see that she has a suitable boarding place.

ONTARIO'S educational system has been held up as a model for many years, and recent legislation, additional financial assistance, aggressive work by inspectors, and a keener local interest and pride, have resulted in many new schools and the improvement of old ones, increased salaries, the introduction of domestic science, agriculture and manual training to a fairly satisfactory degree. Medical Inspection and the introduction of the hot school lunch are receiving Government aid and enthusiastic local support.

FROM NOVA SCOTIA.
THE seventh annual convention of the Women's Institutes of Nova Scotia held its opening session in the Science Building, Truro, on Tuesday evening, June 22nd.

Dr. Cummings, Principal of the Agricultural College, extended a hearty welcome to the visiting delegates. He spoke of the important work carried on by the Institutes of Nova Scotia and of his sincere interest in all that they undertook.

A cordial welcome to the town of Truro by Mayor Coffin was fittingly replied to by Mrs. A. S. MacIntosh of Oxford, on behalf of the visiting delegates. Mrs. MacIntosh esteemed it a privilege to attend the convention and hoped all would return home with renewed vigor and enthusiasm to live up to the Institute motto: "For Home and Country."

Mrs. J. P. Landry in a pleasing way extended a welcome from Bible Hill Institute, which welcome at the close of her remarks took the form of a social time when refreshments were served and the delegates were given ample opportunity to meet new and renew old acquaintances.

Wednesday morning the meeting opened by the singing of the Institute Ode, Miss Macdougall, Superintendent of Women's Institutes presiding.

Mrs. Hatfield of Berwick, was appointed Secretary of the Convention. Then after the registration of delegates who numbered about eighty and came from all parts of the Province, reports from branch institutes were heard. Various reports showed a very active interest in all institute work, and one listening could not but be amazed at the amount of work done through the agency of this organization.

Thirteen of the institutes are yet in their infancy but the report from these showed what a wonderful work could be accomplished in a short time. Many of these societies are interested in public schools, particularly regarding sanitary conditions, the improvement of grounds, school libraries and circulating libraries. Others have undertaken the putting up of community halls, memorials for soldiers who fell in the world war and local improvements, such as beautifying the cemeteries, etc.

The reports were laid aside for the morning and the Superintendent submitted her report. There are now sixty-four Institutes in Nova Scotia, thirteen of these were organized this year. Ten of these were organized by Miss Macdougall, namely: Mahone Bay, Indian Point, Bible Hill, Carleton, West Gore, Glace Bay, Medford, Bear River, Cambridge Station, Onslow, Gaspereaux, Point Edward and Wentworth. Total membership of Institutes, 1567. During the past year the sum of $10,000 was raised, thirty-five Institutes were personally visited during the year. During the winter ten courses in Home Nursing had been arranged for in connection with the St. John Ambulance Association, 241 students being registered. The course consisted of six lectures which proved highly instructive. Miss Macdougall told of her visit to the New Brunswick Institute Convention last fall; also of attending the Federation of Women's Institutes held in Toronto last November. Plans are under way to have a number of demonstrators at different points in the Province to give instruction in canning, and information as to food values. Also a short course to be held July 6-16th for "teen age" girls.

Miss Macdougall urges Institutes not to think that because their funds are low they are doing nothing; but always remember there are things of infinitely more value than money. Institutes should send in monthly reports regularly and promptly, as this is the only way for her to know just what each Institute is doing. After a short discussion of the work brought forth in this interesting report a nominating committee was appointed: Convener, Mrs. Hamilton, Mahone Bay, Mrs. MacIntosh, Oxford, Mrs. Jackson, North Sydney.

Miss Saunders, Superintendent of Women's Institutes for Prince Edward Island brought greetings and told of the work carried on by their various societies. As in other parts of Canada, Prince Edward Island had found this a hard year. The war work was over and it seemed hard to get the peace-time work started; but gradually they are finding that there is work to be done in peace as well as in war. The societies in the sister Province are striving for the same ends as in Nova Scotia. Some school buildings have been practically made over; sanitary conditions changed, the open bucket was done away with and in some cases pumps

The Secret Delight of a Youthful Skin

THE woman who values her appearance may enjoy the blessings and the secret delight in the possession of a velvety skin.

Try this simple formula—"A little CREME ELCAYA rubbed gently into the skin; then if you need color, a very little rouge spread carefully over the cheeks before the cream is quite dry; and after that the film of Elcaya face powder over all."

CRÈME ELCAYA

is a delightful, non-greasy, disappearing toilet cream that makes the skin like velvet.

In jars at 35c and 75c

MacLean, Benn & Nelson, Limited
Montreal
Distributors for Canada

The favorite for 20 years.
Sold all over the world.

Made in CANADA by
THE ELCAYA Co. of CANADA, Limited
James C. Crane, Pres't.
Montreal, Canada

By Appointment
The Greatest Chefs in the World
use LEA & PERRINS'. They know its unvarying, supreme quality and strength. No other sauce can approach its piquancy and fascinating flavor. It is the original Worcestershire—the premier Sauce of the World, used by people who appreciate the best.
Don't accept substitutes.

Lea & Perrins

The CANDY Cathartic
The Whole Family says: "FINE"
Cascarets
PLEASANT LAXATIVE
THEY WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

Horlick's Malted Milk

Used successfully everywhere nearly 1/2 century
Made under sanitary conditions from clean, rich milk, with extract of our specially malted grain.
The Food-Drink is prepared by stirring the powder in water. Infants and Children thrive on it. Agrees with the weakest stomach of the Invalid and Aged. Invigorating as a Quick Lunch at office or table

Ask for Horlick's And Get The Original

Mend Your Pots and Pans
VOL-PEEK Mends Cooking utensils, Granite ware, Aluminum, Enamelled-ware, Tin, Copper, Brass, Iron, etc. Easy to use, no tools required. Ready for use in 2 minutes. Saves a pot for 25¢ a cent. 25 cents at your Dealer, or postpaid by Vol-Peek Co., Box 2024, Montreal, Can. Agents Wanted.

SINCE 1870
SHILOH
30 DROPS STOPS COUGHS

"La Camille"

Reg. Trade Mark, U. S. Pat. Office.

FRONT LACE CORSET

Represents greatest value
and true economy

Never was price less reliable as an indication of value than today. In "La Camille" corsets you are sure of true value—good materials and careful workmanship that mean long wear and economy.

For comfort, fitting qualities and figure improvement, "La Camille" Front Lace has no equal, because of its three exclusive features:

Ventilo Back—a soft, ventilating section that relieves pressure along the spine.

Ventilo Front Shield—a protective insert under the laces permitting closer adjustment.

LOX-IT Perfect Non-Tilting Clasp Fasteners—the last word in fasteners—holds securely without gaping or pinching.

"La Camille" Corsets are on sale at good stores all over Canada. Write and we will gladly furnish name of nearest dealer.

INTERNATIONAL CORSET CO.
118 to 136 Union St., Aurora, Ill.

A Variety of Dishes

By
MARION HARRIS NEIL

Cheese Omelette.—Separate the yolks of three eggs from the whites. Put the yolks into a bowl and the whites on to a plate. Add to the yolks of eggs one tablespoonful of grated cheese, one teaspoonful of chopped parsley, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper, and work these well together with a wooden spoon until of a creamy consistency, then fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in an omelette or small frying pan, and pour the mixture into it. Stir the mixture round with a wooden spoon until it begins to set, stirring mostly on the surface and not scraping the bottom of the pan. Then hold it a little longer over the fire until the omelette is nicely browned on the under side. Slip a knife under it and double over first from one side and then from the other towards the centre. Then turn it on to a hot dish, sprinkle over with grated cheese, and serve as quickly as possible.

Vegetable Dish.—Peel enough potatoes, thickly sliced, to make five cupfuls, and prepare the same amount of shredded cabbage and sliced onions. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan and add the onions, allowing them to cook for ten minutes. In the bottom of a large fireproof dish arrange a layer of the sliced potatoes, cover this with a layer of cabbage, and then one of onions, seasoning each layer well with salt, pepper and paprika and sprinkling over a little chopped hard cooked egg. Continue these layers until the dish is full. Mix one tablespoonful of cornstarch or flour with three cupfuls of cold milk and pour this over the vegetables. Then place the dish in a shallow pan of water and bake it in a moderate oven for one and one-fourth hours, adding more milk during the cooking, if the first supply cooks away. Serve in the dish it was cooked in.

Fruit Salad.—Dissolve one and one-half tablespoonfuls of gelatine, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar in two cupfuls of hot water, then add the strained juice of two lemons. Cut three bananas, three oranges and one cupful of preserved cherries into small pieces, being careful to remove the seeds from the oranges, and mix it with one-fourth cupful of chopped nut meats. Pour the gelatine mixture over the fruit and set in the refrigerator until firm. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves.

Bean Savory.—Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan, add two tablespoonfuls of milk or cream, one cupful of cooked or canned beans, two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Toss over the fire until thoroughly hot, then add one beaten egg and cook for a minute or two longer. Serve hot garnished with small croûtons of toasted bread.

Poached Egg With Cucumber.—Poach the required number of eggs, drain them, allow them to become cold, and trim them neatly. Take the same number of china scallop shells, and put a layer of thinly sliced cucumber at the foot of each, and then lay a poached egg on the top. Mask the eggs with thick mayonnaise sauce and garnish round with a border of chopped parsley.

Raisin and Celery Sandwiches.—Cook two cupfuls of chopped raisins until soft in a little water, add two cupfuls of chopped celery, one tablespoonful of orange juice, and sufficient mayonnaise or boiled dressing to moisten. Spread between unsalted crackers. Put between two crisp lettuce leaves.

Broiled Corn.—Take sweet, tender corn, cook in boiling water for three minutes, or steam for fifteen minutes, then lay on a well greased broiler and toast over a hot fire, or under a gas broiler, turning the ears, as they need it, until they are brown. Serve hot with butter.

McClary's

Make good stoves and Cooking utensils.

Maxwell "Home" Washer

—the washer that not only washes the clothes mechanically, but does it better than they can be washed by hand. There's no "skimping" by the "Home" Washer—light or heavy articles are cleaned with equal thoroughness. There's no tearing of delicate fabrics, either. And it does the work in half the time! No more long-drawn-out, back-breaking washdays anywhere there's a Maxwell "Home" Washer. Just put the clothes in, and the rest is hardly work at all—because the "Home" Washer is so light, noiseless, and easy-running. Enclosed gears make it absolutely safe: "springs" make cover lift easily. Made of best quality cypress, handsomely finished. Runs by hand-power or water-motor. See it at your dealer's.

MAXWELLS LIMITED, Dept. "K" St. Marys, Ont. 34

Know The Joy Of A Beautiful Complexion Hair And Hands

They may be yours if you make Cuticura Soap and Ointment your every-day toilet preparations. The Soap cleanses and purifies, the Ointment soothes and heals redness, roughness, pimples, and dandruff.

Soap 25c, Ointment 25 and 50c. Sold throughout the Dominion. Canadian Depot: Lyman, Limited, St. Paul St., Montreal. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

PEACH'S CURTAINS and Linen Buyer's Guide Free. Money Saving Items. DIRECT FROM THE LOOMS. Unique opportunity save difference in exchange 25c on dollar. Curtains, Nets, Muslins, Caseement Fabrics, Crotonnes, Household Linens, Hosiery, Underwear, Blouses. 63 years reputation. Write to-day for Guide. S. Peach & Sons, 667 The Looms, Nottingham, England.

THE JOURNAL JUNIORS' CLUB

Conducted by
BERTHA E. GREEN

MY Dear Club Members:
It was a delight to get so many letters from you, and I have been very busy, indeed, registering all your names. Do you know any boy or girl who would like to join us? If so, get him or her to send the name to me.

I welcome each letter I receive from you, for it is through the letters and the stories that we get to know each other. The contests are for you all, and each one should enter, for then all will be helping to make our club just what we wish it to be—the club of those who always do their best.

There are still a number of our old members who have not reported their names and addresses. We are particularly anxious to hear from everyone as soon as possible. Can you not help us in this by letting me hear from you before this month ends?

And when the roll of old and new members is complete, we can feel that in each number of the Journal we can meet with not one member absent. We can do this in October — shall we?

Your sincere friend,
BERTHA E. GREEN.

Prize List for July.

1. "An Old Umbrella Tells Its Story." Awarded to Morley Brandreth, age 15, Strathroy, Ontario.

2. Camera Contest. Awarded to Ruth E. Hubbert, 152 Westminister Ave., Toronto.

3. "A Day at the Lake." Awarded to Mary E. Jackson, age 11 years, R.R. No. 1, Malton, Ontario.

PRIZE PHOTOGRAPH
"My Favorite Spot in the Woods."

Sent by RUTH E. HUBBERT,
Toronto.

Oh! would your footsteps stray along the path so shadow deep,
Where winsome flower-faces in welcome shyly peep?

—Bertha E. Green.

A DAY BY THE LAKE.

By Mary E. Jackson.

went inside. It seemed hours before he came out again. The storm had ceased, and the sun was shining brightly. Hundreds of people were passing by, and I was so lonely and afraid. Bob and some companions hurried past me, and I was forgotten and lost in the big city. Oh, how frightened I was, and I felt as though my big green eyes must be full of tears—unshed tears—when a friendly hand took hold of me.

"What in the world is this doing here?" said a voice I knew belonged to a particular friend of Mistress Nell and myself. Often had we three taken long walks together. Often I felt I should close my big green eyes, at times, during these walks, but somehow I couldn't. Especially did I feel so when Mr. Norman was asking some very particular questions, or acting in a way very puzzling to me; but dear Nell seemed to like it and approve of it, so, of course, I concluded it was quite all right. Here was Mr. Norman again, and I was so glad he had found me, and I felt safe in his care.

Hark! Whose voice is that? It is Nell's—and in this old shop, too.

"Mr. Menderman, have you my umbrella recovered yet? It is to be blue silk to match my suit, you know, and we must have it next Wednesday, for we leave on our wedding journey that day, and I cannot go without my beautiful Green Eyes, you know."

WE had many expeditions this summer. The last one was an excursion to Silver Lake. The day set was Thursday, July eighth. Quite a party was invited—father, mother, Mrs. Brown and her children, Mr. and Mrs. Fish and Thirza, the Jones family, my friend Nora, and myself.

Great preparations were made. Baskets were packed with sandwiches of all kinds, cake and fruit.

We motored to a woods which surrounded the lake, and left the cars in a garage. We found there were several ways to reach the lake. We chose the quickest and easiest—a narrow path through the woods. This wood was quite a wild place, just as Nature's work had left it. The path was rough, with stumps of trees and rocks in it. We were all glad when the lake—a beautiful sheet of water lapping its grassy shores—came into view.

The grown-ups went fishing, while the young folks set out the lunch. We children went in search of wild flowers.

Soon we were called to lunch. What a jolly time we had, laughing and chatting as the eatables disappeared as if by magic. Dinner over, the party scattered. We had brought our dolls, and now chose shady spots to play "house." One kept store, using leaves for money, and twigs for articles of sale. Next we went for a

Home-Made Cookies for Kiddies

The kiddies just can't help it — they've got to eat 'tween meals. Why, what's the use of having 'tween meals if there's nothing to eat? With

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

you can make delicious, old-fashioned cookies that are—O so good! Wholesome too. "Ought to see Daddy eat 'em—My!" Royal is especially desirable in baking for children because it

Contains no Alum Leaves no Bitter Taste
Never Disturbs Digestion

Cocoa Cookies

|                          |                                 |
|--------------------------|---------------------------------|
| 4 tablespoons shortening | 2 cups flour                    |
| 1 cup sugar              | 3 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder |
| 1/4 cup milk             | 1/2 cup cocoa                   |
| 1 egg                    | 1/4 teaspoon salt               |

Cream shortening and sugar together; add milk and well-beaten egg; mix well; sift flour, baking powder, cocoa and salt together and add. Roll out 1/4 inch thick on floured board; cut with cookie cutter. Bake in hot oven about 12 minutes.

Cookies

|                            |                                      |
|----------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| 3/4 cup shortening         | 1 teaspoon vanilla extract or grated |
| 2 cups sugar               | rind of 1 lemon                      |
| 1/4 cup milk               | 4 cups flour                         |
| 2 eggs                     | 3 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder      |
| 1/4 teaspoon grated nutmeg |                                      |

Cream shortening and sugar together; add milk to beaten eggs and beat again; add slowly to creamed shortening and sugar; add nutmeg and flavoring; add 2 cups flour sifted with baking powder; add enough more flour to make stiff dough. Roll out very thin on floured board; cut with cookie cutter; sprinkle with sugar, or put a raisin or a piece of English walnut in the center of each. Bake about 12 minutes in hot oven.

Send for New Royal Cook Book—it's FREE. Contains 400 recipes just as delightful as these. Address Royal Baking Powder Co., St. Lawrence Blvd., Montreal.

SUPERIOR
6-lb. IRON
No. 12

Superior

An Iron That It Will Pay You
To Look For

Perhaps all irons look alike to you—in reality there is a wide difference.

The "Superior" heats rapidly and uses a minimum amount of current. It is perfectly balanced so that it will not tire the arm, and although it is so beautifully finished, yet it is very sturdily made and will last for many years.

The "Superior" Iron is entirely made in Canada—the purchaser gets fullest value. Every "Superior" Iron is fully guaranteed for twelve months. Insist on the "Superior." Your dealer has it or can get it from his wholesaler.

NOTE—For heavy domestic work use "SUPERIOR" small size tailors irons, 10 or 12 lbs.

"SUPERIOR"—all that the name implies

MANUFACTURED BY

Superior Electrics, Limited
PEMBROKE, ONT.

"The Largest Sale of Any Medicine in the World"

A Poor Complexion

Most women regard as a serious affliction, and it certainly lessens the attractiveness of any woman; but sallow skin, blackheads, pimples and blotches are really signs of a disordered system. It does not do much good to try to cover up disfiguring blemishes with cosmetics. Nature has a better way. It has been proved by the experience of thousands of women that the underlying CAUSE of poor complexions

Can Be Driven Away By

timely use of the world's most famous family remedy, Beecham's Pills. Besides, the same troubles which cause a poor complexion will also cause a loss of health and of bodily vigor. Beecham's Pills assist nature. Try them, and you will find yourself so well able to digest your food that your body will be nourished and strengthened. Headache, backache, jumping nerves, low spirits and unnatural suffering will cease to trouble you when your system has been cleared of poisonous accumulations and your blood purified by

BEECHAM'S PILLS

SOLD EVERYWHERE IN CANADA

IN BOXES, 25 CENTS AND 50 CENTS.

Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 61.)

put in the schools. Hot lunches were served during the cold weather, and prizes offered in School Fairs. In closing, Miss Saunders wished the Institute of Nova Scotia a prosperous and successful year.

Miss Jennie Fraser of New Glasgow, who for several years was the Superintendent of the Women's Institutes, was the next speaker. She expressed great pleasure on being able to be present at this convention, and remarked about the wonderful growth of the work since she left. Miss Fraser on looking over the programme, commended Miss Macdougall for the splendid selection of subjects and speakers. She especially mentioned community singing and thought the possibilities in connection with the practice of community singing were unlimited and that too much stress could not be laid on its revival. She considered Child Welfare a subject that could not fail to interest every woman. The State had taken it up, every woman should be interested.

The "Value of a Library," was the subject of an address given by Mrs. John Stanfield of Truro. Mrs. Stanfield before taking up her subject welcomed the visiting delegates in the name of the Women's Council of Truro, and gave a short outline of the work done by them.

Taking up her subject we found Mrs. Stanfield very much interested in the work of libraries. She explained how the library at Truro had been established and of how anxious the children were to take advantage of the privileges offered them in this way, and gave out many suggestions that will prove helpful to Institutes which are interested in the establishment of libraries. A library is not a collection of books but places before the individual what will apply best to his or her needs.

Dr. MacMurphy called the Women's Institutes the salt of the earth. They know of the needs of the Community and are able to meet them. Canada does not know enough about her children. The importance of registration should be strongly impressed. In London, England, at the last record, all but 91 out of 1,000 were saved. New Zealand has lowered her child mortality to 38 per 1,000. Canada can do it; why not try? Dr. MacMurphy claims the greatest insurance of the child's life was the nursing of the baby by the mother. Artificial feeding of children, she claims, is one great cause of infant mortality. During the four years and three months of war, Canada lost 60,000 men; in the same period infant mortality, under one year, was not less than 70,000.

The Department of Child Welfare has been established to remind the nation of the supreme value of the child, and she would too, remind them of the value of home life. All present were very attentive to Dr. MacMurphy, who handled her subject with rare ability.

Thursday, meeting opened with Miss Macdougall presiding. Report of nominating committee was given by Mrs. Hamilton, and the following recommended as conveners of standing committees:—

Agriculture.—Mrs. L. A. DeWolfe, Truro.

Home Economics.—Mrs. Collins, Port Williams.

Education.—Mrs. L. A. Moore, North Sydney, N.S.

Health.—Mrs. Lovitt, Bear River, N.S.

Publicity.—Mrs. G. A. McIntosh, Oxford, N. S.

Legislation.—Mrs. Wallace, West Gore.

Financial.—Miss Annie Stuart, Grand Pre, N. S.

Discussion re Provincial organization opened by Miss Annie Stuart with the matter of Finance. The organized women of Canada are doing a wonderful work and need funds. Miss Stuart thought a set sum might be voted by each Institute to help bear the expense of the Federation.

Miss Macdougall explained that the Federation was not a department, but the women, and is not financed by the Government although they had received some help. The Dominion Minister of Agriculture was approached by a committee to ask for a fund and they were received graciously and promised support in this way.

The following members were appointed to work with Miss Stuart on

YALE

Build Now and Build Right!

Specify
"YALE" BUILDERS' LOCKS and Hardware for Positive Security, Correct
Design, Long Service

Canadian Yale & Towne
Limited
ST. CATHARINES, ONT.

Baby's Own Soap

Many Canadian Beauties owe much of their exquisite complexions to the creamy, skin-healing, fragrant lather of "Baby's Own Soap".

Its Best for Baby
and Best for You.

ALBERT SOAPS LIMITED,
Manufacturers,
MONTREAL.
F-7-20

Macey

For Sale by
All Leading Furniture Dealers

Write for our "MACEY STYLE BOOK" We mail it free.

CANADA FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS LIMITED
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO

America's Pioneer
Dog Medicines

Book on
DOG DISEASES
And How to Feed

Mailed free to any address by author
H. Clay Glover Co., Inc.
118 West 31st St. New York City

the Financial Committee. Mrs. Ogilvie, Glace Bay; Mrs. Balcom, Lawrencetown; Mrs. Meisner, Bridgewater; Miss MacDonald, St. Andrews; Mrs. Sollow, Port Maitland.

Miss Campbell of Ottawa addressed a later meeting on the subject of the Soldiers' Settlement Board. Mrs. Muldrew, who was to have taken this subject being unable to be present.

Miss Campbell explained in a very full manner the workings of the board—how, when the period of reconstruction was first considered it was realized that many of the returning soldiers would never be able to take up the work in which they had been engaged before the war, and so the Government determined to make it easy for those who wished to go on the land. To that end money is loaned to returned men wishing to buy a farm at the low rate of 5% with a period of twenty-five years in which to pay this back. Money is also loaned for equipment, payable in six years. The man chooses the land, submits his plans to the Government and his claim is investigated. If married, it is necessary to obtain the wife's consent to settle there, or he is not allowed to take it up. Many are willing, of course, to do so, but many are not used to farm life and it was to help these soldiers and their wives that the Home Branch was established, with Mrs. Muldrew as Director; Miss Campbell as Assistant, and soon there will also be District Directors. In the East, this work is just beginning, but it is expected that at least one permanent director and possibly two, will soon be appointed in each Province. Miss Campbell gave an interesting account of work done in the Western Provinces. There are many soldiers' wives, the great majority of them from the Mother Land, who are in need of assistance and companionship. Institutes are urged to look those up and make them feel at home. Miss Campbell wished the Women's Institutes all possible success and thanked them for help received.

Mr. E. H. Blois, Superintendent of the Society for Neglected and Delinquent Children was the next speaker. The work of this society is of a special character, they are caring for 2,000 children with 1,000 as actual wards. Mr. Blois told of conditions existing in the Province which are almost unbelievable. Their object is to prevent cruelty and although not generally known, there have been many cases in the Province since this Society was started in 1912.

The matter of prohibition was brought up by Mrs. Ogilvie of Glace Bay. Much discussion followed and a strong feeling predominated that the responsibility rested with the women. Are we going to allow liquor to come into our Province without protesting? That is the big question we are to decide for ourselves. Get the voice of different Societies and then take action as a body and register their opinion.

The closing meeting dealt with health topics, Dr. F. V. Woodbury of Halifax, organizer of the travelling clinic, telling of their good work and Dr. McArthur of Truro, emphasizing the importance of the care of the teeth, while Professor Brittain of the College of Agriculture, Truro, made a variety in the programme by an interesting address on bee-keeping. Altogether the convention was declared a stimulating success.

LES CERCLES DE FERMIERES.

MOST institute members in Canada are interested in "Les Cercles de Fermieres" of Quebec, which are clubs among the French-speaking women of Quebec corresponding to the Homemakers' clubs among the English women. The first Cercle was organized in 1915, and they are under the directorship of Mons. Desilets of the Department of Agriculture at Quebec. The number of Cercles now number forty, with a membership of two thousand seven hundred, showing a very healthy growth during their four years of existence.

The work of the Cercles embraces the study of home problems such as methods of cooking, laundering, care of children, home care of the sick, etc. Much attention is given also to vegetable and small fruit gardening, poultry raising and bee-keeping. The provincial government assists by furnishing seeds, shrubs, settings of eggs and hives of bees.

Demonstrators visit the clubs for periods of three or four days, giving demonstration lectures.

At the first convention held last year in October, the Cercles organized provincially with Madame Camache, Pont Rouge, as President; Vice-President, Mme. Bouchard, Ste. Anne de Chicoutimi; Sec.-Treas., Mlle. R. Couture, Department of Agriculture, P. Q.

NOTES FROM ONTARIO.

Coulson's Hill. membership very scattered and regular meetings appreciated. Held pillow shower last fall for Hospitals, 12 were given to free ward in Toronto General and balance (12) to Davisville Convalescent. Another shower will be planned when poultry is disposed of in the fall. Have decided to waste no feathers while there is need of them. When canning and preserving, each member has arranged to set aside one jar each time. Collections will be made and sent to Muskoia Hospital, also packing butter the same way for same purpose. Membership 25, four new members added at meeting.

Stroud, attendance 20, supporting a French orphan for three years, and working for Consolidated School (where it is needed very badly). Ladies are taking the initiative support of French child for three years.

Mitchell Square remain organized for the benefit of the social times they enjoy. Members are widely scattered, but succeed in having pleasant times.

Guthrie Institute and Church are one and the same. Community work is taken up by the church, have a Girls' Club, part of church property being used for park, and basement for social centre. It is purely rural and all belong to the church, but enjoy the Institute for the broader outlook upon other lines. They are Highland Scotch people who speak Gaelic, and offer free and genuine hospitality. Have undertaken care of French child for one year.

Delta has a splendid Branch. They are going to undertake the care of a crippled boy in the village and will give him a business education. He is 16 years old and an orphan.

Phillipsville is a new Branch but a splendid one. They are full of energy. They have twelve quilts on hand which they are quilting for the Refuge at Athens. Each lady donated a flour sack or two for the linings of the quilts. This is a good idea which might be passed along, when even factory cotton is so expensive.

Morton, a new Branch, has a splendid start. They are interested in a Community Hall.

An Institute was organized at Bond Head, in South Simcoe; also at Deloro in North Hastings.

Bishop's Mills Institute is a very active one. Last year they lighted the village with gasoline lamps, also built a cement walk. In connection with the latter they had community bees and the men assisted them greatly. The members of this Institute have been influential in interesting all in the neighborhood in a Consolidated School.

A Girls' Club, or Junior Institute, has been organized in Perth. The Secretary is very much interested in the factory girls and has planned a programme which will be of value to them.

MacDonald Corners bought a piano for the Agricultural Hall, and have already given a play to help pay for it.

The members of the Perth Institute have made a special visit to the Public Library for the purpose of finding out just what magazines were on file, and found that there was only one Canadian magazine there, all others were published in the United States. This investigation will result in a change being made.

The Janey Canuck Girls' Institute (in Lanark County) has fitted up a Hall as a Community Centre Hall. It is interesting to note that this Hall was not being used at all before the girls took it up. They provided Victrola, Basket Ball, Crokinole Boards, etc., for amusement. This last winter they started a Junior Literary Society which takes in three school sections.

Claxton Institute women helped the men in the neighborhood to buy a field of three acres for athletics and they are going to build a community hall. The field is already levelled and sodded. They are giving $10 in prizes for essays on "Thrift"—$2.50 to each four schools. This Institute is doing much for the new wing of the Almonte Hospital. They have given a linen shower, feather pillows, sheets and pillow slips, $10 in cash and at each meeting take up a collection for it.

Try
This Wonderful New Use!

Give to your floors the same beautiful, piano finish that Liquid Veneer imparts to furniture and woodwork, a finish entirely free from oil, clean as when new and highly polished.

This is how you can do it: Take your floor mop, no matter if it be oily and dirty and has been leaving a greasy film on your floors, sprinkle the mop with and notice the instant transformation.

LIQUID VENEER

First, a misty film is observed on the floor. This quickly disappears and leaves a finish so clean, so dry, so highly polished and so greatly improved that it fairly looks like new.

What Has Happened?

Liquid Veneer has neutralized and overcome the oil. The once greasy oil mop has suddenly been transformed into a real cleansing, polishing and sanitary device. Your floor fairly rivals your piano in cleanliness and brightness.

Liquid Veneer, 30c, 60c, $1.25. At any department store, drug, hardware, grocery, paint or furniture store.

Buffalo Specialty Company

Buffalo, N.Y.

Bridgeburg, Can.

Made in Canada

The Home She Loves PRESERVE IT!

AS the years go by the love of home increases.
Keep its beauty safe from the wear of time.
Protect its surface.

There is a Ramsay Paint and Varnish that will give you the right protection. Its quality is the result of seventy-eight years' experience.

Write us for color schemes

Save the surface and you save all—Paint & Varnish

A. RAMSAY & SON COMPANY

Makers of Paint and Varnish since 1842

MONTREAL

Toronto

Vancouver

3

RAMSAY'S

THE RIGHT PAINT TO PAINT RIGHT

Your Closet Bowl— Spotless and Sanitary

Scrubbing the closet not only mars and roughens the surface of the bowl but is an unpleasant and unnecessary task. Sani-Flush is different. All that you have to do is to sprinkle a little Sani-Flush into the bowl, according to directions—flush, and the work is done. Stains and markings of every sort disappear like magic and the bowl is left shining-white as new. The trap, which no amount of scrubbing can reach, is as clean as the bowl. Sani-Flush will not hurt the plumbing.

HAROLD F. RITCHIE & CO., Ltd.

10-12-14 McCaul Street
Toronto, Ontario

Sani-Flush is sold at grocery, drug, hardware, plumbing and housefurnishing stores.

Sani-Flush

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

Cleans Closet Bowls Without Scouring

The Journal Juniors' Club

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 63.)

row on the lake, but had to hurry in, as rain began to fall.

The party gathered hastily for our walk through the woods. The storm broke so violently that we were compelled to take refuge in a cottage near the edge of the woods.

When the rain ceased, we hurried to the garage. The whole party came home with us to supper. Everyone was tired and wet, but happy.

THE FLOWER STAR OF HOPE.

By Bertha E. Green.

IT was in the summertime that the star was born. It did not make another light high in the heavens to help make night more beautiful. Its birth was lowly, and unheralded, yet one might say that it brought to this earth more joy and hope and beauty than many a shining, starry world so far away.

The river wound its mirror ribbon between fields, past marshes, through forests, always lazily, and silent. It made no rippling music, no dancing laughter such as came from the brook which joined it; it flowed on its even, quiet way, one long, unbroken mirror. Sometimes it ran over sandy shallows where tiny minnows played; sometimes the banks were reed-fringed, and there were nests close hid amidst their tangles.

In a curve of the bank, by an open field, the waters seemed to rest altogether, and here beneath its shelter the star was born.

There were wild iris, with their flat, sword-like leaves, that in the summer days bloomed in royal purple. Patches of duck-weed grew in floating patches, like green rafts, here and there. Below the surface, within the slimy ooze of the river bed, lay the heart of a plant, and as it rested there, the plant-heart yearned for better and for brighter things. To it came bits of sunbeams, their light softened as they drifted downward through the green waters. To the plant-heart came whispers from swaying rush and waving iris, of soft, warm south-winds. The little leaves of duck-weed whispered, too, as they turned joyous faces to the sun and the passing clouds.

And the heart of the plant yearned for all these things which it had never seen; a great longing grew, to rise and to behold all these beauties of the air-world. So it was, that with the longing came the effort, and from the plant-heart was sent forth upward a strange, round stem that balanced a fan-like leaf. The stem grew, the leaf rose, and at last floated upon the surface of the river. This was the first step of the plant to reach the day. Another stem and another leaf grew upward as had the first, and still another one. Then came a day when a stem was pushed toward the light, bearing a round, green ball, which in time floated beside the leaves.

This was the summertime—the warm sunshine, the soft winds, that come to make the dreamy days. The round ball stirred, budding, unfolding, till there lay upon the waters a snowy blossom-star with a bright heart of gold.

The new-born star gazed at the summer sky and found it beautiful. For in the sunshine the plant had reached its heart's desire.

If the summer-world was a joy to the flower-star, the flower itself made that world more beautiful for others. The birds sang to it, the soft winds played their sweetest melody as they passed. For it was in the summertime, and all the world was fair.

Not far from where the flower-star was born lay a city, and in it lived a boy, Bertram, the son of a laborer. Bertram's father hoped and planned that his son might be a smith, but the boy had far different longings, and his day-dreams were of pictures. The doors of the great cathedral were always open, and the lad often sought the quiet of the church, and gazed at the wonderful frescoes on its walls. Could his dreams ever come true?

A bit of charcoal, a whitewashed wall, something or someone nearby for a model, and Bertram could sketch, true to the least line.

But all this was thought waste time by the lad's father, who did not, because he could not, understand that the making of beautiful things is just as great, and as needful, as the making of ploughshares, or the care of oxen.

And it was in the summertime when Bertram was sent alone to the river-bank to cut the sword leaves of the wild iris. All morning he worked faithfully; when noon came he ate, and drowsy with the heat of the sun, he stretched out on the cool grass by the river's edge, and fell asleep.

An hour passed, and Bertram awoke, then, as he brushed sleep from his eyes, a white water-lily gazed up at him. It was the flower-star.

Bertram waded into the water and plucked the lily, its long stem slimy and mud-covered. As he held the flower, and its fragrance came to him, into the lad's mind there came a thought, a hope, and then at last a plan. So, with the flower in his hand, Bertram went home to his mother. She understood and encouraged his plan, as she so often had his dreams. A sheet of coarse paper and a few crayons were procured, and then, with his heart in his work, Bertram drew a sketch. It was the river, reeds and the wild iris, and there, amidst them, the white water-lily. It was this sketch that an eager, anxious boy carried to a great artist in the city. And that was many years ago.

There is a large hall in a great city, with galleries that branch from it, and all the walls are hung, at a certain time of the year, with paintings of artists of fame in many countries.

In one year, among the rest hung a picture of the summertime, of a mirror-river, of reeds and wild iris, and upon the shore a barefoot boy gazing at a white water-lily held in his hand. This was the picture that all wished to see; some drawn there because the story of the picture's beauty had been told. There were others, too, who came that they might look upon the work of the great artist, Krause.

And now to you the tale has all been told, how from the longing of the plant came the flower-star, how from the water-lily hope came to Bertram, then success. For the painting in the great hall was the work of him, who, as a boy, plucked the white lily on that summer day so long ago.

CONTEST FOR SEPTEMBER

Boys and girls up to 12 years. Not more than 300 words about the picture you like best, and why.

RULES

Name, age and address must be written on each entry.

Write on one side of paper only.

Members under 12 years, please write on ruled paper.

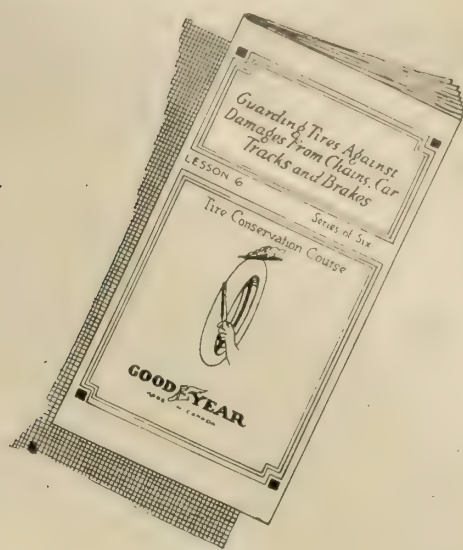

Stamped, addressed envelope must be enclosed for return of photographs.

Closing date, the 24th of September.

Address all entries to Journal Juniors' Club, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto, Canada.

Lessons in Tire-Saving

The Goodyear Tire Conservation Course, in six lessons, is a miniature encyclopedia of tire-saving, outlining for the benefit of the motorist the things he should do to prevent tire injuries, and to cure those injuries if they do occur. Its specific purpose is to help squeeze the very last mile out of tires.

The course parallels the service of the Goodyear Service Station Dealer. He, also, will explain to you the prevention of, and the cures for, tread cuts, under-inflation, wheels out of line, sand blisters, fabric breaks; he will supply you with Goodyear Tire Savers, which will prolong the life of your tires. He can test your wheels for alignment. He can calculate the proper air pressure for your tires. The motorist who utilizes this service is getting extra mileage—lower cost-per-mile—than the motorist who buys on a price or discount basis.

In the local Goodyear Service Station you will find the Goodyear Tire Conservation Course displayed in the holder shown here. Ask the dealer for your set.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of Canada, Limited

All-Weather Tires are All-Wheel Tires

Carhartt Overalls

You can rely on Carhartt Overalls, madam, to please the menfolk and give you full value for your money. For example, some overalls have the double seams only where they are seen—my Carhartt Overalls are double seamed throughout. Some manufacturers use "seconds" and "job-lot" fabrics; I use first-grade denim and khaki entirely. Most overall suspenders are hard to handle; my interlacing suspenders cannot slip off the shoulders nor get separated in the wash. My overalls are made in generous sizes, with plenty of room for free action. They have all the comfort devices a man requires in overalls—and the price is reasonable. Each pair carries my unqualified guarantee.

Hamilton Carhartt
President.

HAMILTON CARHARTT COTTON MILLS,
Limited

Toronto Montreal
Winnipeg Vancouver

Manufacturers of Men's Overalls and Work Gloves and Carhartt Allovers for Men and Boys

TRADE MARK

A Consideration of Wherewithal the Baby Shall Be Clothed

Clothing and Other Things

By DR. LAURA HAMILTON

TODAY I received a letter about a very particular baby. I might almost call him a grandchild because his mother has been one of my girls since she was little more than a baby herself. She says: "I find I haven't very much spare time these days. My neighbor next door teases me, believes I take in washing. An old lady three doors away watches for the baby's washing every morning, and if I am late she wonders what has happened. She calls Douglas 'the clean sweet baby,' so expect I must live up to the reputation. Now that he has started creeping I want to make a few dark slips, for I wash three or four dresses a day besides petticoats. It takes such a lot of time."

Now just listen to that! Three or four dresses a day and petticoats! And a boy baby too! And this after all my educating! I feel like using a lot of good old College slang, but of course it would not look nice in print.

I hope to have opportunity to reply to this letter before the writer sees THE JOURNAL, but if I do not I know she will forgive my publishing it when I tell her she has provided me with such a splendid text for this particular sermon.

And now we will have a very homely chat about the actual garments that it is customary for babies to wear. And the changes that I am going to suggest to you are not mere desk talk, or theory, but have been honestly tried out and proved not only feasible, but beautiful, and healthful.

We will consider first the following factors as having a great bearing on the question on hand, to wit: Nine-tenths of the mothers of to-day are without any help, and even if a laundress be obtainable the majority would most wisely prefer to do baby's washing themselves. Materials of all sorts are increasingly expensive. The rapid growth of a little child makes its garments of no service after a few months. The fewer garments a child or anyone else wears the nearer to natural conditions are they and therefore the healthier. The women of to-day have been and are still under an intense nervous strain. The very atmosphere seems surcharged with irritating currents. It therefore behooves us for the sake of the children, for the sake of the world to simplify our methods of living in every possible way, to take—rather to make—time to get close to Nature, and to Nature's God, to plan to keep ourselves from being too tired to laugh and play.

Second, let us consider the baby's garments piece by piece.

First, then, comes the band. Now the function of the band is to keep the dressing of the cord in place, and later to hold a little pad on the part till it is quite healed and forms a pretty dimple. The band or bandage has no other real use, though many have been attributed to it. So when the navel is properly healed the first band may with advantage be discarded. The best material to use for this garment is a union goods of wool and cotton mixed, or else a soft piece of flannelette. It should have been washed and ironed. I consider it much better to leave it in the piece, and let the nurse in charge tear it into lengths and width to suit the babe when it arrives. This band should not be hemmed or stitched or ornamented in any way. Imagine hemming a bandage for a surgeon! It is well to have at least three of these bands, and when not in use they should be kept neatly rolled just like any other bandage.

When the first band has been laid aside, the woven band of wool and cotton or wool and silk mixture should be used. This buttons on the shoulders, and has diaper tabs back and front. Do not buy these of pure wool. With care three of these should suffice. They should be bought a size at least too large. At present their price is very high. If you are lucky enough you may get "seconds" or slightly soiled goods, either or both of which answer perfectly well, since they must be washed anyway before you can put them on the babe. The diaper tabs may be reinforced by stitching some soft material on the under side. Wear on them may be saved by always pinning them between the folds of the diaper instead of on the outside.

BEFORE leaving the subject of bands let me relate an experience I had long-anteceding my study of medicine. I had undertaken the care of a mother and babe after the first week of the baby's life. I was as much interested in babies then as now, though I had not quite so much "book learning" in the matter. This was a beautiful, planned-for baby. Everything should have been perfect about it. It was "wanted," welcomed, loved. It was being nursed. There was plenty of milk. Its parents were healthy, happy young people. There was nothing in the physical or psychic atmosphere of that home to work on the baby's nerves. Yet that baby would vomit, would have colic, would scream miserably, as if in pain. A week or more went by. Its mother and I were almost in despair. Then one day owing to some disarrangement of things the baby's nursing time arrived just when she was all undressed for her bath, and rather than have further disorder she was nursed, wrapped up in a shawl, and laid on a big bed in a sunny room, while I attended to half a dozen things that happened all at once, as they do sometimes. That baby fell asleep in the sunshine. There was no vomiting, no crying, no fuss of any sort.

Then I proceeded to do some thinking, and I confess in some fear and trembling, for I was not sure of the temper of the doctor with whom I was dealing. I substituted one of her daddy's big soft silk handkerchiefs, loosely folded and very loosely pinned for the baby's band; noting as I did so that there was a fine little "rash" under where the band had been. It had not been tight either. Two happy days went by. The little mother inquired how I had mesmerized the baby. Then came the doctor, fortunately a woman. In considerable uncertainty I confessed my sins, to be told that the lady always had had her doubts of those bands anyway, except as dressings for the cord, and to go ahead, I had done very wisely. That baby never wore the regulation band again and was noted for her sunny good temper.

The next article of clothing is the diaper. The days of beautiful linen diaper cloth have faded into the past for any except babies of very wealthy parents. Even our old friend and standby, flannelette, has become aristocratic in price. As far as I am concerned I would be quite independent of either of them, for I consider that the material par excellence for "diddies" is supplied by old sheets, the skirts of worn flannelette nightgowns, even the "tails" of worn shirts. Such material is soft, absorbent, clinging, and warm. These are the qualities required, and it takes weeks of washing to bring new material no matter how fine to just the degree of pliability that the old stuff has at once.

Two dozen diapers should be ample. You can manage with one dozen of the small ones if you are careful. You will have to have large ones later anyway. It is little short of barbarous to fold a big clumsy new three-fourths yard of cotton up again and again till it is small enough to pin on a wee baby. Moreover it will make them bandy legged, and so uncomfortable you cannot expect them to be contented.

In making diapers try and have the square exact, and do not hem the edge, but turn down once and secure with herringbone, feather stitch, or blanket stitch. If you are determined to hem them, being possessed of some abnormal idea of tidiness, then let it be by hand, and don't have the rough edge of the double machine hem in the folds to hurt those soft little legs.

The diaper should be pinned with three pins in front, and one little flat one behind. If it is folded the usual method in three cornered shape. There is another fold that is preferred by some and is certainly better for plump boy babies. The diaper is folded long, and brought up between the legs, and pinned at each side, making a sort of little sack, with the legs coming out at the two lower corners. Whatever way you pin it as the baby grows, be sure it neither rubs, nor yet forms a wet cord chafing one groin, the while the child is as naked as any little darkey under the equator.

As soon as the child gets on his feet the diaper should be discarded for tiny drawers. The nicest material for these is blanket flannelette. One yard will make six pairs or more. It is two yards wide. You should have at least six, either gray or white. Make them quite plain and draw long stockings up over the legs in the cold weather.

PALL MALL

Famous Cigarettes

Cork Tips and Plain Ends
1/3 in London 30¢ here

-at the Tea Hour

THE shirts should be wool or silk, and cotton, mixed. Never buy all wool. They are too warm, and will shrink while the baby grows. Forms may be bought on which to dry shirts and also stockings. These are easily made if any one is clever with tools.

Shirts are best long sleeved and opening down the front with buttons. Buy two or three sizes too large. Don't let the simpering little know-nothing behind the counter persuade you that "they say" that shirts of all sorts of fancy styles or tiny sizes are best. Such goods are too expensive to get only in order to use them for wash cloths in a few months.

Socks or booties are of no use for little babies at any time. In cold weather get long woollen or mixed stockings. In warm weather the feet are better bare, unless they feel cold to the touch. One or two pairs of socks are enough at a time, and will last till grown out of, if the forms for drying are used. Otherwise they may hurt the little feet after they have been washed a couple of times.

Next in the regulation outfit comes the barrowcoat or flannel, petticoat, a useless, expensive garment, troublesome to make and to keep clean, and usually with a shrunk spot at the back that spoils its chance of being remodelled after the baby is "shortened."

In the same category as the above, except for dress occasions, we may put petticoats of all kinds. They are not any use as warmth producing garments. They certainly increase the discomfort of the babe in hot weather. They get wet when the diaper is wet without being a protection. Nevertheless they re-

There is no reason for the clothing of babies and children altogether in white. I am sure judging from their later actions, could you consult their individual and personal tastes they would decidedly condemn the custom.

Beautiful little dresses may be made from dull blues and fawny chambrays. One can make such a dress in a couple of hours. In cutting these kimono dresses there is no difference for boy or girl, but the trimming of the boy's dress may be made to come down the front on the left side from shoulder to hem, while the girl's may outline a yoke or go down the middle or almost any other way the fancy desires. The boy's dress a little later has a belt low down below the waist, the girl's does not need a belt at all. Little bloomers to match the dresses are in order after two or three years old.

The coat may be made from a kimono pattern, too. For common, every-day usefulness nothing surpasses corduroy, and here it is possible to indulge one's fancy for white without being extravagant. Later, when shabby, the first coat may be dyed for play.

Of course every mother wants a couple of dear fine little white dresses and fluffy petticoats, but such should be kept strictly for visitors, etc. No mother with thought for the baby's best interests will wash several white dresses and petticoats daily. Nor need she sacrifice the baby's sweetness to her economy. He would be just as sweet (or sweeter) without any clothes at all providing he were clean.

Remember every bit of fatigue, every quivering nerve is not without its answering effect on the sensitive little be-

A PATRIOTIC PARADE

These little girls are from the Foundling Hospital, London, England, and were photographed as they marched past Prince Albert in the Parade of League of Empire in Hyde Park.

quire as much attention in the laundry as dresses.

For the tiny babe instead of the barrowcoat an easily made and cared for footwrap is formed from a square of material, union wool and cotton, or flannelette. It may be one yard or three-fourths yard square. One corner is cut off, bias, giving an edge about eleven inches or less in length. This is bound with a piece of goods on the straight. The other edges may be finished as suggested for the diapers. The cut off corner forms the waistband of the little garment, and is pinned up under the baby's arms, later it gets down to the "waist." The two other edges are pinned down the front, and the remaining point is turned up envelope fashion and pinned to the middle of the front where the edges meet. This keeps the feet quite cosy, and at the same time gives plenty of room for movement. Four of these wraps are sufficient, and the four corners cut off if fastened together with a fancy stitch will make a pretty little kimono jacket.

For the little baby the flannelette dress or nightgown is quite sufficient clothing. Of course it is then wrapped in a shawl or wee tied quilt. There should be no "dress occasions" for such a little babe, so none need be provided for. Later and on through the months when he is learning to walk, the little dress is quite enough, the foot wrap having been discarded for warm diapers and stockings, or little drawers as described above.

Little dresses are easiest made and laundered, kimono style, and this admits of quite enough variation and trimming to satisfy any reasonable love of such fancies. The simpler in line and style the clothing of a child the more beautiful, for the child itself is far too lovely to need adornment.

ing you must handle continually. So sacrifice much to preserve your own buoyancy of body and spirit, and be sure that in the years to come your baby will thank you for what your wisdom has given him.

When the baby begins to creep, did you ever think of making an absurd pair of overalls out of a pair of your own stockings? Cut from the top about four or five inches down the back seam, and join the two stockings together, put an elastic through the hems, and cut off the feet but leave plenty of length so that they will come right over the little boots. Now if you pin up the little dress, pull on the overalls, and in addition put on a short little coat of some sort, for it is often draughty on the floor, you may put Master Baby on the floor with safety, and when you pick him up only his face and hands will need washing, and the toes will be in his shoes.

There is no better place for baby than on the floor, except out on the grass. He cannot fall off you know. He learns so many things. He can exercise those growing muscles in a way quite impossible on some soft or confined place.

There is so much more one could say on the subject of clothing, but I have given you the ideas, now you can work them out.

Remember, simplicity is the great ideal. It is not the embroidery on the baby's dress that will make the real difference to him, but the soothing power of the steady nerve in the hand that touches him. Not the shining smoothness of many little well ironed garments but the shining health of his mother's eyes as she smiles above him, while her arms can hold him oh so strongly and steadily. Better coarse or even ragged garments than coarsened mind or ragged nerves. Let us put first things first.

GENUINE

"GENUINE" SUCH IS HER SMILE AND WONDER NOT, FOR SHE IS ENJOYING GENUINE

MAPLE BUDS

FOR YOUR PROTECTION EVERY PIECE OF THIS DELICIOUS SOLID CHOCOLATE IS STAMPED WITH THE NAME
"COWAN"

SCORN SUBSTITUTES.

The Silver
You Prize

Your silver should be cleaned gently — with much care — with soft cloths — with a smooth, creamy polish that will not mar its brilliant finish.

Ideal Silver Cream

Preserves the beauty of your silver. It can neither scratch nor stain; it will not stick in the chasing. Smoothly, gently but surely it removes all tarnish. It is the Ideal Silver Polish. IDEAL SILVER CREAM is also invaluable for cleaning cut glass, gold plate, mirrors, brasses, copper and statuary.

At Your Dealer's.

CANADIAN POLISHES LIMITED, HAMILTON, CANADA

The Most Famous Talcum in the World

"Just any kind of Talcum" is not good enough for baby's tender skin, for such generous quantities are required that a pure, safe powder is imperative.

MENNEN BORATED TALCUM—the original—has been the standard nursery powder for forty years. Doctors and Nurses and Mothers all the world over recommend it, because of its quality and purity.

Moreover, Mennen's original formula has never been successfully duplicated.

So that whatever Talcum you use yourself—you choose wisely when you insist on MENNEN BORATED TALCUM for Baby.

MENNEN TALCUM POWDERS

MENNEN TALCUMS—all with the original borated formula—include a variety to satisfy every need. Borated, Violet, Flesh Tint, and Cream Tint, each charmingly perfumed; and the new Talcum for Men, a boon after shaving.

THE MENNEN COMPANY
Factory: MONTREAL

Sales Office:
HAROLD F. RITCHIE & CO., Limited
TORONTO

The Journal Puzzle for September

By TOM WOOD

"Know Your Own Country."

On the leaves of this sprig of wild grapevine are pictured the names of eight islands—or groups of islands—which are to be found in Hudson Bay. Can you name them? The letters comprising the monogram in the lower right corner, when properly arranged, spell the name of the birthstone for September. Can you puzzle it out?

Two prizes will be given—first, two dollars, and second, one dollar—for the best solutions, judged according to neatness and accuracy.

All are eligible to compete. Answers must be received by September 20th to be included.

Correct Solution of the July Puzzle.

- |              |               |
|--------------|---------------|
| 1. Wish      | 6. Lad        |
| 2. Armada    | 7. India      |
| 3. Tramp     | 8. Lady       |
| 4. Entrap    | 9. Youngsters |
| 5. Raspberry |               |

First prize awarded to Jessie E. Craise, Bass River, Kent County, New Brunswick; second to Blanche Horton, Botha, Alberta.

Address Puzzle Department, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto.

When you Perspire

You are bathed in Acids and Salts. Your skin becomes soft and sensitive, and friction makes it raw.

You chafe.

MENNEN KORA-KONIA will bring you blessed relief.

It is a healing, antiseptic powder, which covers the tender places with a thin protective film which will not readily wash away.

Relieves chafing
Prevents chafing
Dries up sore spots
Prevents sunburn and blistering
Cures sunburn

The Babies' friend

When little legs are raw, it cleans up diaper rash like magic.

Its silky protective film and medicinal virtues soothe and comfort.

Get it for yourself, get it for the family—and get quick relief.

At all Druggists

One of the Mennen Family.

THE MENNEN CO.
Factory Montreal

Sales Office
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd.
Toronto

How to overcome the havoc wrought by sun, wind and dust

THE khaki-colored complexion, the nut-brown V of skin at the throat that you so blithely acquired this summer will gradually pale and disappear.

But the exposure that caused this tan often inflicts deeper, more permanent injury on the delicate cells of the skin.

Repeated sunburn over-stimulates the oil glands and gives the skin a greater tendency to shine. Wind coarsens the texture of the complexion. Dust works deep into the pores and irritates them.

However, with a little intelligent care you can overcome these ill effects.

How to overcome the tendency to glisten induced by sunburn

To overcome the tendency to shine that repeated sunburn brings, you must counteract the over-secretion of oil. This oil may be absorbed and discouraged by instant contact with a good face powder. But to bring results you must apply the powder in such a way that it will stay on the face. If powdering is to be at all lasting, the thing to do is always to apply a powder base. For this a special cream is needed, a cream which disappears instantly and will not reappear. Pond's Vanishing Cream does just this. It is made entirely without oil. The moment you apply it, it vanishes, never to reappear in an unpleasant shine. Before you powder take just a little Pond's Vanishing Cream on the tips of your fingers. Rub it well into your face; now powder. Pond's Vanishing Cream holds the powder to the face twice as long as ever before and banishes the wretched shine that has been troubling you.

How to overcome the coarseness due to the wind

The coarseness due to the wind may be gradually overcome by the use of a special greaseless cream during the day to soften the skin and protect it from further injury.

Pond's Vanishing Cream contains an ingredient famous for years for its softening effects. Before every outing, apply a bit of Pond's Vanishing Cream. At once it disappears, leaving your skin softened and protected from further injury. It will gradually make your skin finer and finer in texture.

How to remove dust from the pores

Dust is the worst enemy of your skin. It quickly works deep into the pores, darkens and irritates them. Worse than this, it often carries into the skin various germs which cause skin troubles. To restore clear color to the skin and bring it back to normal,

Do not live in terror of the powder coming off, revealing a shiny face. Hold the powder on with the right greaseless powder base.

Motoring can permanently injure your skin. Before you go out in the sun, wind and dust protect your skin from their ravages.

you must give the pores a deep cleansing. For this you need an entirely different cream—a cream with an oil base—to dissolve the dust. Pond's Cold Cream has just the amount of oil to work deep into the pores and thoroughly cleanse them. Before you go to bed and whenever you have been exposed to unusual dust and grime rub Pond's Cold Cream thoroughly into the skin, and wipe it off with a soft cloth. In a few weeks your skin will be clearer in color, finer in texture.

About once or twice a week, massage your face with Pond's Cold Cream. It has just the smoothness that makes it perfect for massage.

Stop today at any drug or department store and get a jar or tube of these two creams. They are 50 cents each. Every normal skin needs both. You will be surprised to discover how quickly they will enable you to overcome the injury of sun, wind and dust.

Deep into the pores the crafty dust-specks work. You need a different cream to get them out—a cream with an oil base.

POND'S Cold Cream & Vanishing Cream

Made in Canada

One with an oil base and one without any oil

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY!

POND'S EXTRACT CO., 150-a Brock Ave., Toronto

Please send me, free, the items checked:

A free sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream
A free sample of Pond's Cold Cream

Instead of the free samples, I desire the items checked below, for which I enclose the required amount:

A 5c sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream
A 5c sample of Pond's Cold Cream

Name .....

Street .....

City..... Prov.....

IN TOWN AND COUNTRY

ALL YEAR 'ROUND

CREX
GRASS RUGS
TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
MADE IN AMERICA

The Ideal Floor Covering

WHEN buying a piano a woman asks for a certain kind of piano. She knows before she buys it just what kind of a piano she wants and why.

It is just as important in buying grass rugs to insist on getting the genuine CREX. There is the same relative difference in tone and quality.

CREX rugs are sanitary. Light in weight yet strong in body and made to withstand ordinarily hard usage. Easily handled and as easily cleaned they lighten the burden of housekeeping while their low cost is in marked contrast to cotton and woolen coverings of the lower grades.

CREX rugs are adaptable for any floor. With a wide variety of sizes and patterns in solid and beautifully blended colors to choose from perfect harmony can be had with the decorative scheme of any room.

Beware of imitations, some of which are even made of split or crushed straw.

Patronize and encourage home industry. Buy CREX rugs that for more than twenty years have graced the floors in millions of homes—modest and pretentious alike.

CREX is easily said and easily read. The name woven in the side binding provides an ineffaceable identification mark.

Handsomely illustrated catalog showing actual colors and sizes of the three CREX weaves—DE LUXE, HERRINGBONE and REGULAR—mailed free on request.

CREX CARPET COMPANY
212 Fifth Avenue New York

Look for name in the edge of side binding

CREX CREX CREX

It's your protection and our guarantee

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 7.)

Well, I'm with you," said Tony decisively. "I hate to spoil their fun, but there's a limit. They can't treat thorough-breds like these in that way. What's your scheme?"

"Just this. Leave the girls with me, and you drive in and tell that bunch the girls got wise to what was waiting for them, and insisted on staying overnight at Barlow's. That's nine miles out, and there's no telephone; so, if you're as good a liar as you used to be, Tony, you can make it stick."

"Leave it to me," grinned Tony, "I'll look after your team while you go and break the news."

The situation was soon made clear to the girls. A letter from Mr. Harrigan, per F. H., introduced the bearer as Mrs. Frushing, who had kindly consented to meet Miss Ingraham at Soda Creek and have that young lady as her guest until the wedding.

"I was on my way to town when I heard what they intended doing, so I decided to put a spoke in their wheel. Now put on your coats—that blue dress would identify you as far as Fort George, Miss Ingraham—and hop into my democrat. Tony'll shift your suitcases."

The girls bade farewell to their chauffeur, thanking him effusively for the enjoyable ride he had given them. Tony grinned his delight at the praise, paid a charming compliment to Miss Ingraham, and sped on his way with a last injunction from Mrs. Frushing to "lie like the very deuce."

"Where are we going now, Mrs. Frushing?" asked Mollie as the bays trotted along the road.

"To Soda Creek, of course. That's the last place in the world they think you'll be to-night. We'll stay at a boarding house I always patronize, instead of at the hotel," answered that good lady.

The scheme worked to perfection. With a little necessary coaching the two girls passed themselves off as Miss Roberts and Miss Thomas, school teachers on their way to Quesnel, and old friends of Mrs. Frushing.

After supper Mrs. Frushing suggested that, as the girls were probably tired after their long ride, they would defer discussion of their plans until the morrow.

"You'll probably want to go to bed early," she said, "so don't stand on any ceremony. As for me, I'm going to primp up a bit and take in that dance. It isn't often I get a chance like this."

"I just love dancing," sighed Mollie.

"I just love dancing," sighed Bessie, looking hard at Mrs. Frushing. "Couldn't you get invitations for a couple of school teachers bound for Quesnel, please?"

"You don't need invitations if you come with me," answered Mrs. Frushing, "but you're taking a chance of being recognized, and if you are, good-bye to peace and quietness."

"But nobody here has ever seen us," urged Bessie, "I'm sure it would be quite safe."

"There'll probably be a crowd there from the Hundred and Fifty, and some of them may have you spotted." Noticing a look of incredulity on the faces of her companions, Mrs. Frushing added, "Oh, it's nothing to go twenty-five or thirty miles to a dance in this country. Still, if you change your clothes you can probably get away with it."

So they went to the dance arranged in honor of the future Mrs. Harrigan, and they had a lovely time. The two girls were good dancers, and were eagerly sought as partners. Mrs. Frushing, who knew everybody, kept a watchful eye on her charges, and blasted the hope of many a young man by a frown. The girls obeyed these silent hints without demur, feeling that disregard meant disaster.

Only once did Miss Ingraham smile on a young man in spite of most pronounced frowns. He came across to her as the orchestra struck up a dreamy waltz, and with a pleasant "May I have the pleasure, Miss Roberts?" he glided away with her and was safe in the maze of dancers before Mrs. Frushing could interfere.

"Tony's a beautiful dancer," said Bessie, after the waltz, "he's going to dance the next two-step with you, Mollie."

"Tony'll spill the beans if he gets much fresher," grumbled Mrs. Frushing.

But the wily chauffeur did not make himself unduly conspicuous. He danced the two-step with Miss Alken, then he danced a three-step with Mrs. Frushing, jollying that lady back in good humor in no time. Later in the evening he danced with Bessie once more.

It was after that dance that Miss Roberts, alias Miss Ingraham, whispered to her friend that Tony had suggested a very daring thing.

"And I've taken him up," she added.

Mollie looked aghast. "What is it this time?" she asked weakly.

"You know they're going to pick out some girl from the crowd to cut the big bridal cake they made for me. Well, the master of ceremonies has asked Tony to deal out a deck of cards among the girls, and the one who gets the ace of hearts is to cut the cake, and be hailed as the next bride. Tony's going to slip me that card, and I'll go right up and cut my own cake. How's that for turning their joke on themselves?"

"That's fine," said Mollie, very much relieved.

Tony handled the cards with an ease born of many midnight vigils, always profitable to that bright youth, and it was a small matter for him to deal the ace of hearts to Miss Ingraham. He offered her his arm and escorted her to the raised platform where the cake stood between the two huge bouquets which had graced the Emporium window all that afternoon.

The master of ceremonies briefly introduced Miss Roberts to the assemblage at large. She was a stranger, he said, but he hoped the winning of this coveted honor was a happy augury for her future in Quesnel, where ladies were always welcome, but if, for any reason, the young men of the northern town were backward or bashful,—er,—ahem,—er, there was no doubt Soda Creek would esteem it an honor to always give a hearty welcome to Miss Roberts. Would she please now cut the cake?

The speech was hardly the brilliant oration Soda Creek had a right to expect from its popular master of ceremonies. But that gentleman was sadly handicapped that evening. First he had prepared a masterly speech for Harrigan's bride, and she had failed to appear. Then he had prepared another, anticipating that some local girl would cut the cake. And at the last he had had to extemporize to a perfect stranger, whose grey eyes warned him that liberties would not be tolerated. Behind Miss Roberts he could see Tony Dalzell, casting meaning glances at a clenched fist concealed in the crook of his arm.

But though Tony might intimidate the master of ceremonies, he had no control over the orchestra. As Miss Roberts drove the point of the knife into the cake, the instruments burst into sound of the tune of "Harrigan, That's Me," and a hundred voices took up the noisy chorus.

"H-A-double-R-I-G-A-N spells Harrigan."

"That's Me."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

"The ultimate choice of the prudent housewife" ®

AWAY from home and out of doors, what can excel cotton for the quick change from travel-stained garments into something fresh, crisp, cool, beautiful and withal inexpensive?

¶ There are the plain, heavy-duty materials such as duck or drill—or, on the other hand, the exquisite fine weaves that cling like silk itself. Nothing takes decoration more effectively! Or cleans so easily! Or costs so little, as cotton!

¶ And there are no better or cheaper cottons than "PRUE COTTONS." Ask your retailer.

DOMINION TEXTILE COMPANY, LIMITED

MONTREAL

TORONTO

WINNIPEG

® Housemark Copyright.

..5

WINNING FEATURES

- 1—The fineness, softness and purity of the powder
- 2—The exquisite flower-like fragrance
- 3—The more than generous size of the can
- 4—The convenience and economy of the hinged-top, easy to open and close.

The patented hinged-top, opened or closed by a touch of the thumb—never sticks open and never sticks shut. This alone is to many people an inducement to buy Williams' Talc.

Williams' TALC POWDER

Williams' Talc is made by the manufacturers of Williams' Shaving Soaps, Matinee Violets and Jessie Cream Toilet Soaps, Toilet Waters, Dental Cream, etc.

CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL

VOL 17 N° 6

OCTOBER 1920

TORONTO

OCTOBER 1920

PRICE 20 CENTS

CHOCOLATE DE LUXE

FOR this chocolate cake half a cup of grated unsweetened chocolate is melted with a quarter cup of sugar and two tablespoons of milk. To this is added one-third of a cup of butter creamed with a cup of sugar, two eggs (one at a time), a half a teaspoon of vanilla, and a quarter of a cup of milk. Last of all a cup of flour with a teaspoon of MAGIC BAKING POWDER is sifted in, and the batter is poured quickly into two layer pans and baked. Between the layers, on the top and side of cake is spread a filling made by taking the white of an egg, two tablespoons cream, one half teaspoon vanilla to which add sufficient icing sugar to make a thick paste. Sprinkle between layers and on top with pecan nuts chopped fine and decorate with half pecans.

E. W. GILLETT COMPANY LIMITED
TORONTO, CANADA

WINNIPEG

MONTREAL

Canadian Home Journal

A Monthly Magazine of Interest to all Progressive Canadians

NEW YORK
505 FIFTH AVE.
CHICAGO
608 OTIS BUILDING

OFFICE of PUBLICATION
RICHMOND and SHEPPARD STREETS
TORONTO, CANADA

MONTREAL
171 ST. JAMES ST.
WINNIPEG
435 QU'APPELLE AVE.

OCTOBER, 1920

Copyright, October, 1920, in Canada.

Volume Seventeen

Number Six

October—and Others

By THE EDITOR

ONCE upon a time, at an art exhibition in a Canadian city, an observer exclaimed, almost with petulance: "Why does a Canadian artist always paint at least one picture of October?" When we looked around us, we found that there were half-a-dozen studies of October scenery, some of them flamingly brilliant, some of them subdued in that veiled splendor which is Canada's special kind of October. There is no denying that the poet and the painter, in this highly-favored Dominion, have an especial fondness for October. The English poet writes with greatest enthusiasm about the springtide—so does the poet of France; but when we come to the new countries, we find that Nature keeps her rarest coloring and kindest mood for the autumn days—and our poets and artists are merely writing and painting in accordance with the facts when they turn to October for inspiration.

Where, in Canada, is October seen at its fairest? Someone whose soft voice proclaims her of Halifax suggests that, in Nova Scotia, this month of ripe fulfilling comes into its own. Then another voice declares in brisker fashion that Vancouver Island is the spot to spend October. A certain Montrealer, who always goes to a little lake among the mountains for this month, says that October in Quebec is the most wonderful time of the year—cold and bright and a tonic in every sunrise.

SO it goes, throughout every one of our nine Provinces, each of which lays claim to an October all its own. For most of us, even the grown-ups, the month of Hallowe'en means pumpkins and lanterns, with the delightful smell of roast chestnuts giving a joyous farewell party to the month of crisp days and rich sunsets. Few of us have a good word to say for November—but who does not remember the wonderful sensation which came with the last night of October when the hallowed pumpkin was lighted, the false faces were donned and the most enjoyable thrills of mystery and fear chilled our youthful spines? Yes, the Month of Witches is one to remember, and as the night "when churchyards yawn" draws near, we recall the many old tales and games which made the passing of October memorable. The modern Hallowe'en party is a rather elaborate affair, with artistic lanterns and favors of pumpkins, with witches on the menu cards; but it some way lacks the flavor of the old-time party, with its taffy-pull and bobbing for apples.

Wherefore, we enjoy our October cover, with its suggestion of Hallowe'en and the lights which shine athwart the darkness and illuminate the games of the night when witches take a special joyride across the autumnal sky. You will be interested, too, we hope, in the illustration on this page, which shows the quaint cover design for November, in which a modern Young Person in ancient garb makes her bow to the magazine public.

THERE is a certain spiciness in these before-winter days which someone has called "The Aroma of Autumn." It comes from hundreds of Canadian kitchens where tomato catsups and pickles of all varieties are being "put up" for the winter. Wherever you go, even down by the lake or in the depths of the woods, you are pursued by these odors which promise all manner of pungent accompaniments to roast beef and cold chicken. In fact, in spite of all the talk about the high prices, most housewives manage, in some wonderful way, to keep the table spread with good things to eat—and even to take thought for those in far-off lands less fortunate than we Canadians, who yet have plenty in our barns and market-places.

So, as our harvest home festivals approach, when all the beautiful fruition of autumn makes a glowing picture of church or hall, we realize that October is the real Thanksgiving month, and that no country has greater reason for gratitude and optimism than our own Dominion, with its golden West and its smiling East. Problems we have a-plenty—and the winter's coal supply is yet uncertain. But there is work to be had, there is beauty to be enjoyed—and there is all the inspiration which comes from the "kindliness of this vast land"—as a Scottish delegate to the Imperial Press Conference said in response to a greeting from one of our cities. The world is far from peace—yet we feel that the Thanksgiving of this year is the happiest we have known since 1913.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Yearly subscription price for Canada and Great Britain is $2.00; United States, $2.50; Foreign, $2.60. Remit by Express or P.O. Order. Add collection charges to cheques. Subscriptions must be paid in advance.

To change address we must know former and new address. No address changed later than 15th.

We have discontinued the sending of receipts for money paid by subscribers. The first figures on the wrapper of your journal show to what date your subscription is paid.

ADVERTISEMENT GUARANTEE.

Readers of the "Canadian Home Journal" are fully protected when buying from any of our advertisers. We know that every advertiser in this issue is reliable, and that our readers will be dealt with fairly and honorably. Should any of our readers have an unsatisfactory dealing with any of our advertisers, we will undertake to have a satisfactory adjustment made or the money refunded. This absolute guarantee is good only when our readers tell advertisers when dealing with them that their advertisement was seen in the "Canadian Home Journal." We welcome letters from subscribers giving their ideas of how we can improve the journal.

Three common mistakes that mar the skin

Much homeliness is caused by three common little mistakes

FIRST of all many women powder the wrong way. Many women who appreciate the importance of powdering, fail to understand the right way to do it. Again and again during the day, on the street, in the shops—everywhere—they are powdering, in a frantic effort to overcome a shiny face.

Yet the ugly glisten keeps cropping out.

This is because people make the mistake of applying the powder directly to the skin.

If powdering is to be at all lasting, the thing to do is always to apply a powder base. For this a special cream is needed, a cream which disappears instantly and will not reappear. Pond's Vanishing Cream does just this. It is made entirely without oil. It vanishes the moment you apply it, never to reappear in an unpleasant shine. Before you powder, take just a little Pond's Vanishing Cream on the tips of your fingers. Rub it well into your face. See how much it softens and refreshes your skin.

Now powder, and don't think of it again. Pond's Vanishing Cream holds the powder fast to your face two or three times as long as ever before.

Dermatologists say that such a powder base is actually a protection to the skin. It keeps its texture from the coarsening due to exposure.

Failing to protect the complexion from the weather

A second mistake that many women make is failing to protect the complexion from the wind, sun and dust. Wind dries and roughens your skin; sunlight darkens and coarsens it; dust works into the pores and injures them. You can protect your skin from this injury by applying the right protective cream.

For this purpose, as for a powder base, of course you must have a cream that will disappear and not reappear. Pond's Vanishing Cream disappears instantly and will not crop out again in a hateful shine. It has a special softening ingredient which protects the skin. Before every outing lightly touch your face and hands with Pond's Vanishing Cream.

It leaves your face smooth and protects it from wind, sun and dust.

It is a bad mistake to omit the cold cream cleansing

Because you have learned to depend upon Pond's Vanishing Cream for a powder base and to protect the skin from the weather, do not make the mistake of forgetting the importance of cold cream.

The very oil which makes cold cream impractical for use before going out is what the skin requires at other times. The pure, creamy oil base in Pond's Cold Cream makes it the most perfect cleanser you have ever known.

When you are all ready for bed, rub some Pond's Cold Cream into your pores and wipe it off with a soft cloth. You will be horrified to see how much dirt comes out. Yet it will please you so to realize how much cleaner the pores of your skin are than ever before that you will make this face bath a regular habit. In this way your skin will be kept clear and free from dullness.

If your skin is dry or rough, leave some Pond's Cold Cream on over night to make up for the deficiency of natural oil in your skin.

You will find, too, that you can give yourself a wonderful massage with Pond's Cold Cream. It has just the consistency that is perfect for working well into the skin.

Get a jar or tube of each of these two creams today at any drug store, 50 cents each. Every normal skin needs both.

POND'S Cold Cream & Vanishing Cream

One with an oil base and one without any oil

Wind dries your skin, sunlight darkens it. You can protect it by applying, before going out, a cream without oil

To keep your complexion clear don't neglect the nightly cleansing with a cream with an oil base

Made in Canada

You can make the powder stay on twice as long by using a greaseless cream for a powder base

POND'S EXTRACT CO., 150-B Brock Ave., Toronto, Canada

Please send me, free, the items checked:

Sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream
Sample of Pond's Cold Cream

Instead of the free samples, I desire the larger samples checked below, for which I enclose the required amount.

A 5c sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream
A 5c sample of Pond's Cold Cream

Name.....

Street.....

City..... Province.....

CANADA, like other young countries, is apt to set up a fetish and honor it beyond the bounds of reason. Our fetish is democracy, and in that statement lies crystallized pretty well all there is to say in criticism of the social life of this country. Now Demos is a very good domestic god for pioneers. They themselves have come mostly from the loins of the horny-handed, and in order to make progress under difficult conditions men must believe in themselves and all that they stand for. Doubt of their own value as compared with the value of others, distrust of their own standards and ideals as compared with the standards and ideals of others, spells weakness for the fight that lies before them. So it is by a nature-given instinct that men gather together in a spot like Nova Scotia or Massachusetts or Cape Town or Tasmania and celebrate themselves, and go on doing it while their breed increases, their children thrive and their borders spread, and presently there is a nation. There is nothing in the world like that nation—her climate, scenery, resources, fish dinners and fair women, in the eyes of her people, and it is this conviction that has helped enormously to make her what she is. The present Imperial tour of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales is a remarkable illustration of this. Wherever he goes, the superlative note is sounded. There is always a best-in-the-world of something to offer to the Royal inspection. It is by our conceit of ourselves that we grow—into something perhaps worthy of it.

Then comes the hour in the life of the nation where it takes stock of itself, when it can afford to examine the grounds of this self-confidence, and indulge in a sense of humor and of justice and of truth, possibly at its own expense. We have arrived at that hour in Canada. Perhaps these articles form a tiny symptom of it.

Now the most practical, the most radical, and the most doubtful decree of Demos has to do with education. The same bench and book and desk and teacher for all the children of the community. In early days it was a necessity. There were neither facilities nor resources for anything else. People in specially good circumstances, mostly educated folk in exile, could and did send their boys to England to school and got governesses out for their girls, but such folk were few. Here and there in a thriving place a decayed gentleman would set up a "private" day school for little children, but the terms had to be low, and such enterprises never thrived long in competition with the more efficient public school. For older girls there were scattered seminaries, which soon became denominational in their character, and the convent, of course, was always open to them. For boys, Upper Canada College has had a long and honorable career, and Eastern Canada has others. Of late years, smaller preparatory schools for the University, and for Kingston have begun to appear and to bulk more largely in the minds of well-to-do parents, while the "finishing" academy for young ladies was, up to the war, exceedingly prosperous, especially in so central a city as Toronto. As we have prospered we have reached out for educational luxuries according to our lights. It is just a question whether our lights are quite adequate to our present growth and position.

THE Germans give its full value to one postulate of education. "Give us a child till he is nine," they say, "and you can have him afterwards." It is, of course, a facon de parler—nobody the care and the contacts, the influence and the example, offered by the common schools, are entirely what we want for our children. For many a long year we did well to want them, for they were all we could get or pay for; but now that such a large percentage of our population drive their own automobiles, build expensive houses and constantly winter South, these reasons vanish, and it may be worth while to look into the question.

We have always been proud of our insistence on general education in Canada, and on the system we have evolved to meet it. The first sign that a tiny Western town has got its root into the prairie is a solitary square building, bigger than the church, more solid than the town hall, which is the school-house. You see it from the train, new and smart with the taxes wrung from the land, and soon you know without asking what it is. The training of teachers has reached a high pitch in Canada and they are well paid, at all events by comparison with the eighties, when two hundred dollars a year was not thought an inadequate salary for a junior. The teaching is efficient, and as a rule the class-rooms are well lighted, well ventilated and comfortable. But there are other considerations of the deepest importance. One of them is the chance for individual training, which is almost non-existent. No public school teacher, especially of crowded primary forms, has either the time, the opportunity or the energy to give special care to the idiosyncrasies, the aptitudes or the defects of individual pupils. They take their share of the daily ration, if they fail to digest it so much the worse for them. There is no immediate financial relation between the teacher and the parent, which tends so greatly to responsibility. The work is not done for the parent but for the State. The State pays for it, the child takes his share of the common provender. He may be made to distance the average or to lag behind the average; in neither case can he get the facilities he needs if he is not of it.

OF even greater importance is the consideration of contacts. Here to be fastidious is to lay one's self open to the charge of snobbishness, and it is easy to hear Demos thundering. Not only is the education offered to one child to be "good enough" for all other children on pain of losing our national self respect, but the companionship of one child must be good enough for all other children too, because we have decided that there is to be no such thing as class in Canada, and we must begin the promiscuity of society at the earliest possible. So the children must all herd together. In a new country like ours, with its constant tidal wave of immigration this is an even more unfortunate circumstance than where society is more settled. The rules of the school (CONTINUED ON PAGE 76.)

A COMMANDER OF ACADEMIC FORCES

Sir Arthur Currie is here seen in his new office as President of McGill University.

wants to give up a child at nine; but it puts emphatically the importance of the early years. Now from the vast majority of Canadian homes, even Canadian well-to-do homes, the child of nine, has been attending a public school. I use the word in its Canadian sense, of course. In England a public school is another thing altogether, a high-class residential college for boys from about fourteen until they either finish their education—at about nineteen—or enter the University. The English equivalent of our "public" school is the Board School—or free day school open to both boys and girls for primary education. I do not know how the education given compares in the two countries, but I do know that no self-respecting English parent who can afford to do better for his child will send that child to a "Board school," while we take it for granted that the Board school is the proper place for him.

We can examine the matter upon its own facts, without deferring to anybody's example; and the principal question we have to decide is whether

OUR AIM

To publish a magazine which will be worthy of Canadian womanhood.

To at all times keep both editorial and advertising columns clean, wholesome and truthful.

To be a leader in thought and a fearless speaker in all vital questions.

To publish as far as possible, and reproduce the work of Canadians that our readers may become familiar with their own people, their own literature and their own country with its wonderful possibilities and glorious history.

Why his downcast eyes spoiled her evening

Has this ever happened to you?

WHAT a good time she was having! Every minute she was growing more elated by her success. Her partner was absorbed in her conversation, charmed with her chic, enthralled by her beauty.

Little by little she grew conscious of other eyes. She glanced to the right. The man at her other side was gazing intently at her hand.

Quickly she doubled up her fingers. How long had he been staring at those nails? Had other people also noticed them?

Gone was her peace, her unconscious gaiety. No longer could she gesture freely. She could not even lift a spoon with grace. Every eye seemed fastened on her rough cuticle—on that one wretched little hangnail.

What a horrid evening!

You can never know when people are looking at your fingernails. Every day, often when you least suspect it, you are being judged by them.

People no longer excuse ill-kept nails. They know that nowadays it is very easy to keep your nails lovely. Thousands of busy women the country over are learning to look after their nails with the same regularity that they do their teeth and hair.

Fifteen minutes' care, once or twice a week will keep your nails looking so well that you need never be humiliated by their appearance.

But do not cut your cuticle. The more it is cut, the thicker and tougher it grows. The cuticle is Nature's way of protecting the sensitive root which is only 1-12 of an inch below the surface. If you slash away at this ragged cuticle you keep it constantly sore and unsightly. That is what gives your nails that uncared for look that makes you want to cover them up when you see people's eyes on your hands.

This method is the secret of the perfect, even cuticle of many fashionable women

You can keep your cuticle smooth, firm and even if you manicure your nails the right way. Once or twice a week use Cutex, the liquid cuticle remover. Wrap a little cotton around the end of an orange wood stick and dip it into the Cutex bottle. Then gently work the stick around the base of the nail, pushing back any dead cuticle. Wash the hands, carefully pressing back the cuticle when drying them.

The Cutex manicure keeps the cuticle in perfect condition. It never becomes torn or ragged. You never again are embarrassed by hangnails or rough, thick cuticle.

If you care to have the tips of your nails snowy white, apply a little Cutex Nail White underneath the nails.

Finish your manicure with Cutex Nail Polish. It gives a brilliant, lasting gloss. Cutex Nail Polish comes in cake, powder, paste, liquid and stick form.

If you wish to keep the cuticle particularly soft and pliable so that you do not need to manicure as often, apply Cutex Cold Cream at night on going to bed.

Get Cutex at any drug or department store. Cutex, the cuticle remover, comes in 35c and 70c bottles. Cutex Nail White, Nail Polish and Cold Cream are each 35c.

Six complete manicures for 20 cents

For 20c you can keep your nails looking lovely for a month. Today send two dimes with the coupon below and we will mail you a complete Introductory Manicure Set large enough to last a month. Address Northam Warren Dept. 1109, 200 Mountain Street, Montreal.

You can get the Cutex preparations separately or in complete sets at all drug and department stores

Mail this coupon with two dimes to-day.

Northam Warren, Dept. 1109, 200 Mountain Street, Montreal.

Name .....

Street and Number .....

City and Province .....

A Story Showing How East and West May Meet

THE CHINESE TEA-CUP

By AGNES B. JOYNES

Illustrated by
BEVERLEY MacDonald

It was a beautiful bit of china, that cup and saucer. Its grim owner acknowledged that. In truth a keen appreciation of beauty had annoyed Anne Clenser considerably all her life. She fought that handicap, as she considered it, to her spiritual growth desperately and daily, but it would creep into her being now and then and warm things up a bit in spite of all she could do to the contrary.

She was drinking afternoon tea from the cup. In all the bustling forty years of her life (which bustling consisted chiefly in scouring from morning until night at an already immaculate house) she could remember no afternoon when she had not taken time for her tea. It was her only comfort on earth, she said. And in spite of the oppressive heat of the day she sat where the sunlight could fall upon the dainty china and glint from its shining rim.

She sipped slowly, thoughtfully, until in the bottom of the cup the picture of the rain-god, Lung-wang appeared riding through space upon a seemingly well trained and docile dragon. She counted the disciples of the rain-god painted upon the outside of the cup and on the saucer and admired the soft coloring of their robes. She glanced inside the cup again at Lung-wang:

"Humph!" she exclaimed and uttered his name contemptuously and aloud. "Lung-wang! Rain-god! Humph! Much you can do about it, you heathen!"

The "it" referred to was the drought which seared and crumpled up Canada that summer, not favoring in the least Miss Clenser's immaculate front yard with its prim rows of red and white hollyhocks. You do not remember? Ask your grandfather to tell you about it.

"Much you can do about it!" the woman repeated. Then she washed, wiped and polished the cup and set it in a cupboard on one side of the wide fireplace. She turned quickly and stooped to examine the edge of a braided mat where a fluffy ball of a kitten played unmolested, straightened again with a smile on her lips that was sweet, and took up her broom.

A strange woman was Anne Clenser but pure gold at heart. The black kitten knew that, and one or two of her fellow beings. In most people's eyes she was—well, Smithson the schoolmaster expressed it pretty well when he confidentially told his wife one day that "that old woman next door is all the virtues conglomerated and hardened to flint, and the jagged and stony edges of her goodness leave black and blue spots on my soul every time we meet."

Detail of the woman's life would be uninteresting. At the death of her mother, her missionary father being absent, the little Anne was taken in hand by a grandmother who tried faithfully to lead her young charge along a properly straight and narrow path. It was a very different path from that in which the broad-minded, generous father would have led her, and some ill-natured people intimated that he should have been at home minding his own business. I do not know. At any rate the narrowness of the said path must have been perfectly satisfactory even in the eyes of the dear old grandmother. Its straightness? Never mind! We need not worry about that. According to appearances Anne Clenser had walked it straight, neither looking to the right nor to the left. In her own mind the woman had uncomfortable doubts upon the subject.

It was sweeping day. Every day was sweeping day with Miss Clenser. If you saw a poor, little bit of dust scurrying in any direction you might know that she was after it and it was getting out of her way as quickly as possible. It seemed that if she could have swept the entire earth down to bed rock she would have done it (leaving perhaps a narrow margin for hollyhocks) and she would have risen early the next morning and scrubbed the bed rock with soap and water and a stiff brush until it shone, and then lived happily ever after, flourishing her broom as a sceptre and making everybody wipe his feet before he entered. Extremely tall, extremely thin, the woman suggested an animated broom, a

The cup was still in her hand. It seemed the only thing upon which her thought could concentrate. Her mind turned for a moment to thoughts of the land from which it came. She looked upon it as she looked upon every Eastern country, as a land of the "heathen"—which word, in its broadest sense, expressed to her imagination a people horribly distorted by generations of a hideous worship of hideous idols, whose minds differed not from one another and who were altogether degraded. But she had a special grudge against China because, so she liked to believe, it had taken her father from her childhood.

LISTLESSLY the hand which held the cup dropped to her side. Her eyes wandered spellbound to the thirsty earth about her; the burned fields, the heat quivering over the house-tops, the red, dismal sun making its way through the veil of smoke which rose day after day from the distant hilltops, where at night the crimson banners of forest fires were seen. She jerked the cup to a level with her black eyes again and looked viciously for a moment at the picture of the rain-god within it, then turned it upside down upon the saucer to shut him from her sight. There was a splash as she did so, and the saucer was full of water.

The woman stared hard for a moment, then concluded that she must have unconsciously rinsed the cup in the bowl of water on the table by her side. She could not account for the act, careful as she was of the water which was drawn from a spring some distance away. Still she must have done it. She tossed the water from the saucer toward the dying ivy, then regretted that waste until she forgot it in watching the fascinating sparkle of its drops. She chanced to glance again at the mocking rain-god and again turned the cup upside down to hide his face. Again a little splash as the saucer filled mysteriously with water.

The woman's heart suddenly lightened. The dazed feeling was gone. Playfully she tossed the water toward the burned ivy and again watched the drops sparkle upon its leaves and, as she thought, the leaves come to life under its miraculous influence. She turned the cup upside down once more, fully expecting to see the saucer fill with water, but it did not. Instead, the cup became suddenly restless in her hand. With difficulty she retained her hold upon it for the moment and then it was as motionless and inanimate as before.

The woman pondered the strange happenings for a time but they gradually faded from her consciousness.

She tried to hold them but for some reason her mind would not work that day. She did not care. The blankness was comfortable at any rate. Dreamily she began to admire the cup as she had so often done. She turned it this way and that to get the play of light upon its white interior; she held it toward the sun and smiled to see her shapely fingers showing through its sides; she contemplated Lung-wang and the dragon once more, and the rain-god smiled upon her a smile of pity and paternal love.

She had no time to wonder at that latest bit of magic for the fascinating piece of china was again strangely in motion in her hand. It was being drawn by some unseen force away from her. She clung to it fiercely but gradually it was drawn from her grasp to rise gracefully into the air. She reached for it with a cry of distress but the smile of the rain-god calmed her and she lay back against the pillows resigned, wondering.

Away the inverted cup floated, increasing in size as it ascended, swaying rhythmically in the air and glinting little iridescent lights as it swayed. Away it floated, growing larger and larger until it filled the whole sky above her with its broom dressed in a black gown with buff spots, about which hung a frightfully starched and ironed and clean apron; a broom which was never seen in its corner at rest.

"Step your heathen feet among my hollyhocks and I'll beat every one of them to splinters over your head."

Upon the day of my story the real broom dropped from the sweeper's hand. "I'm sick!" she cried to the kitten that was tearing the mat. "I declare I am sick! Oh-h-h! my head will burst! This weather is enough to kill anything alive!"

She sat down in a rocking chair and pressed her hands to her throbbing temples. She loosened the shining, black hair which was drawn so fiercely back from her brow. "May be just a little more tea," she muttered, and she rose again and took the Chinese cup from its place among the "best dishes."

She carried her tea that time to the shade of a roomy, old porch and throwing herself with much abandon for Miss Clenser upon a settle, leaned heavily on her elbow and sipped the comforting beverage to its last drop. The tea certainly soothed the pain in her head, she thought. She sank back upon the settle somewhat refreshed but with a dazed feeling which frightened her a little.

bowl-like form and the wonder of its misty, changing lights. The woman watched fascinated as blue sky and cloud filtered everywhere through its sides, leaving out all the smoke and stifling heat of the day. And in the midst of it all was the majestic figure of Lung-wang carried through space upon the dragon spirit of the rains.

But about the woman there was only the burnt and suffering earth. The haze of smoke which had not succeeded in getting through the sides of the cup settled suffocatingly about her. She watched the headlong, despondent flight of a bird from one tree to another—the only living thing which seemed to have the will to move. She looked beseechingly toward the rain-god above her.

"But who are you?" she impatiently exclaimed. "I shall impute my own—the true——"

"Oh, he!" And so I am left out!" interrupted a clear, powerful voice from above her. The woman started at the words. Lung-wang was to her only the finely-colored miniature painting in the bottom of her Chinese cup, in which beauty-lending capacity he was admissible to any Christian home. But the picture was coming to life, to real life, and that made all the difference in the world. It might at any moment step its unhallowed feet in her very dooryard, believing that it belonged there. A heathen god camping on the premises of any respectable spinster in that village would make a terrible sensation, she knew. And besides, in his live condition she had no use for him.

She was on her feet in an instant and brandishing a broom in her hand. "Go away there! G'way! G'way!" she cried. But the rain-god remained unmoved.

"Can you see nothing of the 'true' in me?" he calmly asked.

In her astonishment and horror at such blasphemy the woman did not notice a slight irony in his emphasis on the "true."

"Oh, how dare you?" she gasped. "How dare you? Look out there! Step your heathen feet among my hollyhocks and I'll beat every one of them to splinters over your head!"

She stood threatening, the picture of righteous wrath, ready to defend the God of her ancestors against a "heathen" pretender even at the cost of the spick-and-spanness of her front yard.

"Why, my dear woman, my feet are not anywhere near your hollyhocks! Do be calm, will you not? Poor child," he continued, "blinded by ignorance! Ignorance!"

Ignorance! Indeed! The statement made the woman speechless with rage.

"But you will grow!" continued the rain-god. "The Divine Intelligence is acquired in good time!"

THE woman's attitude changed slightly at the words. She was really a very reasonable person. Of course she never could put any confidence in the words of a heathen but she would allow him to try to explain himself. In the meantime she might slip in a word that would be the saving of his soul. He began to seem really worth the trouble.

"Well, talk along as much as you like," she condescended, "but you must not expect to be considered orthodox in this country, you know. And besides you neither look nor speak in the least as a god should. You look like a—heathen, and you talk just like any ordinary man."

The rain-god smiled and spoke more like an "ordinary man" than before:

"It is interesting to meet a lady who knows just how a god should speak, but why do you insinuate one minute that I am not a god and find fault with me the next because I do not speak like one? That is woman's inconsistency, as I live."

"I do not see how you can be living when you are only painted on one of my tea-cups, but since you seem to be, would you mind telling me the object of the bound and distorted feet among the women of your country?"

Curiosity—and something else—was getting the better of Miss Clenser's distaste for the "heathen." She leaned back against the whitewashed picket fence of her front yard and with folded arms awaited the rain-god's reply.

There being no immediate response, she continued: "My father brought some of their foot-wear home with him one time and—mercy, goodness—it is awful!"

"Deplorable!" readily admitted Lung-wang.

"Why, then, do you allow it?"

"Well, really," replied the rain-god smiling again, "I never have been considered wholly responsible for the footwear of China's ladies. But if it will comfort you any to tell you that that custom is some day coming to an end, you have my word for it."

"When? I should like to know!"

"I shall not set any exact date, my dear woman, but I am willing to state my opinion that it will probably be about a century before a similar custom ceases in this country."

"In this country?" The woman actually laughed. "I should like to have you tell me where I could find any bound feet here! I would go a long way to see them."

"The exertion of travel is quite unnecessary in this instance. You need only to look at your own, and then at the feet of any woman and many of the men who happen to pass your way. And you are obliged to stand on your feet for the greater part of the day, too! If you were a working woman in China you would not be allowed the luxury of bound feet."

"You must be crazy!" exclaimed the astonished woman.

"And besides," continued the rain-god, totally ignoring the compliment, "although I cannot deny the practice either here or there, a woman's feet are no more vital than those organs which the women of your country crush within their stays. Your own stays, for instance, are too small by three inches. And I am sorry to say that that hideous custom will exist in this hemisphere long after China's feet are freed."

Miss Clenser would have fainted at such criticism from any real, masculine creature. But Lung-wang was only a picture. To be sure he was only a picture! How could he be anything else? She gasped just a little, however, as she threw back her head to make emphatic denial—the usual feminine denial of the case since stays were first made:

"No such thing! I never know I have them on! I am ever so many inches bigger with them on than with them off! I know of course that some women wear them tight but I——"

"Then," interrupted Lung-wang, "as long as some women do, please remember that that quite offsets the feet of China's dames. But never mind," he comforted, seeing the fire of wrath kindling in the woman's eye, "that too will some day be outgrown."

"You spoke a minute ago of your father. It is of him that I would speak. A noble man he was; one of the greatest souls that ever came to China. Well I remember him, his stalwart form a god's own image, his splendid face reflecting Heaven's clear light. Always big brother to his fellow man; and friend. How clearly I can see him as he stood looking toward the sunset one warm day after his toilsome work, visiting with the folk at home, he said."

"The very same bright sun," I heard him say, "which leaves me now, will rise in just a little while upon the dear ones there. In but a moment it will turn to gold the grave of the sweet woman whom I love and rouse her bright eyed image to her play. I try to pray for all of them but cannot. And after all what are my little prayers? I will but ask my God to let me think with Him a little while of them. He understands."

"A moment back in the great stretch of time," he mused, "and I was happy with them in my home. Then some strange shifting of life's scenery and I stand upon the threshold of my brother here—but find myself in doubt as to the part I am to play. Shall I tear from their throne my brother's gods?—But if they be the True One clothed in Eastern garments made to fit the East? What then?—Shall I try to destroy their customs here? I dare not! If that need to be done, the work is for a wiser man than I. There is but one thing that I feel that I can do; one great thing I can give these people which they have not now—the teachings of the Christ. I shall do that. And I shall learn from China many things."

The woman listened breathlessly. Lung-Wang was "heathen." Moreover, he was only a painted picture; a kind of talking doll. Could there be anything in his words? Yet, as he pictured her father so clearly to her mind, she wondered. Tears came into her eyes at the thought of him—his dear head bent above hers, his hand caressing her curls, his last embrace as he left her and her mother to do that which he felt so sure at the time was his duty. She silently prayed that he had not got any wrong notions in his head as the result of his contact with those deluded people.

SHE was beginning to feel much ashamed of the rudeness which she had shown to the rain-god, but still felt it her Christian duty to show him plainly that she did not consider him anything in the way of a god, and to convert him to the true faith if possible before they were through talking.

"I have no doubt you are a pretty good sort," she said almost politely, "but your Eastern gods are far from being the God of my conception, of course."

"Woman, the difference between Eastern and Western gods is an imagination born and nurtured upon earth. There is no war between the gods in Heaven. There never was. The myriad prayers from all the life of this vast universe ascend through divers names to one broad throne. One hand caresses all. Upon one bosom do we lay our heads. Life giving breath from one great source we draw. No earthborn vanity can hide the Truth."

The woman was silent for a moment then stubbornly argued: "If the gods of the East and the West be the same what does it matter since your people do not know it? Tell that to the poor, ignorant creatures for whom my father left me, an orphan, to the mercy of a pack of relations!"—And the "pack" individually must have squirmed some just then—"Broaden their minds! It is they who need to be told; not I!"

"No, of course not you!"

From the height above sympathy mingled with good-natured irony, and the woman who, in spite of herself, began to feel like a very small child beside Lung-wang, could feel the sympathy and gain comfort therefrom; could almost feel his fingers fondling her hair as her father's had so often done during the short time he was with her in her childhood. She felt a little more friendly toward the rain-god.

"You speak pretty good English!" she said by way of conversation and because she could think of nothing else to say.

"Why should I not?"

"And you do not look so foreign as you did. What has changed you so? It is hard to tell now to what nationality you belong."

"I am 'of all the nations and I have not changed. You only see me in a different light. You call me 'heathen, stranger'. No man nor faith on earth is strange to me. I knew the prayers which ancient Egypt made to Osiris and Isis, the prayers which brought Jehovah's host through the vast wilderness, from Olympus have I smiled upon the earth, and one dark night within Gethsemane I wept beside the man-for-saken Christ. And I can tell you this, I who have lived since time began and know the hopes and prayers of people everywhere, have always been the same."

The form of the rain-god which had been gradually growing indistinct among the clouds now disappeared from view. The woman felt very much alone when he had gone and very much discouraged. It occurred to her too, that she had not had time to ask the singular apparition if it could by any possibility hurry the long looked-for rain a little. But as long as she could see her cup in the sky there seemed to be some hope. And there it was, its soft iridescence showing here and there through the thickening clouds from horizon to zenith, a thing of marvelous beauty.

Slowly the clouds massed themselves and grew darker. Raindrops sparkled past broken shafts of light and struck the earth and bounced and then rested, little dust-covered spheres, where they fell. Faster and faster they fell until Miss Clenser fled for shelter to the settle in the old porch. In rhythmic torrents the water poured its new life upon the suffering land. Lightnings trickled from the dark cloud-banks toward the earth and the thunders crashed and rumbled and rolled.

The woman was not afraid. In a maze of strange thought she saw the dim form of an old neighbor, a very dear friend who was always around to comfort her when she had one of her headache spells, bending above her; but she was too comfortable to speak. Her eyes closed and she lay motionless enjoying the restful coolness about her. Gradually the torrents ceased until only a few diamond drops sparkled down as at first, and which now lost themselves in tiny, muddy streamlets which sang and splashed and played on every side.

Miss Clenser thought again of the rain-god and her doubts regarding his standing among immortals returned—"But he is certainly not a heathen!" she found herself repeating. "He is far above them in intelligence. He must be! He even seems to understand and love his fellow man."

The thought was answered although Lung-wang did not again return to view:

"Child, the Divine Intelligence and Love extends to the remotest rim of the vast universe and finds no 'heathen' anywhere therein!"

"It seems to me that I have heard my father say that!" muttered Miss Clenser. "No, he did not say it!" corrected the accurate woman. "He wrote those very words to me just before he died."

She yawned and opened her eyes. The old neighbor was in reality bending above her, smiling as she drew the Chinese cup from her unconsciously resisting hand.

"Most a wonder you hadn't let it fall, dearie, and smashed it all to pieces!" she was saying.

A Mail Order Bride

P.W. Luce

ILLUSTRATED BY H. W. COOPER

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

ST. MATTHEW IS INTRODUCED.

MRS. FRUSHING was explaining a few things to her two charges in the cosy parlor of the Soda Creek boarding house: "We had our fun at the dance last night, but this morning we've got to get down to business. Cory Harrigan asked me to supervise the buying of anything you need for your outfit. Having seen what you brought in that suit case, we'll go down to the store presently and proceed on the assumption that you brought nothing but a tooth-brush and six moth balls."

"As you're going to be my guests for a few days, I'm going to be quite frank with you. I don't like this way of getting married, but that's your lookout. You know what kind of a man Cory Harrigan is, don't you?"

"Yes," answered Miss Ingraham coldly, "I've decided on this step after due consideration."

"And you know what kind of a house Cory has?" continued Mrs. Frushing.

"We've had the place described in detail, and I think I'll be quite satisfied with it," was the answer.

Mrs. Frushing looked seriously at the young woman. "You're a remarkable girl," she said, "and if there's anything you want to know about Cory, just ask me."

"Thank you, I will," said Bessie. But she asked no question.

To preserve the incognito of Miss Ingraham while shopping, the goods were charged to Mrs. Frushing's account. The two city girls were surprised and not a little disappointed at the goods selected by their chaperon. She was buying a winter outfit, and warmth and durability were the only consideration. The styles in winter goods did not change, the store clerk said; they were the same last year as they would be ten years hence.

"But these rubbers are so clumsy," protested Miss Ingraham, when trying on some atrocious footwear.

"The clumsier they are, the more stockings you can wear," consoled Mrs. Frushing. "Put aside half a dozen pair of those German socks, Bill," she told the clerk.

When Bessie finally had an outfit that almost broke her heart, but satisfied the requirements of Mrs. Frushing, the latter hinted that possibly it might be wise to buy a few articles of kitchenware. But such a proceeding was unthinkable. If she found out later there was anything she needed, Bessie said, why, then she would get it. But she did not think it dignified to walk into a stranger's house carrying an armful of kettles and frying pans.

Mrs. Frushing said no more about it. If this extraordinary girl wanted to live in Cory Harrigan's style, she couldn't stop her.

It had been the intention to spend the day in Soda Creek, and start for the Frushing ranch early the next morning. But Tony sauntered into the Emporium and told a tale that meant a hurried change in the schedule of departures, as he expressed it.

It seemed that the town was getting "wise," Tony said. News had come up from Barlow's that no young women had stayed there overnight, and news had come down from Quesnel that no school teachers were on their way to that place. The citizens of Soda Creek were inclined to be very angry with Tony for the part he had played in the hoax, and he planned to start with his car as soon as the young ladies could get away with him. If they didn't give Soda Creek the slip mighty quick, yesterday's programme would be carried out in full, with some important and noisy additions.

"I can't possibly get away until two o'clock, and that means skipping dinner, too," exclaimed Mrs. Frushing. "I've got quite a bit of my own business to attend to before I leave, so I suppose you'll have to take the young ladies out of town for lunch, Tony, and meet me on the Soda Creek road at three o'clock."

"I'll have the bus here in a minute," said Tony, very cheerfully.

"Fifteen minutes will be time enough," warned the chaperon.

A quarter of an hour later the two girls were being spirited out of town in Tony's car, bound they knew not whither, and caring not at all. They were finding a lot of enjoyment on this trip, and someone else always turned up to do the directing and worrying.

WHERE they had lunch the girls never knew. Tony took them to a quiet place a few miles from town, and played the part of host in capital style. They were alone in the little dining room, making merry over the second discomfiture of the people of Soda Creek. Like three children on a holiday, they freed themselves from the formal trammels of a cramping etiquette. Unconsciously the girls were calling their host by his Christian name. Tony had reached that degree of familiarity which enabled him to call his companions "you kids." And he did it unreprieved by look or gesture.

After dinner they drove down a side road until they came to a lake with a sloping pebbly beach, where Tony decided to wait for Mrs. Frushing. Here they reclined under the shade of a huge cottonwood tree, while thousands of winged insects buzzed and droned over the lake shore. On the broad leaves of the water lilies little birds were hopping about chirping merrily. The iridescent sheen of the gauzy wings of the mosquito flies made a flash of color here and there, then was lost to sight. High up in a dead fir tree a woodpecker tap-tap-tapped industriously, his brilliant plumage showing vividly against the sombre brown of the tree.

Mollie wandered away, gathering wild flowers, lupins, painter's brush, larkspur and gorgeous tiger lilies.

Tony remained stretched lazily under the cottonwood, watching Bessie throwing pebbles into the lake. After a while he spoke, very quietly:

"They told me in Soda Creek you've never seen this man Harrigan. Is that so, girlie?"

Bessie nodded an affirmative. She did not look at Tony; he had called her "girlie."

"But if you don't like him, you're not going to marry him, are you?" continued Tony. "If you find Cory Harrigan is different from what you expect, you'll quit in time, won't you?"

Bessie's gaze remained fixed on a brood of wild ducklings swimming in the pond. After a while she spoke, in a low voice:

"I'm not going to marry Cory Harrigan. I'm going to marry his bank account, and his cattle and horses, and his ranch, and his leases, and his implements and all his paraphernalia. Though I will promise to 'love, honor and obey' him, and I'll be a good and true wife, I'm really coming here to hear a rich man say, 'With all my worldly goods I thee endow.' I'm tired of being poor. Tony, tired of having to think twice before I spend a dime or a dollar. I've been working ever since I was fifteen, and I'm no better off now than I was then, but more disappointed with everything. It's not that I mind being an old maid, if I have to be one, but I'd sooner die than just eke out a miserable existence. And when I heard of Harrigan—Oh, I hated to do it, Tony, but bit by bit I yielded. At first it seemed a horrible thing, and then I began to think less and less of the marriage part, and more and more of the comfort and assurance of having enough money to live on. So I said I'd come. But if Cory Harrigan is the kind of a man I can't like, I'm going back to work for nine dollars a week."

"I think I know just how you feel about it," said Tony. "It's pretty tough, all right. But if you should decide to call it off, and go back to the coast, will you promise to ride down the Cariboo road in my car. That's all I'll ask, now. You'll do that, won't you?"

Bessie promised.

A few minutes later Mrs. Frushing's democrat drove up. The girls climbed aboard, said goodbye to Tony, and started on the last leg of their journey.

THEY had about twenty-five miles to cover to reach the Frushing ranch, and it was quite late when they got there, after a journey that seemed very uncomfortable, following as it did the cushioned ease of the automobile. The girls could just distinguish the outline of a number of buildings when Mrs. Frushing stopped and hallooed for the hired man to come and look after the horses. Then she led the way to the house, and bade her guests welcome to their temporary home.

The apartment which the girls entered was evidently the kitchen and living room. It was a large, airy room, furnished with every possible rural convenience. The furniture was substantial, though many of the bulkier pieces were evidently home-made. The table did not betray its native pine origin under the snowy damask cloth, but the chairs quickly caught the eyes of the girls. The backs and seats were of interlaced rawhide, pleasing to look upon and yielding to the body when in use. Mrs. Frushing had a large rawhide rocker which she declared "had more spring and comfort than anything you could buy in New York," and it had cost nothing but time on rainy days.

The kitchen walls were neatly papered in light blue and white of tasteful design. Racks, made of deer feet, supported shot guns and rifles. A five-antlered buck's head served for hat rack. Close to the big six-hole range was a large enamel tank, with hot and cold water faucets.

Mrs. Frushing introduced her maid and companion, Mary Parsons, to her two guests, and then led the way to a bedroom, where the girls tidied themselves after their long drive. Two splendid bear rugs greatly excited the admiration of the visitors.

"I suppose," said Mollie, "you shot those bears yourself?"

"No," answered the truthful hostess, "I'm not much of a shot. One of the men shot that one three years ago, and the other was caught in a deadfall last year."

"What is this beautiful scrollwork on the bedstead?" asked Bessie. "It isn't pyrography, is it?"

"Not exactly," laughed Mrs. Frushing, "it's grubography. That's where worms had eaten under the bark of the dead tree from which we made these bedposts. You see," she went on, "we make all the furniture we can in here, chairs and tables, and cupboards and bedsteads and so on. It saves a lot in hauling freight over these roads."

Tony remained stretched lazily under the cottonwood, watching Bessie throw pebbles into the lake.

When they returned to the kitchen Mary had supper ready, and the hungry travellers did full justice to an excellent meal. After supper an hour was spent in the parlor, where Mrs. Frushing entertained her guests with her piano and her violin, playing both with fair skill.

Several shelves of books filled up one corner of the room, and a number of recent magazines and newspapers were scattered on tables and chairs. The walls were adorned with a number of mounted heads and a few framed pictures were hung. Dozens of small and enlarged photographs were pinned to the walls or placed in racks, the subjects being mainly farm scenes.

"Well, girls," said Mrs. Frushing, as they were about to retire for the night, "this is the first real backwoods house you've seen. Now tell me what strikes you most?" The good lady was not without vanity and was particularly proud of her running water system. But she received a shock when Bessie said quickly:

"It's the lights. I've been just bursting all evening to ask about them."

"The lights!"

"Yes. What are they?"

"Why, they're ordinary coal oil lamps, child. Do you mean to say you never saw one before?"

"Never," said Bessie positively, "but I think I've read of them somewhere."

"Probably in the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew," remarked Mrs. Frushing, drily, "though they've been improved since that time. And I thought you girls would have something to say about my hot water system."

"Why, Mrs. Frushing," said Bessie in amazement, "every house in Vancouver has running water piped to the kitchen. That's nothing new at all."

"Did you expect to find every house in these jungles fitted with hot and cold water, electric lights, gas stoves, furnace in the basement, telephones, door bells, and all the rest of it?"

"I don't know that I ever thought of those things in detail, just like that," confessed Bessie, "but I've never seen a house without them. Those coal oil lamps still puzzle me."

"Child, go to bed," murmured Mrs. Frushing, sadly.

She was thinking of Cory Harrigan's shack!

CHAPTER FOURTEEN.

THE SICK COLT HURRIES THE DOUBLE-BARREL WEDDING.

AT breakfast next morning the two girls heard Mrs. Frushing and the three hired men discuss the day's work, but the ranch jargon they used was as Greek to the city visitors. Only one thing was clear: the attenuated man called "Slats," was to "Beat it to Harrigan's" and tell that gentleman that Miss Ingraham and Miss Aiken had arrived, and would be pleased to have him call that evening.

Later in the morning the girls were shown over part of the ranch. They did their best to understand the explanations of their hostess, but as it was the first farm either had seen at close quarters, many things perplexed them just as much as the oil lamps had puzzled Bessie the previous night.

There was the mystery of the corrals, for instance.

"What are those big enclosures for?" Bessie had asked.

"Those are the corrals, where we cut out the cattle, and catch any horses we want," Mrs. Frushing explained.

"Oh, yes, I see," exclaimed Bessie, "it's where you butcher the cattle when you want to send beef to town."

"When we want to send beef to town, it hoofs it there, young lady. We don't butcher here, we cut the cattle into bunches, after a round-up; we separate the cows and calves from the beef drive; and we pick out the weak stuff to feed heavy in winter."

"You mean," said Mollie, who was trying to grasp it all and so failing to understand anything, "this is where you bring the cows to be milked night and morning?"

Mrs. Frushing burst out laughing: "Oh, you goose! We don't milk range cows. Why, we don't even see the critters for weeks or months at a time."

"I'm glad of that, though I don't understand it," said Bessie. "I somehow thought boys and girls were always running away from the farm because cows had to be milked night and morning, in addition to the other chores, whatever that may be. And I was afraid I might have to milk Mr. Harrigan's 441 Aberdeen Angus cows twice a day."

"What a lot you have to learn, girl, what a lot you have to learn," repeated Mrs. Frushing, shaking her head. "Why, if you were an expert milker you couldn't milk a hundred cows by daylight on the twenty-first of June—and that's the longest day in the year."

"All I know of cows is what I've read on condensed milk tins," confessed Bessie.

Despairing of understanding the main purpose of a corral, Mollie undertook to segregate the visible parts, and so absorb information piecemeal. That small stall in one corner, for instance?

"That's a branding chute," said Mrs. Frushing.

"For target practice, I suppose." This from Bessie.

"For what?" asked the amazed ranch woman. Then she understood, and by a supreme effort controlled herself. "It's a c-h-u-t-e, not a s-h-o-o-t. That's where we brand the cattle. Branding, that's putting an owner's private mark on his stock. Is that clear?"

Self-Expression

By NELLIE McCLUNG

If I were a fortune-teller, there is one thing I would tell to all my clients when I read their palms, and it would be true of every one of them. I would say: "You have hidden forces within your soul that have not yet been touched—the richest, greatest mines of your heart have not yet been tapped! You need to cultivate self-expression—to set free 'the angel in the marble'."

It is true of every one. We are all unexploded shells, unplanted bulbs, uncultivated gardens. It doth not yet appear what we shall be!

That depends on the avenues of self-expression.

There lies, away to the north-western part of Canada, a rich prairie land, with wooded slopes and running streams, teeming with fish. Its soil is fertile, its climate is mild. It is rich in mineral wealth, and has deposits of coal, with indications of oil. There is only one hindrance in that rich country. It has no outlet! When the crop is grown—it has no market. When the cattle are fat and ready to sell—the market is so far away that it costs almost as much as they are worth to send them there. "It will be a great country"—the people say—"when we get a railroad!"

People are like that!—but with one great difference. The North Country goes merrily on, railroad or no railroad. Flowers bloom, wild strawberries red-dens the hillsides, cattle fatten and increase, streams go on flowing, the rich black loam grows richer and blacker as each successive crop of leaves and grass fall upon it; the attitude of the North Country is one of supreme indifference to the railroad.

With people it is not so! Their life depends on self-expression! Without it the fountains of life are choked and dried or like the stream which, impeded in its course, ceases to be a thing of life and beauty and becomes a pestilential swamp.

Once I visited a woman in prison. She was under sentence of death for a terrible crime. I found her unrepentant and hard and bitter, and when I tried to soften her heart and awaken in her some pity for the children whose mother she had shot, she glared at me with an evil eye. It reminded me of the glitter I once saw in the eyes of a wolf that was caught in a trap.

"I never had a good time like other people!" she cried. "I never could do any of the things I wanted to do; there was nothing but hard work for me—and I got ugly." This was her defence for becoming a criminal. I do not suppose there is a jury in the world who would accept it as extenuating circumstances. But it is, just the same!

If that woman had been taught to sing, to play, to paint, to draw, to make anything that was beautiful, she would not be there to-day in a criminal's cell; but her desire to express was curbed, hindered and smothered, and so turned inward and poisoned her soul!

When we understand the psychology of the human family a little better, we will educate our boys and girls along the lines of self-expression, without rendering slavish obedience to any set curriculum. We will seek to give human beings an outlet for their imagination and their desire to create. Manual training in the public schools has changed many a "bad boy" into a law-abiding young citizen, before whose eyes there has opened a new vision—and in the creation of a piece of furniture, a lamp, a table, a work-box, he finds that exaltation which all human hearts crave.

When a boy or girl can do anything of which he or she can feel proud, the young feet are thereby firmly set on the Road to Happiness.

"Quite," said Bessie, pleased that she could understand this, at least. "We had private marks on all boxed goods in the store, to show what they cost, and what to sell them at. Our code word was 'Cematorphus,' in black ink for cost, and in red for sale price. But I don't see how you put private marks on cattle, or how you know what to sell them at, when they're growing all the time."

Mrs. Frushing gave up in despair. "You understand so much now," she said, "that you'll have a headache if you try to master much more. And I thought I was making things clear by describing a brand as a private mark! Honestly, if you girls keep this up, I'll have hysterics."

So the guests finished the tour of inspection in reasonable silence, letting the older woman do most of the talking. They were shown the hay carrier and the baler, they saw the blacksmith shop, they popped into the icehouse, and popped out again very quick, they looked at the chicken coop and the pig pens, they were mystified by the farm machinery, never having heard of a mower, or a disc, and having a firm conviction that the style in hay rakes had not changed since the days of Maud Muller and the Judge.

As they were returning to the house, Bessie exclaimed: "I don't see how anyone can possibly run a farm. It's ever so much more complicated than I thought. Mrs. Frushing, may I ask you an awfully personal question?"

"Certainly, Miss Ingraham."

"Tell me, are you running this place by yourself? I mean, are you the sole owner, or is there a Mr. Frushing?"

There was a harsh note in Mrs. Frushing's voice as she replied:

"I'm the sole owner. There isn't a Mr. Frushing any more, for which I have every reason to be thankful. They tamped him down under six feet of Texas soil three months ago, and he'll be extremely lucky if he oversleeps the Judgment Day. That's the kind of a man he was. I haven't seen him for twelve years, not since I horse-whipped him off our ranch in Western Oregon."

"Oh, I'm sorry. I didn't mean to pry, and if I'd known—it always makes me feel bad when people are in trouble." Bessie was genuinely sympathetic.

"Don't fret, girl. I made a mistake when I was twenty-two, and got tied up with the wrong kind of man. But that's long ago now, and I hadn't hardly thought of him for years until I got word recently that he was dead. It meant less to me than if one of my horses had died. . . . Who's this coming up the trail? Bill Laflamme, I should say, by that buckskin cayuse."

It was Bill. He rode up to the group, greeting Mrs. Frushing familiarly, as he swung himself from the saddle.

Mr. Laflamme acknowledged an introduction to the newcomers with the courtly grace of a true Frenchman, though he was only, as he said, "a Frenchman two honore' year' remove'."

"Mr. Laflamme is the postmaster at Khakala, and of late has been a veritable Cupid," laughingly explained Mrs. Frushing.

"Oh," broke in that gentleman, "I'm not so very stoopid lak' all dat, Jo. I'm more smart dan you lak' to tink."

"I didn't say stupid, you stupid. I said Cupid. That means one who carries whispers of love."

"Ah, yes, yes, yes. Den dat's me. I tell you, Jo," this in an intensely dramatic manner. "I done more v'ispers of love lately dan never before in ma life. I got to v'isper, because if Sam Floyd hear me ta'k love loud to ma li'l Alice—Zeupp, it's all off." Bill flung his arms high in the air, then drew them back slowly to his side, where they hung limp, the calisthenics being intended to portray the flight of hope from a fond heart, and its succeeding tenancy by dull despair.

"Well, forget your troubles, Bill, and tie up. . ."

But Bill didn't let Mrs. Frushing finish.

"No, no, Jo, I ain't got de tam' to stay for dinner, becous I got to mak' Ol' Man Fraser as queek lak' I can. I got to get heem come back wit' me for Cory Harrigan, he's got seek colt, and mebbe Ol' Man Fraser can feex heem up. Me—I tink de colt die before we get back. But anyway, we wan' Ol' Man Fraser to be de judge at de double-barrel weddin' to-morrow afternoon."

"To-morrow afternoon!" chorused three feminine voices.

"Sure t'ing," grinned Bill, "everybody's all ready. My li'l girl say any tam' we can get de judge, it's de good tam'. Cory, he's all ready all de tam', and you, Mees, you don' wan' wait, neider. I'm cer-tain. And den Ol' Man Fraser has to come for de seek colt, so it's no use mak' heem mak' de trip twice. He can bring de Bible and de Hymn Book right wit' heem."

"Who is this Old Man Fraser?" asked Miss Ingraham, with some asperity, rightly feeling a somewhat personal interest in the Frenchman's voluble but vague explanations, "is he a veterinary surgeon, or a preacher?"

"He's a Justice of the Peace, with a local reputation as a 'hoss doctor'," explained Mrs. Frushing. "He's also a regularly ordained Presbyterian minister, though he doesn't look like it now."

"You meet Ol' Man Fraser to-night, Mees Een-graim," volunteered Bill, "we all stop here to-night, me and Ol' Man Fraser, and de two Polees-man he's goin' to swear in for de double-barrel weddin'."

"Why two policemen?" asked Mollie, in some anxiety.

"What's a double-barrel wedding?" asked Bessie, in more anxiety.

The polite postmaster hastened to make things more confused with voluble explanations, out of

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 65.)

THE SECRET OF THE RIVER

By MAZO DE LA ROCHE

A Tale of the Canadian Woods Where Waters Run Deep

Illustrated by
P. C. SHEPPARD

NAZAIRE RONDEAU sat in a corner of the bar-room of "Le Chien Noir" with his eyes shut, feigning sleep, that he might hide the tears of bitterness which he could not keep out of them. In an opposite corner, sprawling over two chairs, was the object of his resentment, the big Englishman, Magrath. He had appeared in St. Loo a month before with a gun and two dogs, Boris and Nell, that never left his heels. He hired as a guide, Léon Gosselin, the best chasseur in St. Loo, with the exception of Remi Leduc, landlord of "Le Chien Noir." These two hunted the country for many miles around, but never remained away long. They would reappear in the village when least expected, and Léon intimated that it was for the sake of Cécile Racette that his patron sought civilization so frequently. That was the cause of Nazaire's bitterness.

Baptême! How he hated Magrath with his insolent smile and his big white teeth! For what had he come to St. Loo to bring coyness into the honest eyes of Cécile and jealousy into the heart of her lover? Everybody in St. Loo was laughing at him and Léon was crowing with joy over Cécile's sudden coldness toward him. Well, let him crow—she had slapped his ugly face once for him, hein? He braced himself and opened his eyes. Through the blue haze of tobacco smoke he saw the lounging figures of the men around the bar, listening to a story of Léon's. Magrath was listening, too, with his brazen grin.

"So Meestaire Magrath," finished Léon, speaking English out of courtesy to the guest, "he's say to her ver' nice an' tranquille, 'Cécile, eef you don' lak me for carry you over de stream myself, why den you stay here all night in de wet alone, an' dat's too bad, a nice li'l gal lak you!' So den she's see he's in earnes' sure 'nuff, an' dat's bring her roun' pretty quick an' she's let Meestaire Magrath carry her over, tout de suite, lak dis, an' den he's set her down an' kiss her on de mouth, an' she's look mighty dam' well please', too!"

"Ho! Ho! Ho!" chuckled old Belanger, slapping his wooden leg, and the others joined in discordantly. Léon became aware that Nazaire was awake and listening. His nostrils dilated and he raised his voice.

"An' now, ma frien's, le's all drink de health an' ver' good tam of ma boss Meestaire Magrath an' hees gal Cécile!"

"Polisson! Son of a cur! Not before me! I'll wring you the neck first!"

The whisky slopped over. Léon's mustache as Nazaire sprang at his throat.

"Saprie! That's good!" gasped Léon. "I am waiting for this since a long time. You shall have it now, par dieu!"

He threw his arms around Nazaire's body and squeezed him hard. You could hear his bones crack. But Nazaire hung on like a wolf and Léon's face showed purple and his eyes glared in a surprised stare. He let go Nazaire's body and clutching him by the head, forced him suddenly across the room and bent him backward over the table among the mugs of whisky. Old Belanger sprang out of the way with surprising alacrity.

"Young Rondeau, he's de devil when he's rouse'," said Remi Leduc to Magrath, "but Léon's go for give him de awful batage dis tam, Ah'm 'fraid."

"Why don't you pull him off, then?" asked Magrath. Remi shrugged his broad shoulders deprecatingly.

"It ees not de politesse dat Ah interfere me in de li'l affaire of ma guest; bezzide, m'sieu, Léon, he's your man, you'd better be pullin' him off yourself, hein? He's killin' dat li'l Rondeau."

Magrath caught Léon by the collar and shook him.

"See here!" he said, "Let go! Do you hear? Vite. Right away, or by the Lord Harry you'll lose your job!" He wrenched them apart and pushed his broad figure between them. Léon pranced up and down the room clenching and unclenching his hands and yelling fiercely.

"Let me at him! Let me at the young cochon! I'll teach him the one great lesson, me! And I fight also any man in 'Le Chien Noir' who says I am not the best chasseur in St. Loo!"

Remi went close in front of Léon till their eyes were on a level.

"Et moi, Léon?" he asked, quietly.

"Mon Dieu, non!" said Léon, and put his hands in his pockets.

Nazaire's right eye was torn and bleeding. The muscles in his face twitched with rage. But his anger was toward Magrath, not Léon. He swayed for a moment against the bar and then straightened himself, facing the Englishman.

"You have protect' me, m'sieu, but Ah do not t'ank you. You have save' me, perhaps, de eye, but Ah am sooner dat she is scratch' out. You t'ink it ess fonny for come to St. Loo an' mak' de flirt on ma gal Cécile, but Ah won't stan' it an' if you ain' afraid dere's one man in dis room dat's fight you now—dat's be maself, by gosh!"

He walked close to Magrath with that springiness in the knees that means danger in a Frenchman. Magrath smiled down at him.

"Mister Leduc," he said to Remi, "I think you'd better put this little bantam out, before he gets hurt. He's insulting."

Remi pushed Nazaire to the door.

"Tiens! Nazaire," he whispered, "for what should you make another fight? Monsieur Magrath has done nothing. As to your fancy that Cécile cares for him, that is but a bagatelle. She loves you yet. Anyone can see that with half an eye. Go home, now, mon p'tit, and be content for it is only a fancy. No, no, you are not going back. Saprie, that English hog would eat you up!"

He patted him on the shoulder. Nazaire went. What Remi Leduc said in St. Loo that was done. He had force. And if he did not love his God as he should, he loved the men of St. Loo quite unselfishly and that counts. Is it not so? He loved the women, too, but that does not count, hélas!

Nazaire stumbled into the street dazed and resentful. He lingered at the door of "Le Chien Noir," hoping that Magrath might follow him and have it out. Why had Remi interfered with him? Was it not his place to defend the honor of Cécile even if she did not love him. He shuffled along the narrow street. A young girl passed him and he wondered at the terror in her eyes. He turned and gazed after her. She was looking back, her apron to her lips. He quickened his steps—on past the little low-browed houses that turned passive white faces to the red glare of the sun, on past the saw mill where the air reeked with the smell of fresh cut timber, on into the open where the harvest fields lay on each side of the long white road. To the left and far below he could hear the Rivière du Diable with its same old sleepy song, tink-tink over the stones. Presently he heard the rumble of a wagon behind and the rasping breath of a horse with the heaves. He knew what horse that was, poor old Lu-Lu the Gosselin's worn-out mare. He stood aside while they passed, old man Gosselin bent nearly double half asleep, but sucking diligently at his pipe, and his two younger sons Henri and Jacques gray with dust from their work at the limekiln, no touch of color in the group except where the sun made a point of amber light on the old man's pipe. They gazed at Nazaire with some compassion but did not speak, and finally disappeared from sight beyond the hill St. Mary Pilar, leaving only an impression of creaking wheels and staring gray faces.

He forced him suddenly across the room and bent him backward over the table.

He came to the little farm of the Racettes. They were plowing their last furrow before night-fall, Cécile and her father. Nazaire stood in the shadow watching them. A horse and an ox were hitched together, Cécile driving them, while her father held the plow. They were plowing on the steep side of a broken gully in sandy soil. It gave small promise of a harvest there. Even the horse and the ox seemed oppressed by a sense of useless toil, drooping their heads dejectedly. They turned the last furrow and the girl crossed the field homeward. Nazaire watched her eagerly as she pulled off her flapping sun-bonnet and fanned her face with it. Mon Dieu! how he loved her! He thought of the days before Magrath had come. He had not realized till now how happy they had been, when Sunday morning he had walked home with her from Mass, he in his best clothes and gay silk handkerchief, and she—he forgot what her dress was, but he remembered the two little red earrings that glanced and coquetted from under the brown hair just as the two dimples came and went in her cheeks. He could almost feel the moist warm clasp of her fingers as they stood hand in hand on the river's edge watching the old Diable writhe and fret between his banks. Well, he had walked home with her last Sunday and they had watched "Le Diable" as before, but he had not held her hand and the dimples had only flashed once, that was when he had said that Magrath was ungainly like a bull and she had smiled and said—"Mais oui, and you are graceful—like a rat."

Bitterness rose in him at his own insignificance and his resentment that she should compare it with the beauty of Magrath. It died away as he watched her. Who could be angry with Cécile? He longed to run to her and kiss her bare arms as she stood laving them under the pump. She held them up dripping for a moment and then entered the cottage, closing the door behind her. The last furrow was turned. The last shadow fell. Nazaire went home.

Nazaire sat in the doorway of his cabane cleaning his gun. Where he sat he could see the Rivière du Diable lying tranquil in the evening sunshine. From behind the Pointe des Rochers, where it curved suddenly out of sight, he could hear the muffled roar of the Rapides du Diable where the river spent itself in short-lived fury before it rounded the point, only once in a while a ragged and battered log was borne round in the undercurrent and floated listlessly on till, in a sluggish part of the stream, it was caught cross-wise in the weeds and formed a little rapid of its own.

Nazaire cleaned his gun, and as he rubbed each part with oil, he whistled that doleful nameless tune that men whistle when they clean a gun; boys, when they whittle a stick; and women, sometimes, when they comb their hair. He loved his gun—was there a better in St. Loo?—when it glittered all in place again, barrel and stock, hammer and trigger, he raised it tenderly to his shoulder and took aim at a solitary loon perched on the topmost peak of the Pointe des Rochers.

"One little tug at the trigger, now," he whispered, "and we could kill, mon ami, you and I, that saucy loon or even perhaps a bull, hein!"

The loon slowly left its perch and circled down to the water and rested for a moment on something floating there. Nazaire was curious. He ran to the water's edge to see. It was the dead body of a dog clinging to a paddle. Nazaire's Indian canoe was light and he was quick—ten sweeping strokes and he was beside the dog's body. It was Boris, the hound of Magrath. On the paddle was roughly carved a man's arm, with the fist clenched. "It is the token of Léon!" murmured Nazaire. Léon and Magrath! Magrath and Cécile! The names sang through his head as he rounded the Pointe des Rochers. Midway in the river, clinging to an overturned canoe, was Léon Gosselin.

"Ah, Nazaire, pour le bon Dieu!" he cried. "Is it that you have come at last! Ah, mon Dieu! mon Dieu!"

Nazaire was at his side. Léon dragged himself into the canoe; he was bleeding at the mouth. Nazaire grasped his hands and kissed him.

"Not much time to spare, eh, Léon? I saw the dog Boris and I knew at once. How did it happen? You knew better than to run the rapids at this season, n'est-ce pas?"

He did not ask the question that was uppermost in his mind.

"He dared me and I have never taken that yet. Fool that I am! The rocks tore me to pieces. See my lips. I'll bet he is drowned a dozen times himself, that sacré Magrath!"

"Mother of God!" said Nazaire. "Is he back there?" Léon threw out his hands, palms up.

"That I cannot say," he answered. "It may be." Nazaire turned on him.

"Mille tonnerres! Here is gratitude for you! You drink the whisky of M'sieu Magrath in 'Le Chien Noir,' you smoke his tabac, he gave you

The Little White Shawl

By Norma E. Smith.

Come from the years that have vanished,
Years that are dark as a pall;
Steal from yon battlement golden,
But come in your little white shawl.
Kiss me, and tell me you love me,
Hold me close to your breast;
I am weary of striving and waiting,
Weary, and fain would rest.

Leave all your glittering raiment
Behind you, Mother of mine;
Come in familiar garments,
My hands may not touch the divine.
Come with your sweet eyes faded,
Your hands all knotted and worn;
But bear in your features the love-light
That rivals the beauty of morn.

Come as the frail little lady
My young arms loved to embrace—
With a smile of wise understanding,
With the wrinkles upon your face.
A mother I want, not an angel;
A kiss, not a blessing, I crave;
Let me creep to your arms as I used to,
And give as you always gave.

Then I will tell you, beloved,
How it has fared with me
Since you've been dwelling up yonder
In sight of God's crystal sea.
Then I will listen and hear you,
Comfort, soothe and advise;
And, looking up through my teardrops,
I'll catch the gleam of your eyes.

Knowing, alas! you must vanish
From my arms in a golden flame,
As your spirit goes soaring upward,
Returning whence it came.
So come to me, now, in the twilight,
Dearest Mother of all;
Come, for my heart is aching
For you in your little white shawl.

even the trousseaux"—he stumbled on the English word—"you are wearing, and then, après tout, you shrug the shoulders and say, 'Perhaps he drowns. It may be!'"

"What of yourself, then?" snarled Léon. "I saw it in your face that you were glad! You could not deceive me with your—Mother of God! I know you too well, Rondeau, my brave!"

"You lie!" yelled Nazaire. "You"—his voice failed him and he half-sobbed—"Ah, Léon, you do not know what it is to bear a grudge—"

"Hein!" growled Léon.

"A man is not himself. I know I have wronged M'sieu Magrath. It is true that I—but I swear that I will save him! I will go back, I swear!" He crossed himself, and with compressed lips bent to his paddle. Soon the bottom of the canoe ground on the shore.

"You get out here, Léon," he said. "The canoe must be light." Léon got out resignedly.

"You are quite mad," he said. "You will be smashed to pieces."

"What must be, must be," said Nazaire. "What does it signify? Beside, I have wronged M'sieu Magrath. I wished him evil and now I must prevent it. It is necessary that I save him."

"I will go also then. You think me a coward."

"No, no. You are weak yet. Stay here; and if I do not come back soon you will go for help."

Léon nodded and knelt at the water's edge, bathing his bleeding lips.

Nazaire slung the canoe to his shoulder and picked his way among the rocks. He was as sure-footed as a goat and he knew every rock-ledge. He walked lightly, with the confidence of one who knows he is doing well. He would not only benefit his soul by the saving of M'sieu Magrath, but he would give himself charm in the eyes of Cécile. There is nothing a woman admires so much as valor! She would be proud when she was told that her Nazaire had saved the life of the big Magrath. And who knows, perhaps M'sieu Magrath would be so grateful that he would go back to Montreal and cease to trouble them!

Twenty yards up the shore, at the next bend, he saw Magrath struggling in the water, his straw-colored head bobbing in the waves; near him was Nell, the hound, fighting for life. From a point of rock that jutted out, higher up the river, Nazaire, in his little boat, set out, with a brave heart, on his penitential voyage. The canoe quivered and reeled in the grasp of the old "Diable," but Nazaire fought him inch by inch, with the sweat running down his temples and his lips drawn off his teeth. The speed was furious. What if he should go spinning past and miss him! Ah, if Remi Leduc were only here! Mais non, he must save him alone, for the admiration of Cécile!

Magrath saw him coming and waited with a half-smile on his sun-burned face.

"Courage!" called out Nazaire. "I'm coming!" But the rapids drowned his voice.

He and the canoe seemed to become one for a space. They crouched like a lynx in a lull of the rapids and then sprang forward as from a catapult. Nazaire caught Magrath by the shirt as he passed and dragged him along.

"Save Nellie," gasped Magrath, "my dog!" At that moment the dog's claws scratched on the bow and she scrambled in, snarling fiercely at Nazaire.

Two minutes more of the crunching water and the aimless buffeting of the rocks, then a cessation of noise and the steady lap of the ripples underneath. Nazaire seemed suddenly to waken up. Magrath's grasp on his arm had slackened. He was apparently unconscious. Nazaire shook him.

"M'sieu Magrath," he said, "I cannot lift you into the canoe. You must help me. See, it is I, Nazaire Rondeau."

Magrath's fingers gripped his arm. Something on the smallest finger caught Nazaire's eye; it was a woman's ring. He knew very well what ring. Was he likely to forget? Mon Dieu! he had bought it himself at the fair at St. Jude, a year ago. It had cost two dollars and had a beautiful red stone set in it, that matched her earrings! The Englishman's fingers gripped his arm. He looked up grinning.

"Good little Nazaire," he stammered, "good little man to save me—for Cécile." His eyes closed, but the impudent smile hovered yet on his lips.

The sickness of hatred rose in Nazaire's throat.

"Mais oui. Curse me for a fool! I save him for Cécile!" He laughed out loud. "Yes, the brute Englishman—for my little Cécile. And she will thank me—how? With her lips to his cheek and her fingers on his neck!"

A white film passed over his tanned face. The eyes narrowed viciously and the mouth took an ugly twist. He raised his head and looked around him and above—no sign of life but the witless circling loon. Magrath was heavy. How strong the undercurrent is! Nazaire undid the strong fingers from his arm, one by one. Sacre-dam, that ring again! He is slipping—slipping. Nazaire leaned over the canoe and watched him go; watched the ruddy face turn to green, watched the fair hair turn to bronze, then the whole figure black and shadowy like a sinking log. Then a cat-fish swam slowly by where it had been. Nellie the hound, watched also, whimpering. Nazaire wiped his hands on his jersey and paddled slowly around the Pointe des Rochers.

Léon met him on the shore.

"Mon Dieu! You have not found him?"

"Why ask me? You can see. They are treacherous, these Rapides du Diable."

Léon wrung his hands. "Aie, aie, but he was the good boss! He had the free hand! Think, Nazaire, he is gone out, like that—and his dog lives! Come Nell—ie, come to Léon?"

But the hound crouched at Nazaire's feet, looking up in his face with wistful, questioning eyes.

The red splash faded in the west; the evening vapors rose, and the stars peeped into the river and saw nothing; but the old "Diable," he knew what he hugged to his breast and he slid away down through the meadows, singing his same old sleepy song, tink-tink over the stones.

The Story of An Invention Which Brought Cleanliness and Ultimately Happiness

"I'm here again," said Rose Kolton. "I often wonder why I come back."

She stood at the gate of the humble little dwelling where old Signor Baretti, the Italian chemist, lived with his daughter.

"The first time I called, Minna peeped out with a scared look, and nearly shut the door in my face," she laughed to herself. "I know who you are! gasped Minna: 'You're Rose Kolton, the daughter of the rich old man who lives on the hill! Well, what if I am! I'm not ashamed of the big house on the hill, nor my father. He has made his money out of soap powder—Kolton's Klean-Al—but it's honest, if it is a very homely article!'"

Ever since Rose Kolton had heard that Minna Baretti was making dainty perfumes, much favored by society ladies, in her father's queer, dingy little laboratory, she had been seized by a generous impulse to order it wholesale for all her aunts, cousins, and friends.

"For it's money they need," thought Rose, glancing about the tumble-down little place. "Minna's tremendously clever, and very proud; I believe some times she suffers for food—and her clothes, how very cheap they are! I guess her queer old father would starve, too, if it wasn't for the dainty perfumes Minna makes and sells. He may be a great chemist, a famous experimenter, always on the verge of some grand discovery or other—but I don't think his work brings him in a dollar."

She saw Minna in the yard, and beckoned to her. Minna no longer looked scared at seeing her, but, as usual, she took her as far as possible away from the laboratory, where her father was working, and spoke in lowered tones, as though afraid the old man would find out that they had a caller. She entertained her in solemn grandeur in the front room, where a wreath of feather flowers stood in a glass case in the corner, and a stuffed bird stood on a stand, and a little old-fashioned organ, with keys that "sang" occupied the position of honor. Minna knew well that there was something the matter with the front room. But it was her father's wish that all be left as her mother had arranged it before her death. That is why the girl avoided it, and made herself happy in the laboratory instead.

"Let's go into the laboratory; I want to see your perfumes."

Rose walked toward the door as she made the suggestion, for she was an indulged only child, used to getting her own way.

"You mustn't! Oh, do come away! My father

KOLTON'S KLEAN-AL

By MABEL BURKHOLDER

ILLUSTRATED BY MANLY MacDONALD

would be very angry—I don't know what he would do to you!"

And Minna flung herself against the door, with her hand grasping the handle.

"Do to me? What do you mean, Minna?"

"Don't stand where he can see you!" Minna's face was almost as white as the muslin dress she was wearing. "I tell you he would be very angry. Sit down, and I will tell you why we can never be friends—why you must stop coming here."

Rose Kolton sank down on an old sofa.

"Now tell me."

"Perhaps you'd better ask your father," said Minna. "He knows."

"Go on, Minna!" cried Rose impatiently. "I could shake you! Tell me, I say!"

So Minna plunged into her story.

"Many years ago, when my father and yours were young men, they were friends—Oh, such dear friends. Both were chemists, but my father was cleverer. He made out the formula your father uses for his Klean-Al."

"That's not true!" interrupted Rose, whose temper was impulsive. "Daddy has often told me he thought that out himself."

Minna continued, as though she had not heard. "It was to have made father and me rich, Oh, very rich—but as we were trying to get money to put it before the public your father stole the secret, set up a factory, and got the stuff on the market, labelled with his name. There was a law-suit—but we lost, of course, being poor. It was good powder; you know that. Your father made a fortune out of it, while mine went nearly crazy. Do you wonder that he hates the name of Kolton, and that he would drive you away, if he knew you were here?"

Rose was very angry.

"I don't believe a word of it! I'll ask daddy!"

"Yes, do," said Minna.

Rose stood hesitating. She knew that part, at least, of what Minna Baretti said was true. Her father always got so angry when discussing old Signor Baretti.

"Daddy puts the blame on your father," she told Minna. "He says he borrowed money, and didn't try to pay it back."

"Perhaps that is so," said Minna, trying to be just; "though I never heard it that way. Anyway they're bitter enemies. Father is very poorly, completely broken down. He lives on one ambition; it is to make a better soap powder than Kolton's Klean-Al. Yours is good, but dear—too much money. He thinks he can make something ever so much cheaper. When father has accomplished this, I think he will die. He may die before, but I think God will give him strength to finish his task. I warn you that he will give his great secret to your worst enemy, who will take all your business from you. Now go away, please. I don't want to see you. I don't hate you—but I am my father's daughter, and I know what he has suffered."

ROSE KOLTON was so angry that she was afraid to speak, for fear she would say terrible things, for which she would be sorry after.

"I will tell Daddy this," was all she jerked out.

"Yes, do," reiterated Minna, with exasperating coolness.

As she spoke she opened the door of the laboratory to go to her father, and Rose caught a glimpse of what was going on inside the queer room. She would not have stayed, only Minna caught her arm, with a faint exclamation. Something was wrong in the laboratory.

Signor Baretti was deep in one of his experiments. The gaunt form stooped low over the bottles and retorts. Eager fingers were outstretched like claws. And all the while the old chemist kept up a queer muttering of words:

"Patience! Patience! A little more labor! A little more thought!"

"He is going to be sick," Minna cried, in alarm. "He talked like that once before, and was very ill afterward."

The shaggy head of the old chemist was thrown up suddenly, and a loud "Ha, ha" startled the watchers. Scribbling something on a scrap of paper, he cried, "I have it! At last! At last!" Then the head fell forward, and the old man sank helplessly to the floor.

"He is dead!" shrieked Minna. "I knew he would die, when the great secret flashed before him."

Rose Kolton, who had seen few of the hard scenes of life, was horrified; yet in the midst of all the confusion and tumult of thought, one fact stood out clearer than all else. On that scrap of paper lying on the table was written the grand secret, which was to be given to her father's worst enemy. It should never be accomplished—not while she was her father's daughter! Minna, in her excitement, had forgotten all about it. Not so Rose. While appearing to help her distracted companion, she quietly doubled up the paper, and put it in her pocket. Soon after she left the laboratory, and went home.

She stumbled into her father's arms in the quiet library of the big house on the hill. For five minutes she could not speak.

Then came the sharp exclamation,

"Signor Baretti is dead!"

The rich man rose to his feet, holding her at arm's length.

"No!"

"Yes—I saw him die!"

"So he failed to accomplish his revenge!"

"He completed his task," she panted.

Her father's face went grey.

"He got a new formula? Where is it? Did he give it away?"

Rose opened her fingers, and gave him the paper.

Greedily he read it, over and over again, until he knew by heart all it contained.

"My good little girl!"

"Oh, daddy, I don't feel good!" cried Rose wretchedly. "I guess I'm a thief—I don't know why I did it—I just couldn't let them ruin you, could I? Yet now I think we shouldn't—"

"Tut, child!" he said shortly, and went away; so that she did not see him again that evening.

She knew that he passed a restless night, for in her wakeful hours she heard him move restlessly in his room across the hall. What a quarrel that had been! And how strange that fate should always make a puppet of the old chemist, and throw the lucky cards right into her father's hands. If only she could analyze her own part in it! Was she terribly wicked? Yes, she was quite sure now that she had done wrongly to take the paper. They had all the money, and Minna had not enough to bury her father.

Her father came to her early in the morning.

"I didn't sleep well," he said. "I got thinking about Baretti. I think I'll go down and see what I can do for the girl. Want to come along?"

Did she want to go along? She fairly ran beside him, to keep pace with his strides. Through the grey mists of morning they hurried, as if now to make up for the delay of years.

Signor Baretti was deep in one of his experiments.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 73.)

A Day With the Ducks, with Cupid Counting the "Bag"

THE SHOW-DOWN

By ARCHIE P. McKISHNIE

ILLUSTRATED BY P. C. SHEPPARD

IN Martin's defense, let it be said that he started in the race to Marion Nevill's favor sadly and woefully handicapped. Perhaps no wooer since that old maid and woman placed beside him to awaken yearning and discontent, had ever found himself in such a dilemma as did he this momentous season when, in response to Captain Gregory's invitation he was spending the coming Autumn days in Shag Villa, the country home of the girl he adored.

Now, had it been an open field and no favor—but even so it was not; very much not! Two competitive wooers toed the scratch with Martin in the race to Marion's favor, either of whom, he felt assured, could have given him five yards and beat him to the rope with time to spare.

And the fiendish part of it all was, he confessed to himself, he knew it. Yes, Martin knew it all right and the knowledge did not serve to help him in the least. He liked Captain John Simms as a man, very much indeed, and he possessed a wholesome admiration for Billy Gregory, too. Man to man and with man that is; as rival to rival, he hated both, and would have enjoyed tying them together and hurling them over the highest cliff into the lake.

There was something prehistoric about Martin's nature and it was nothing for him to jump back a couple or more centuries and become a cave-dweller. Particularly was this liable to happen when, as now, he played golf with his rivals and heard their derisive chuckles and Marion's sigh of sympathy when he missed a drive. At such times that slender, steel-nosed golf-stick took on enormous proportions with knotty protuberances along its sides, and he longed to make one fell swipe at the Captain and Billy, grasp Marion by the hair and drag her to his lair among the cliffs.

Only there were impediments to the design. In the first place, Martin was not fashioned by nature to carry it out. He stood only five foot three, which fact perhaps, explained why he was being frequently mistaken by visitors for the caddy; in the second place this spirit of outlawry was but an obsession that lasted not longer than the flicker of an eye-lash.

However, of one thing he was positive. Neither the Captain nor Billy cared for Marion just in the way he cared for her. They were not capable of it. They were both big, raw-boned, aggressive individuals delving away at life for the kernel the shell afforded. In other words they were brute men, veneered by civilization into fairly perfect specimens, with aims and motives selfish ones; and they drank too much and played poker too late. Martin was no saint, himself, but he knew a girl who was as near one as it is possible for human being to be, and he wanted the man to whom she granted supremest happiness to be worthy of her, that's all.

This morning Marion came upon him seated on a mound behind the wood-hedged links slowly and carefully filling his pipe. A broken golf-stick lay at his feet. The peak of a plaid golf-cap protruded from the much battered piece of old mute evidence of Martin's recent sojourn on golf in general and two players in particular.

Laughter danced in the girl's eyes at sight of him, and quickly she unslung the kodak from her shoulders. At the click of the instrument Martin turned enquiringly, and admiration and appreciation of the picture before him wiped out six weeks of failure from his memory. She matched the environment so well, the gold of her hair, the pink of her cheeks, her wild bubbling life.

Then he turned the picture to the wall. She had frowned.

"Exhibit number one hundred and twenty," he shivered. "What are you going to name this one, Marion?"

"The Quitter," she returned icily.

"Eh?" Martin sat up. "What do you mean, the quitter?"

"That's what you are, aren't you, Jimmie?"

He looked away. "I'm not long on golf," he said rather lamely. "I can't play golf with any degree of success any more than I can play billiards or ride horse-back; but listen, Marion," pleadingly, "I'm no quitter. No siree, I'm no quitter. Haven't I stuck and done my level best only to be beaten by the Cap and Billy every time. They're players, those chaps," he acknowledged. "I'm just a misfit, that's all."

"You allow the Captain and Billy to beat you at everything, Jimmie." There was banter in her tones, but Martin did not get it. To him, it was a brief, cold statement of fact. According to her own words, he was done.

He sat frozen of soul, numb of mind. A man sentenced to be hung may live a thousand deaths before the big day, but after all there's nothing to be compared with the real hanging.

Martin plucked his cap from the earth and flapped it on the log. There was a certain finality in the action which the girl intuitively read. "Jimmie," she said, gently.

He looked up at her. "I'm going back to the city to-morrow," he said shortly. "I'm not going to spoil your last snap-shot, Marion. I'm a quitter."

PERHAPS the Autumn day was in harmony with his depression of soul. As he spoke, the sun went out from the skies and the gold on shrub and tree-top faded to bronze and grey. Even the face of the girl he loved better than anything in the wide world seemed to grow sad and dreary in expression. A cold wind whipped in from across the marshy lake lifting her cap and unloosing a strand of gold-brown hair. Never before had she seemed so dear to him—and yet so far away.

Yet all she said as they turned up the path together was:

"Of course if you wish to go, we cannot think of asking you to stay, Jimmie."

Wasn't that like a woman! Jimmie bit his tongue and stood it like the quitter she believed him to be.

That night, in the smoking room, Martin casually let drop the intelligence that he was striking cityward on the morrow. He fancied he detected a look of mingled contempt and relief on the faces of his rivals at the news, though both were profuse in their expressions of regret at having to part with him. However, they hoped to meet him later on in the city, and if he would visit a certain club of which they were members, they could promise him a sociable evening, etc.

It was the old Colonel, who had known Martin from boyhood, who upon learning of his intention came looking for him on the hop, skip and jump.

"What's this I hear, you young rascal," he shouted, catching sight of Jimmie. "Jumping away just when the shooting is on! Gad, boy, it's not like you to want to get out just when the ducks are coming in. You can't go, that's all. To-morrow we'll go and have a day's ducking on the lake. Here, you fellows," he appealed to the Captain and Billy, who had resumed their game of billiards, "come over here and help me reason with this young outlaw. Wants to skip out just when the duck-shooting is on. Ever hear the like of it?"

Captain Simms came over, smiling. "Perhaps he is not sufficiently expert at the game of shooting to wish to try his hand," he smiled. "Of course, if you will stay, Jimmie," he added suavely, "we'll see that you have first choice of blinds and all that."

"Sure, we'll do our best to place you so's you can make some kind of a showing," backed Gregory, magnanimously.

The old Colonel doubled up in a loud guffaw. "Why you hanged idiots, let me tell you something," he cried when he could get his breath. "Do you know that this same Jimmie Martin —"

Jimmie grasped his arm warningly and broke in with. "I hate to go, Colonel, of course, but I've simply got to, that's all."

"I'm going to leave him in your hands," said the Colonel, turning to the Captain and Billy. "Convince him that his idea of going away now is a crazy one. I've got to go over to the boat-house with Williams to look over the decoys." And he stamped away.

"Better stay," suggested the Captain mildly, and "Do stay, old Top," grinned Billy.

"Thanks," grunted Martin. Then glancing up he caught sight of Marion in the doorway. He beckoned her over.

"And what is the question before the house?" (CONTINUED ON PAGE 14.)

Laughter danced in the girl's eyes at sight of him, and quickly she unslung the kodak from her shoulders.

How to Make Your Sun-Room Gay with Flowering Plants in Autumn and Winter

FLOWERS IN THE HOUSE ALL WINTER.

By H. F. EAST

FLOWERING plants are always appreciated. No dwelling room is perfect without the personal adornment of a plant. The sun-room is a space set apart for rest, where one can spend leisure moments in study. The sun-room features a miniature conservatory, where also our visitors are welcomed, and where we like to see plants flowering throughout the fall and winter months of the year.

To purchase plants when they are full grown and in flower from the florist, and grow them in the sun-room—they last but a short period. The most economical method is to purchase a few plants half-grown and to acclimatize them to the sun-room temperature, before they come into flower. Plants can be purchased cheaper half grown, and they last double the length of time from this principle of introduction. Some of the most attractive and profitable plants adapted for the sun-room are cyclamen, cineraria, primula sinensis or Chinese primrose, primula malacoides and primula obconica. These plants can always be relied upon to flower profusely, also they come under easy cultivation. Primula malacoides is an exceedingly pretty primrose, and a few spikes of flowers can be gathered to grace the centre piece of the dinner table.

You can also make your sun-room gay by the introduction of some of the plants from your garden. If you have some roots of the bleeding heart, lift one or two roots and pot them into six inch pots. You must lift the bleeding heart roots very carefully as they are brittle and soon "snap off." But so long as you have some nice pieces of roots with a good crown, you can make an attractive decorative pot plant. You can also grow the lupin and it will flower abundantly under normal conditions. The lupin is a beautiful flower, grows in long spikes, featuring miniature sweet peas. Solomon's seal is also very showy, and lasts a long time in flower. The variegated funkia is represented in most gardens. Several of these give the surroundings of the sun-room a remarkable effect.

The yellow doricum must not be omitted from our hardy plants that will force or grow under artificial conditions. If you have not got any of these roots in your garden, it will certainly pay you to order them from a nurseryman or florist. They can be purchased now in a dormant stage, and as soon as you receive them, put them up in any garden soil, in pots that have been washed, and stand them in a cool, shady position outdoors, taking care to cover up the pots and crowns with soil or fine ashes so that the roots do not dry out. They can be introduced in the sun-room in the latter part of the year, to flower early in the New Year. At this season some forget-me-nots can be procured, also some pansy plants. These can be put into four-inch size pots and they will make early spring flowers. Blue forget-me-nots always make an attractive edging plant for the outside row of the plant shelf. Give these a light sandy soil and always give your sun-room or winter garden plenty of fresh air on all favorable occasions. In the fall you can buy some baby rambler roses in the dormant stage, much cheaper than when grown and in flower. In fact, it is more interesting and educative to bring them into flower yourself under the natural conditions of a sun-room, than under the artificial conditions of the green-house. In potting roses give them ample drainage, medium rich loam, and pot them fairly firm. A six-inch pot makes a desired effect for a pot plant. If you would like two or three varieties of the baby rambler for effect, you should get Baby Dorothy, Mrs. Cutbush, Pink Soupret. But Mrs. Cutbush is a pretty carmine pink that seems to light up the surroundings of the sun-room or any living room. White and pink Killarney will give you some rose buds and bloom grown on steadily. Do not introduce many rose trees in your collection as they are often subjected to mildew and insect pest, and will affect the nearby plants that are thriving. But try two or three plants for an experiment if you have ventured on rose growing. Perhaps the aspect of your sun-room may be in their favor and they will make profitable returns. In gardening circles there is an old adage which says that some plants will thrive where others will die under the same conditions.

The Charming Cyclamen.

In the fall there are always a lot of useful summer bedding out plants thrown away to make room for the fall planting of bulbs. Some of these could be prolonged instead of letting them be killed outright by frost. I do not say it is wise to pot up and give valuable space to old plants. But often in bedding out plants some half-grown plants can be made use of, and if potted will last for a long time. Snapdragons, after they are finished, can be cut down, potted, and the plants will make a second growth and furnish a lot of short stem flowers good enough for the table. Flowers are almost forbidden luxuries to buy them in the winter. Some choice variegated coleus will be worth saving. Cut them back and pot them in light sandy soil. Several plants of Dusty Miller, especially the fern leaf variety, will throw out some new leaves and give you a lightness of color that is not seen in any other class of plant. As for the beautiful little begonia vernon with its reddish foliage and pink flowers, instead of throwing it away at the end of the bedding season, pot up a few roots. They will often make a secondary growth and continue to give you some decorative work. If you have not the hardy roots as mentioned for potting up and have to order them, you should add three bushes of deutzia gracilis and three bushes of azalea mollis. These are delightful shrubs for the sun-room, full of fragrance and attractive. As soon as you receive them place them in large pots and stand them outdoors in the shade for a few weeks. When they make roots and establish themselves, bring them into the sun-room with the azalea mollis. The flowers always come before the foliage. The plants and roots that you use for the sun-room can be planted out in the border the following spring and can be used again.

Do not forget to pot up some Dutch bulbs as soon as possible, as they come under easy management, and it is cheaper to grow them yourself than to purchase a pot of bulbs or some cut bloom from the florist. If you have any old pots, scrub them out. Put plenty of drainage at the bottom of the pot. Then mix up some manure with the garden soil. Five-inch size pots are very useful to grow the bulbs in, as they can be introduced in the vase in the living room. To the amateur it is almost a puzzle what selections are the most suitable from the numerous varieties in the bulb catalogue's descriptive eloquence. The best variety for the sun-room are a few bulbs of paper white narcissus. Get good-sized bulbs of these, as the large bulbs generally give you two spikes of flowers instead of one, and the fragrance will give the atmosphere of the sun-room a delightful freshness.

Golden spur and the double daffodil (Van Sion), the beautiful scented pheasant's eye narcissus (Porticus ornatus) together with the Emperor will give you a collection of daffodils and narcissus.

For tulips, Duc Van Tholl is an early scarlet; Cottage Maid is white edged with rose; La-Reine, white; Mous Tresor, yellow; and rose Gris-de-lin also Yellow Prince, which is considered the most richly-scented tulip in cultivation. You must also add a few immature hyacinths to your list. They are less expensive to purchase than the high-class named sorts; and the immatures last so much longer. You can get them in separate colors, but I recommend getting twelve good mixed sorts. The freesia is a charming flower for the house and winter garden. It must have a very light soil to grow in, as it makes tender roots. Freesia Purity is to be recommended for general purposes. To obtain success with bulbs is an easy matter. In the first place, you cannot make bulbs flower until they have made sufficient roots. After you have potted up your collection of bulbs, dig a trench in the garden and place at the bottom of the trench some wood to stand the pots on, so that the worms will not creep up the hole of the pot. Then cover up the pots and allow about three or four inches of soil to rest on top of the pots. They must be left in this way for some weeks, until they have nearly made the pot full of roots; by degrees they can be taken into the sun room, and the bulbs will come along naturally into flower. You must be careful in taking off the top soil or you will damage the little growth that the bulb has made. Do not overcrowd your sun room or the plants will be attacked with insect pest. But your ambition should be to always have something in flower, to interest you, also to charm your visitors. Watering is of vital importance. To know when to water a plant is an art that calls for years of experiment. So many amateur florists will merely water a plant by giving it a little on the surface, or stand the pot in a saucer of water and soak it. If you want success and your plant

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 77.)

The Chinese Primrose.

The Sturdy Cineraria.

The Show-Down

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 12.)

he smiled, glancing from one to the other of his guests.

"We're trying to persuade Jimmy to remain over the duck shooting," explained the Captain and Billy in a breath.

Martin wanted to look straight into Marion's grey eyes, but he knew he would find the word "quitter" there so he quitted and looked fully as uncomfortable as he felt.

Low chuckles from the Captain and Billy brought him back to himself.

"I'll stay on one condition," he said quietly. That condition is if I bag fewer ducks to-morrow than both of you gentlemen bag together, I go back to the city. If I bag more ducks to-morrow than both of you together, you go back to the city."

Silence, dead and awesome silence followed Martin's challenge. He glanced at Marion and was sure he read approval in her eyes. "Of course," he smiled, addressing the other two. "If you feel the odds against you are too great —"

"Oh we'll take the wager," cried the Captain, "that is providing Miss Marion is willing."

"Certainly not," murmured Billy.

"Oh dear me," smiled Marion. "Do not let me interfere. While I and my father will hate to see any one leave Shag Villa, I'm sure I voice his sentiments when I say—have it all your own way, gentlemen. Suit yourselves."

"Going to pack up, Jimmy?" sneered Billy.

Martin paused and half turned. "No," he answered. "Going up to unpack."

DAWN crept tardily up from the east to show curling waves of the lake champing white teeth at the low, dun-colored sky. Martin, crouched in his blind, eyed his bobbing decoys and wondered if Billy and the Captain were yet in their respective hides.

The sharp "tak-tak" of two "double barrels," speaking almost in unison, gave him his answer. He gripped the pump-gun on his knees and glanced up towards the blinds at the curve of the lake. Apparently the Captain and Billy were shooting from the same hide. Had they bagged any? Martin wondered.

As if in answer to the thought a long line of low-flying Redheads, grew up out of the mist and swung in towards his blind. As the frantic ducks swept in and turned against the wind with set wings, the Winchester coughed six times, deliberately as the ticking of a clock. And at every cough a duck crumpled up and fell sprawling on the wind-whipped water.

Again came the report of other fowlers' guns. This time Martin saw their skiff dancing on the waves and knew that they were gathering dead birds.

"Swee-swish-swee-swish," and a flock of Blue-bills darted above his decoys and went down with the wind at express speed.

Now a novice at the work of duck-shooting would have taken a "snap" shot at that retreating flock of ducks on the chance of body-crippling a bird or two. But Martin was no novice. He simply sank lower in his blind and waited.

Far out on the lake the flock turned and curved back towards him, dropping low as they neared the decoys. Once again they swept low over the wooden ducks—then, as before, sped outward. Still Martin did not shoot. He knew from experience that a flock of Blue-bills will invariably come above decoys three times. He knew also that on returning for the third time, if they did not light, they would not return again. Accordingly he braced himself and waited the incomers which had again turned and were speeding towards him.

This time as they flashed above his decoys, Martin's "Pumper" spoke again, sharply and deliberately. Through the deepening light he was able to count the birds which the wind had driven into shore. Twelve all told. Not a bad beginning, he thought.

Other ducks came in to him, in singles, twos and in tattered remnants of flocks. Noon found him with eighty-one ducks as a showing. He wondered how the Captain and Billy had fared. All morning their guns had been kept busy. In another hour would come the grand show-down when he would know whether he or his rivals would have to go back to the city.

An hour later Martin loaded his ducks into his skiff and paddled shoreward. He had seen the other boats going in a few minutes before. Marion and her father had gone first, Billy and the Captain close behind.

They were waiting for him at the landing. "How many?" were the first words, of Billy and the Captain, as he landed. Martin saw Marion's eager face as she waited for his reply.

"Eighty-one," he answered. "And you?"

"Eighty-two," shouted the Captain, and Billy danced a hornpipe on the sands. "Tell the fellows of the city that we'll see 'em later, Jimmy," he chortled.

Marion, clad in a heavy hunting coat of her father's, came forward and bent to examine Martin's ducks in the bottom of his skiff. Martin longed to see her eyes, but her head was bent as slowly she counted the birds. The Colonel, official referee of the contest, stood by, smiling and watching her.

Martin was gravely shaking hands with his competitors when the Colonel's voice came to his ears. "I say, Jimmy's beat you two fellows, at that. He was just kidding you when he said eighty-one. He's got eighty-three ducks here!"

Martin pinched himself to see if he were awake. The Captain and Billy, their faces anything but smiling now, stood beside the Colonel and Marion, slowly counting the birds.

Then slowly they turned and faced Martin.

"Jimmy," spoke the Captain, "you got us. Shake, and good luck."

"Same here," echoed Billy in soulless cordiality. Then they turned up the path.

"We're on our way," waved the Captain from the knoll. But Billy did not echo the words. He was plodding along, head down.

The Colonel had returned to his own skiff to secure the birds he had bagged. Martin turned slowly and faced Marion. She was looking away across the now blue and tranquil lake. "Marion," he said softly, "you know of course why I made that wager."

She nodded.

He reached for her hand and took it in both of his.

"And are you sorry I won?"

She turned her grey eyes upon him. They were misty and full of a new and beautiful light. "No," she said chokingly, "I'm glad, I wanted you to win, Jimmy."

"Because?" he persisted.

"Yes," she whispered, "that's the reason."

They were standing, Jimmy's arms about Marion's shoulder, planning, when the Colonel's voice spoke for the third time, behind them.

"Jimmy," it said in mock severity, "you are an ambitious hunter, I must say. You have, I see, bagged the queen Duck of Shag Villa."

"I have," agreed Martin, frankly.

"But what I can't understand," said the Colonel perplexedly, "is where the mischief the only pair of Red-heads I bagged, went to. Some sneaking bog-shooter must have found 'em in the skiff and took 'em—eh?"

"Quite likely, sir," said Martin.

He was trying to read Marion's grey eyes. But they were turned from him, gazing across the blue, untroubled lake.

ON THE PICTURESQUE SHORES OF CAPE BRETON ISLAND

This photograph, by Miss Edith Watson, shows the beautiful South Bay, Ingonish, Cape Breton Island. The home-made gate is an interesting feature, peculiar to that district. It is made without nails, the hinge being made by the upright passing into a hole bored at the ends in cross-pieces, top and bottom.

RINSING

ONE of the delights of using Ivory Soap is that it does not cling to your skin when you want to rinse it off. The first touch of clear water—warm or cold—carries away the bubbling lather, leaving the skin free from soap and dirt.

This perfect rinsing denotes the care and skill with which Ivory is made. It contains only the purest ingredients, perfectly combined.

This is why Ivory is the "right" soap for every skin. There is no excess oil to leave an unsightly shine; no excess alkali to make the skin feel hard and drawn and dry after the soap itself is gone.

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS

99 <sup>44</sup>/<sub>100</sub> % PURE

MADE IN CANADA

The Manufacturers of Ivory Soap also make in Canada the following general household soaps: P. & G.—The White Naphtha Soap, Gold Soap, Pearline and Sopade, thus enabling the housekeeper to use a Procter & Gamble high quality soap for every purpose.

Mrs. Knox's Corner

Low-Cost Dishes for High-Cost Days

WHEN a ten thousand-dollar-a-year chef is paid to create popovers, cream puffs, from left-over muffins, unbaked custards with left-over cocoa or luncheon appetizers from unused slices of tomato, why shouldn't we home-makers be proud instead of apologetic at our own home talents in this direction?

There is nothing that the chef uses more than Knox Sparkling Gelatine. It will be just as helpful to you in making left-overs, canned foods, fruits and juices, into ten thousand dollar chef creations. It will transform half a can of tomatoes or other vegetables into a delicious salad, use up unattractive bits of fruit in a colorful dessert, or stretch cold meat from a roast into twice the number of portions it might ordinarily serve. Here are a few "low cost dishes" which you will find helpful in solving your home food problems in these high cost days.

LEFT-OVER MEAT LOAF DE LUXE

Take two cups of any left over stock, bouillon or diluted gravy, bring to boiling point, add one envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine softened in one half cup of cold water. When mixture begins to stiffen, add two cups of any cold chopped meat at hand—veal, ham, beef or chicken, which has been salted to taste. Also mold in a little red or green pepper, celery, onion if desired, or parsley. Turn into a square mold, first dipped in cold water and chill. Remove from mold to platter for serving, or cut in slices.

JELLIED VEGETABLES LUXURO

Soak one envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine in one-half cup cold water ten minutes. Add one-half cup mild vinegar, two cups boiling water, one-half cup sugar and one teaspoonful salt. Strain and when mixture begins to thicken, add any left-over vegetables on hand, such as string beans, peas, beets, chopped cabbage, a few stalks of celery, a little cucumber or pepper. Turn into mold, first dipped in cold water, and chill. May be served with or without mayonnaise and lettuce.

UNBAKED CUSTARD

Soak one-half envelope of Knox Sparkling Gelatine in one-fourth cup of cold water ten minutes. Make a custard of two egg yolks, one-third cup sugar, a few grains of salt and two cups of milk. Add soaked gelatine to the hot custard, and when nearly cool, add whites of eggs, beaten until stiff, two-thirds cup stale cake crumbs and one teaspoon vanilla. Turn into small cups, first dipped in cold water and chill. Any left over cocoa may be used instead of the milk.

MUFFINS OR POP-OVER CREAM PUFFS

If pop-overs are left from breakfast, make an opening in each one just large enough to fill the center. For six pop-overs take one-half cup cream, two tablespoonfuls sugar and one-half teaspoonful vanilla, a pinch of salt and one teaspoonful Knox Sparkling Gelatine, softened in one-fourth cup milk 10 minutes and dissolved over hot water. When mixture is cool, fill pop-overs.

Not only does Knox Gelatine make up into many low cost dishes, but it is an economy in itself, for one box makes twenty-four individual servings or provides a family of six with four delicious salads or desserts for four different meals.

If you would like other suggestions for attractive low cost dishes, write for my booklet—"Food Economy" and "Dainty Desserts." They are free of charge. Just enclose a 2 cent stamp to cover postage charges and mention your grocer's name.

MRS. CHARLES B. KNOX

KNOX GELATINE

Dept. G, 180 St. Paul St., W., Montreal.

"Wherever a recipe calls for gelatine—it means KNOX"

This package contains an envelope of pure Lemon Flavor for the convenience of the busy housewife

In these days of Home Efficiency in Medical Treatment Such a Cabinet as This is Indispensable

HOME-MADE FURNITURE

THE FIFTH ARTICLE

IN the medicine cabinet, one or two things that it is well to call attention to are that the stiles of the doors are rabbeted and the left one is 3-16 wider than the one on the right side, to allow for this rabbet. The shape of the top and bottom of the sides should be carefully studied so as not to become too straight or an ordinary curve—and in finishing, it is well to sandpaper all the corners or edges that stand out, as it will soften the lines and beautify the piece.

MILL BILL FOR LUMBER IN MEDICINE CABINET

|                    |        | —Rough— |        |       | —Finish— |       |
|--------------------|--------|---------|--------|-------|----------|-------|
|                    | Pieces | Long    | Wide   | Thick | Wide     | Thick |
| Sides .....        | 2      | 26 in.  | 6¼ in. | 1 in. | 6 in.    | ¾ in. |
| Top and bottom.... | 2      | 17 in.  | 5⅝ in. | ⅞ in. | 5⅝ in.   | ⅝ in. |
| Top of back.....   | 1      | 15 in.  | 2⅛ in. | 1 in. | 1⅞ in.   | ¾ in. |
| Bottom of back.... | 1      | 15 in.  | 3¼ in. | 1 in. | 3 in.    | ¾ in. |
| Back .....         | 5      | 22 in.  | 3¼ in. | ¾ in. | 3 in.    | ½ in. |
| Stiles .....       | 4      | 21 in.  | 2¾ in. | ⅞ in. | 2½ in.   | ⅝ in. |
| Top rail .....     | 2      | 3 in.   | 3 in.  | ⅝ in. | 2¾ in.   | ⅜ in. |
| Lower rail .....   | 2      | 3 in.   | 4¼ in. | ⅝ in. | 4 in.    | ⅜ in. |
| Shelves .....      | 3      | 16 in.  | 4½ in. | ¾ in. | 4¼ in.   | ⅝ in. |
| Door stops .....   | 2      | 21 in.  | 1¼ in. | ¾ in. | 1 in.    | ½ in. |
| Door stops .....   | 1      | 15 in.  | ¾ in.  | ½ in. | ½ in.    | ¼ in. |

HOME TRAINING IN CABINET WORK

DESIGN FOR A MEDICINE CABINET

Penmans

Underwear

THE STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

Distinctly feminine in material, cut and finish, - It radiates daintiness, quality and comfort, - and Conforming closely to the contour of the figure, it insures perfect fit for the outer garments.

Made in many styles and fabrics

PENMANS, LIMITED
PARIS, ONT.

Also makers of Hosiery and Sweater Coats

The best underwear Cottons and the least expensive---quality for quality--- bear the house-mark of this Company.

DOMINION TEXTILE COMPANY
LIMITED

Montreal

Toronto

Winnipeg

The ultimate choice of the Prudent Housewife

Ask your retailers for cottons bearing this mark

A Picturesque Page of Pigeons

To the left (top) is seen a splendid specimen of the Flying Homer; in the centre (top) is a fine pigeon, unkindly called the Runt; on the right are two Birmingham Rollers. The central picture shows a flight of Homers.

On the left (bottom) is seen a beautiful Jacobin, showing the white cockade of Bonnie Prince Charlie; on the right is a Norwich Pouter, called by the Scotch "King o' Doos." These are as fine as any birds in the Pigeon Derby.

Photographs by James & Son, Toronto.

Appetizing Dishes With Leftovers

BY MARION HARRIS NEIL

AUTHOR OF "THE THRIFT COOK BOOK."

Delightful Treat for the Whole Family

Small's Forest Cream Cake Icing and Bread Spread is delicious, nourishing and economical, ready prepared for sandwiches, filling and icing cakes. Packed in one, two and a half, and thirty pound tins.

PANCAKES have a new zest and a taste that lingers when sprinkled with Small's Forest Cream Maple Syrup. Fresh and pure as the Northern snows, and smacks well of the Canadian forest. Remember the little name "SMALL'S" and insist on it. The original. Established ninety-five years. At leading grocers throughout the world.

SMALL'S LIMITED, MONTREAL

CAKE ICING

That Whiff of Fragrance

which never fails in its cheerful invitation to breakfast, comes more frequently, more invitingly, when it's that is used. The famous Seal Brand flavour, fragrance and delicacy are sealed right into the Tin.

SEAL BRAND COFFEE

In 1/2, 1 and 2-lb tins. Never sold in bulk. Whole, ground, and Fine-ground, for Tricolators and ordinary percolators. At all good dealers.

"Perfect Coffee—Perfectly made" tells just how to make Coffee. It's free. WRITE for it.

CHASE & SANBORN, MONTREAL.

IDEAL SILVER CREAM

FOR

GOLD, SILVERWARE, CUT GLASS, BRASSES

Quick, clean, convenient—no trouble to use

Ideal Silver Cream, the perfect silver polish, gives a beautiful, lasting lustre to plate, glassware, statuary and mirrors. A cream you may safely use in cleaning your finest possessions.

Ask your Dealer for a Jar

CANADIAN POLISHES LTD.

Hamilton, Canada

Croquettes.—Croquettes form one of the best ways in which to use leftovers, as by making proper combinations one can use almost any food that is left in too small quantities to be of use by itself. Any kind of cooked meat can be used alone, or a mixture of several kinds, being chopped fine and combined with bread crumbs in the proportion of from one-half to two-thirds meat. Potato can also be used with meat, making hash balls, or macaroni or spaghetti can be used with meat either with or without bread crumbs. Rice can be used in the meat croquettes instead of the crumbs, having the same proportion. The main point is to have the materials so bound together that the croquettes will not lose their shape while cooking, yet will be soft and creamy inside when done. When bread crumbs are used, no thickening is necessary, the materials being wet with milk or any gravy that may be at hand. Either bread or cracker crumbs can be used in mixing the croquettes, but for rolling them before frying, bread is better as it absorbs less fat than cracker crumbs.

When bread crumbs are not used in the croquettes, make a simple white or brown sauce slightly thicker than is commonly used, and mix enough of the small end to look like the bone. Nest-shaped croquettes are sometimes made when rice is used alone, so that the hollow can be filled with jam or jelly when served. To make them easily, make first into small balls, then by pressing carefully in the centre of one side and working the finger around, a regular hollow is formed. These are more difficult to dip and roll, but it can be done by taking plenty of time.

The size should be carefully regulated, for, if made too large the outside will become too brown before the centre is heated through. The materials should be combined a few hours before they are to be fried, and set in a cool place to become firm. When ready to fry them, roll in beaten egg, to which one-half its bulk of milk or water has been added; then roll in fine bread crumbs. One should be very particular about this part of the work, for if the croquette fails to become perfectly coated with egg or crumbs it leaves an opening for the hot fat to enter, and the croquette will not only soak fat but will often burst and fill the saucepan or kettle with sediment that will scorch and ruin the fat unless removed at once. When perfectly dipped and rolled not a particle of the fat enters, and the

Leftover Meat with Rice.

it with the other materials to make the mass easy to handle. No rule can be given for the amount, but they should be mixed just as soft as it is possible to handle them and have them retain their shape. Brown sauce makes nicer-looking as well as richer-flavored croquettes; so it is well to use it whenever meat in any combination is used. White sauce is better for light colored materials.

Mashed potatoes, wet with hot milk or cream and well seasoned with butter, make very creamy croquettes that are liked by all. Parsley is sometimes chopped and mixed with it, or a tablespoonful of cooked corn or peas is placed in the centre, and the potato formed in a rim around it. When these croquettes come to the table they are usually a surprise to all but the cook. Codfish and potato make nice croquettes, and if the codfish used was creamed for a previous meal some of that sauce can be used to mix them.

Sweet potato croquettes need no binding whatever, but are made moist enough to handle with cream and butter, and will retain their shape perfectly without further trouble.

All croquettes must be well seasoned, otherwise they will not be a success. Celery salt and paprika and an abundance of butter usually make them perfect. The form of the croquettes depends entirely upon one's fancy, though cone-shaped ones are most often seen. Small, perfectly round balls, long rolls or small flat cakes can be made if desired. For a variety they can be made to resemble cutlets, making them as near the shape as possible, then inserting a short piece of uncooked macaroni at centre is light and creamy as if it had been baked in the oven.

All bread crumbs used, both inside and outside the croquettes, should be very dry, and on this account it is well always to have a supply on hand, keeping them in an air tight can. Bread which is perfectly dry can be put through the food chopper, and will come out as fine as that which is grated, and with much less trouble. For convenience have the crumbs on a good sized piece of white paper. The egg should be broken on a plate, yolk and white together, and beaten with a fork until it ceases to be stringy, then add the milk or water and beat again. Put the croquettes to be egged one at a time into the egg, and coat them all over with it, using a small brush for the purpose. Do the brushing over quickly, otherwise the egg soaks into the croquettes and makes them soft. Then drop on to the top of the crumbs, lifting it with a knife. Cover it with crumbs, by taking hold of the sides of the paper and tossing the crumbs over it, then press the crumbs well on with the hands, and shake the loose ones off.

The fat most often used for any fat kettle is beef suet carefully tried out, with the addition of a little lard occasionally or the grease tried out from chicken fat. This would seem too oily for the purpose, but if a pound of suet is added at the same time the combination is a perfect one. The fat must have a faint blue vapor rising from it, and should not be allowed to vary in temperature. A frying basket is an absolute necessity, for the croquettes will be almost a complete failure without something

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 55.)

"Isn't That a Dainty Dish to Set Before a King!"

The upper (left) illustration shows the bakewell pie. On the right are shown two promising pumpkins, beneath which is a pie. On the left (below) is a mince pie, while the good old-time apple pie is on the right.

7
60.00

HOW TO MAKE GOOD PIES

By MARION HARRIS NEIL

AUTHOR OF "SALADS, SANDWICHES AND CHAFING DISH RECIPES."

"Where girls are wooed for the pies they make,
Where women are loved for the pies they bake,
And the husbandman prays when he comes to die,
He will go to a heaven where all is pie."

Where only bread flour is available more fat and moisture usually are needed than when pastry or winter wheat flour is used. With a pint of sifted flour, one-half cupful of fat is a fair proportion. The fat may be butter or lard, or half and half, or any of the vegetable solidified preparations. For the richest puff pastry, all butter is preferred, and twice as much is used, or one-half pound of butter to one-half pound of flour. A simple pastry may be made by using one cupful of fat to three cupfuls of flour. To mix the materials into a stiff mass about one-fourth as much water as flour is needed, or one-half cupful of water to two cupfuls of flour. This water should be as cold as possible.

Apple Pie.—Line a pie plate with pastry. Core, pare, and cut into thin slices six tart apples, arrange them in pie plate. Mix three-fourths cupful of grated maple sugar with the grated rind of one-half lemon, add one tablespoonful of lemon juice, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt, and sprinkle over the apples. Dot over with small pieces of butter. Wet edges of under crust with cold water, cover with upper crust, and press edges firmly together. Brush over the top with beaten egg or milk and bake in a hot oven for forty-five minutes. Dried apples may be used in place of fresh fruit. If used, they should be soaked over night in cold water.

To Make Deep Apple Pie.—Invert in the centre of a deep fireproof dish a small cup or pie funnel, then fill the remaining space with apples, pared, cored and quartered. Sprinkle over with one cupful of sugar or honey, or molasses, and grated maple sugar, half and half. Roll out a strip of pastry one-half inch wide, wet edge of dish with cold water, place paste on edge, then cover with a crust a little larger than the dish, with the fulness thrown back in the centre. Pinch cover to the rim and bake in a moderate oven until the apples are ready. Sometimes deep apple pie is served with cream cheese. Beat one cream cheese with one cupful of whipped cream or whipped evaporated milk, add one-fourth teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of powdered nutmeg. Put this mixture into a forcing bag with star tube and press out on top in a fancy pattern. Serve hot.

Pumpkin Pie.—Mix one tablespoonful of flour with one-half teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of maple syrup, one-fourth teaspoonful each of powdered ginger, mace and nutmeg, one tablespoonful of melted butter, grated rind and strained juice of one-half lemon, one cupful of milk, two beaten eggs and one and one-half cupfuls of steamed or baked and strained pumpkin. Bake until firm in a moderate oven in a pie plate lined with pastry. Sprinkle sugar over the top and serve cold. To bake pumpkin. Wash and cut the pumpkin in half crosswise. Scrape out the seeds and stringy parts. Place in a baking pan shell side up and bake until it begins to fall in and is quite tender. Scrape the pulp from the shell and strain. If desired drier, finish by turning, being careful not to have the oven too hot.

Bakewell Pie.—Line a greased pie plate with pastry, then spread with jam or jelly. Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter, add six tablespoonfuls of sugar or honey, take from the fire and add three beaten eggs, one-half teaspoonful each of vanilla and lemon extracts, four tablespoonfuls of flour sifted with one-half teaspoonful of baking powder and a pinch of salt. Spread this mixture over the jam or jelly and bake in a moderate oven for forty-five minutes. Dust over with sugar and serve hot or cold.

Mince Pie.—Line a deep fluted pie tin with pastry. Mix together in a large bowl one-half pound of chopped suet, one-half pound each of seeded raisins, seedless raisins, currants, chopped apples, shredded mixed peels, such as lemon, orange and citron, three tablespoonfuls of marmalade, one pound of brown or grated maple sugar, one tablespoonful of mixed powdered spices, one-half teaspoonful of salt, grated rind and strained juice of one lemon and one cupful of fruit or grape juice, mix well. Cover and stand in a cool place for twenty-four hours. Then mix once more and place into the prepared pie plate. Cover with pastry and bake in a hot oven for forty minutes. Any remaining mincemeat may be put into sterilized jars, cover securely and keep in a cool place. If desired, sprinkle over with chopped nut meats and decorate with a stewed dried peach.

Custard Pie With Cake Crumbs.—Mix one-half cupful of dry cake crumbs with two cupfuls of boiling milk, allow to stand for ten minutes, then press through a sieve, add two tablespoonfuls of

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 77.)

PIES and pastry of some kind have so long been made by all races of mankind that it would seem as if perfection in their construction might have become instinctive. Even the cook who prepared food for the Canterbury Pilgrims could "well bake a pie" according to Chaucer's record.

Wedding feasts and other holiday celebrations during the Middle Ages were occasions for the display of marvelous culinary skill in pastry architecture.

The pies mentioned by Mother Goose, and associated with Jack Horner of the corner, and another yet more remarkable pie containing four and twenty blackbirds, which began to sing when the pie was opened, probably really appeared on some royal table. A huge pie served to Charles First and his Queen at the home of the Duke of Buckingham was brought in by four men, and when the crust was divided, the court dwarf was found comfortably sitting within.

The standard of pies was quite different from that which would be acceptable to-day. We have discarded many of the customs of our ancestors and demand greater delicacy in our foods and their preparation. Perfection, then and now, would differ in pastry making and baking as in many other things.

Use plates of agate, aluminum, glass or tin ware when making pies. Roll out a piece of paste into a circular piece one-eighth of an inch thick and a little larger than the pie plate; lay the pastry on the plate so as to exclude the air from beneath.

To prevent the juice soaking through into the crust, making it soggy, wet the undercrust with the slightly beaten white of an egg before putting in the pie mixture, or mix one tablespoonful each of sugar and flour and sprinkle over the pastry.

After the filling is in, brush over the edge of the pastry with a little cold water and spread a second round of paste, cut a little larger than the pie plate, loosely over the filling; press the edges lightly together and trim if required.

Cut several slits in the top crust before putting it in place; this prevents the steam escaping through the rim of the pie, and causing the juices to run out at the edges. Some pies, such as pumpkin and squash, only require an under crust.

Sometimes the crust is baked and then filled with a cooked filling.

The digestibility of pies has been called into question, but properly made pies are as digestible as anything else. There is no more appetizing dish than pie for a hearty dessert, and now that colder weather will soon be upon us a good pie will often be relished.

Flour made of winter wheat is better adapted to making pastry than that from spring wheat, though the latter is superior for bread making.

Eveready ready for longer nights

LONG days have gone, long nights have come and every flashlight for safety sake, for service sake should be kept filled with a live Eveready Flashlight Battery.

It will be Eveready in the cellar—Eveready in the attic—Eveready in dark closets and on treacherous stairs—Eveready inside, where its protected light can't start fires—Eveready outside, where it won't blow out.

Such urgent needs demand a light which won't fail, a battery which is absolutely dependable.—That means

Eveready Flashlight Batteries

For 20 years Eveready has set the standard for flashlight batteries of long life and reliability. They make all flashlights better. Keep an extra one on hand and remember

EVEREADY

Flashlight Batteries
Fit All Flashlights

Canadian National Carbon Co.
Limited
Toronto A-6-M

The Athletic Girl

IF there is one thing that is more freely offered than another to the modern maiden, it is advice. The girl of to-day is solemnly and sadly told that she is not as her grandmother was, that she is sadly lacking in modesty, grace and refinement. We are referred to the little samplers that our grandmothers worked, the proof of their surpassing industry, and are shown specimens of the delicate old Italian handwriting as indications of a feminine refinement forever departed. Mrs. Lynn Linton and Miss Marie Corelli have both been given to deploring the athletic girl's healthy ways, and prophesying national calamities if women do not return in haste to the samplers and currant-wine which once absorbed feminine energies.

However, the athletic girl has arrived, and most of us hope that she will unpack her trunk and remain in the community. Let us consider her and oft by those who think that she desires to rival man. She has no such idle dream of physical power. All she aims for is the best and sanest development of her own bodily resources, not that she may become a feminine pugilist, but that she may enjoy to the fullest the nature that has been given her. The joy in physical well-being, in existence on so good a "brown old earth" as ours, is a sensation of the gods.

Perhaps the athletic girl's negative advantages are among her greatest charms. She has not nerves, and her talk is not of her neighbor's ways and meanness. The open air has changed all that, and the talk of the links precludes the dissection of our dear friends' characters. It is the woman who stays everlastingly indoors who begins to wonder whether she is understood and whether her household companions are congenial. If she would only get the Rosedale or River-

TWO TENNIS "PLAYERS OF THE GAME"

Mrs. Bickle (right) is our lady champion in the game of lawn tennis, and Miss Florence Best (left) also has an excellent record.

advantages for a moment. In the first place, she does not have the blues nor does she indulge in the vaudeville specialty known as hysterics. She is that best of all beings, a jolly young person, who weeps not, neither does she frown. Suppose that by tarrying too long at the links her complexion becomes the fashionable shade of champagne. There is such a range and variety of cold creams in these days of skin specialists that no embrowned maiden need worry long. A diligent use of these oily restoratives in September will soon repair all the harm that an August sun has accomplished, and give back such an epidermis as our grandmothers would not need to blush over.

In spite of modern physical culture, there are still a few benighted persons who fancy that there is something to be ashamed of in good health when the possessor is a woman. They would doubtless prefer the old ideal of Amelia Sedley and Dora Copperfield, dear young creatures who fainted on the slightest provocation, and wept on the nearest masculine shoulder. Fancy Amelia playing golf or Dora attacking a punching-bag! The very mention of these blue-eyed, white-muslined heroines is enough to irritate the average woman who doesn't believe that any girls so abjectly foolish ever lived. The athletic girl, is misunderstood many a time mead breezes, she might find that sympathy and congeniality are as nothing in comparison with the anxiety of taking care of a diminutive ball. Who could have nervous prostration when there is a score to be made? Who cares whether Martha Robinson is engaged or is trying to be, so long as the lady has acquired the proper swing? Golf and tennis are more than gossip, and the caddy than tea. The woman with nerves is an agitation unto her friends, and is never a present help in time of trouble. But the athletic girl has a bright, outdoor way of looking at things, and drives her troubles and her friends' troubles into a hole from which they dare not emerge.

How fetching are the garments that belong to the royal game! You may talk of the charms of chiffon, and the seductiveness of lace, but the golf girl in her trim brown or grey with a gleam of scarlet or green, is as bonny as the fluffiest debutante that ever floated in white muslin at the ball of Scotland's saint. The Canadian girl has usually a foot that is firm and not too expansive, and it never looks better than when it is planted on the green fields of golf-land or the tennis lawn. White satin slippers are all very well in poems, such as Debson may write, but they are poor things in comparison with the jaunty golf shoe that tells of sport and health and good fellowship.

AN empty space surrounded by metal.

What happens mechanically inside the lock when the key enters, you don't much care about—provided it does happen with perfect ease and regularity, and keeps out gentry who use everything but the key to get in.

A key and a lock are instruments of moral welfare. They keep good to the best.

They have to be made with a care, too, to stand up to the wear and tear of standing in with it.

The outward sign of this care is the name YALE on both lock and key.

Sign of a stronger metal where strength is the point, sign of fewer parts where fewer means fool-proofness, sign of heavier metal where weight makes for permanence, sign of a smoother finish where this means facility in use, sign of quality from conception to finish.

Yale Made is Yale Marked.

Canadian-made Yale products are for sale throughout the Dominion.

Canadian Yale & Towne Limited, Makers of the Yale Locks
St. Catharines, Ontario

YOU thought I was dead and gone, did you? Oh no, I am not "too much dead" and I am not gone at all. Institutions like me do not go, they simply stay on in some other form. Everybody is lamenting the passing of the good old family doctor and right you are to lament him, for he was the best friend we Canadians ever had. But you should take five minutes to think out what has really happened. Don't you see that any intelligent Canadian understands more about health and disease now than the wisest family physician could have known when the B.N.A. Act was passed and Canada became a nation? Of course he does, and so does his wife. Typhoid, Smallpox, Malaria,—you have neglected your education if you do not know how to protect yourself and your family from these diseases. In that sense, you should be your own family physician. And there are a great many family physicians still practising in Canada. You can find one and you should. You need him.

Yes, I know what you are thinking. You think that if we just "put it up" to you and set you down at a desk to write down what you know on the above subjects, you would pass a very poor examination. That is just why we think that "Health and the Home" would be a good title for a new Department, and so we are starting it off with this number. We are going to try to help you to keep up with the times in Health Matters.

If you have some question in your own mind along this line put it down on paper just the way you put it to yourself—the simpler the better—and send it to the Editor of "Health and the Home." What we need now is not so much a family physician who will attend to the family, but a Community Physician who can educate the Community. The old family physician was a great educator. He was a force in all the country round. His word was law and none but the Angels know how many sins he prevented and how many sinners he gave a second chance to.

We need somebody nowadays who can reach the popular ear and the people's conscience,—somebody who can teach people how to keep their good health of mind and body. For people who are grown up or partly grown up, the first step to secure health is to realize our own responsibility for the health we have. Very few diseases nowadays are visitations of Providence. Not at all. Heaven does its best for us all and the people who put the blame of their ill-health on the Almighty are not far from the sin of blasphemy. When David, the Psalmist, called on his soul to bless the Lord—"who healeth all thy diseases" he was far nearer the truth.

"Nature"—that is—God—when He created us seems to have made it part of our vital endowment that whenever by our folly or misfortune we break the law of health, everything in us tends to try to make up for our mistake or mischance by turning all the powers of the body towards recovery. If we have the sense to go to bed when we are ill and thus save in every minute about ten heartbeats and two or three breaths (an enormous saving), Nature turns in that saving to Capital Account and gives the Savings Branch, or the Healing Branch the benefit of it. Everything tends towards the recovery of the sick. Marvellous are the weapons in the armoury of Nature. Marvellous are the "loans," too, that we can negotiate between man and the so-called lower animals to aid man's recovery. Not less wonderful are the "loans" we can negotiate with the world of bio-chemistry—a world which we are just beginning to discover.

Most wonderful of all are the healing effects of air and sunshine, and rest, to the body.

And to the mind! Who can minister to a mind diseased? Why—many people—and many things. Insanity or mental illness can be prevented, and can often be cured, if the doctor is called in time. This will, perhaps, be the next great lesson in which the modern physician will educate the modern community. Moreover, the whole medical profession will be advancing its knowledge in regard to mental disease, for all doctors need to learn something every day.

Many minds are starved into sickness—often through starvation of the heart. "What seems loveliest to me in life as life goes by," said John Richard Green, the historian, when his own life was near its end, "is not the wit and cleverness and grandeur of learning, grand as learning is, but just the pleasant voices by the fireside, and the laughter of little children, and the sound of music, and the sight of flowers." These things nourish and stimulate the normal powers of the mind.

The human body, like the human mind, has its rights. Fish to the sea, and birds to the air, and man to his own life and the laws of it. What are these laws? There is the habitat, or environment, or, to speak more plainly, the place where you spend your time. Happy the men and women whose work takes them out of doors.

Two doctors, consulting over the case of a man under their care, decided that the patient had tuberculosis. But they called in a third. In the multitude of counsellors there is safety. The third physician did not agree. "Why?" asked his two brethren. "It is very seldom," replied the third, "that a farmer has tuberculosis; this man may have tuberculosis, but I don't think so." Nor had he. What he had, as a few days made clear to his three medical advisers, was typhoid fever. People, who live in the fresh air are protected from many diseases by that condition of life alone. From many diseases, but not from all. Those whose work must be done within four walls must look to it well that they get their share of fresh air and exercise before and after working hours, because their occupation does not provide them with both of these necessities of life as the farmer's occupation does for him. How much fresh air do you need? As much as ever you can get. Go out this minute and take a stroll and see how much better you feel. The old sea-captain's habit of walking the quarter-deck before turning in, whether he is at sea or on shore, is a good one. Take it whenever it suits you best. Some people like a walk before breakfast. Well and good, take it when it suits your mind and body best—but take it. You cannot do your best, as a rule, without two hours in the open air, out of the twenty-four and you had better not try to do with less than one hour. Take some exercise. Oh, no, it is not impossible. There are twenty-four hours in the day. Always look for a place where some fresh air can come in where you are, sleeping or waking. In moderate or warm weather the windows should be wide open, in severely cold weather they should be opened at regular intervals, sufficiently to keep the air good. Never go to bed without seeing that your supply of fresh air for the night is secured. No bedroom is large enough to give you that supply unless there is some opening through which fresh air can enter. Of all the necessary foods, the oxygen in the air is the most important.

The first principle of health is proper sanitation. No home, school or public building can be healthy unless there is an efficient indoor toilet.

Makes the Country Home Sanitary

NO improvement means more for the comfort and welfare of folks who live in the country than the simple, effective, low-cost Kaustine System of Sanitation.

It brings the biggest advantage of city life—a sanitary, indoor toilet.

It ends discomfort, disagreeableness and disease danger.

In all parts of the world years of service have proved the soundness in principle, stability, construction and satisfaction of the Kaustine System.

Its efficiency comes from complete chemical sterilization and scientific ventilation.

Installed quickly—a few hours' job. Needs but little care.

If you are in an unsewered locality—if a water-plumbed job costs too much—write now for full facts about the Kaustine System of Sanitation.

KAUSTINE CO., LIMITED

22 Eastern Avenue, Toronto

Also Makers of Kaustine Septic Tanks

KAUSTINE WATERLESS TOILET

"California Syrup of Figs"

All druggists sell the reliable and genuine "California Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna".

Children's Pleasant Laxative

Full directions for children of all ages are plainly printed on label. Mother! You must look for our name,—The California Fig Syrup Company.

COUPON FOR HEALTH AND THE HOME

If you wish the advice of our Family Physician, cut this out and send it with your letter of enquiry—and a stamped, addressed envelope.

STANFIELD'S

Unshrinkable

UNDERWEAR

It wears longer

"Stands Strenuous Wear"

WHAT "sterling" means to silverware, STANFIELD'S means to Underwear. It is the hallmark of quality. "Stanfield's" on a garment is an assurance of perfect-fitting Unshrinkable Underwear of irreproachable quality and expert workmanship.

Made in Combinations and Two-Piece Suits, in full length, knee and elbow length, and sleeveless, for Men and Women.

Stanfield's Limited,
TRURO, N.S.

Stanfield's Adjustable Combinations and Sleepers for growing Children (Patented). Write for book. 34

BEECHAM'S PILLS

"The Largest Sale of any Medicine in the World"

If you knew how surely this world-famous family remedy restores health and strength you would know far less of suffering. Beecham's Pills relieve, in the gentlest, safest, quickest way possible — Indigestion, Liver Trouble, Constipation. Beecham's Pills purify the blood, brighten the eyes, clear the complexion.

Lighten the Steps of every woman who uses them as occasion requires. They drive away headache, backache, lassitude and extreme nervousness. They purify the blood and clear the system of the impurities that cause so many women to suffer. Try a few doses and see how much better and stronger you are — how much more enjoyable your life will be — how certainly you will escape unnatural suffering — how soon you will be able to leave the ranks

Of Worn and Weary Women

Black Stockings are always smart and fashionable.

THE favourite, most becoming and effective stockings for the slim ankle and shapely leg, are Black Cotton or Thread Stockings dyed with the deep, dense, permanent brilliancy of

Hawley's Hygienic Black British Dye

FOR COTTON AND THREAD STOCKINGS AND SOCKS

Hawley-Dyed Stockings and Socks are made in two distinct finishes — "Cashmere" finish and "Silk" finish — and every pair bears the Hawley mark, which guarantees the dye to be stainless, perspiration-proof and absolutely fast.

Look for this mark when buying hosiery

Enquiries from the Trade invited
Sole Dyers (to the Trade only):

A. E. HAWLEY & CO., LTD.
Sketchley Dye Works
HINCKLEY ENGLAND PA

A Variety of Dishes

By
MARION HARRIS NEIL

Fish and Potato Soufflé.—Use any tender white fish and break it into flakes or small pieces free from skin and bones. Take five or six small fireproof dishes, grease them, and put a little of the fish at the bottom of each. Next pour in some good white sauce, enough to moisten the fish. Then sieve one cupful of cooked potatoes and heat it in a saucepan with one tablespoonful of melted butter and two tablespoonfuls of hot milk. Beat well until perfectly smooth, and season with salt, pepper and a pinch of powdered nutmeg. Now stir in the yolk of one egg, and lastly, and very lightly the white of egg beaten to a stiff froth. Fill the dishes with this potato purée, sprinkle over with grated cheese, and bake in a moderate oven for twenty minutes. Then serve at once. If desired, this mixture may be cooked in one large dish.

Lentil and Potato Cakes.—Melt one tablespoonful of drippings in a frying pan, put in one cupful of cooked lentils and beat them with a wooden spoon, then add one cupful of cooked mashed potatoes, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Mix well together until a smooth paste is formed, then spread the mixture on a plate to cool. When firm, form into small flat cakes, using a little flour, egg and bread-crumbs, these, and fry them in smoking hot fat to a brown color. Serve with tomato or brown separately.

Peas and Spaghetti.—Rub two cupfuls of cooked peas through a sieve. Boil two cupfuls of spaghetti broken into small pieces until tender, and drain it well. Melt two tablespoonfuls of drippings in a saucepan, put in the spaghetti, three tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, one teaspoonful of chopped parsley, salt and pepper to taste, and make all thoroughly hot. Make the pea puree hot in a small saucepan adding two tablespoonfuls of melted drippings. Serve arranging the pea mixture in a border round a hot dish, pile the spaghetti in the centre and sprinkle over one tablespoonful of chopped parsley.

Chocolate Cornstarch Mould.—Melt one square of unsweetened chocolate over hot water. Heat one cupful of milk, mixing three tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with one-fourth cupful of cold milk, then add to hot milk. Stir gradually into the melted chocolate, add one-fourth cupful of honey and a pinch of salt, and cook in a double boiler for thirty minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from the fire, add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract and pour into a wet mould. Turn out when firm and serve with stewed or canned fruit or milk.

Marble Cake.—Beat three-fourths cupful of sugar with one-half cupful of butter until creamy and light, then add two beaten eggs and beat again, add one-half cupful of milk, two cupfuls of cake flour sifted with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. To one-third of this mixture add one tablespoonful of maple syrup, one-fourth teaspoonful of powdered cloves, nutmeg, allspice, mace and cinnamon, and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Pour into a greased and floured cake tin, the light and the dark mixtures irregularly. Bake in a moderate oven and when cool, cover with pink icing. Decorate with a few chopped nut meats.

Honey Rice Delight.—Wash one-fourth pound of rice. Bring three cupfuls of milk to the boil, and sprinkle in the rice. Boil for twenty minutes, add one-fourth cupful of honey and cook gently for another twenty minutes. Turn into a bowl, add one tablespoonful of gelatine dissolved in one-fourth cupful of hot water, when cool add two tablespoonfuls of whipped cream or whipped evaporated milk and one teaspoonful of lemon extract. Pour into a wet mold and turn out when firm. This mould when served alone or with a macedoine of fruit is excellent.

Some Reflections on a Means of Artistic Recreation That Could Be Adopted in Many Communities

Women's Choruses

By HECTOR CHARLESWORTH

$15.00

THE Twentieth Century is pre-eminently an age of women's organizations, not merely for the promotion of feminine interests in the matters of politics and social reform, but for the furtherance of artistic objects. The most hardened male must admit that much of the awakening with regard to the arts which is noticeable on all sides is directly traceable to literary, musical, and other types of clubs, organized by women who possess a real enthusiasm for the finer things of life. On this continent, at any rate, these elements of civilization would starve if it were not for the enthusiasm of women, however much humorists may sneer at the various fads and cults that from time to time arise.

The women's chorus is by no means a new idea. In some of the larger Canadian cities it has been successfully adopted as a form of pleasant recreation in connection with women's musical clubs. The Choral branches composed of women, some of them young, and some of them mothers of families, who have preserved in their hearts that essential well-spring of youthful feeling, a love or more of its women members. Specially devised "arrangements" are in most instances necessary for the ordinary standard choral compositions are for the most part based on the usual four-part grouping of sopranos, altos, tenors and basses. Thus certain transpositions are necessary in arranging a work for women's voices exclusively. Many of the ideas on the subject which I present in this article are those of Mr. Taylor, who is a recognized authority on the subject.

TO follow existing standards of harmony, it is necessary to preserve the four-part method usually followed in arrangements of compositions for mixed choirs; but as every one knows, the voices of women are not arbitrarily divided into two registers, soprano and alto. There is a wide intermediate mezzo range between the brilliant tones of the soprano who is able to sing very high notes and those of the alto who can produce a pure and beautiful tone on a low note. It should not be difficult to sort out the different voices so as to secure four distinct tonal shades.

Photograph by Rossie, Regina.

A REGINA PIANIST

Miss Muriel Kerr, of Regina, a pupil of Mr. Paul Wells, of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, has recently been amazing more than one community by her brilliant performances.

of singing, meet and sing together, not necessarily for public performance, but for sheer enjoyment and the educational stimulus involved. It has struck me that the system could be widely extended in smaller communities where it should not be difficult to find a score or two of women with passable voices and sufficient leisure to constitute a competent singing coterie. And there is in almost every community some woman with adequate musical knowledge to direct effectively such efforts. Indeed, the day of the woman choral director may be said to have arrived. At the recent Saskatchewan Music Festival chief honors went to a lady choir-master from Saskatoon. The movement is so well recognized in the United States that many composers (some of them Canadians) now write concerted works, especially for women's voices.

In the concerts of the leading choral cities in the great civic centres, there are invariably one or two numbers, exclusively for women's voices, which never fail to rank among the most popular features of the programme. In New York, there exists a large and influential women's singing society known as the Schumann Club, which specially employs a well known musician, Mr. Deems Taylor, to arrange compositions for it to sing, although I understand that its actual performances are conducted by one

Naturally women with enough musical enthusiasm to join a chorus want to sing interesting music and take an especial pleasure in rendering the nobler order of ballads. Here a difficulty arises among the purists. Some protest against four-part arrangements being made of celebrated solo compositions, unless the composer has bethought himself to provide one. It is supposed to be sacrilege to touch the classic. This is, of course sheer priggishness. Any composer of common sense would be as glad to hear his music sung by a group of voices as by one.

In truth it may be said that the best way to maintain the vitality and interest lies in securing arrangements of the better order of compositions, not specifically composed for women's voices. The growing number of works deliberately composed for women's choruses suffer from one cardinal defect. The vast majority of them are so insipid in theme, as to indicate a certain condescension in the composers, a rooted theory of the limitations of the feminine mind. According to Deems Taylor, who made a collection of such works for the Schumann Club, a considerable percentage of such compositions deal with the night. Either these are serenades or they sentimentalize about the evening hour. Another popular theme is the joys of boating, preferably in gondolas. Nature songs

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 28.)

The Canadian Academy of Music

With which is amalgamated The Toronto College of Music, Limited

PRESIDENT:

Lt.-Col. A. E. Gooderham.

MUSICAL DIRECTORATE:

Albert Ham, Mus. Doc.

W. O. Forsyth.

Frank S. Welsman.

Peter C. Kennedy.

MANAGING DIRECTOR:

Alfred Bruce.

The most artistic school in the Dominion, with a reputation earned by famous teachers and brilliant students.

ORCHESTRAL, ENSEMBLE, CHORAL AND THEORETICAL CLASSES.

Descriptive Year Book, Examination Syllabus or Students' Residence pamphlet, mailed on request.

12-14 SPADINA RD.

TORONTO

The Toronto Conservatory of Music

SIR EDMUND WALKER, C.V.O., LL.D., D.C.L., President.
A. S. VOGT, Mus. Doc., Musical Director.

Highest Artistic Standards and most Comprehensive Equipment of any School of Music in the Dominion. Faculty of International Reputation.

Student's Free Orchestral Classes and Free Lectures in Harmony, etc., History and Rudiments of Music, and in Piano Pedagogics, (Normal Class Work)

Pupils may enter at any time.

Year Book, Syllabus, and Women's Residence Calendar sent to any address on request.

HAMBURG CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

under personal supervision of the world renowned Artists

JAN AND BORIS HAMBURG

Staff of Brilliant European and Canadian Artists

Year Book on application

SHERBOURNE AND WELLESLEY STREETS, TORONTO

Bishop Bethune College

OSHAWA

ONTARIO

Visitor: The Lord Bishop of Toronto.

A residential school for girls.

Young children also received.

Preparation for the University. Art Department. Healthful situation. Outdoor Games. For terms and particulars apply to the Sister-in-Charge, or to the Sisters of St. John the Divine, Major Street, Toronto.

ONTARIO COLLEGE OF ART

Normal School Building, St. James' Square, Toronto.

Session 1920-21 opens October 4, 1920.

Drawing, Painting, Modelling and Design

Short Courses in Commercial and Applied Art. Prospectus on application.

G. A. REID, R.C.A., Principal.

A Question of Mince Meat

Whether or not your mince pies are good is determined chiefly by the mince meat used.

Most women can make good pastry, but the scientific blending of carefully selected materials, such as is required to produce Bowes' Mince Meat, has taken years of concentrated effort and experiment to perfect.

The pure, wholesome flavor of this popular mince meat will instantly captivate you.

Try it!

Mince Meat in Its Most Wholesome Form

A Real Club

The Journal's Juniors' Club, as conducted by Bertha E. Green is a real meeting-place for our younger readers who are proving their ability with pen and camera. We hope to have a large list of young correspondents in every province, and the co-operation of every interested young reader is expected.

Either way Ends every corn

Use Blue-jay as you like best. Apply liquid Blue-jay from a bottle, or use the Blue-jay plaster.

The effects on the corn are identical.

The pain stops. And the entire corn quickly loosens and comes out.

Blue-jay now is ending some two million corns a month.

It has so reduced corn troubles that most folks never have them.

It will end them all when all folks know about it.

The Blue-jay method is easy, gentle, sure.

It is scientific—the creation of a world-famed laboratory.

For your own sake, stop paring corns. Cease the old, harsh, inefficient methods.

Learn what millions know—that corns are folly, the pain is needless. Anybody can be kept forever free from corns with Blue-jay.

Prove this tonight. Buy Blue jay from your druggist.

Blue-jay
Plaster or Liquid
The Scientific Corn Ender

BAUER & BLACK, Limited Chicago Toronto New York
Makers of Sterile Surgical Dressings and Allied Products

The Land of P'raps

By BETH SADLEIR

A Tale of Travels in the Month of October

HOP

THERE was no sign or stone by the roadside to mark the beginning of the October highway. In spite of that, Diddy Happen and Old Dedder Naherrin found out where they were, right away, for they were greeted by the October harvest song. Somewhere on each gaily colored leaf Autumn had written an X to mark the month number of October.

There was no sign of those who had been singing the October song, and though they heard birds and squirrels in the wood on either hand, they saw no one.

"October is just a bit lonesome, don't you think so, Dedder?" asked Diddy.

The old man smiled as he replied, "Only to those who are sad to see that summer has gone. The October road is just as pleasant as the others, par-

They walked onward quickly for both of them could hear the If's bell ringing.

Diddy spied the If first. The little creature was perched on the edge of a crow's nest, high up in a solitary tree that grew in a field by the roadside.

Diddy coaxed and coaxed, but the little If would not come down. From his perch in the crow's nest, he explained that, although he could descend by himself, he could not manage to bring with him the alarm clock that hung on the end of his curly tail.

"And I really can't leave it behind," said the little If, "for it gave me the best time I ever had."

The If's alarm clock had been ringing steadily ever since Diddy and Dedder had come within hearing.

"Why don't you let the clock run down by itself?" asked Diddy.

HIDE

SKIP

SEEK

ticularly in the Province of the Unexpected."

Just as Dedder finished speaking, several little figures dashed madly across the road, disappearing under leaves and in shadowy corners. No sooner were they out of sight, than some other little creatures rushed across in front of the travellers. This second crowd searched quickly for the little chaps who had run across the road first.

"They found one! They found one!" cried Diddy excitedly.

The searchers marched their captive to the centre of the pathway, and Diddy now saw that all were letter-men. The searchers were S-E-E-K-S and those they hunted for were H-I-D-E-S. Every one of the Hides was found at last, and when the last one of them had been hunted out, they all rushed into the woods again, the Seeks following them soon after.

"Do they do that all the time?" asked Diddy.

"Only when they are playing," replied Dedder, "They have their work to do. The Hides put the nuts where the squirrels have to search for them, first in the nut burrs and husks, and then under the leaves and grass. The Seeks help the forest folk to find the nuts."

The travellers walked slowly onward, and soon the path ran between fields and orchards instead of the woods. All was clear, fresh, and beautiful, but to Diddy something was wanting.

Suddenly he cried out: "The If's coming back. I can hear his little bell."

Old Dedder Naherrin shaded his eyes with his hand and looked ahead, but could see nothing of the little If.

SWIM

"Just the thing," said the If, as he unhooked the clock from his curly tail and set it down in the crow's nest. The If then started carefully down the tree, but his alarm clock reached the ground first, having come down the tree at a great rate.

"How did the clock manage to keep from falling?" asked the surprised Diddy.

"By using its hands, I suppose," said Old Dedder, as he hung the clock in its place on the If's curly tail.

Diddy was happy, for his little If was back again. There had been quite a trip for the If on the back of the flying Pink-Star, who had shaken him off. Luckily the If had fallen into the empty crow's nest, where he had waited ever since.

The travellers went onward over three hills, and on the farther side of the third, they came upon a crowd of letter-men who barred the way. These little fellows were very active, and it was some time before Diddy could see just who they were.

There were three kinds—the H-O-P, the S-K-I-P, and the J-U-M-P. All were having such a good time that Diddy could not help joining in the fun, while the little If almost lost himself in the crowd of letter-men.

Just beyond where they were playing was a stone wall, and when the fun was at its height, the letter-men suddenly ran toward it, and each went over the top of the wall, with a hop, a skip or a jump.

The travellers followed the letter-men. Dedder Naherrin hopped over, Diddy skipped over, and the If jumped over.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 55.)

Some of the best known Beauties of Society who are noted for their wonderful, clear, pearly-white complexions, have obtained their appearance thru the use of

Gouraud's Oriental Cream

For over seventy years women all over the world have considered it the ideal Cream for beautifying, purifying and preserving the skin and complexion.

Send 15 Cents for the Trial Size.

Gouraud's Medicated Soap

The Ideal Soap for the skin and complexion. Contains an efficient medication which thoroughly removes all dust, dirt and poisonous matter from the skin. Gives a rich, creamy lather unsurpassed for washing hair and scalp.

Send 15 Cents for the Trial Size.

Ferd. T. Hopkins & Son
344 W. St. Paul Street, Montreal.

THE JOURNAL JUNIORS' CLUB

Conducted by
BERTHA E. GREEN

98
30.00

My dear club members:

The holidays have come and gone, and school has "commenced" for some weeks for most of you. I do hope, boys and girls, you have had the happiest time that could possibly be, and that now you are ready to study, and make the most possible out of this year ahead.

We want as many as possible of our Canadian boys and girls to join us because I think they would enjoy it. Don't you?

There is no fee, but we should like to have all the members send in a contribution to the prize contests that appear each month.

I was much pleased to get your letter, Vivien Connolly, and hope we shall hear from you again.

It is a great pleasure for us to enroll you, Daisy Aspinall, as a new member of our club. There are no fees, and in sending in contributions, you may use your own name. And so you are a real outdoor girl—that is fine, and you must have lots stored about outdoor life to tell us. Let us hear from you soon again.

We warmly welcome you, Ruth Finley, as a member of our club, and your sketch of "Laddie" was very nice indeed. I am sorry it was not a prize winner, but try again. Next time, who knows—the prize may be yours, and it helps us all even to try. Doesn't it?

Your story, Margaret Fuller, is worthy of mention, though not the prize winner. I am sure you enjoyed "Little Women," and it is splendid to be able to live with the characters in a book, especially with such a one as was "Jo."

A new member, Vera A. Johnson, is enrolled, and we are very pleased indeed to welcome her. I am glad you are fond of poetry—I am, too, and we shall all be glad to have you contribute in the prize contests. You have won the prize this month, too, Vera, and the members of the Journal Juniors' Club and myself wish to extend to you our heartiest congratulations. Your story is very nicely told, and a pleasure to read.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 30.)

Your sincere friend,

Bertha E. Green.

Prize List for August.

"My favorite book and why," awarded to Vera A. Johnson, age 12 years, North Battleford, Sask.

List of New Members.

Ruth Finley, Regent, Manitoba;
Daisy Aspinall, Almonte, Ontario;
Vera A. Johnson, North Battleford, Sask.

Prize Story.

"MY FAVORITE BOOK AND WHY."

By Vera A. Johnson, age 12 years, North Battleford, Sask.

IN thinking over what book I like best, there are two books I like almost equally well—Miss Mullock's "John Halifax, Gentleman," and George Eliot's "The Mill on the Floss," but on further reflection, I like the former best.

There is nothing very original or startling about this book but it is written so that every word seems to be about what really happened and every incident to stand out clearly before one's eyes. It is more like the story of a good man's life than a book. John Halifax, himself, is a striking figure, a figure which any youth could look up to as an ideal. He was a true gentleman in every sense, having great self-control and gentleness. John Halifax was a just and clear-minded man. He was no father who would, with sinful indulgence, only think of his children's present, momentary happiness, and not of their future and lasting welfare, this is proved by his refusal of the hand of his daughter Maud, to Lord Ravenal. If the story had no special merit in itself, a character like John Halifax, would make it worth reading.

KITTENS AT BREAKFAST

These pussies were snapped in the North Country as they were seated in the "flap" of a birch bark wigwam enjoying the morning meal.

THE PREMIER'S DAUGHTER

Miss Lilian Meighen, the only daughter of Hon. Arthur Meighen and Mrs. Meighen, was greatly interested in the pressman's camera on the occasion of her father's recent visit to Portage la Prairie.

The Secrets that Make a Hostess

are bound up to no small extent in the selection of her table appointments.

The beautiful, exclusive patterns—the superfine, durable quality—wrought by skilled silversmiths, into Holmes & Edwards silverware add a distinctive charm to hospitality.

Nothing finer in the difficult art of silver-plating has been produced.

And wear cannot mar the wonderful lustre and finish of Holmes & Edwards.

In "SUPER-PLATE" it is protected by an extra heavy coat of pure silver at the exposed places.

In "SILVER-INLAID," blocks of solid silver are actually laid in with cunning care at rest points before plating.

These two processes of wear protection are applied only in the five staple pieces—those most constantly used. In addition throughout the line, Holmes & Edwards offer you an exceptional quality of plate.

Your jeweler takes a professional pride in displaying these two patterns for your approval.

HOLMES & EDWARDS

"Protected Where the Wear Comes"

"JAMESTOWN"

An exclusive design of rare dignity.

Write for interesting booklet, "How Good Silverware is Protected Against Wear."

Manufactured exclusively in Canada by

THE STANDARD SILVER CO., of Toronto, Limited.

Health and Home

Read our Family Physician Department on page twenty-three of this number, which should mean better health and new interests to our readers.

Mend Your Pots and Pans

VOL-PEEK Mends Cooking utensils, Graniteware, Aluminum, Enamelled-ware, Tin, Copper, Brass, Iron, etc. Easy to use, no tools required. Ready for use in 2 minutes. Saves a pot for 2¢ a cent. 25 cents at your Dealer, or postpaid by Vol-Peek Co., Box 2024, Montreal, Can. Agents Wanted.

EVERY HOUSEWIFE

knows the value of a food-cutter in these days when the cost of meat, vegetables, bread, etc., is next to prohibitive unless every morsel can be used without waste. The

Maxwell

"HOME 65" FOOD CUTTER is a Made-in-Canada machine, that is better and CHEAPER than any foreign make. It's a quick, clean cutter, with watertight cap that holds all the food juices. Has four keen cutting-plates. Open-end cylinder makes it easily cleaned after use. Cuts food of every kind. Made in 9 sizes. From your Dealer.

MAXWELL'S, Ltd., Dept. 1, St. Mary's, Ont.

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25.)

eulogizing the bee, the butterfly, the dove, the lark, and even the "darning needle," or dragon fly form another class. Then there are the flower songs, in which the rose and the violet are extolled and songs of spring in which the expression of "glee" is involved. Lullabies are of course a special field for women's voices. The comparatively narrow groove in which compositions for women's choruses run is perhaps explained by the fact that such themes require delicate tones for proper expression, and composers naturally think them suitable to women. Nevertheless, there is no reason why a woman's chorus of respectable dimensions should not tackle a hunting song or some noble subject like that of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," which happens to have been written by a woman. The persistence of the "lady-like" in choral works for women should and can be varied by a more robust bill of fare.

OTHER well founded criticisms which have been made against the available literature for women's choruses deal with the music, apart from the words. It has been pointed out that composers are apt to treat the higher feminine voices as though they were violins or clarinets, and place the melody a tone or so higher than it can be performed with ease. They are apt to ignore the difficulties that singers, especially the inexperienced, encounter in sounding certain syllables on high notes. As Mr. Taylor has put it: "They seem to have a sublime faith in the power of numbers, their idea being, I presume, that what is an obstacle for one is half an obstacle for two; in other words, the more the easier." Now this theory is palpably false, for what is difficult for the single voice is much more difficult for two score voices. The aim should be to get hold of compositions that, while beautiful, are also comparatively easy of execution.

Contrary to the usual practice, experience has shown that in a women's chorus it is more advisable to place solo passages with the first altos than with the first sopranos. The low voice rising through the general mass of tone is more effective and attains a richer appeal than when the solo passages in a concerted number are left to the first sopranos. The latter voices on the other hand are admirable for giving a touch of ornamentation to an ensemble passage. The good choral arrangement also makes provision, whereby the words of the song can be distinctly placed before the minds of the listeners instead of being lost in a jumble of tones, which while they may be technically good harmony, do not permit of distinctive enunciation. Any woman undertaking the management of a choral organization must remember in choosing the programme for a season's study, that a goodly percentage of the membership will sing by ear rather than by note and should endeavor to avoid choosing numbers whose intricate harmonic tracteries demand a rigid attention to the notes. If she aims at intricate effects, she will probably find that the interest of her associates will pall.

From the preceding paragraphs it will be seen that the task that faces a women's singing organization is not altogether an easy one. It requires careful and devoted study by some chosen director from whom the membership will voluntarily accept discipline. Yet the obstacles to effective and enjoyable performance are by no means so serious that they should deter any of the many women's musical clubs that exist in Canadian towns, from trying the experiment of starting a choral branch as a part of their season's activities. Nothing could serve as a better stimulus to interest in the attractive things of life.

Many of the feminist leaders are anxious to broaden the intellectual interests of their own sex. The great merit of the women's choruses is that they put social intercourse, especially in smaller communities, on a better footing and bring women together for a most charming recreation. The reaction involved in the spreading of interest in music to their own homes is also obvious. To put it on a very practical ground, interests of this kind do furnish a relief from boredom which it is one of the irresistible inclinations of the modern woman to escape.

Elgin Watches

The Construction Engineer

Never before has he played so vital a part in progress.

This is an age of Achievement in construction—buildings, bridges, tunnels, railroads, ships and machinery.

Like the Elgin, that miracle of precise construction and dependability, the engineer must be exact—exact down to the most minute detail of science, skill and seconds.

The safety of men on land and sea, in the air and underground, depends on the Engineer's ability to bring things to pass on Time.

With construction work based on the Elgin schedule, operations synchronise and success is sure.

Let the Elgin, allied with your ability, crown your efforts with Achievement.

There is a Jeweler in your vicinity who carries a pleasing selection of Elgin Watches—faithful guardians of Time.

CANADIAN ELGIN WATCH CO., LTD.
TORONTO

A Smart Pleated Skirt From Your Own Material

$2.00

A pleated skirt costs so little and is so simple to make that every woman should include in her fall wardrobe a separate skirt of silk, serge or one of the delightful new plaids.

Two yards of material 36 inches wide will make a trim straight-line skirt. Material cut on the length and hemmed, is not suitable for pleating. Selvage should be joined and hemmed. Leave one seam open.

Pleating Prices: Skirt length less than 35 inches, $1.50. Skirt length more than 35 inches, $2.00.

Skirts returned 48 hours after receipt. Send material registered parcel post. Add to remittance 20c for return postage. State whether Box Pleating, Knife Pleating or Accordion Pleating is desired.

Send for catalogue.

Toronto Pleating Company
12 Broadbalt St., Toronto.

FREE
For 5 Days Wear

We'll send you a genuine Gophir Gem, mounted in solid 14kt gold, so you can wear it free for five full days. IF YOU CAN TELL IT FROM A DIAMOND—SEND IT BACK. Gophir Gems are cut like diamonds, stand all diamond tests, and are guaranteed for a lifetime.

Simply send your name and address for our new Gophir Gem book. Select from it the goods desired. After five days free trial, if you want to keep them, pay on instalments as low as $1.50 monthly. No red tape, your credit is good.

Send today for booklet, and full details of our free trial, easy payment plan.

The Gophir Diamond Co., Limited
Dept. 52 140 Yonge St. Toronto

By NORMAN HARRIS

$15.00

INVESTORS have laid their individual problems before this department, their questions being as to whether it would be the best course to sell preference or common stock securities, and take a loss, to provide funds enabling them to purchase something else. No general answer can be given, save that one might state comprehensively that it may be better to possess a dozen firm, sound apples, rather than an abundance of spotted or unsound specimens.

A LARGE part of investment is the human end of it. A security will appeal to a man as offering all he desires, and he will not hesitate to acquire it, to lodge his savings in that issue, and to "put his friends" into it. And as the years go by, and experience comes to him, he finds his opinions undergo a change. His education is progressing. I do not think it will be seriously debated, that the tendency of the individual is constantly towards his embracing a policy of true investment and increasingly against forms of speculation. As to whether the man or woman should sacrifice his holdings, involves not alone the amount of present loss involved in a sale on the market, but includes what is more important, the question as to what the investor will do with the funds in hand through selling. What is to be determined, I think, is as to whether the point of view that impels the holder to be willing to sell at a loss, is or is not a more valuable asset to him than his former financial opinions and theories; and whether if he employs this new standard of judgment his investment estate at the end of five years, or ten years, will or will not present a more solid and more sound aspect than it did at the end of the last period. One of the financial firms has issued an advertisement with this heading, "Time, the Breath of Investment." The idea is one that the individual should think over. His investment span of life is limited. He is thirty years of age; he has before him only five or six periods of five years each, at the maximum; actually, at age thirty, he has before him only about four investment periods of five years each. One cannot judge an investment policy at the end of one year, because untoward developments or bits of extraordinary action, or luck, may affect the result momentarily. The five or ten-year average, however, tells the story. I would advise anyone who has come to the conclusion that he has been pinning his faith to the wrong class of securities, and who, because of their unproductiveness over a period, has no funds with which to take advantage of favorable conditions enabling him to make a proper investment, not to hesitate very long, but to sell. His point of view, as amended, is worth more to him than his former policy; he will probably do more with less money, properly administered, than he did with greater funds lodged in issues that have failed at the pinch.

* * *

Kingston, Ont.

Editor Concerning Investments:

Would you be kind enough to give your opinion on the purchase of £100 Saskatoon, registered stock, 5%, 1961, at 72 to yield 7%?

Do you consider this a wise and safe investment?
S. L.

THE registered stock is the English method of styling what would be called here a municipal debenture issued by the city of Saskatoon. The term "registered," means that you will receive interest payment by cheque, there being no coupons attached to the stock.

You should make certain as to whether the principal and interest on this security are payable only in sterling, or also in Canadian currency, at a fixed rate to the pound. I assume interest is expressed as payable in dollars. If it is not, your yield will not be as large as indicated because the English cheque will be discounted here to the extent of the exchange rate adverse to British money.

The security you name would rank as first class. It was of an issue floated in England, and I presume the bonds were bought back here to resell on the Canadian market. If you are not an experienced investor you should keep in mind that the yield of a bond, in this case 7 per cent. is calculated on the price paid by the holder, in combination with the theory that he will hold it to maturity, that is until 1961. If you held this stock five years only and then sold, the yield would not be 7 per cent. providing you sold at what you paid. The yield infers that at maturity you will receive 100, back again, as principal. This stock, subject to the above, should be a fairly good purchase, although its 5 per cent. interest, and its long term make it rather more suitable for an insurance company, a corporation or an estate.

* * *

HOLDERS of the Canadian Northern Railway Income Charge Convertible Debenture stock, which should nominally pay five per cent. interest, will not apparently receive any special consideration from the Government, which has absorbed the Canadian Northern into the Government-owned Canadian National Railways System. Holders of this security in Canada, and also in Britain, have been uncertain whether the Federal Government would regard this issue as a bond on which it might be their paternal duty to pay current, if not overdue interest. A question was asked in the House on this point, and by way of reply, it was pointed out that the Trust Deed covering this issue provides that interest shall be payable only if the net earnings after prior charges, permit. The Government stated that it saw no reason why there should be any variation from the terms of the mortgage. Accordingly, the holders of this security, for which I believe most of them paid par or very near it, cannot receive any return from this debenture stock until the Canadian Northern is able to make earnings. Perhaps little else could be expected, but as this special issue of debenture stock was freely purchased as being of an investment nature, both in Canada and elsewhere, there was a feeling that perhaps the Government might have based its purchase price of the C.N.R. on the intention to use capital in retiring a portion of the issue. These debentures have no market in Canada, and the last record I have seen of a London price is where a buyer paid $30 to acquire the security. This is some ten or more points down under the price ruling a few years since. Under the circumstances, one might perhaps speculate as to why one should be willing to pay even $30 for this issue. Unless the Government roads are able to make a much better showing than present conditions would seem to forecast, there will be no interest paid on these stocks for many years, and the privilege of conversion with common stock appears to be worth little or nothing.

Information Coupon

October, 1920.

If a subscriber will fill in this coupon, and send along with the enquiry, the best service at our command will be ensured.

Name .....

Address .....

Dominion Raynsters

All-Purpose Weather Coats

The Coats With The Guarantee Label

The DOMINION RAYNSTER label is the only thing you need look for when buying a fall coat.

You don't have to give a thought to the quality of materials or workmanship or waterproofing or wear.

Choose the pattern and color of cloth that please you, in the style you prefer, and let the RAYNSTER LABEL be your guarantee of complete and lasting satisfaction.

"DOMINION RAYNSTERS" are all-purpose coats; for all kinds of fall weather; smart and stylish for every-day or Sunday wear; absolutely waterproof when it rains.

These Dominion Rubber System Products are made in a wide variety of styles, suitable for men, women, boys and girls, and are sold at popular prices.

Ask to see them.

"DOMINION RAYNSTERS" are sold by the best stores carrying wearing apparel.

COOKS!

You will immensely improve the tastiness of dishes and add tremendously to their nourishing value if you use plenty of

BOVRIL

Is Your Skin Attractive?

The social season will commence very shortly. It is likely that summer exposure has played havoc with your skin. Start immediately to take treatments with Princess Preparations. Sunburn, Freckles, Pimples, Blackheads, Tan, in fact all non-infectious skin troubles can be removed, leaving a clear, beautiful skin. A reputation of over 27 years as successful specialists is back of Princess Preparations. Decide to-day to take regular treatments in your own home; we send full instructions. Write us about any skin trouble you may have. Consultation Free. Princess Preparations will be sent post free on receipt of price.

|                                |        |
|--------------------------------|--------|
| Princess Complexion Purifier   | $1.50 |
| Princess Skin Food             | 1.50   |
| Princess Hair Rejuvenator      | 1.50   |
| Princess Cinderella Cold Cream | .75    |
| Princess Face Powder           | .75    |

(Sample on Request)

The Hiscott Institute, Limited
618 COLLEGE ST., TORONTO.

The Journal Juniors' Club

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27.)

Another reason I like this book so well is that the pathos is sweet and true. The gentle way in which John treats poor, weak Phineas Fletcher is touching in a character so strong and manly as John's. The character of blind Muriel is beautiful, yet somewhat sad; so also is the love between her and John. Still more lovely is her death, a quiet sinking into sleep and being taken by the angels which was Muriel's beautiful idea of death. There is a beautiful and delicate thought expressed by the author when she called the harp, "Muriel's voice."

John and Ursula Halifax were of those who believe in the charity of doing good deeds without thinking what is the opinion of the world. This quality is portrayed by their taking Lady Caroline Brithwood for the last years of her life into their home. In writing this it may seem I am showing more reasons to admire the characters in the book than the book itself. But after all, it is the characters make the books.

What I like about the book is that it portrays a type of clean, pure manhood, rarely seen in books or life and the atmosphere in which the book is written is clean and pure to fit in with him. No doubt there are many other reasons to admire this excellent book but my pen is not eloquent enough to describe them.

VERA A. JOHNSON.

WE GO A-VISITING.

By Bertha E. Green.

THE Whiteheads have their home on an island, and although they do not care much for visitors, we got to know them pretty well. It is only a small island, not more than a quarter of a mile from the main land, and too rocky to grow much beside a few stunted oak and juniper, with a little grove of poplars, with bracken beneath their branches.

Not the most inviting place to spend all summer, with the storms driving over it, and no roof to shelter. But it suits the Whiteheads, who need neither house nor tent—they are gulls.

We visited them first, at their island home, and knowing their shyness, landed on the other side as quietly as possible. It was late spring, with the ice just out of the rivers and the great lake, and the Whiteheads had just returned from a winter spent far to the southward. We had seen them wheeling and diving in the distance, and so felt reasonably sure of finding them at home.

A short walk took us across the island, and as we neared the shore, we advanced cautiously, for we heard a loud "kra-a-au."

Under cover of boulders and juniper we came a little nearer the shore, and caught our first glimpse of Mr. Whitehead at close quarters. He was standing right at the water's edge, with neck outstretched and bill wide-open, calling to his mate who was swimming some distance out in the lake. In response to his call, Mrs. Whitehead swam shoreward, taking her own time about it, and was soon perched beside her mate. Mr. and Mrs. Whitehead were at home to visitors.

They were beautiful birds, as large as a tame duck, but much more graceful. Their feathers were snowy white, excepting those of the back and wings, which seemed as if they wore a soft, slate-grey cloak. The wing tips were almost black, each feather edged in white. The bills were butter-yellow, the same color as the eye, and the feet were a plain pinkish buff.

A more careful inspection disclosed a bright red spot on each side of the lower part of the bill. There was but little difference in the two birds, except that the male was somewhat larger, and as we afterwards found out, was the one who "bossed the roost."

Still they were an affectionate pair, and were seldom seen far from each other, flying, fishing, or parading along the shores of their island home.

We did not introduce ourselves on this first visit, but our next trip to Gull Island brought us to the attention of the birds, whose welcome was most noisy, if not warm. They had a nest, a makeshift affair, of sticks and bracken, carelessly built, or thrown together, in a shallow hole in the rocks not far from the water's edge.

The birds were both at home and noisily objected to our taking a peep at the nest, remaining quite near, and keeping up an angry squawk. In the nest were three greenish-grey eggs, well spotted with black. They were large eggs, and any hen should have been proud of them. Mrs. Whitehead was proud, and when she saw we did not molest the eggs, she stopped scolding us, and merely looked anxious.

Our third visit caused almost as much excitement in the Whitehead family as the last one: This was the reason: There were three babies in the nest, downy birds speckled over with brown, heads and all. When we arrived, they were snuggled together in the nest, but when we came near, the three youngsters hopped out, followed their father and mother to the shore, and swam swiftly and easily to a tiny islet a few yards away.

A fourth visit some weeks later, found the gulls busy at dinner. The three chicks were almost as large as the old bird, but still retained their speckled markings. The young ones were not yet old enough to catch their own dinner, but were well fed by the father and mother who did the fishing for the family.

Dinner over, there was a general washing of bills in the lake, after which each of the two old birds retired to its particular rock to preen, to smooth its feathers, and generally "dress up" for the rest of the day.

Succeeding visits found the three young gulls losing their spotted markings, and becoming much like their parents in appearance. Both the young ones and the old pair had become quite tame, indeed, they stayed quite near us every time we visited their island.

In all the journeys made to the home of the Whiteheads, I had never found out just what they had for dinner, so I asked the man who always paddles the canoe. "He doesn't care for fish, on account of the bones. He must have been thinking about those bones, for to my question he replied in a tone of disgust, "Herrings"

Beginning with the present contest, no club member will be awarded more than three prizes. Such members will, however, be made Honorary Members of the club, and will be advised as to what they can do to make use of the gift of writing stories.

CONTESTS FOR OCTOBER

- 1—Boys and girls 12 to 16 years. Not more than six hundred words—"A Christmas Story."
- 2—Boys and girls 8 to 12 years. Not more than five hundred words—"My Idea of a Christmas Tree."
- 3—Camera Contest. Subject—"A Country Scene."

RULES

Name, age and address must be written on each entry. Write on one side of paper only. Members under 12 years, please write on ruled paper. Stamped, addressed envelope must be enclosed for return of photographs. Closing date, the 24th of October. Those who have taken three prizes in the various contests will not be eligible for further competition. Address all entries to Journal Juniors' Club, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto, Canada.

Dainty, Surely

Yet MACK WAISTS are the truest economy because of their splendid values.

Mack Waists

present an infinite variety of charming styles at popular prices. There is no economy in trying to make Waists at home when you can get such dainty patterns—such smart tailor-made effects—such thoroughly dependable fabrics—such careful sewing and finishing—in MACK WAISTS so reasonably.

Ask your favorite store to show you the new models in MACK WAISTS.

Fashioned by
McUTCHEON WAIST CO., LIMITED
323 St. James St., Montreal.

Through the Looking Glass

By VAIN JANE

$15.00

I HAVE been greatly interested in the photographs which have been appearing in the papers lately, of the woman the English artist-photographer, Mr. E. O. Hoppe, has chosen as the most beautiful in all England. The gentleman is in quest of the most beautiful woman in the world and expects to find her, I imagine, in England. The United States, of course, intends to be in the running, and its illustrated journals are already publishing photographs of women whose beauty it is thought will compare with or even excel that of the women of all other countries. Mr. Hoppe is a daring man to undertake this self-imposed task. If his final choice falls upon an English woman he will be accused of prejudicial selection; if he prefers a foreign type of beauty he will find himself disliked by the women of every other nation. No matter what his ultimate decision, there will not be one person in every hundred who will agree with him.

After all, it is true that "beauty lies in the eyes of the beholder" and it is doubtless an excellent thing that we do not all see alike. In my own humble opinion, beauty is not so much a matter of perfection of feature as it is of coloring. The trained eye of the artist naturally is attracted at once to a beautifully proportioned face, whereas the ordinary observer would be more struck by expression and coloring. And it is, after all, more important to appear well in the eyes of the many, rather than the few; by which I mean to suggest that though we may not possess those qualities of beauty which would appeal most strongly to the artistic sense, we may go far toward cultivating an appearance that meets with popular approbation.

I have spoken of coloring as an important attribute, and by that I mean the gleam of the hair, the delicate tint of the complexion and the clear iris of the eye. It is this color that makes youth so alluring. Compare the face of a girl of sixteen with that of a woman twice that age. The latter suffers by the comparison. She need not be wrinkled, she need not be grey—she may be a perfectly healthy specimen of womanhood, but the difference lies principally in her coloring. The older woman is faded—she has lost the freshness of early youth. And that is the first thing about which she must concern herself when she begins her scheme of—what shall we call it?—rejuvenation. The complexion in the first place—and we have told you here, several times, I think, how a clear, fresh skin may be attained—and then the hair. Drab or faded hair has the effect of giving the whole person a drab and faded appearance. As we have said many times before, persistent care will keep the hair from losing its color and we should even relent from our conservative views sufficiently to advise the use of henna in preserving the natural shade. But, remember, dear ladies, it must be used expertly. I have seen tragic results from amateur applications—hair with shades of iron red and even tones of green that made you wonder if there could be anything amiss with your eyesight. Inexpertly used, hair coloring is likely also to leave the hair light close to the scalp and to give a streaked appearance to the remainder. And it is not every so-called hair specialist either to whom we may rush with a certainty of having our faded tresses "restored" to their original coloring. We must know our man, or woman as the case may be, and be assured that they are versed in the peculiarities of henna and familiar with its changing little ways.

For example, your hair-dresser may induce you to have what is generally called a "henna rinse" after your shampoo, for the purpose of giving brightness and lustre to your hair, and not with any intention of changing the color. All well and good; henna gives a softness and fluffiness to the hair and produces a shining effect that is most attractive. If afterward, however, you observe a faint mahogany shade to your locks, then the rinse has not been a success and you know that the hair-dresser is not familiar with the proper proportions which should be used to obtain certain results. Know your hair-dresser, is my advice.

Now that we have provided for a clear complexion and shining tresses, there are still the eye-brows and lashes to be considered and these, you probably know, are most important in giving expression to the face. Both lashes and brows should be somewhat darker in shade than the hair. There

A DAINTY LADY

The famous movie star, Miss Anita Stewart, is here photographed in a pretty pose and a charming afternoon frock.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 55.)

THROUGH-THE-LOOKING-GLASS COUPON

Should a reader desire to avail herself of any advice which might be given through this department, her inquiry, written on one side of the paper, should be accompanied by this coupon. In the case of desiring a private answer, a stamped and addressed envelope should be enclosed.

Rosy and Velvety

"Lips in whose rosy labyrinth, when she smiled, the soul was lost". Moore.

Wind sores, and cracks, on the lips not only irritate but are unsightly. Keep your lips healthy and beautiful with

VINOLIA LYPSTYL

Cooling and soothing in use, Lypsyl is indispensable to Milady's toilet. Tasteless, yet of a rich, natural color, nothing is so pure, yet so beneficial to the lips as Lypsyl.

In dainty Rose Red and White tins.

When you ask for Lypsyl, see that the cap of the tin is stamped "Vinolia Lypsyl".

Substitutes are worthless.

V8

BY APPOINTMENT

VINOLIA COMPANY LIMITED
London, Eng., Toronto

Hair Seems Twice as Abundant

After a "Danderine" massage, your hair takes on new life, lustre and wondrous beauty, appearing twice as heavy and plentiful. Each hair seems to fluff and thicken at once.

Danderine is "Beauty-Tonic"

Don't let your hair stay colorless, plain, scraggly, neglected. You, too, want lots of long, strong hair, radiant with life, and glistening with beauty.

A 35-cent bottle of delightful "Danderine" freshens your scalp, checks dandruff and falling hair. This stimulating "beauty-tonic" gives to thin, dull, fading hair that youthful brightness and abundant thickness—All Drug Courters!

CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL, 71-81 Richmond Street W.
Toronto, Canada

A Ramble Among Country Schools

By ELIZABETH CRONE

AFTER a recent gypsy jaunt from Lake Huron to Lake Erie and back we came home with a long line of schools in our memory. Like the cat who went to London to see the Queen and came home with the memory of a little mouse running up the stairs, we went out for a good time, and had it, but afterwards remembered best that in which we were most interested, country schools.

And some of them were good, some of them were bad and some of them had such possibilities. As a matter of fact, I never before saw so many attractive schools in the same number of miles but it makes one's heart more sore over the bleak ones. In driving through the country, past fine farms and well-kept homes it has a depressing effect to see one of those bare, jail-like structures in yards devoid of trees and flowers, and usually, at this time of year, grown up with hay.

But to come back to the beginning. The first school we stopped at called itself Number One. Maybe it was thinking of what it might be. It was quite a modern building in a good location, with a fine view of the river. But the board walk leading to the front door was so badly broken as to be dangerous and a hedge of thistles two feet high grew on either side of it. The rest of the yard was in hay. Though it was only a few days since school had closed, the building and yard had the general appearance of not having been in use for years, but the chauffeur said it was used up to the present time, and in the dust on the doorstep leading into the basement were the prints of little bare feet.

We did not see the inside of the school, but I think I could make a good guess—good lighting, probably slate boards, fairly good equipment but in bad repair, bare walls needing re-decorating, no pictures excepting two or three old calendars, a library but no new books added recently, a dusty floor scrubbed four times a year, the whole place cheerless. Now if I've made a bad guess, I'm sorry, but that's what the outside of the school told about the inside.

We went away still wondering how the children kept from trampling those hedges of thistles so close to the board walk. If they had been hedges of flowers we might have understood.

We passed other schools along the river; but the next one I remember particularly, was a little red brick down in a rather rough-looking part of the country. We weren't close to it but it had an up-to-date appearance and its gay window boxes gave one a cheerful feeling and made one think that maybe since the children were getting their training in a well-kept school the roads would some day improve and the whole country side take on a well-kept appearance.

AT summer school at Guelph I had often heard teachers speak of some of the fine old schools of Kent County. Somewhere between Chatham and Erie Beach we passed one. At least we didn't pass it; we stopped to look at its mown lawn surrounded by big maples and its window-boxes full of red geraniums and, forgetting our dignity or remembering that gypsies were unhampered by it, we climbed in an unlocked window. We wanted to see if the inside of the school could equal the outside. It did—clean, hardwood floors, slate boards, well kept library and tidy maps, a teacher's room, a cottage organ, good pictures on the walls, one particularly beautiful one at the front, and the red geraniums nodding in the windows. Of course it was not perfect, no school is. The lighting was from both sides, a defect hard to remedy in an old building, the ceiling was dark and the walls darker, but this latter could be easily remedied. The school was in keeping with the good homes and prosperous farms about it.

The next morning, on the way from Erie Beach to Rondeau Park, we passed a fine building with a beautiful lawn and fine old trees, and one of the party remarked on the nice country home, another mistook it for a country church, and then it suddenly dawned on us that it was a school; and back we went to see if it really was. Well, I thought I would recog-

Ganong's GB Chocolates

"Of course I remembered your box of Ganong's".

In 1/2, 1, 2 and 5 pound boxes.
Ask for the "Delecto" Box.

Originated by
GANONG BROS. LIMITED
ST. STEPHEN, N. B.

Makers for 50 Years of Fine Chocolates.

The finest in the Land

Health and the Home

Be sure to read what our Family Physician has to say about the care of each member of the household and all matters pertaining to keeping "fit" and therefore happy. The best of advice in the brightest way is given in our Health and the Home department. Let our Family Physician feel your pulse.

Turn Loafing Hens Into Laying Hens

ALL your hens should be laying if you are to get the biggest profits from the high priced winter eggs. And you can get the profits. Turn the loafers—now eating up the profits—into producers, too. It's easy. Just give them quickly builds up vitality, sharpens appetite, insures round digestion, puts the hens into the vigorous condition where they can't keep but lay all the time. Prove it at our risk.

Pratts Poultry Regulator

"Your Money Back if You Are Not Satisfied"

The Pratt's Roup Remedy to prevent as well as to overcome colds, coughs, croup, destructive diseases common in bad weather. Just put the remedy in the drinking water. Easy—sure!

Made in our own factory in Toronto
Sold by dealers all over Canada

Expert Advice Free. We help solve your poultry problems. Write. Ask for FREE booklet worth dollars to you.

Pratt Food Co. of Canada, Limited
328-E Carlaw Ave., Toronto

Masters of Pratt's Animal Regulator, Hog Tonic, Cow Remedy, Dip and Disinfectant and Veterinary Remedies.

pratts

WHEN SCHOOL IS "OUT"

This is the West—not the Ontario of this article. But you will all be interested in these happy children, going home from Consolidated School No. 3, St. Boniface District.

nize any Ontario rural school if I met it in Mars; by unmistakable signs I would know it. But I'm glad I've lived to see the day when I passed by a country school and failed to recognize it as such because it was so pleasant to look upon.

The lawn I have already mentioned; but I was glad to see it was not considered too good to play baseball on. There was a bed of cannas at the front and flower borders at the back. The school garden was over the fence in a corner of a neighboring field.

The front door was unlocked; so we walked in. It was not a new building but it was well finished inside and out, and had evidently always been well cared for. Everything was extremely clean, from the basement to the teacher's room, and the teacher's room actually had a rug and a library table and two cushioned wicker chairs. I must not forget to mention the piano in the school room, and in the children's cloak-room there were wash basins and paper towels.

While we were taking a parting glance around, one of the others burst in with the announcement that she had found something better than the school, namely the school woodshed, as neat as a good housewife's kitchen and clean enough to eat in.

We came away feeling that we would like to have the honor of shaking hands with the trustees or the people or whoever it was who had kept that school up to its high mark. And the best of it was there was nothing but what might be done in any section. All that's needed is a little community pride and then perseverance.

IN the afternoon we saw one which had great possibilities. It had started well—a fine building, but not kept up; trees had been planted, but most of them had died; there were flower borders around the school but the soil was light and they were not prospering. Inside, the school had the same discouraged look. But, with a fresh start, it could be one of the best schools in the district.

Coming nearer home, we visited the school where one of the party had first taught. It was in one of the best farming districts we had seen in our trip, with good houses, barns, roads, and good crops and there, five minutes walk from a very attractive village, in its own little hay field stood this little old school.

We stood on a convenient ledge and looked in through the windows. "Not one bit of improvement," said the former teacher, "same old walls, same old floor, same hand-carved double desks, same old box stove at the back of the room and same antique pictures of the royal family over the teacher's desk."

They say all things change but they don't; some rural schools don't, not for the better anyway. The first one I taught in did; it burned down one night, (peace to its ashes!) and a fine little modern building stands in its place. I was glad it didn't happen until after I had left else they might have thought I did it. 'Twas the only time that school was ever warm, I think. One I taught in later changed too. It blew down one windy day just after the new school had been built and the old one was moved off for a hay barn. I was sorry it blew down; it would have made a good hay barn. I haven't one bit of sentiment about those schools, but I have a great deal of admiration for the ones which stand in their places.

There is a lot of talk in the newspapers and magazines nowadays about improvement of rural schools and what the present Government may do along that line. But I believe the chief hope for improvement lies in the fact that the Women's Institutes are taking it up. While I taught school and hadn't a chance to attend Women's Institute meetings I will confess I thought their chief interest lay in new ways of making pickles and hot weather desserts. Now I know better. At our district meeting in June the space devoted to business was simply packed with suggestions for work which might be taken up now that Red Cross work is over, and among them were suggestions for school improvement. The medical inspection survey had already been started in the county because the Women's Institute had asked for it. Looking over the faces of the delegates, I thought, whatever they went after they would get. Farm women who have worked for everything they get at home, when they get interested in public affairs will get everything they work for.

SO it is to these women we make the appeal. How does the school in your community measure up with the homes in the community? Is it as clean as they are, or is it just scrubbed four times a year, and would you let your children eat their dinner in the kitchen at home if it were just scrubbed four times a year, and twenty or thirty children were living in it? Are the children as warm at school as they are at home, or do they sit with cold feet all afternoon? Have the walls been re-decorated as often in the last ten or fifteen years as they have been at home? Has the school a lawn mower? 'Twould be a fine gift from the Institute or a good prize

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 61.)

Consolidated School No. 3, St. Boniface.

NOW!

THE Gillette Safety Razor adds thousands to the number of its users each year about this time!

Perhaps it is because men whose work or sport takes them outdoors begin to find a nip in the wind that makes scraped chins smart—

Perhaps the summer vacations have taken men out of their accustomed paths and demonstrated that their friends everywhere use Gillettes—

Perhaps it is the natural evolution whereby more men each month adopt the best shaving method—

It is only a matter of time when all shavers will demand Gillette Standards of Shaving Practice—

NO STROPPING—NO HONING

A perfect edge for every shave.

A system whereby you can buy Gillette goods as efficiently in the village store as anywhere else.

Standard prices of $5 and up.

And handles to suit all hands.

Why not select YOUR set NOW?

Gillette Safety Razor

The Shaving Service for Every Man—Everywhere.

The Journal Puzzle for October

By TOM WOOD

9/15/00

The initials and finals of the things pictured in the circular design (A, B, C, D, E, F), read downwards, spell the attitude of mind and heart in which all Canadians should be found at this season of the year. The figures 1, 2, etc., up to X represent things the initials of which spell one reason why.

N.B.—The flower in picture "C" may not be familiar, but a very popular flavoring, which is used constantly, is made from its seeds. Picture "D" represents a Prussian decoration. Use only the first half of its whole name.

Two prizes will be given—first, two dollars, and second, one dollar—for the best solutions, judged according to neatness and accuracy.

All are eligible to compete. Answers must be received by October 20th to be included.

Correct Solution of the August Puzzle.

No. 1—Smile, Arms, Ringlet, Dress, Orchid, Nose, Yoke, Xylophone—Sardonyx.

No. 2—Puma, Oasis, Pineapple, Pheasant, Yellow Hammer—Poppy.

First prize, Ruth Westland, Springfield, Breadalbane P.O., Prince Edward Island; second prize, Evelyn Austin, 1826 Government Street, Victoria, B.C.

Address Puzzle Department, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto.

The "TROVATORE" A FAVORITE SONORA MODEL

THE "Trovatore" is richly simple in its cabinet design. It has a Double-Spring Motor, playing from four to five 10-inch records with one winding, and an Automatic Stop. It plays every make of disc record with the clear, golden Sonora tone. Go to your nearest dealer and ask to hear the play a Piano Record—the severest test you can give a Phonograph. The usual reproduction on an ordinary Phonograph is tinkly and weak—you will note its warmth and fullness on the SONORA.

THE INSTRUMENT OF QUALITY
Sonora
CLEAR AS A BELL

Remember—the SONORA is the Highest-class Talking Machine in the World. As the result of its clear, sweet tone, the SONORA received, at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, a higher marking for tone quality than that given any other Phonograph.

You pay no luxury tax on a Sonora.

I. MONTAGNES & CO.
Dept. "C," Ryrie Building, Toronto

D-10

40c for Package of 5 Semi-Permanent Silvered Needles

Ask your dealer for a package of these wonderful new needles. They play from 50 to 100 times without being changed.

Figure "A" — Ordinary Steel Needle fitting record groove. It is quite logical that the ordinary needle becomes idly engaged at the engagement point in the record groove (owing to the taper form) and thus tends to wear off the edges of the groove of the record.

Figure "C" — Sonora semi-permanent needle, with parallel sides, which fits the record groove accurately always, while wearing, and prolongs life of record.

Sonora PERMANENTLY SILVERED Needles

Three Grades—Loud—Medium—Soft

I. MONTAGNES & COMPANY
Dept. "C," RYRIE BLDG., TORONTO

Cuts Grease

WHEN dish water is run in sinks, the grease congeals and sticks to the drain pipes. Use Snowflake as directed below; it will saponify and make the grease soluble in water.

To clean sink or drain pipes

Dissolve  $\frac{1}{2}$  to 1 package Snowflake in pail of boiling water and pour slowly down sink. Will remove all Grime and Grease.

100% Soluble

10. for 5¢

ADAMS Chiclets

10. for 5¢

The Original Candy-Coated Gum

CANADIAN WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

PROVINCIAL DIRECTORS

ALBERTA - Miss Mary MacIsaac - Edmonton, Alta.
 BRITISH COLUMBIA - Miss Olive E. Hayes - Victoria, B.C.
 MANITOBA - Mr. S. T. Newton - Winnipeg, Man.
 NEW BRUNSWICK - Miss Hazel McCain - Fredericton, N.B.
 NOVA SCOTIA - Miss Helen J. Macdougall - Truro, N.S.

PROVINCIAL DIRECTORS

ONTARIO - Mr. George A. Putnam - Toronto, Ont.
 PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND - Miss Della E. Saunders - Charlottetown, P.E.I.
 QUEBEC - Miss M. May Chute - Macdonald College, Que.
 SASKATCHEWAN - Mr. S. E. Greenway - Saskatoon, Sask.

A Variety of Activities

By ELIZABETH BAILEY PRICE

Some Saskatchewan Notes.

MISS DeLURY, Superintendent of Saskatchewan Home-Makers' Club, has been paying a visit to several of the Branches and has contributed the following notes:

I have recently visited the Glen Bain Club, fifteen miles from Gravelbourg. I find the club in a very flourishing condition. At a meeting, members had brought in piles of clothing for the children's Shelter in Moose Jaw. The clothing included rompers, night dresses, dresses, etc. One of the members had her work with her, which she continued at intervals in the meeting. It consisted of a border in fllet for a bed spread. She is making this quilt for sale for the benefit of the Home-Makers' Club. It will take two years to finish, as she works only in her spare time. Her work is free, and the club furnishes the material.

The Stewart Club, also fifteen miles from Gravelbourg, I visited. This club has very enthusiastic members. They have been studying the Constitution and Government of Canada, in addition to a great deal of sewing, and other work. Their Girls' Club has tinted the walls, and cleaned and varnished the floor, and raised funds for purchasing a piano for same.

Saskatchewan Home-Makers' Clubs are busy helping with the Fall Fairs and keep seven judges busy all the time. A special effort this year has been put forth to encourage the canning of fruit and vegetables and special prizes are being offered not only for the canning of these but for the best exhibits of specimens from the gardens. Prizes for the best collections of dishes with sweet milk and sour milk as a basis are being offered. Child Welfare clinics are also features of the fairs.

News Notes From Quebec.

THE Women's Institute is composed of the public spirited women of Lennoxville, and these same women have banded themselves together to be a leading factor in raising money for a memorial to the Lennoxville and Ascot boys who fought and died in the World's War. With this object in view they gave an ice cream social on the Town Hall lawn this summer and raised a considerable sum.

Belvidere Women's Institute is sending picture books, post cards, etc. to the Children's Ward in the Sherbrooke Hospital and to the Children's Memorial Hospital in Montreal, this social service work being in charge of the young members of the Institute. One of the summer meetings was held at the home of Mrs. Charles Drummond, Drummond Road.

Durham held its annual basket picnic, as in other years, at the grounds of the home of the county president, Mrs. George Beach, Cowansville Road, in August.

Oxford Women's Institute had a girls' day in August, when the girls provided the programme which was as follows: A paper on pickle making by Miss Jennie Gantry, an amusing monologue by Miss Lily Arbury, a paper on cake making by Miss Evelyn Faith, a piano solo by Miss Lily Arbury, and a paper on canning by Miss Dorothy Brown, a graduate of Macdonald College.

At a meeting of the Cookshire Home-Makers' Club, held in the Methodist church hall, a resolution was moved and carried unanimously, "That the members of this Club devote a part of their endeavors to the founding and forming of a 'General Fund' for the upkeep of the Cookshire Protestant Cemetery, generally. It is understood that the principal shall not be used, but that the principal remain intact and only the interest from the said fund or principal be used, and further that all parties owning plots or all parties who may have interest in the said cemetery, be asked to co-operate and assist in any manner or form, for the end above stated.

It is planned that the collection of the said fund be completed in a period of three years; that all work such as is possible, be voluntary; that cash subscriptions may be paid on the instalment plan, but the total is to be paid within the stated three years; is a worthy community according to "Janey Canuck," who says: "The village cemetery, I take it, marks the degree of the village culture."

Live Institutes in Manitoba.

SEVERAL Manitoba Women's Institutes have sent in reports showing that they are interested in Institute work and are "carrying on" enthusiastically endeavoring to live up to the Institute motto: "For Home and Country."

Swan Lake reports:

In 1919, we worked for French Orphans; to this cause we sent $180.00,

In spite of the very bad roads, resulting from the rain, a very successful District Convention of the Women's Institute was held in Belmont recently. About fifty members were present. Mrs. Marquis presided at the afternoon session, Mrs. Inmoth welcomed the Delegates, to which Mrs. McPhail of Wawanesa responded. Mrs. Jenkins read a report from the Delta Institute, and Mrs. Phillips from the Belmont Society, which shows that the Institute is in a very flourishing condition. No other societies were able to be present. Miss Dutton, Supervisor of Women's Institutes and Mrs. Duncan of the H. E. Department of the Agricultural College, gave short talks. Miss Gislason and Miss Fargey rendered delightful solos and Miss I. Irwin gave a reading. Mr. H. E. Wood described the assistance which Women's Institutes may give boys' and girls' clubs. The afternoon session closed with a lucid demonstration of a polling booth by Mr. C. Brown, clerk of the Municipality. A supper was then served by the ladies in the Oddfellows' Hall. The evening session at which the Rev. Mr. Dyke presided, opened with a few motion picture films. Miss M. Castill led the community singing at both sessions. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. J. H. Evans, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, short addresses which were introduced with musical numbers, were given by Miss Dutton and Mrs. Duncan.

In recounting the work of the Minnedosa W. I., the most important feature of the past year was the securing of a rest room. This was done by the soliciting of donations and grants from the merchants and municipalities around. It was opened by a large reception at which about fifty guests were present from the surrounding country.

Although the room is not a big paying business, it is a source of comfort to its patrons, who feel at home and free to make use of it, during their sometimes long hours of shopping and waiting, and where at any hour a cup of tea and light lunch is served by our hospitable matron. The Women's Institute was asked to take in hand a ward in the hospital that had been under the care of the Knights of Pythias, and who had abandoned it, not having sufficient numbers to keep it up. The committee, Mrs. Rorke, Mrs. Gugin, Mrs. Beddome and Mrs. Woodcock, by subscriptions from the women in the country, raised $300.00. The ward was repapered painted and refurnished with bed and table linen, mattress, table, chinaware and thoroughly equipped for use again and is now called "The Country Women's Ward." They have also a bank account in reserve for further needs to the ward, and supply fruit in season and sugar for preserving.

The year's programme has been varied and always well worth the time of the members. It has included a practical demonstration on the making of children's clothes, hints on making pockets, buttonholes, gathering and sewing on lace, given by Mrs. J. McKay; a class of cookery with demonstration on canning given by Miss Moore, a graduate of the M.A.C.; a talk by the Rural Nurse, Miss McClung.

The children of the community have had a place on the programme, four essays being read by four members of the Boys' and Girls' Club, their subject being: "How I Raised a Garden for a Boys' and Girls' Fair."

Many interesting and timely topics have been discussed at the meetings, these being Parliamentary Procedure, given by Judge Maulson, Turkey Raising by Mrs. A. Davidson, The French Women by Brigadier-General Dyer,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 62.)

A SASKATCHEWAN OFFICIAL

Miss Abigail De Lury, who is an Ontarian by birth, taught in the public schools of her native Province for two years and then took a two years' teachers' course in Household Science at Guelph, followed by a year's course in Household Science at Columbia University. For two years Miss De Lury taught at Macdonald College, in Quebec, then went West, where she organized the Household Science course in the Moose Jaw public schools and collegiate and taught there for three years. Afterwards, Miss De Lury was called to the University of Saskatchewan to direct the Homemakers' Clubs until such time as a course in Household Science should be started. When the time came, Miss De Lury chose to stay with the Extension Course.

that legacies or bequests will be gratefully received and credited to the general fund; that donations in kind are also requested, such as: Clothing, provisions, grain, household articles, that by means of sales, these donations can, at any time, be converted into cash, and that the said sales shall be held at such times as are suitable for the disposal of such donations in kind; that subscriptions and donations may be sent to the president or secretary of the Cookshire Home-Makers' Club, or to any of the members of the official committee, herein stated; that the proposed general fund shall be invested and directed by the following official committee as soon as they have been duly and legally registered as trustees of the said general fund. Cookshire and to French widows and orphans, $7.00, and to Child's Welfare, Winnipeg, $35.00. In 1920, so far we have only eighteen members. We have given one afternoon tea in aid of the Children's Aid, Winnipeg, the proceeds were $18.50. Our meetings have been very good, and we have had splendid papers.

We serve lunch at all our meetings, and take a collection. I am sorry to say we are losing a number of our members by Belgians buying up farms in our district, and so far we have not managed to get any of these women to come to our meetings, but we have not given up hope nor trying.

This year we mean to help any worthy cause needing help in Manitoba. Our ladies thought it best to work for our own Country this year.

The Thief of Beauty

HOW to stay Time in its relentless course? That is the problem of Beauty. How to prevent those telltale lines about the mouth, the flaccid throat, the withering of skin and lips that mark the progress of the years.

Does Beauty know that the enemy most to be feared is not Time, but Pyorrhea—a disease of the gums that wrecks the health and brings the brand of age? Pyorrhea begins with tender and bleeding gums. Then the gums recede, the lips lose their look of youth, the teeth decay, loosen and fall out, or must be extracted to rid the system of the infecting Pyorrhea germs that cause rheumatism, anaemia, nervous disorders, and other serious ills.

Four out of five people over forty have Pyorrhea. You can keep this insidious disease away. Visit your dentist frequently for tooth and gum inspection—and use Forhan's For the Gums.

Forhan's For the Gums will prevent Pyorrhea—or check its progress—if used in time and used consistently. Ordinary dentifrices cannot do this. Forhan's keeps the gums firm and healthy—the teeth white and clean.

How to Use Forhan's

Use it twice daily, year in and year out. Wet your brush in cold water, place a half inch of the refreshing, healing paste on it, then brush your teeth up and down. Use a rolling motion to clean the crevices. Brush the grinding and back surfaces of the teeth. Massage your gums with your Forhan-coated brush—gently at first until the gums harden, then more vigorously. If the gums are very tender, massage with the finger, instead of the brush. If gum-shrinkage has already set in, use Forhan's according to directions and consult a dentist immediately for special treatment.

35c and 60c tubes in Canada and U. S. If your druggist cannot supply you, send to us direct and we will mail tube postpaid.

Forhan's, Limited, Montreal
Forhan Company, New York

The Various Meanings Attached to the Words Which Make Up the Name of the Prince of Wales, Who Has Been Visiting Different Parts of the British Empire

What's In a Name?

By E. M. GARDNER

987.1

WELL, that depends upon circumstances:

In the commercial and professional world the NAME goes a long way to make or mar the fortunes of the bearer, also in the literary world, a name often spells success, or the reverse; however, it is to none of these things that we propose drawing your attention at the present time, but to something more human, which seems to touch our hearts as well as our imaginations, that is, the name—or names—for he rejoices in seven given names, which, being the perfect number, is the first good omen which we note in connection therewith of one who was with us a year ago, whom we delighted to honor; partly for the sake of those names and what they stand for, but chiefly for his own sake, for, do we not love to speak of him as "Our Prince"?

Of course every one knows what the names of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales are, but in order to refresh the memory of the reader, we have thought it might be of interest to put them down in order, together with the meaning of each, as given by recognized authorities, so that we may have a clearer idea of "what's in a name,"—especially his name.

ANDREW—(Greek) means Strong, Manly, Courageous, — outstanding characteristics of the patron saint of Scotland.

PATRICK—(Latin) meaning Noble. The patron saint of Ireland, whose followers were bewitched by his personality—(was it his winning smile?)

DAVID—(Hebrew) Last but not least, for it means "Beloved," "Dear." It was the name born by the patron saint of Wales. Has not his mantle fallen on the Prince of Wales? We read that his Royal Grandmother, Queen Alexandra, in a recent message to President Wilson, U.S.A., spoke of the Prince as her "dear Grandson" and in the book of family photographs, which she presented as a Christmas gift to charities in England, opposite a likeness of the Prince of Wales, when a little lad, she has written "Edward Prince of Wales," and underneath, in brackets "Little David." Do not these facts breathe of a deep affection, which is his "at home" as well as "abroad"?

Just another thought or two which may be of interest to all those who believe in omens. Edward, Prince of Wales was born on the 23rd of June, 1894. Now the birth stone for that

PRINCE OF WALES SHAKING HANDS WITH MAORI WOMEN

The eldest son of King George and Queen Mary greatly enjoyed the reception given to him at Rotorua by the Maori women on his visit to the Antipodes. After the ceremony he remarked it was the finest thing he had ever witnessed. The smiling, barefooted Maori girl is evidently enjoying the scene, while His Royal Highness is evidently a little bit perturbed at having to face the line of strangely-bedecked figures.

EDWARD—(a good old Anglo-Saxon name) meaning "Guardian of happiness." His Grandfather, King Edward VII, was called "Edward the Peacemaker."

ALBERT—(Old high German) means "All bright" or "Illustrious." It was the name of his Great Grandfather, the Prince Consort, who was known as "Albert the Good," and whose name was untarnished, "all bright" and beloved.

CHRISTIAN—(Latin) meaning "belonging to Christ" or "a follower of Christ." Could we wish anything better for our young "Heir to the Throne"? It was the name of the illustrious King Christian IX of Denmark, whose eldest daughter is our much loved "Queen Mother" Alexandra, grandmother of the Prince of Wales.

GEORGE—(German) meaning "A Land holder" or "Husbandman"—and it would seem with the Prince's recognized love of flowers, Agriculture, and Nature in general, and from the fact that he has acquired a large quantity of land in our Canadian Northwest (Alberta) that the name is by no means inappropriate. Besides, is it not the name of his royal father, King George V? Also it is the name of the patron saint of England.

month is agate or chalcedony. The former is said to insure health, long life and prosperity. The latter "drives away sadness." If there is anything in this, we would suggest that H. R. H. should always carry a piece of each precious stone, somewhere about his person, but we are inclined to suspect that he already has a bit of Chalcedony hidden away out of sight, for sadness, and other unbecoming expressions are said to flee before his winsome irresistible smile.

Again, we find that in 1894 the 23rd of June, fell on a Saturday—(We are so thankful it was not Friday!) You will remember the old rhyme which says:

"Friday's child is full of woe;
Saturday's child has far to go."
And the probabilities are that this is true, for the Prince has already travelled many thousands of miles by land and sea.

When he sailed away from our shores, Canada — metaphorically speaking—stood on the pier and wailed (in the words of the old Scotch song):
"Will ye no come back again?
Will ye no come back again?
Better lo'ed ye canna be,
Will ye no come back again?"
And he says he is coming. Hurrah!

ON a warm and drowsy afternoon last August, someone in search of comfort and coolness called on a Lady of the Old School, who is proud of her upwards-of-four-score years and who rejoices in the possession of an old-fashioned garden. Ice cream, entirely modern, was served in a shady spot which had a background of pink and crimson hollyhocks. The visitor, however, forgot the flowers and the refreshment in contemplating the small silver spoons which were almost too frail for their task.

"Where did you get these delightful spoons?" she finally asked of the hostess.

The Lady of the Old School fairly beamed with pleasure as she saw that her visitor was regarding the spoons with covetous gaze. "Oh, my Dear, those are spoons with a story."

"They look like it," said the visitor, as she noticed that the silver between bowl and handle was worn almost to a thread. "Are they very old?"

"Older than I know," was the reply. "They belonged to my grandmother who lived near Chrysler's Farm, where the famous battle was ors, while the delegates, themselves, were unflagging in their enthusiasm about the various provinces through which they passed. They must have been ever so tired, poor delegates, before all the sight-seeing and the speeches were over. They were a jolly company, too—with the spirit of good fellowship and bonhomie, in spite of the very serious questions which they were called upon to discuss. One of the speakers said at a municipal banquet that he was impressed in Canada by its vastness, its vitality and its hospitality:—a trio of qualities which ought to make us consider whether we deserve to be described in such flattering terms. Our "vastness" is a matter of accident, and, while we glory in the Rocky Mountains and in the picturesque outlook from Baddeck, we can hardly take the credit for their size and sublimity. "Vitality" is a quality we all desire, and so long as it does not become overpoweringly aggressive, we do not object to its possession. The ability to "carry on" is especially to be prized in these days and Canada may well give a loud-

AN OVERFLOW MARKET

Historic Bonsecours Market, in Montreal, is no longer able to take care of the immense market trade that has developed this year. The overflow has found its way to the famous Champs de Mars, where it is shown in the photograph.

fought in the War of 1812. My grandmother heard that American soldiers were coming and she ran to the woods near the house and buried the spoons and other silver. When she went back to the house, there was an American officer in possession, who asked her what she had been hiding. She refused to tell him, saying that she knew he had come to burn the house. Then he told her that, if she would get the property she had hidden and restore it, he would promise her that it should not be harmed. When she hesitated, he said: 'I promise you on my honor as an American officer.' As she rather liked his looks she went off with him to the spot where she had buried the spoons. So, the silver came back to the farmhouse and the officer was as good as his word and saw that all the property was unharmed."

The spoons with the slender handles had, indeed, travelled far and seen many changes—even to the coming to Canada of such war trophies as the world had not known before. The visitor thoughtfully stirred her tea and wondered if the frail little spoons, which had come through more than one war would be shining brightly one hundred years from now, in a happy Canadian home.

* * *

WONDERFULLY interesting has been the trip of the delegates to the Imperial Press Conference, and the Canadians who met and heard the members at the various gatherings were duly impressed with the importance of the coming of such visit-voiced negative to the question: "Are we down-hearted?" Hospitality is an attribute of a people who have received greatly and who are prepared to give of their abundance. All Canadians know of the work of Mrs. Roberts (better known as Jessie Alexander) whose recitals have delighted many an audience in East and West. Speaking in reminiscence, some time ago, Mrs. Roberts said that the qualities she had noticed in Canadians, wherever she went, are kindness and resourcefulness. We shall do well, indeed, if we live up to these estimates of national characteristics.

* * *

IS there any teapot which has quite the cosiness of the old-time Brown Betty? Queen Anne silver is stately and suggestive of a recent bridal or a testimonial from the church officers. The tall slender colonial design has excellent "lines"; but, when it comes to a really "comfy" cup of tea, Brown Betty is the most encouraging sight of them all. Nor is Brown Betty without her own self respect. She has a certain air of repose and satisfaction which indicates that she feels, but not unduly, her own importance. Just the other day, I saw a wonderful green teapot which has recently arrived from China and has an air of the Orient which many would find alluring in its hint of a corner in a far-away tea-garden. But Brown Betty stands serenely aside, knowing that after the newcomer has been admired for an hour, her homely charms will hold for Everyday.

"SALADA"

Tea

B414

—perfect in flavour and fragrance and so economical in use.

—sealed packets only

Get this Book on Home Furnishing

Burroughes' 1920 Furniture Book is a mine of information on home furnishings of all kinds. Fully illustrated; exact descriptions.

Write for your FREE COPY

Pictures and describes the latest and best in furniture, gives valuable hints and explains fully.

Burroughes' Easy Payment Plan

whereby you can obtain any article of furniture by a small deposit and subsequent easy payments, without any interest or extra charge. We pay freight charges to any railroad station in Ontario.

A Free Handbook on Home Furnishing

BURROUGHES

Furniture Co., Ltd.
Dept. 31, Queen St. West, Toronto, Ont.

Dye All Fabrics

Cotton—Wool
Silk or Mixed Goods

15¢
A CAKE

22
FAST COLORS

Dainty frocks, waists, dresses—even heavy wraps and suits are kept wonderfully smart and fresh like new, with Sunset.

Sunset colors are beautiful, brilliant; never crock, fade or wash out—and it's so easy and such fun. Sunset cleans as it dyes—no acids used.

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR SUNSET

Most of the better stores carry Sunset—ask for your favorite color, or send us your dealer's name and fifteen cents and we will mail a cake postpaid.

North American Dye Corporation, Ltd.
Mount Vernon, N.Y.
Dept. 2, Toronto, Can.

ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"

The name "Bayer" on Aspirin is like Sterling on silver. It positively identifies the only genuine Aspirin,—the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada.

Always buy an unbroken package

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Mono-acetic acid ester of Salicylic acid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which contains proper directions for Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains, and Pain generally. Tin boxes of 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Larger "Bayer" packages.

ESTABLISHED 1695

WARING & GILLOW
LTD
LONDON ENGLAND

An Adam interior designed and executed by us.

We invite correspondence concerning

|                     |                  |
|---------------------|------------------|
| Interior Decorating | Period Furniture |
| Wall Paper          | Draperies Rugs   |

394 PHILLIPS PLACE - MONTREAL

Read Canadian Literature

The best way to know your country is by reading the stories, essays and poems of your own writers. The Canadian has made a place of his own in fiction and poetry, and the productions of Canadian artists are winning recognition everywhere. If you wish to keep in touch with Canadian thought and problems of native importance, you must read the daily, weekly and monthly magazine.

Made In Canada

Spring floods on Nelson (B.C.) water-front.

Graphic Description of one of the Most Beautiful Spots in our Pacific Province

In the Kootenay Country

By MRS. W. GARLAND FOSTER

A CERTAIN eastern man lately suffered some confusion regarding the geography of British Columbia. That is the trouble—there successive scenes that lie spread out before the eye, but to get a grasp of scenery laid lavishly over hills and more hills and mountains and more mountains as though Nature in her generosity folded them up to be spread out at pleasure, is another thing.

Out here—in God's country still, though far beyond the boundaries of the Great Lakes—one passes through every kind of scenery and every kind of climate known to this continent. Here are lordly streams winding and curving between mountain ranges, through canyons, widening into lakes or flooded basins, edged by rich alluvial strips, overlooked by benches equally fertile. Here between summits snow-capped are sunny valleys tucked away, with their own streams providing unlimited water power. There are southern slopes where grapes and peaches flourish; there are northern slopes where grains and hardier fruits are grown, where wide-eyed cattle wade in wild vetches and clovers. Over all the mountains tower, grim, grey and snow-capped till the magic hand of Spring drives back the snowline which, receding day by day, drops down its melting streams to flood their way to outlets far away. These mountains hold great mystery, great wealth of mineral forces sufficient to serve man's needs a million years and more, minerals known to science, minerals yet to know, all hidden in those grim, forbidding vaults that Spring's awakening or the cloak of Winter alone makes fair.

Cottonwood Falls, Nelson's water supply.

is so much geography to B.C. that it is really difficult to compass it all in a lifetime, especially if one is not a native. It is one thing to visualize

Farm scene at Nelson, looking in the lake.

Beauty is a thing of a thousand subtleties

THE PINK-TIPPED HAND OF YOUTH

is one of the "points" of that subtle difference between the woman who is truly charming in every small and infinitely important detail and the woman who never quite achieves distinction. A bit too much of the wrong sort of polish—thickened roughened skin at the base of the nails—an over-manicured look caused by indiscreetly chosen nail rouge or nail white—the result is deplorable—vulgar.

HYGLO

Manicure Preparations

are made for the well-groomed woman who realizes that she is as old as her hands look, the woman whose taste in small details is invariably correct, and who understands the tremendous importance of trifles.

Hyglo Nail Polish, in cake and powder form, for the exquisite polish the gentlewoman prefers. 35c and 65c.
Hyglo Cuticle Remover and Nail Bleach, to efficiently and painlessly remove the cuticle and prevent hangnails. 35c.
Hyglo Nail Polish Paste, for just the right lustre—softly brilliant and lasting. 35c.
Hyglo Nail White, the finishing touch to a perfectly manicured hand. 35c.

Also Hyglo Compact Face Powders and Rouges, lip-sticks, eye-brow pencils and Hyglo Cosmetique, for the eyelashes and eye-brows (removed with water). Small trial sample of Hyglo Cuticle Remover and Nail Powder sent on receipt of 10c in coin.

GRAF BROS., Inc.
134 West 24th Street, New York
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Inc., Selling Agents
171 Madison Avenue New York
10 McCaul Street Toronto, Canada

Just A Ball o' Yarn

for every knitting purpose—in every fashionable shade

Corticelli

In the Kootenay Country

Lover's Lane, on Balfour Road.

The melting snows disintegrate the surface rock, the lichens, moss and small plant life all add their share to building soil, and year by year sees more pretentious foliage crown the gray. At the bottom, richer, more generous crops, each successive foot blooming as the season advances, till by midsummer, Spring's flowers flourish on the heights.

And trees, such trees as fringe the lakes and climb the mountain sides! Trees that point straight up no matter how steep the bank they climb. But king of all the trees the Douglas fir stands out, a link between two races of trees and wearing royal marks of two. With graceful branches bearing stately robes of green he stands, the royal sentinel of all this land.

AND Queen of all this lovely land where the Columbia widens with the waters of a hundred streams is a city tucked away where the Rockies overlook the Selkirks. To sail in May or early June down the broad, lake-like stream of the Columbia is to have spread out before one all the shades known to the spectroscopist; to glimpse the white of drooping cherry blossoms, or to get the wafted perfume of apple blossoms just bursting into bloom. Those apple orchards with strawberries growing in the rows between—what more luscious temptation could one anticipate? When the river basin is full to overflowing is the best time to see the Nelson of the Kootenay. The willows on the water front dip their foliage in the flood and up the hillside spreads the city, bosomed high in wealth of bloom. The farms that fringe the city show green fields and gardens breaking into verdant strips. By all means see Nelson in June. Failing this, choose summer when the sun beats on the rock strewn mountain opposite and the drowsiness of tropical heat holds the city; then on some evening as the sun throws long shadows among the infant firs visit some Lover's Lane on Balfour Road and guess from scents and sounds and lengthening rays if you are east or west or where. Or by moonlight, when the mountain breezes stir the trees along the canyon, cross the bridge at Cottonwood Falls and say what other climes invite. Or motoring out the Granite Road to the Lookout as evening shadows fall, see the vista of lake, stream and mountain shadow; smell the perfume of fir and pine and hidden flowers; then "glim your lights" and thank "whatever gods may be" that you have once in a lifetime been at Nelson, Queen City of the Kootenay.

Open Air Wash Days

ONE of the first impressions of the picturesqueness of the Continental working people that strikes the eye of the tourist is the sight of the women washing clothes in the canals and rivers. The custom seems to be quite universal in France, Belgium and Holland, Italy, Switzerland, and, to a less extent, in Germany. In the primitive fashion still used in France, the clothes are washed on the stones by the side of the river and beaten with a wooden implement designed for the purpose. The subject has been immortalized in a sketch of Jean Francois Millet. As to the results of the process, it must be admitted that only the best and strongest materials of the most durable and strongest are calculated to survive the treatment. But, judging from the fine, strong, ruddy look of the women, the custom is good for the washers if not for the clothes.

They make pictures that remain in the memory, these workers in the sun. No matter how brief the first glimpse, when the galleries of dead masters have become a confused recollection you will be able to shut your eyes and see them as if you had passed them yesterday, that group of Normandy peasants in white cap and kerchief, hollowing out the loose beach stones in the wake of a freshwater spring on its way to the sea. When the pool was filled a large stone was placed for a washboard and work began. Then, when the clothes were washed and rinsed and wrung out with a strong play of muscle in brown arms, they were spread on the beach with a stone at each corner to keep the excitable French wind from whisking them away. And the sea was like sapphire, and the rush of it, breaking on the great cliffs beyond, mingled with the sound of the women's voices as they washed.

The Italian women, washing in a trough set in the shade of a stone wall, smile up at you from their work as you drive past. You are conscious, in a vivid, quick way, of the flash of red in a woman's dress, of wet white clothes and a burning blue sky behind a sunlit yellow wall that climbs a hill following the road. In some of the Italian towns you will see a long trough divided into compartments, built against a roofed wall where the women can wash protected from the fierce Southern sun. They seem as happy as possible over their work and chatter incessantly like a flock of blackbirds.

The woman of refinement

uses a Talcum Powder which harmonizes with her dainty personality.

She does not desire one with a perfume too pronounced and which attracts unwelcome attention.

For such dainty women the Mennen Company have produced a range of exquisite Talcum Powders, delicately perfumed—the ideal Talcums for women of taste.

All Mennen Talcums are compounded on the same basis and with the same care as the famous Mennen Borated Talcum Powder used so successfully for 40 years for babies' tender skin. That in itself guarantees the quality—silky and soft, delicate and fragrant.

Mennen Violet Talcum is quiet and refreshing, with an old-world perfume of dew-crystalized violets—a perfume which has been the favorite of many generations of well-bred people.

Mennen Sen Yang has a perfume new to this continent. It is an elusive Oriental Perfume, rapidly becoming a great favorite. The Mennen Company also, after long experiment, have produced two Talcum Powders which give perfect "complexion" satisfaction. One is Flesh Tint—the first Flesh Tint Talcum—and the other Cream Tint, for those who find a white Talcum unbecoming.

The Mennen Company
Factory: Montreal

Sales Office
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Limited
10 McCaul St., Toronto

MENNEN
TALCUM POWDERS

"Oh! Doctor!
Baby Simply Won't Stop Crying!"

"His little legs are just raw. There's an angry rash on his back and stomach. Please do something!"

Of course, the doctor knew nothing serious was the matter. Baby was merely suffering from teething rash and diaper rash. But doctor knew that only a happy baby grows and thrives. So he did something.

Baby was dusted with Kora-Konia. Quickly the rash disappeared. The hot little body became cool. The raw spots were soothed and soon healed. In a mighty short time baby was cooing and gurgling for his dinner.

Kora-Konia should not be confused with Mennen's Talcum Powder, which has made babies sweet and comfortable for nearly forty years. It has somewhat the same soothing and healing action, but in addition contains several other ingredients of recognized medicinal value which are indicated in the treatment of the more serious skin abrasions. It is antiseptic, absorbent, adhesive, moisture resisting, cooling, soothing and healing.

MENNEN
KORA-KONIA

The Mennen Company
Factory: Montreal

Sales Office
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Limited
10 McCaul Street
Toronto

The Book Corner

"The Wind Between The Worlds."
By Alice Brown; The Macmillan Company, Toronto.

THE reputation of Alice Brown in the literary world is such that any novel by her commands a respectful reading. This latest volume is not only well-written, but it wakes a strong popular appeal to those interested in the modern attempts (frantic, in some cases) to establish communication between this familiar Earth and "worlds not realized." The writer has taken her title from a line in Kipling's "Tomlinson," and it proves almost poignantly appropriate. The story centres around the attempts of Mrs. Harvey, a mother, whose aviator son was killed in the war, to obtain some authentic message from her dead Philip. Miss Bixley, the secretary, who is half fraud, half fanatic; Peter Harvey, the husband, shrewd business man, yet tenderly sympathetic with his wife's sorrow; Brooke Harvey, Philip's brother, who returns from France to an upset family; Madam Brooke, most striking of all, the sturdy grandmother, whose common-sense and humor are yet in touch with tragedy, form a household of vital and varied interest. Andrea Dove and her crazed father, Andrew, whose invention, olympium, is to strike flashes from another world, and Beatrice Haydon, whom Philip had loved, supply occult and romantic influences which prevent the story from becoming a mere ouija incident. The interview in the twentieth chapter between the indomitable Madam Brooke and Miss Bixby is one of the most striking expositions of the old attitude and the new—or the sane and the insane, if you prefer—towards the matter of communion with the dead. The lady of the automatic writing says:

"Don't you think . . . we're in honor bound to keep on and follow out the thing wherever it leads us?"

"No, I don't," said Madam Brooke. "That I'm sure of. You're only going to debase your energies and weaken your will, forever questioning, forever whining for sympathy and asking advice, setting up a higher tribunal 'over there,' as you call it, and lying down on what you think are higher intelligences than your own. No, my girl, you fight it out on this line. Make your decisions, meet your griefs, and toughen your will. That's what the whole business here is for—the mystery, the despair—to make a man of you and toughen your will."

Madam Brooke is a heroine worth while and you'll remember her after you have forgotten the young lovers, delightful as Andrea and Brooke may be, in their Miranda-and-Ferdinand romance.

"The Luzumiyat of Abul-Ala," by Ameen Rihani. James T. White and Co., New York. Price, $1.50.

THE author of these sayings, called "the Lucretius of Islam," was born in the year 973, in the obscure village of Ma'arrah, which is about eighteen hours' journey south of Aleppo. His sayings, as translated here, are rather similar in sentiment to those of Omar Khayyam—a "what's the use?" philosophy, which does not make an appeal to the business man or the practical housewife. The author is truthful as well as fanciful, as the following lines bear witness:

"Whence does the nettle get its bitter sting?
Whence do the honey bees their honey bring?
Whence our Companions, too—our Whence and Why?
O Soul, I do not know a single thing."

"The Cross-Bearers of the Saguenay," by the Very Reverend W. R. Harris, LL.D. Published by J. M. Dent and Sons, Limited, London and Toronto.

DEAN HARRIS, who celebrated the jubilee of his ordination to the priesthood in June at St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, is a writer with distinction of literary style and a width of experience which make his books both illuminating and graphic. Dean Harris is a traveller with the true love of adventure which gives him an insight into the motives of the pathfinder, as well as an understanding of the devout courage of the missionary. In the present volume, which is divided into three parts, we have Tadousac and the Franciscans, the Montagnais and Trail Breakers and Path-Finders, treated in historical and picturesque fashion. Any Canadian concerned with the records of our heroic past would find this volume of more than passing interest. The author has made a thorough study of his subject, but has a popular gift for selecting such phases as all readers will find arresting. One of the most interesting chapters is that dealing with the "Superstitions and Myths of the Montagnais," in which several naive and memorable legends are related; and the explanation of the origin of the "medicine man" is highly instructive. This quotation from Father Le Jeune after a brief experience with the Montagnais medicine man is noteworthy: "Most of them are deceivers and charlatans; however, I am inclined to think that some among them really have communication with the devil."

"The Voice of the Pack," by Edison Marshall. Published by the Ryerson Press, Toronto. Price, $1.90.

IF you wish to bestow on a lover of outdoors a Christmas box which will give him an excellent opinion of your "picking out" ability in book land, present him with "The Voice of the Pack." In fact, anyone may well enjoy this tale of the Oregon forest; but to the true woodlander it will prove a companion, indeed. The hero, Dan Failing, lives in Gitcheapolis—which is an Indian-Greek name for Big City. Dan has been told by the doctor that he has only six months to live—is what the West calls a "lunger." Suddenly, owing to the kindly suggestion of a squirrel, Dan feels a yearning for the life of the unspoiled woods, and, as he is the grandson of a famous frontiersman, Dan Failing I., he soon finds himself at home in the high regions of Southern Oregon. Old-time craft comes back to him and he shakes off weakness and disease, finding health and work and love in those far stretches of forest. There is a tale of primitive revenge, too, (reminding the reader of the "Virginian.") and Dan finally takes the life of his enemy in as fair a fight as the high hills would wish to see. It is a story of wild and even cruel adventure—and you have a horror of the wolves as you reach the end of the tale; but it is clean and bracing, a story which breathes hope and kinship with the free and silent places.

Experiences and Observations of an American Consular Officer During the Recent Mexican Revolutions, by Will B. Davis, M.D. Published by the Author at Chula Vista, California.

THIS book, which is mainly told in a series of letters, written by the author to his daughter, is an interesting and graphic account of the disturbances in that extremely unrestful country to the south of the United States. The troubles of the country are real enough, but the cause of much of it may be found in the concluding paragraph of the book:

"These middle and upper classes, however, in Mexico—and we fear that throughout Latin-American such has been too much the case—have never concerned themselves as they should have done, in trying to better the conditions of the poor peon element of their country. They do not appear to have ever seriously considered how awkward it must be to try to maintain a Democratic form of Government, with an illiterate population of eighty-five per cent."

All Out-Doors Invites your KODAK

CANADIAN KODAK CO., Limited
Toronto, Canada

"----the fiery eyes of the wolves gleamed

in the half-light through the tree-spaces."

Here's a thrilling tale—an Adventure story, Love story, Nature story. Read what Canadian Home Journal's book reviewer has to say of it in this issue.

SOME OTHER NEW ONES

POOR MAN'S ROCK

By Bertrand W. Sinclair. A stirring Canadian story centred in the salmon-canning industry in British Columbia.

RETURNED EMPTY

By Florence L. Barclay. The author of "The Rosary" has written an unusual novel 'round problems of reincarnation and spiritualism.

THE WHITE POPE

By S. R. Crockett. A new conception with all the charm of the Crockett books.

Your Bookseller Has These

The Ryerson Press
PUBLISHERS TORONTO

BIAS FILLED CORSETS

*The Extreme of Comfort
The Perfection of Style—*

To combine perfect comfort with easy grace and smartness, your corset must conform to the laws of anatomy.

BIAS FILLED CORSETS are scientifically correct, improving the figure while conserving the health. The delicate internal organs are not cramped or pressed out of place.

There is a model specially designed for every figure.

Illustration shows Style 1415, for ladies of full figure who demand a perfect flesh controller.

Write us NOW for the name and address of our representative in your vicinity. Useful hints on fitting and self-measurement Free upon request.

BIAS CORSETS LIMITED
41 BRITAIN STREET
TORONTO

The Waltham Ladies' Convertible Bracelet Watch. Can be worn in many different ways as Fashion may dictate. Priced from $37.00 upwards.

You gain in Prestige when you own a Waltham

To be well-dressed induces self-respect. It also commands the respect of others. In the same way one's prestige is increased by carrying a Waltham Watch.

The name "Waltham" itself possesses the prestige that comes from being the world's standard of watch value for more than sixty-five years.

And this name is more than a mere tradition. It signifies progress as well as long establishment.

Waltham was the world's first factory to produce complete watch movements. At Waltham to-day the specially-designed mechanical equipment and the large staff of skilled watchmakers combine to make every Waltham Watch a perfected piece of mechanism.

Carry a Waltham for time-accuracy and justifiable pride of possession.

WALTHAM

THE WORLD'S WATCH OVER TIME

WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY, LIMITED
MONTREAL

Makers and Distributors of Waltham Products
in Canada

Factories: Montreal, Canada; Waltham, U.S.A.

*Waltham Grandfather
Hall (clocks, Mantel and Lanther (all colors) Desk
Clocks for homes of refinement. Ask your jeweler.*

What Your Pen Tracks Tell

By Lady Van

Learn What Your Handwriting Discloses

HERE is always something new to be discovered—about yourself. Strange as it may seem, the way you make the words that you write to your friends, tell a tale that would surprise you if you could have it explained to you. Do you slant your "t" strokes up or down, before or behind or above the letter? Each way has its own tale to tell. Write to me, and let's figure it out. Just pretend I am an old friend and say what you would say to such a person in six lines or more. Then I will be confidential and tell you some things about yourself that you may or may not have known before. Here's looking for your letter.

MICKEY, Peterboro, Ont.—Cheer up lady, life is much what you make it, and your lane is bound to have a turn in it somewhere. You are not a very adaptable person, but you are artistic in your tastes and desires. A neat, and inclined to be methodical, person. You are diplomatic to a degree, can keep a still tongue and control it where other people's affairs are concerned. Are jolly, good-natured, easy to get along with, and have a clear brain under your hair-pins. Are kindly and have quick sympathies, are generous and liable to give of yourself freely, for your friends. Have a jolly good opinion of yourself, are skeptical of other people's views, and like to reason things out to a conclusive finish. Your emotions are quickly roused and you are sensitive to your surroundings. You can scratch back quickly when hurt, and do not hesitate to do it either. You should not always be taken seriously. Are domestic in tastes, but fickle in love affairs. Musical ability is shown, also some of a dramatic nature. Your lucky numbers are 10 and 34, the day is Monday, best months, February and September, flower, the daisy and gem the pearl.

OPERATOR, Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.—Isn't it nice when bits of humor are thrown into your work? It makes the rest easier. I am glad you are able to pick out the fun. You are a broad-minded person, but a procrastinating one; you so often prefer waiting to doing. You mean awfully well, but one cannot depend upon your promises, as ten to one you will put off the doing till too late. A rather uncommunicative person, and able to keep confidences, also your own counsel. Have excellent judgment and a well ordered mind, and in matters calling for circumspection, you may be relied upon. Are naturally a good manager, careful and conservative and have good business instincts. Are selfish and have too little regard for the feelings of others. You will at times resort to most anything in order to accomplish your purpose. Possess a good deal of ability. You poor dear, to have a birthday just when you do; hard luck isn't it? You have an ardent temperament, are intellectually ambitious and self-reliant. Your best months are March and November; the day is Saturday; flower, the holly, and gem, the turquoise. As you did not give me your name I cannot give you the lucky numbers.

L. H. H., Montreal, Quebec.—You lack individuality, and I fear your ideas are a bit limited. You love to imitate, and what you do you do well. Egotism and a goodly amount of conceit are shown. Are headstrong and opinionated, and liable to put a good deal of stress on matters of form and style. You love to feel your own importance and to have other people sense it too. Are easy-going and pleasure-loving, also kindly in your intentions. Lack energy and quickness. Would make a clerk or bookkeeper. Are methodical, painstaking and neat. Have indifferent judgment and your decisions cannot be relied upon. You do not tell all that you know, in fact it is a difficult matter to get you to be very communicative on any subject that is personal. You love to be appreciated and are always ready to play to the gallery. Your lucky day is Tuesday; best months, January and July; the numbers are 3 and 33; flower, the red carnation, and jewel, the topaz.

PATRICIA, Erin, Ont.—What a dear lady you were to write such a chatty letter to me. It was like a welcome breeze on a breathless day. You are quite right in all that you say. As for me—I just love taffy, don't you? As for you, well you are not a candid person, for all your pleasant talk. I should say you can put a bluff over most any day, and make one think black is sky-blue pink. A diplomatic person and always ready with an explanation, and allowing yourself plenty of scope in all your actions. Your emotions are on a sort of sliding scale, and you can never quite depend upon them yourself. Are sensitive and not above being jealous. At the same time you are charitable. There is plenty of romance in your nature and you love that which is original and new; you hold most unconventional ideas on many subjects, and if your neighbors know some of them—well! Are probably extravagant in your ideas, and always want what you have to be up to the minute. There is nothing lazy about you, for you are onto your "job" every minute. Are a natural worker and do everything with enthusiasm and energy. Your best months are February and November; the day is Wednesday; numbers, 3 and 21; flower, the sweet pea, and jewel, the sapphire.

G. G., Toronto, Ont.—Thank you for telling us just what you do like in the Journal, that always helps a lot. You are not a very observant person, but you are fussy over details. Are punctual, thrifty, careful of what belongs to you, prudent in all things and often so precise that you irritate those about you. There is a good deal of sentiment in your make up. Are energetic, zealous and a bit restless. Have plenty of ambitious ideas and keep wishing the future would hurry as you want to know what it is bringing to you. Are impatient, though trustworthy, and usually correct in your deductions. You like an argument and will follow one up. Are practical in ideas and do not jump at conclusions. You have little patience with deceit, and there is no affectation in your nature. Are not often understood, and your friends are not of the life-long variety. Are versatile, changeable, nervous and liable to extremes. Should be interested in literature and art. You probably like best to travel by water. Your lucky numbers are 2 and 26; the day is Friday; best months, April and August; flower, the rose, and gem, the pearl.

EVER-READY B., Allston, Ont.—There is impatience shown in your writing, and you do not wait patiently. Have a nasty temper, in that it flies off quickly and does not give the other fellow a chance to get ready for it. Are candid and outspoken, always ready to talk and a bit too ready to gossip. You take the most amazing people into your confidence, and you so often make ill-timed remarks. Are good-natured as a rule, but your emotions slip from one extreme to another very easily. Are a busy person and have little patience with idlers. Whatever you do is done with energy and enthusiasm, and your tastes turn to the practical affairs of life. A natural worker, you are happiest when your hands and brain are busy. Are a natural home-maker.

It is with regret that we announce the discontinuance of this department, as this month's column is the final contribution in the articles dealing with handwriting. The department has been a source of interest and gratification to many of our readers.

Ancient women asked their seers, and they said, "palm and olive oils"

Modern scientists give the same advice to women who consult them

Tell Me the Truth

About Beautiful Skins

THIS is the plea of millions. And it has been so for ages. Ancient women put the plea to seers. Their answer has been dug up lately, carved in hieroglyphics. It was, "Use Palm and Olive oils." And we know that ancient beauties followed their advice.

Go to a modern scientist and he will tell you this: Cultivate good health. Get plenty of exercise, fresh air and sleep. Use light massage to foster circulation. In cases of large pores, after washing, chill the skin with ice.

"But what soap," you ask, "what emollient shall I employ?"

He will say, "Cleanliness is all-important. Not surface cleanliness, but clean pores."

He will advise a gentle, penetrating soap. A perfect soap, made by scientific men. A soap whose basis is Palm and Olive oils.

Thus he will echo the advice which seers gave Cleopatra.

There's nothing new

There is almost nothing new today in ways to good complexions. There is nothing new in rain or sunshine either.

Keep the skin clean. Remove the dirt, dust, waste and oil. Clean out the pores. Do this with a soothing, penetrating soap. Do it with Palm and Olive oils combined.

Some of the finest soap chemists in the world supply the method in Palmolive Soap. And the best opinion is that science can never improve that method.

How popularity reduces price

Palmolive, if made in small quantities, would be a very expensive soap. The Palm Oil comes from Africa, the Olive Oil from Spain.

But this is a soap that every woman needs. Not merely to remedy a faulty skin, but to prevent it. Women of every age should use it every day. It forms the simple, natural way to healthy, radiant skin.

As a result, there are millions of women who daily enjoy its benefits. There is not another facial soap in the world which compares in popularity.

So the Palmolive factories work 24 hours a day to supply the demand. Ingredients are ordered in enormous quantities. This gigantic volume reduces cost.

Thus we are able to supply Palmolive at a very moderate price. It costs no more than ordinary toilet soaps.

Palmolive is sold by dealers everywhere.

Skin beauty is inexpensive, and the way is simple. Both the rich and poor can have it.

It is made by

The Palmolive Company, Milwaukee, U. S. A.

The Palmolive Company of Canada, Limited, Toronto, Ont.

PALMOLIVE

Copyright, Canada, 1920, by The Palmolive Company of Canada, Limited.

This Man Actually Allows His Wife to Do the Family Washing!

MAN-MADE logic justifies this—on the grounds of efficiency and comfort. But suppose some Monday morning all the husbands in Canada stayed home from office, shop, field and factory and did the family washing! Suppose they spent next washday, bent double over tubs of smelly water from morning till night. Suppose they did the rubbing, carrying, wringing and fussing in a steamy, unpleasant atmosphere, as their wives have to do each week. What then?

Would not their first thought be, "Is there no other way to accomplish this task?" It wouldn't take them long to investigate.

And when they did investigate, what would they find?

They would find, perhaps to their surprise, that the BlueBird Electric Clothes Washer has solved the Washing Problem ABSOLUTELY. They would find that the BlueBird washes the heaviest clothes CLEAN with no human effort whatsoever, in a fraction of the time, and yet will not injure the most delicate fabrics. They would also find that on grounds of strictest economy they should have a BlueBird Washer, because it lengthens the life of clothes, and thereby saves its cost over and over again.

Washing is one of the most necessary of household tasks—but it is also the most unpleasant. And not only is it unpleasant—it has ruined the nerves and shortened the lives of generations of women. When husbands come to realize what they are permitting their wives to do, week in and week out—THEN there will be a BlueBird Washer in every Canadian home.

Specifications of the Canadian-Made BlueBird Electric Clothes Washer:

CABINET—White, Grey trim; has table top, waist high; working parts enclosed; safety for children; attractive appearance; graceful design; enamel finish—easily kept clean.

TUB—Heavy copper, extra large rocking type, tinned inside and perfectly smooth.

ACTION—Oscillating principle—quickest, smoothest, no vibration, simple control—locks on centre when not in operation.

FRAME—Strongest, most heavily constructed frame—built like a bridge; mounted on four double wheel roller bearing casters, easy to move.

MECHANISM—Simplest design, few moving parts.

WRINGER—All metal, enamelled grey, rigid, cannot warp; adjustable; approved safety release; full 12 in. width—extra wide.

ROLLS—Finest quality—highest grade Sumatra rubber—made by Goodyear, Toronto.

DRAIN—Operated from top of washer.

MOTOR—Strong; dependable; easily cleaned; waterproof; ample power; specially designed and built for Canadian BlueBird by Canadian Westinghouse Co.

Leading Dealers Sell BlueBird—The BlueBird Electric Clothes Washer and Wringer will be sold by all leading Household Electric Appliance Shops, Furniture Dealers, Hardware Dealers, Electrical Shops, and at most Electric Light Companies' Showrooms, on a standard List Price. The BlueBird marks the store in which it is sold as the leading Household Appliance Dealer in every district.

It may be that your dealer has not as yet stocked BlueBird Washers. If he has, he will be glad to show and demonstrate them. If you find that he has not—write us for a copy of a booklet "Out of Bondage". It shows in a most interesting way how the washing problem is a problem no longer.

BlueBird Corporation, Limited, Brantford, Canada

Copyright, Canada, 1929.

The Canadian-Made

Blue Bird

ELECTRIC CLOTHES WASHER

Between Milady and Autumn Breezes Are These Smart Costumes

Jacket 9017
Skirt 8760
Embroidery 12561

Jacket 9039
Skirt 8914

9017—Ladies' Jacket. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Length at center-back 36 inches. No. 8760—Ladies' Two-piece Gathered Skirt. Designed for 24 to 40 waist. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. The suit in medium size requires 4⅞ yards 54-inch tricotine—3 yards 36-inch satin for lining jacket. The large patch pockets are elaborately embroidered in design 12561. From Paris comes the suggestion of longer jackets such as are illustrated on this page, and from Paris also comes the vogue for embroidery.

Jacket 9036
Skirt 8880

Jacket 9023
Skirt 8810

Coat 9026

Coat 9059

Scarf 8666

Cape and Muff
8663

Cape 9040

Short Wrap
9037

9039—Ladies' Jacket. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Length at center-back 37½ inches. No. 8914—Ladies' One-piece Gathered Skirt. Designed for 24 to 40 waist. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. The suit in medium size requires 5¾ yards 44-inch serge—3¾ yards 36-inch satin for lining jacket. To complete this smart suit pumps of soft glazed kid may be worn with spats of beige, brown, or gray cloth.

9036—Ladies' Long-waisted Jacket. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Length at center-back 37½ inches. No. 8880—Ladies' Three-piece Gathered Skirt. Designed for 24 to 38 waist. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. The suit in medium size requires 5½ yards 44-inch serge—3¾ yards 36-inch satin for lining jacket. The vogue of the lengthened waist-line has extended to the jackets, tho, as a rule, they are belted at normal.

(DESCRIPTION ON PAGE 54.)

New Suits and Frocks Lend Interest to Returning School Days

Boys' Coat
8677Boys' Suit
8694Boys' Coat
9042

8694—Boys' Suit. Designed for 2 to 6 years. Size 4 requires  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard 36-inch crêpe de Chine for blouse—1 yard 36-inch velvet for trousers. Cuter than ever grow the suits for small men and this model is quite festive in style. The blouse with its cunning short sleeves is shirred on the shoulders and trousers which are unbelted button onto the blouse in points front and back.

9042—Boys' Coat. Designed for 4 to 14 years. Size 8 requires  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard 54-inch wool mixture— $2\frac{1}{4}$  yards 36-inch silk serge for lining. Quite mannish in style is this boys' overcoat with raglan sleeves, notched collar, and large patch pockets. A decidedly convenient feature of the coat is the possibility of rolling the collar high, and closing the revers over, making it more comfortable for cold or rainy days.

9034—Girls' One-piece Box-plaited Dress. Designed for 6 to 14 years. Size 6 requires  $2\frac{3}{8}$  yards 44-inch serge— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard 40-inch white flannel— $2\frac{1}{4}$  yards braid for trimming. To avoid the necessity of sewing on a lot of snapper fasteners, this dress slips on over the head and is box-plaited front and back below the deep yoke.

8559—Girls' and Juniors' One-piece Slip-on Dress. Designed for 6 to 14 years. Size 10 requires  $2\frac{3}{8}$  yards 44-inch serge— $\frac{3}{8}$  yard 44-inch white flannel for collar and shield. Heavy silk embroidery in design 12444 forms an attractive border on this frock for the school girl. The style of this dress should appeal to busy mothers, as, slipping on over the head, the necessity for buttons and buttonholes is eliminated, with a consequent saving of time and work.

Girls' and Juniors'
Coat 7765Juniors' Middy
Dress 7674Girls' Dress
9034Girls' and Juniors
Dress 8559
Embroidery 12444

8677—Boys' Double-breasted Coat. Designed for 1 to 4 years. Size 4 requires  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard 54-inch broadcloth— $1\frac{1}{8}$  yard 36-inch sateen for lining. Quite snappy in style is this coat for the wee man, and when fastened up to the neck it is the cosiest thing imaginable. Broadcloth, cheviot, or the heavy wool mixtures may be selected for making it, and when the days get colder, a collar of fur may replace the one of self-material shown here. The closing may be accomplished with frogs, but if preferred bone buttons and buttonholes may be substituted.

9027—Girls' Double-breasted Coat. Designed for 6 to 14 years. Size 8 requires 2 yards 54-inch cheviot— $2\frac{1}{8}$  yards 36-inch satin for lining. This type of coat is decidedly useful and practical for the school girl, covering the frock, and fronts may be closed high to the neck for cold weather. On mild days the coat may be worn as illustrated with the collar flat and the fronts turned back.

Girls' Coat
9027Boys' Suit
8918

8526—Girls' and Juniors' One-piece Slip-on Dress. Designed for 6 to 14 years. Size 10 requires  $3\frac{3}{8}$  yards 36-inch velvet— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard 36-inch white satin for collar and shield. Trimming-bands on the skirt and flowing sleeves combine to give an air of style to this very delightful frock. If velvet seems a little elaborate for school wear, there are ever so many wool fabrics that form agreeable substitutes—such as for example, serge, wool poplin, tricotine, gabardine, plaid worsted, and velours. Linen, too, would work out interestingly in this model, for the many mothers who prefer to keep their little daughters in wash frocks all the year round.

7765—Girls' and Juniors' Double-breasted Coat. Designed for 8 to 17 years. Size 12 requires  $2\frac{5}{8}$  yards 54-inch polo cloth— $3\frac{1}{2}$  yards 36-inch taffeta for lining. Utility and style join hands in this good-looking coat of polo cloth. It is just the thing for school wear as well as for practical service. The collar being convertible may be rolled high to the neck and the fronts buttoned over.

7674—Juniors' Middy Dress. Designed for 12 to 17 years. Size 14 requires  $2\frac{1}{8}$  yards 44-inch serge for plaited skirt and collar— $2\frac{3}{8}$  yards 36-inch white drilling for blouse— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard 36-inch lining for underwaist to which the skirt is attached. Many schools prefer a uniform of this type for the pupils, and the entire dress may be of blue serge or it may, as illustrated here, combine a blouse of white wash fabric with a plaited skirt of blue serge. Blue and white linen also combine attractively, and the wash fabric is really more desirable for the collar as it will stand laundering better.

7740—Girls' and Juniors' Dress. Designed for 6 to 16 years. Size 14 requires  $3\frac{1}{4}$  yards 44-inch serge— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard 40-inch white flannel for collar—4 yards braid for trimming. This is another good type of dress for school girls simple and yet smart. The back of waist and skirt are cut in one while the front and side of the skirt are attached to the waist. Turn-back cuffs finish the sleeves and the sailor collar of white flannel is trimmed with bands of braid.

8918—Boys' Suit. Designed for 6 to 14 years. Size 10 requires  $2\frac{1}{4}$  yards 54-inch wool mixture— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard 36-inch lining for waist bands and trouser pockets. Growing boys always look well in suits of this sort with a belted jacket fastening in single-breasted style and finished with a notched collar. Below the belt are large patch pockets and the knickerbocker trousers may close in front or at the sides.

(DESCRIPTION ON PAGE 54.)

Chic Frocks That Have No Need to Hide Beneath a Top Coat

8926—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. No. 8364—Ladies' Skirt. Designed for 24 to 32 waist. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard. The costume in medium size requires  $7\frac{1}{8}$  yards 36-inch check silk— $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard embroidered organdy banding for collar— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard 36-inch henna-color satin for piping—2 yards 36-inch lining for underbody and gores. The lines are slim, occasionally a silken frock indulges in a short tunic or a bit of drapery which gives a suggestion of flare. A charming feature of this frock is the bodice with draped girdle cut in one with the front panel and finishing at the back with a large bow. A collar of embroidered organdy outlines the square neck, and a novel touch is given the sleeves by the deep points which form a cuff effect. The blouse closes in front under the panel. Tho the skirt looks elaborate it is really not difficult to make. The lower part of the skirt is cut in one with the front drapery which is drawn up to the girdle in front, and at the sides and back there is a short tunic finished with a deep trimming-band piped at the top with contrasting satin.

8960—Ladies' Long-waisted Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. No. 8623—Ladies' Tunic Skirt. Designed for 24 to 34 waist. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard. The costume in medium size requires  $6\frac{1}{2}$  yards 36-inch terra cotta satin— $\frac{3}{4}$  yard 36-inch white satin for collar and trimming on the sleeves— $2\frac{1}{2}$  yards narrow black velvet ribbon. Interesting details of this good-looking afternoon frock are the draped tunic skirt elaborately braided in design 12425, and the surplice bodice which closes very much to the side and shows the fashionable slightly low waist-line. The bodice forms its own girdle but over this is drawn a narrow velvet ribbon tied at the side in loops and long ends. A shawl collar of the terra cotta satin overlaid with a narrow collar of white satin outlines the surplice closing, and the short sleeves show the wide variety of the mode which sanctions every length.

9004—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Width at lower edge of foundation skirt about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard. Width of outer skirt about  $1\frac{3}{4}$  yard. The costume in medium size requires  $5\frac{1}{2}$  yards 40-inch white taffeta—13 yards black velvet ribbon for trimming— $3\frac{3}{8}$  yards 36-inch lining for underbody and foundation gores. Paris accords renewed favor to the Turkish or harem skirt which is gathered in at the bottom to a narrow foundation and is looped under and tacked to this foundation. Over the front-closing blouse is arranged a panel which extends below the girdle while the back panel ends at the waist-line, both fastening together on the left shoulder. Rows of ribbon form an odd trimming at the side, and ribbon also forms the narrow girdle.

Blouse 8926
Skirt 8364

Blouse 8960
Skirt 8623
Braiding 12425

SHOES have thrown most of their conservatism behind them. They are constantly developing new details, and buckles, bows, sandal-straps, and cutwork designs, instead of being considered as bits of frivolity to be regarded with suspicion, are now essential requisites to smart foot-wear.

Dress 9004

Dress 9047
Embroidery 12597

Dress 9053

9047—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. Size 36 requires  $3\frac{3}{4}$  yards 40-inch Georgette crepe— $3\frac{1}{8}$  yards 36-inch black satin for gores and underbody. For the Autumn street frock the silhouette is slender and many of the new models indulge in a redingote effect. When two fabrics are combined as in this case the effect is much more charming and added style is given by the circular rings of heavy embroidery which may be carried out in design 12597, in rope silk or beads. While the entire color scheme may be monotone, there is a certain snap given by beads in contrasting color as one may see by glancing at the illustration.

(DESCRIPTION ON PAGE 54.)

Smart Frocks and Blouses for Street Wear

9032—Ladies' Long-waisted Dress. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. Size 36 requires 3 yards 54-inch white broadcloth. The vogue of the long waist-line seems to be increasing and it is particularly popular for tailored frocks of this type. This model slips on over the head and the skirt is enriched with the very fashionable eyelet embroidery, in design 12593.

9055—Ladies' One-piece Dress. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{3}{8}$  yard. Size 36 requires  $2\frac{1}{8}$  yards 54-inch serge— $3\frac{1}{2}$  yards 36-inch satin— $\frac{1}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody. A beguiling afternoon frock is fashioned of such nice things as serge, satin, and eyelet embroidery. The three ingredients combine most alluringly. On a foundation of satin is dropped the overblouse of serge forming panels front and back below the narrow string girdle. The panels are embroidered in eyelet motifs in design 12594.

Three Patterns Free with a Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home Journal.

Dress 8427
Embroidery 12595

Dress 9032
Embroidery 12593

8427—Ladies' One-piece Dress. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{3}{8}$  yard. Size 36 requires 4 yards 44-inch serge— $\frac{1}{4}$  yard 36-inch satin for shawl collar— $\frac{1}{4}$  yard 40-inch Georgette crêpe. The Autumn mode advances a new whim, the use of large eyelets in novel shapes to form huge motifs of embroidery. On this one-piece straight-line frock of serge the eyelets are worked into a scroll effect in design 12595.

Dress 9050

Dress 8758

9057—Ladies' One-piece Dress. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. Size 36 requires 3 yards 54-inch brown tricotine— $\frac{3}{8}$  yard 40-inch Roman-striped tricotine— $\frac{3}{8}$  yard fringe— $\frac{5}{8}$  yard 40-inch organdy for vest— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard plaiting—1 yard narrow ribbon. All ready for the street is this frock cut in one from neck to lower edge and girdled attractively in a fringed Roman-striped sash.

(DESCRIPTION ON PAGE 54.)

Overblouse 8986
Lining 12595

Blouse 9044
Beading 12596

Dress 9055
Embroidery 12594

Dress 9057

Blouse 9033
Beading 12469

Blouse 9031
Beading 12545

8986—Ladies' One-piece Long-waisted Overblouse. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Size 36 requires  $1\frac{3}{8}$  yard 36-inch satin. A most intriguing affair is this overblouse of satin wrinkled around the waist-line to form a girdle effect.

12508, and cunning little patch pockets to give smartness. Collarless neck and short sleeves are added details of style, the satin of the overblouse may match the skirt with which it contrasts.

A Fall model from Augustine et Andre, Paris, made of tete-de-negre taffeta, veiled with tulle and trimmed with ospreys.

WHAT is there about that subtle thing called Fashion, that commands the interest of every normal woman, whether she live in the Metropolis or the remotest prairie home?

Why is it that every woman, no matter how little attention she may pay to her attire, resents being called old-fashioned?

Why should the imputation carry reproach with it?

This is a formidable trio of questions that would take pages to answer, so we shall leave them with you to think about, and urge our pen to hasten on and write of other things such as fur and cloth wraps and millinery, of which there is much to tell. Luxury taxes may come and go, but luxury goes on forever—so it seems. Never have we seen such miracles in furs, as the wraps to be found this season in the exclusive fur shops, many of which never see the light of day, save when the customer is one of distinction and a plump bank account. The sculptor's chisel or the painter's brush could scarcely perform greater works of art than the magic of the furrier's needle, as one after another he sews together tiny bits of fur, matching and placing each where it belongs on the pattern, so that when the wrap or coat is complete, there is not a single misplaced piece.

When Milady of distinction and the plump bank account comes to the shop, she will be shown a voluminous fur wrap that completely envelops her so that you would never guess she had arms, and the ingenuity that devises these wraps belongs to no commonplace designer. Unless it is a cape, pure and simple without disguise, there will be openings of some kind for her arms. Possibly they will be cuffed in lieu of sleeves, but

The new fabric furs so closely resemble real furs that they might easily be taken for next-of-kin. This wrap is made of a fur fabric called flying squirrel.

Millinery and Wraps Luxurious and Becoming

By CHARLOTTE M. STOREY

Vel-de-cygne, in a rich shade of brown, fashioned like the illustration, was the designer's idea of a garment de luxe.

not necessarily, for, behold, as Milady's elbows rest in the winged sides of her wrap, her hands are tucked in snugly behind the revers of her shawl collar. For such a wrap as this, she has her choice of Hudson seal, real seal, mole, mink, squirrel, broadtail, and for the voluminous collar, any contrasting fur of which her discriminating taste may approve. Beaver and Alaska sable are frequently chosen. Ermine, once sacred to royalty, is used in many a cape, and the lining is worthy of the exterior, no matter what the fur or style of the wrap. A utility lining there is of course, but veiling it one finds silk lace with silver embroidery, pleated Georgette crepe or chiffon; or, the lining is heavily embroidered or as gorgeous with gold braid as a staff officer's uniform in days of old.

The short fur coats are as captivating as the wraps, and more practical for general wearing. The designer has the soul of an adventurer and doesn't hesitate to use any fur that his skill can fashion into shape, be it Hudson seal, mole, squirrel, Australian opossum, raccoon, nutria, even Alaska sable, of which latter fur we saw a model of exceeding beauty. Just how it is made, no mere fashion writer can explain but it looks as if strips of fur about three inches wide were laid round and round on the pattern till it was covered, and then topped with a huge fur collar.

This evening wrap enjoys the distinction of being fashioned out of Roshanara crepe, with a gorgeous lining of printed pussywillow, supplemented by a body lining of tan and white rabbit, and collar and cuffs of Canadian beaver.

CLOTH coats are scarcely less interesting and attractive. They too are made in wrap style, although as we said last month, Canadian women do not take as kindly to wraps as to sleeved coats. However, rumor hath it that Fashion is overcoming prejudice, and that wraps will be the thing this winter. A fashion feature that seems to be dominating all others, is the cape back, which hangs loosely across the shoulders and is caught in with the dolman shoulder seams, or is folded under across the back, like a blouse and transformed into wings on the sides concealing coat sleeves. There are many interpretations of the season's wrap, made of as many beautiful cloths, of which we wrote in detail last month. Brown and kindred shades, with some dark green and a lighter color generally referred to as Chinese green, and dark blue are elected for day time wear, with rust, peach, turquoise blue, pheasant red and other fancy shades for evening cloaks of soft woollen materials, chiffon velvet, or heavy silk.

The surface of the garment is the only limit to the embroidery that some designers recognize. It is not enough for him that the fabrics are a trimming in themselves; the fashion of the day calls for the maximum of embellishment. But, after all, the crowning glory of a wrap—also a coat—is its collar, which is big and generous and made of costly fur, the most irresistible being beaver—Canadian beaver, as they say in Paris when they want to specify the ultra grade.

Having paid such high tribute to the w is hardly fair to leave the impression that good, sensible, utility coats—have no place in the universe of Fashion. They are still mer the wardrobe and in good standing. Why by nature more expensive and less practical purposes of business and social a and whether enhanced by a cape back on the orthodox loose lines with belt, be sure of finding them equipped with a ous collar of self material or fur, and to-d browsing around in the precincts of t. section in a smart shop, we saw a coat collar of cross fox which blended beautifully with the shade of the coat which was an indefinite tan. And apropos of coats, there is a type, which once possessed, one will never voluntarily be without again, and that is the English storm-coat, called English by right, for it originated in England, and many are still imported from the "tight little Island," but domestic manufacturers are making good imitations of them. These coats are endowed with the elixir of style; they never seem to go out of fashion; there is unlimited service in them; they are so well made and so unassuming that one always feels well dressed in one of them, and they carry an air with them, that just to possess one, gives a feeling of affluence.

THERE are seasons when milliners seem to lapse. They seem to forget their high and lofty calling, which is to provide us with head-wear that will soften the furrows that time plows,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 59.)

CORRECT LINES

The foundation of good dress, like the foundation of good art, is an understanding of proportions and grace of line. In the figure of every woman lie the possibilities of beauty, yet so elusive that an ill-chosen corset may distort it to unattractiveness.

The most beautiful line of a woman's figure is the graceful curve from the armpit to the ankle. The beauty of this line determines the effectiveness of all your clothes.

A recognized authority on women's dress has said that if you would have an infallible guide to determine what is becoming, you must master the correct line of the individual figure.

Study yourself; conserve the flattering lines of your figure and subdue the inartistic details. Shun the artificial in corsetry. The "tight waist" or the appearance of obvious corsetry is conspicuously unsmart; if there is a bit more indication of waistline in some of the accepted Autumn and Winter modes, it is gained by the skill of the dressmaker who fashions the clothes to follow more closely the lines of the figure so the accent at the waist becomes largely a matter of optical illusion.

As more and more women have come to a knowledge of those things that are the fundamentals of all good dressing, the demand for Gossard Front Lacing Corsets has grown amazingly. There is not a type of figure, however unusual or difficult to fit, but can be successfully corseted in these original front lacing corsets, and in them women of every type have found complete expression of their ideas of becomingness and good taste.

*The Canadian H. W. Gossard Co., Limited
366-378 West Adelaide Street, Toronto*

GOSSARD Front Lacing CORSETS

are sold conditional upon your complete satisfaction. At this time, when generally unsatisfactory buying conditions make the thoughtful purchaser hesitant, it is reassuring to know that Gossards are still moderately priced, while the high standard of Gossard manufacture has been so consistently maintained that you may buy every Gossard Corset with the assurance that it is worth every cent you pay for it—worth it in style; worth it in the comfort of its healthful support; worth it in a wearing service that alone justifies its cost.

You will find Gossards at those stores that merit your confidence by offering only merchandise of unquestionably superior quality.

To the comfortable persuasion of a Gossard, the prominent hips, the fleshy back, or the too-short waistline of maturity give way to the graceful proportions of youth.

Sheets and Pillow Cases, Sheetings and Pillow Cottons

are the world's standard of quality, durability and sound value for the money—and have been so accepted for more than a century.

You can get Horrockses' Sheets and Pillow Cases in all standard sizes; and Horrockses' Sheetings and Pillow Cottons in all weights and widths.

Look for the name "HORROCKSES" on the selvage.

For name of nearest store carrying HORROCKSES' Cottons, Longcloths, Nainsooks, etc., write

JOHN E. RITCHIE, Canadian Agent, Made by HORROCKSES, CREWDSON & CO.,
591 St. Catherine Street West. Limited
Montreal. Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers
Manchester, England. 37

Dye it Right!

Don't Risk Your Material in a Poor Dye

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can diamond-dye a new, rich, fadeless color into worn, shabby dresses, blouses, stockings, sweaters, draperies, coverings, everything, whether wool, silk, linen, cotton or mixed goods.

Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect results are guaranteed even if you have never dyed before. Druggist has "Diamond Dyes" Color Card.

Diamond Dyes

16 Rich, Fadeless Colors.

For HEADACHES

"Vaseline" Mentholated Jelly provides the surest relief for nervous or sick headaches. Its effect is to cool and relax the throbbing forehead and temples, bringing instant comfort. Relieves neuralgia and sore throat, too.

CHESEBROUGH MANUFACTURING CO
(Consolidated)

1880 Chabot Ave.

Montreal

Sore Throat

Neuralgia

Other "Vaseline" home remedies

"Vaseline" Capsicum for colds

"Vaseline" Camphor Ice for chapped skin

"Vaseline" Carbollated for cuts and burns

Keep a tube always convenient in your medicine cabinet.

The October Patterns and Their Prices

8086—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Size 36 requires 2 yards 36-inch dimity. The vogue of high collars for practical blouses is assured and this is distinctly smart, buttoning at the center-front right up to the top of the standing collar.

8039—Ladies' Overblouse. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Size 36 requires 1 1/4 yard 36-inch taffeta—1/2 yard white satin for turnback cuffs and piping. The vogue of the short overblouses continues and this model, though simple, is given style by the good-looking embroidery on the front accentuating the girdle effect.

8457—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Size 36 requires 1 1/4 yard 36-inch striped tub silk—1/2 yard 36-inch white taffeta for collar and cuffs. You see in this model the trend of the collar which rises high at the back and is made of contrasting silk. It is distinctly chic.

8575—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Size 36 requires 2 1/4 yards 40-inch Georgette crepe. No. 8914—Ladies' One-Piece Slightly gathered Skirt. Designed for 24 to 40 waist. Width at lower edge about 1 1/2 yard. Size 26 requires 2 1/2 yards 44-inch check worsted.

9020—Ladies' Two-piece Skirt. Designed for 24 to 34 waist. Width at lower edge about 1 1/2 yard. Size 26 requires 2 1/2 yards 44-inch serge.

8317—Ladies' One-piece Gathered Skirt. Designed for 24 to 38 waist. Width at lower edge about 1 1/2 yard. Size 26 requires 2 1/2 yards 44-inch flannel.

8760—Ladies' Two-piece Gathered Skirt. Designed for 24 to 40 waist. Width at lower edge about 1 1/2 yard. Size 26 requires 2 1/2 yards 54-inch tweed. Double inserted pockets on each side and a belt of self-material buttoned in front are the only notes of trimming on this skirt.

8740—Ladies' One-piece Slip-on Tunic Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Size 36 requires 2 1/2 yards 36-inch silk serge. The charm of embroidery is emphasized in this model on each pocket appliquéd in design 12564.

9023—Ladies' Single-breasted Jacket. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Length at center-back 36 inches. No. 8810—Ladies' Two-piece Skirt. Designed for 24 to 36 waist. Width at lower edge about 1 1/2 yard. The suit in medium size requires 4 3/4 yards 54-inch duvetyn—3 3/4 yards 36-inch satin for lining jacket.

9026—Ladies' Coat. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Length at center-back 45 inches. Size 36 requires 3 5/8 yards 54-inch cheviot—4 3/4 yards 36-inch printed silk for lining. Raglan sleeves and convertible collar make this coat the most up-to-date model.

9059—Ladies' Coat with Cape. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Length at center-back 47 1/2 inches. Size 36 requires 3 3/4 yards 54-inch Bolivia cloth—5 1/4 yards 36-inch satin for lining.

8663—Ladies' and Misses' Scarf. Designed for one size, requiring for the suit 1 1/2 yards 54-inch seal plush—1 1/4 yard 36-inch satin for lining.

8663—Ladies' and Misses' Cape and Muff. Designed for one size, requiring 3/4 yard 54-inch plush—1/2 yard 54-inch mole plush—2 yards 36-inch satin for lining.

9040—Ladies' and Misses' Cape. Designed for small, medium, and large. Small size requires 1 1/2 yard 54-inch Persian lamb cloth—1 1/4 yard 36-inch satin brocade for lining. The stole which crosses in surplice effect in front extends round to form a high standing collar in back to which the cape is gathered.

9037—Ladies' and Misses' Short Wrap. Designed for small, medium, and large. Small size requires 1 1/2 yard 36-inch velvet—1 yard 54-inch fur cloth for trimming—3 1/2 yards 36-inch satin for lining.

9053—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Width at lower edge about 1 1/2 yard. Size 36 requires 5 3/4 yards 36-inch copper-color velvet—1 1/2 yard flet lace—1/2 yard 36-inch lining for underbody. The surplice bodice drawn around to form its own girdle, kimono sleeves with wide flare cuffs, and a gathered skirt trimmed with bands in graduated depth are combined to make a most charming frock for Autumn afternoon wearing.

9050—Ladies' One-piece Dress. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Width at lower edge about 1 1/2 yard. Size 36 requires 3 3/4 yards 44-inch plaid worsted.

8758—Ladies' One-piece Dress. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Width at lower edge about 1 1/2 yard. Size 36 requires 3 yards 54-inch Poiré twill—3/4 yard 36-inch white satin for collar.

9014—Ladies' Kimono Blouse. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Size 36 requires 1 1/2 yard 40-inch Georgette crêpe. Fabrics may come and fabrics may go but nothing seems to displace Georgette crêpe for blouses. Here is a charming model with a large collar rippling in soft fullness and beaded in design 12506.

9033—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Size 36 requires 2 3/4 yards 40-inch Georgette crêpe. At the shoulder seams trimming pieces start outlining the panel-like bands and crossing at the waistline to form a girdle. A touch of smartness is given by the beading in design 12469.

9031—Ladies' One-piece Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Size 36 requires 2 3/4 yards 36-inch crêpe de Chine. To relieve the simplicity of this blouse beaded motifs are applied on the front in design 12545.

PRICES OF PATTERNS.

- Dress 8427, 25 cents.
- Embroidery 12595, blue or yellow, 75 cents.
- Dress 9032, 35 cents.
- Embroidery 12593, blue or yellow, 75 cents.
- Dress 9050, 35 cents.
- Dress 8758, 35 cents.
- Dress 9055, 35 cents.
- Embroidery 12594, blue or yellow, 40 cents.
- Dress 9057, 35 cents.
- Overblouse 8886, 30 cents.
- Beading 12508, blue or yellow, 20 cents.
- Blouse 9044, 30 cents.
- Beading 12506, blue or yellow, 20 cents.
- Blouse 9033, 25 cents.
- Beading 12469, blue or yellow, 20 cents.
- Blouse 9031, 30 cents.
- Beading 12545, blue or yellow, 25 cents.
- Coat 8677, 25 cents.
- Suit 8694, 20 cents.
- Coat 9042, 25 cents.
- Dress 9034, 25 cents.
- Dress 8559, 20 cents.
- Embroidery 12444, blue or yellow, 20 cents.
- Coat 9027, 25 cents.
- Dress 8526, 20 cents.
- Coat 7765, 20 cents.
- Dress 7674, 20 cents.
- Dress 7740, 20 cents.
- Suit 8918, 30 cents.
- Blouse 8926, 30 cents.
- Skirt 8364, 25 cents.
- Blouse 8960, 30 cents.
- Skirt 8623, 25 cents.
- Braiding 12425, blue or yellow, 50 cents.
- Dress 9004, 35 cents.
- Dress 9047, 35 cents.
- Embroidery 12597, blue or yellow, 50 cents.
- Dress 9053, 35 cents.
- Jacket 9017, 35 cents.
- Skirt 8760, 20 cents.
- Embroidery 12561, blue or yellow, 20 cents.
- Jacket 9039, 35 cents.
- Skirt 8914, 25 cents.
- Jacket 9036, 35 cents.
- Skirt 8880, 25 cents.
- Jacket 9023, 35 cents.
- Skirt 8810, 25 cents.
- Scarf 8666, 25 cents.
- Cape and Muff 8663, 25 cents.
- Coat 9026, 35 cents.
- Coat 9059, 35 cents.
- Cape 9040, 30 cents.
- Short Wrap 9037, 30 cents.
- Blouse 8613, 20 cents.
- Bodice Skirt 8964, 30 cents.
- Embroidery 12559, blue or yellow, 20 cents.
- Overblouse 8974, 25 cents.
- Embroidery 12510, blue or yellow, 20 cents.
- Blouse 7937, 20 cents.
- Overblouse 8919, 25 cents.
- Blouse 8086, 20 cents.
- Overblouse 8939, 25 cents.
- Beading 12570, blue or yellow, 30 cents.
- Blouse 8457, 20 cents.
- Blouse 8575, 20 cents.
- Skirt 8914, 25 cents.
- Skirt 9020, 25 cents.
- Skirt 8317, 25 cents.
- Skirt 8760, 20 cents.
- Applique 12564, blue or yellow, 25 cents.
- Tunic Blouse 8740, 30 cents.

Appetizing Dishes From Leftovers

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20.)

of the kind to hold them in place. Have the croquettes entirely covered with fat, and fry until a golden brown color. Drain on kitchen paper, and serve hot, garnished with parsley.

Left Over Meat With Rice.—Trim one pound of cooked meat, removing all skin, gristle, and discolored parts. Chop it with a knife or put it through a food chopper. Brown one tablespoonful of drippings in a saucepan, stir in one tablespoonful of flour and brown that also, pour in one cupful of good stock and stir until boiling, add salt, pepper and paprika to taste and allow it to heat slowly at the side of the fire for twenty minutes. Prepare a border of hot boiled rice, pour the meat into the centre, garnish with thin strips of pimento and serve hot. One tablespoonful of chopped onion may be added to the meat if desired. Any good brown sauce may be used for moistening the meat, or if white meat, such as rabbit, veal, or chicken, is being used, a white sauce is to be preferred, and two tablespoonfuls of chopped cooked ham would then be an improvement. A border of mashed potatoes, macaroni or spaghetti may be used instead of the rice, and poached eggs are sometimes served on the top of the meat.

Cold Meat in Batter.—Trim one-half pound of cooked cold meat, chop and season with salt, pepper and chopped parsley. Grease a shallow baking tin and spread the meat mixture on the bottom. To make the batter, sift one cupful of flour into a bowl, drop one egg into the centre of the flour. Mix some of the flour gradually into it with a wooden spoon, do the same with another egg, then add one cupful of milk by degrees. Beat the batter well until it is perfectly smooth and full of air bubbles, then add another cupful of milk and mix it in. Allow to stand in a cool place for thirty minutes, add one-fourth teaspoonful of salt and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Strain it over the meat, mix lightly and bake in a hot oven, until well risen and nicely browned, about thirty minutes. When ready, cut into convenient sized pieces and serve hot.

Somerset Hash.—Cut off the tops of large, well baked potatoes, and carefully scoop out the potato with a hot spoon. Leave a lining of potato next the skin. Mix well chopped cooked lamb or meat with chopped green peppers, and heat in a white sauce made with cream. Fill the cavities with this mixture, put on the tops and reheat in the oven before serving. If desired, these potato cases may have served in them creamed codfish and potatoes, thus making a codfish hash, chicken, etc.

Cold Meat Dormers.—Mix one cupful of well cooked rice with two tablespoonfuls of chopped suet, one teaspoonful of chopped parsley, one teaspoonful of powdered herbs, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Bind all together with the yolk of one egg, and a little stock or sauce, if necessary. Form the mixture into small sausage shaped pieces, using a little dry flour, and then egg, and bread-crumbs them. Fry the dormers in a frying pan with a small quantity of hot drippings, and cook them thoroughly on account of the suet. Drain well and serve with hot tomato sauce.

The Land of P'raps

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26.)

Splash! The little If was in trouble again. He had jumped over the wall right into a tub of water, in which several very thin word-people were kicking about.

Pedder Naherrin fished the If out of the tub to the great relief of the word-people, who Diddy now saw were the S-W-I-M-S.

"Why are they in a tub, and not in the lake or river?" asked Diddy.

Dedder Naherrin laughed, "Oh, that's because in October the water there gets too cold for words."

At the top of the next hill the road-way ran through the woods again. The path was carpeted with leaves, many of the branches were bare, and every squirrel was busy filling his store-house. The nights were cool; there was a tingle in the air that told Diddy Jack Frost had been near, though he had not seen the snappy fellow.

The October highway was near an end, and when the travellers were near enough to see the end of the October pathway, but no further, a strange grey curtain, a letter-curtain, a November C-L-O-U-D drifted down, just shutting out the November road from the travellers.

The cloud was soft and grey, and as Diddy and his friends neared it, from behind its curtain a clear sweet voice was singing:

November days, with dun clouds flying,
Of lashing sleet, and driving rain,
The storm-threshed, leafless branches crying,
Lament for summer lost again.

November days, sun of the morning,
Smiles on a gem-world, velvet-white,
A royal jewelled robe adorning,
Spun by the Frost King in the night.

Grey days and gold days of November,
To each and all the promise lend,
Beyond the gateway to December,
Lies Christmastide, and journey's end.

Through the Looking Glass

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31.)

is a preparation for the darkening of these which when moistened with water and applied with a tiny eye-lash brush, darkens the brows and lashes most effectively and at the same time does not give too artificial an appearance. The care to be observed here, however, lies in the importance of obtaining the correct shade of coloring. If you are a blonde, light brown is your shade. If of a medium fair complexion, dark brown. If a brunette, black coloring must be employed.

Mr. Hoppe, I expect, in his selection of the most beautiful women in the world will only consider beauty that is a natural gift. As we have not all been blessed with the favor of the good fairies who bestow upon certain mortals loveliness at birth, it is our right and our duty to make ourselves as ornamental in this world-of-too-much-greyness as our intelligence permits. But remember, we do need all our intelligence if we desire artistic results!

CORRESPONDENCE.

MILDRED G.—At sweet sixteen: it should be easy to look your best, dear girl. Fortunately there is a remedy for those disturbing pests, and rather than have your sunny sky darkened by the tiny cloud of a faulty complexion I will tell you about it without delay. The treatment you have tried may be too harsh for your skin and the cream to which I refer has been tried satisfactorily in many cases. Here's hoping it may be just what you require to restore that rose leaf skin which is the just right of any maid in her 'teens.

CONFIDENTIAL.—It has never been suggested to me that moles were neglected blackheads. I always consider them to be an affliction in a class all by themselves. Unless you find them very disfiguring, my advice would be to leave them alone. In any case they should be carefully dealt with. Consult some reliable specialist.

60 Dishes Like That

At the cost of three chops

The large package of Quaker Oats serves 60 dishes. And it costs about the price of three chops, or nine eggs, or one fish.

Each dish of Quaker Oats supplies supreme nutrition. It is almost the ideal food in balance and completeness. As vim-food and food for growth, nothing grows to match it.

Why pay ten times as much, or more, to serve a lesser food for breakfast, when oats are so delicious?

Compare calory values

Foods are measured by calories, the energy unit. The large package Quaker Oats contains 6,221 calories.

Note the table at side. See how much it takes of other good foods to equal 6,221 calories.

It takes 60 pounds of assorted vegetables to equal in calory value a package of Quaker Oats.

1 Package Quaker Oats in calory value equals

|             |                     |
|-------------|---------------------|
| About ..... | 89 eggs             |
| Or .....    | 9 quarts milk       |
| Or .....    | 17 lbs. mackerel    |
| Or .....    | 7 lbs. round steak  |
| Or .....    | 9 lbs. veal cutlets |
| Or .....    | 21 lbs. potatoes    |
| Or .....    | 24 lbs. bananas     |

Compare the Costs

Cost Per 1,000 Calories

|                     |            |
|---------------------|------------|
| Quaker Oats .....   | 6½c        |
| Average meats ..... | 45c        |
| Average fish .....  | 50c        |
| Hen's eggs .....    | 60c        |
| Vegetables .....    | 11c to 75c |

Compare the cost per 1,000 calories. See table at side, based on prices at this writing.

Note that meat, egg and fish breakfasts cost 8 or 9 times a breakfast of Quaker Oats. And none of them are such balanced foods, none so good for children.

This argues strongly for Quaker Oats breakfasts. Serve the costlier foods at other meals. Save on your breakfasts—perhaps 35c—by serving these delicious and nutritious Quaker Oats.

Quaker Oats

The Food of Foods at its Best

This brand is flaked from queen grains only—just the rich, plump, flavory oats. We get but ten pounds from a bushel.

The flavor makes the oat dish doubly inviting, and it costs you no extra price.

Costs 14 times a dish of Quaker Oats

Costs 12 times a dish of Quaker Oats

Packed in sealed round packages with removable cover.

But That's Another Story

An Ontario teacher, who had given the class a composition to write on "Making Maple Sugar" was rather surprised to find this, as the opening sentence of the first attempt: "When this happy season comes, the whole family arise and boil early."

A Hamilton citizen has a small son who is extremely lazy, an infirmity, which is said to be inherited from anyone but his father. One evening the father arrived home to find that Bobbie had fallen into disgrace and had absolutely refused to do a certain piece of work. Whereupon, the father proceeded to give Bobbie a severe lesson in the art of application. Some hours afterwards, the erring boy was lectured on the subject and the father repeated that well-worn illustration: "Take a lesson from the postage stamp, my son. It sticks to

A nervous neighbor returned from his first driving lesson boasting of his easy mastery of the new car. To please him several of his family consented to ride with him, and things went well until they reached a good country road, when a car coming up behind them honked its horn. The startled driver jerked his wheel to the right, running down a steep bank, then to the left, heading into a fence, and to the right again, luckily bringing up in the road. "Dad, what in thunder are you trying to do?" demanded his breathless son. "Why, son," replied the new driver calmly, "I was just practicing to turn out for teams."

Aunt Mary was very strict—too strict for Eric and his little sister, who were fed up with staying with her. She certainly tried her best to

EXTENUATION

"Any lunatic could do it."

"I don't know so much; you've got to be pretty far gone to do that."—The Tatler.

one thing until it gets there." "Yes, father," said the sorrowful youth; "but it has to be licked first."

The late Principal Grant was known to be eminently successful in raising funds for carrying on the work of Queen's University, and a story is told in Kingston of how he once went to Sir David Macpherson for assistance in some extension of the college. Just as Principal Grant was explaining the special need, Sir John Macdonald appeared on the scene. "What do you think?" said Sir David jocularly, "here is Grant again, and the last time I gave him a subscription he said it would do for all time." "Well," replied Sir John, "then the best thing you can do is to give something for eternity." Sir David's cheque was forthcoming, but the true words spoken in jest furnished Principal Grant more than once with an eloquent text.

In the bad old years before the war, there was a summer hotel in Muskoka near which was a small church that was sometimes used as a dormitory in cases of emergency. One night a large party of excursionists came up and several Toronto men were consigned to the church for their sleeping-quarters. This message reached the clerk shortly before eleven o'clock: "Kindly rush a cocktail over to pew No. 14."

amuse them, and one morning took them to the Zoo. But it was a failure. "Eric, keep away from that cage! Molly, your hat's crooked! Those seats are dirty, Eric—keep off them. If you bite the finger of your glove again, Molly, I shall take you straight home!" It was like a never-ending gramophone record on good behavior, and Aunt Mary never seemed to tire. At last the little party paused before a cage, and Aunt Mary consulted her catalogue. "This, children," she announced, "is an ant-eater." Eric looked cautiously round as he whispered to Molly: "Can't we push her in?"

Stories about the King are legion, but stories about the King, told by the King, are not so common, says a writer in an English weekly. Here is one I have just come across, which his Majesty told to Major-General Sir David Watson during a Royal visit to the battle-fields: "I was making a round of the front," said King George, "when I passed a group of American soldiers. One observed me closely, and called to a comrade: 'Hey, Bill, there's the King!' His pal shouted back, 'What d'ye mean, the King?' The other said, 'Right there, bonehead! That chap there!' 'Get out!' was the indignant reply, 'Who are ye gettin' at? He ain't no king! Where's his crown?'"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 61.)

MONARCH-KNIT
HOSIERY

THE new wide elastic-rib top, made with a special stitch, gives perfect fit with perfect comfort. There is that natural shape, snug fit, clean finish and lasting durability that you are accustomed to expect in Monarch-Knit Hosiery. Heels and toes are double spliced; legs are full length; the ankles fit smoothly, trimly, and the sizes are correctly marked. Your dealer carries a full line of Monarch-Knit Hosiery for men and women, in silk and mercerized, at moderate prices.

MONARCH-KNIT
FOR MEN HOSIERY FOR WOMEN

THE MONARCH KNITTING CO., LIMITED
DUNNVILLE, ONTARIO, CANADA

Also manufacturers of Monarch-Knit Sweater Coats, Monarch-Knit Jerseys for men and boys and Monarch Hand Knitting Yarns—Floss, Down and Dove

HIGH

PATENT

Announcement

AFTER five years of Government regulation, we are once more permitted to manufacture high patent with all the perfections of its old, high standard of quality.

PURITY FLOUR

No announcement of this Company was ever made with greater pleasure, and our satisfaction with the welcome return to normal milling conditions will be evidenced in the material improvement in all your baking.

Order a bag from your Grocer.

Western Canada Flour Mills
Co., Limited

Pies that taste good! Pies that are good!

THE making of pie crust is an art. But skill alone cannot produce that tender, flaky, melt-in-your-mouth texture so much desired. You must also have the very best materials—and this means principally a choice, velvet-smooth, rich shortening.

Swift's Jewel Shortening always meets the requirements and can always be relied upon in the production of wonderful pies.

SWIFT'S JEWEL SHORTENING is absolutely tasteless and odorless. You need use less because it is all shortening. Why not try this Shortening on your next baking day? You can get it in sanitary tin pails from your grocer or butcher.

Swift Canadian Co.

Limited

Toronto

Winnipeg

Edmonton

Sewing in the Schools

By EVAN ETTA

Mending.

Mending at Home.—A stitch in time saves nine, is the motto for the careful housewife and mother. The possession of the supply of household linen in a big item in the household budget, and mending systematically done after every wash day, will do much towards reducing expenditure under this head. Garments that are torn and worn can have their time of service extended, and their tidy and trim appearance preserved by neat repairs executed as soon as the need arises.

Mending in School.—Since mending forms so large a part of the needlework done in the average home, it would seem that it should form part of the school curriculum. Most teachers of sewing would agree that mending should be taught in school, because of its importance from the practical point of view.

Illustration Ia.
See "Fancy Stitches."

Fancy Stitches.

Designing and embroidery lessons have no place in the public school course in sewing. A girl who gives signs of possessing talent in this direction should be encouraged to develop it at the Technical School.

The teacher can arouse interest in the art of needlecraft by showing the children samples of beautiful work at school or in museums and exhibitions.

It is surprising how a listless, backward class will wake up and make renewed efforts to produce good results at the sight of something pretty, done by their fellow pupils. A poor worker will try hard to do well enough to be allowed the privilege of ornamenting her work with French knots, cross stitches, or easy embroidery in bright-colored silk or wool.

This is an opportunity to inculcate the idea underlying the motto, "Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well," for the beauty of such simple fancy stitches lies in the choice of color and the care and regularity of stitch formation.

The following examples have been found by experience to be well within the capabilities of children even in the lower grades. The suggestions offered have been found very effective in securing good results quickly.

Illustration Ib.
"Fancy Stitches."

Ia. This simple outline stitch is very effectively done in wool on petticoats. Work from left to right. Use a piece of lined exercise paper to measure the distance between the end of last stitch (a) and the point of insertion for the needle (b). Always take up half of this space and keep the needle horizontal. The wool forms letter U under the needle and should be held firmly under the thumb at (c) while the thread is being pulled through. Avoid drawing the stitch too tightly.

Illustration Ib. shows a pleasing variety of Ia. and is obtained by making an "arch" instead of a U, for each alternate stitch.

Chain stitch is a good substitute for cross stitch in marking letters and making on goods. (Illustration II.)—Work from right to left, or, if more convenient, from top to bottom. As in Ia. hold letter "U" firmly under the left thumb, while pulling the needle over the thread. To give the loop a rounder form the needle should be inserted a shade to the right of the thread coming from within the last loop.

In Illustration IIIa, you will find the easiest form of featherstitching to teach in schools. Work from right to left. Insert the needle in a horizontal position immediately above or below the point at which the thread emerges.

In illustration IIb is found a variation of IIIa, which is made by inserting the needle obliquely, alternately pointing up and down. Use a line of stitches, or a basting thread to work the centre "stem."

Illustration II.
"Fancy Stitches."

Difficulties.

There is no doubt, however, that in spite of the recognition of its practical value, there is a tendency for the mending feature in the teaching of sewing to be neglected. This is due to the difficulties encountered in planning and carrying out the work. These at times loom so large that it seems better to devote the time to other branches of the subject.

But it is worth while making an effort to make these lessons successful. Besides their value, as indicated in the first section of this article, it will generally be found that parents take an interest in this work, and can be readily induced to co-operate with the teacher. Such co-operation is always an asset in school work.

Some Objections and Suggestions.

When a list of ten or twelve lessons, bringing in the main types of mending, has been prepared for the year's work it is difficult to obtain a sufficient number of suitable garments for class practice.

A good plan to remedy this, is to give plenty of notice of the forthcoming lesson, so that the work may be kept on one side till the day arrives, and be obtained from the mending baskets of friends and relatives, as well as from the home store.

Illustration IIIa.
"Fancy Stitches."

Even then there will probably be insufficient work. Those who are unable to provide themselves with work should be told to bring stockings or socks to darn. In a family of children the supply of holes in hose never fails, and "practice makes perfect." The darners will learn something from the others by observation.

Children are reluctant to bring things to mend in class.—This difficulty may arise from indifference, and will disappear as the tone of the class improves under the teacher's influence. It may come from an unwillingness to display home property in a ragged state. This can be overcome by the teacher's manner when receiving bad specimens; by showing a big rent in something of her own; and by brief talks on the necessity and value of economy, and the self respect which comes from cleanliness and tidiness.

Illustration IIIb.
"Fancy Stitches."

Things brought to be mended are hopeless and impossible.—When this is the case, an attempt should be made, even if the result cannot be very good. The aim is to give the girl practice in tackling a mending problem. Her next essay may be more capable of solution.

The time is too short to accomplish much.—It is not to be expected that the work can be taken home ready for use. A beginning on right lines is made, and the work finished at home. Girls may be encouraged to bring back the completed work for inspection.

Part of the lesson will generally be taken up by demonstration on the most suitable garment by the teacher.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 59.)

Delicious isn't it?

"I'll let you have the recipe, my dear"

How many women have their own special recipes—the result of tried and satisfactory experience. Such recipes differ from those of the ordinary Cook Book not so much in the matter of kind of ingredients and mixtures, but in little touches that mean so much. For example, how vital a part does correct seasoning play in cooking—and what a large number of ordinary dishes can be made into extraordinary by a little skill in seasoning.

Messrs. Lea & Perrins of Worcester, England, have collected a number of valuable recipes of the unusual yet very practical kind, produced them in Book form—with chapters on Dressings—Gravies—Fillings—Chowders—Stews—Garnishings—Salad Dressings—etc. This is not an ordinary Cook Book. Its title is "Seasoning Suggestions."

Send for this Free Book

"Seasoning Suggestions"

This Book might be called "How to Improve Dishes as well as how to make them." It does not replace any Cook Book you may now possess, but will be a valuable addition to your cooking helps. This book is free to the readers of this magazine, but the supply is limited, so you should apply quickly. You will be delighted at its variety and helpfulness.

Send for this to-day—

LEA & PERRINS, 137 Market St., Montreal.
Name _____
Street _____
City _____ Prov. _____

The Mark of Fine Merchandise
For that Sports Suit, that smart tailored waist, and the many washable garments for outer and under wear—
Cut it out of Viyella
or
"Clydella"
UNSHRINKABLE FLANNELS
For sale at first-class shops.
WM. HOLLINS & CO., LTD.
(of London, England)
62A FRONT ST. W., TORONTO

You Will Need
New Curtain Rods This Fall
Empire
CURTAIN RODS
"With the Velvet Finish" will not rust nor tarnish.
The flat rod keeps your curtains in the desired position. It keeps them looking neatly.
Ask for Empire Curtain Rods.
Sold by furniture, department and hardware stores.
Manufactured by
The Pocock Mfg. Co.
Hamilton - - - Ontario

REGAL
FREE RUNNING
Table Salt
THE CANADIAN SALT CO. LIMITED
MADE IN CANADA C201

Sewing in the Schools

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 58.)

A List of Lessons.

It is best to decide upon one kind of mending for a particular lesson, even though it may be necessary to allow other sorts to be done at the same time. If darning and glove mending be taken at the beginning of the term this can be given later as revision practice when there is shortage of other material.

The following list shows what could be done in ten monthly lessons.

1. Darning stockings and woven goods.
2. Mending gloves.
3. Sewing on tapes.
4. Sewing on buttons, and mending torn buttonholes and loops.
5. Putting on hooks and eyes and dome fasteners.
6. Darning tears and cuts on woollen and cotton goods.
7. Setting torn gathers and pleats in bands.
8. Repairing the edges of skirts and cuffs.
9. Mending lace and embroidery.
10. Patches.

Millinery and Wraps

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 52.)

conceal defects and magnify beauty, in short, millinery that is one hundred per cent. efficient. But this is not one of their lapsing seasons. We can conscientiously recommend this season's millinery as being both becoming and artistic.

There are large hats, but we are slipping into the habit of thinking small ones are more practical, and isn't it true that we are also slipping into the habit of selecting practical clothes, especially if they have beauty to commend them? Perhaps it is the individuality of the season's millinery that attracts us. Individuality in dress is becoming a fixed objective, with women who study the art of dressing well, and this is what one gets in the handsome hat of velvet, hatters' plush and duvetyn, which all smart millinery shops are using in abundance.

But the velvet hat is supreme. Paris says so. Early in the season we thought it would be duvetyn, but fickle Fashion veered around to velvet again; so velvet it is, colored or black. And, incidentally, there is much more color in the millinery this fall than there has been for some time. Brown in all materials takes the lead; pheasant red is one of the new colors of the season, and for trimming there is a shade called Paradise because it is said to be the exact shade of the golden brown tufts close to the body of the bird.

Crowns are draped to suggest Tam O'Shanter bonnets, even though the milliner has to take in the brim to do so, and some of the larger shapes have narrow backs and take an upward slant across the front, like a diadem, but whatever the shape, the trimming must take a nose dive over the side, or else cut abruptly across the front. And speaking of trimmings, one's attention is focused at once on the embroidery—gold embroidery, for instance, on a chapeau of pheasant red, which is perhaps its only trimming, but quite sufficient.

And feathers! Birds of a feather don't necessarily flock together this fall. There's ostrich in all its phases of natural and glycerined, made up into long sweeps, small mounts, twisted plumes; coq made into perky plumes or flowing over the top of the crown, blonde forming haloes, hackle doing duty for brims and pheasant for crowns, and priceless Paradise trailing off the side. But one must see millinery to appreciate it—to know that it is becoming, one must try it on, when feeling at peace with the world.

"La Camille"

Reg. Trade Mark, U. S. Pat. Office.

FRONT LACE CORSET

Represents greatest value
and true economy

Never was price less reliable as an indication of value than today. In "La Camille" corsets you are sure of true value—good materials and careful workmanship that mean long wear and economy.

For comfort, fitting qualities and figure improvement, "La Camille" Front Lace has no equal, because of its three exclusive features:

Ventilo Back—a soft, ventilating section that relieves pressure along the spine.

Ventilo Front Shield—a protective insert under the laces permitting closer adjustment.

LOX-IT Perfect Non-Tilting Clasp Fasteners—the last word in fasteners—holds securely without gaping or pinching.

"La Camille" Corsets are on sale at good stores all over Canada. Write and we will gladly furnish name of nearest dealer.

INTERNATIONAL CORSET CO.
118 to 136 Union St., Aurora, Ill.

INDIGESTION

Millions of men and women now eat favorite foods without fear. If your meals don't agree, eat one or two tablets like candy. Help is prompt. Impaired digestion is usually corrected by neutralizing excessive acidity with

Large 60c Case—Drugstores

Baby's Own Soap

Keeps the skin healthy and sweet.

It's Best for Baby
and Best for You.

ALBERT SOAPS LIMITED, Montreal.

D-7-20

Interesting Scenes in the Old World and the New

This is a photograph taken at Old Plymouth in England, showing a scene in the Tercentenary Celebration of the Sailing of the Pilgrim Fathers. Old Tom and Meg are here seen leading the English dancers. Perchance the Puritans of 1620 would hardly have approved of such a scene of merriment—but anniversaries do not need to be consistent as long as they are interesting.

This is a group of notable women taken at the close of the luncheon given by the Directors of the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, during the recent fortnight of the C.N.E. Mrs. Lionel Clarke, wife of His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, is the central figure, and on the right (holding a volume, which may be a municipal hand-book) is Mrs. L. A. Hamilton, Toronto's brilliant woman councillor. To the left is Mrs. MacGregor, President of the Women's University Club. Mrs. Arthur Van Koughnet is on the extreme right, and next to her is Miss Roberta MacAdams, Member of the Alberta Legislature—and by the time this reaches our readers, this distinguished Canadian will be the bride of Major Price.

A Ramble Among Country Schools

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 33.)

at the Township Fair. Does the teacher get good backing in her efforts to grow flowers at the school? If not the results may be pitiful. If we can make the school in our neighborhood sanitary, comfortable and attractive we will have done something worth while for the children. In the recent medical survey in this district an up-to-date school which was properly heated, ventilated and lighted had the best health record. It costs no more to make improvements in our school than in our homes and there are more to pay the cost.

Here are some things we can do if you'll pardon a few suggestions. Get in touch with the teacher; she can do more than any one else in the section, if she is the right sort and has good backing. Get in touch with the trustees, but not with a club; it doesn't work. Lead them gently and they'll think they are taking the lead; give them credit for any improvements; they don't get much but criticism usually and it doesn't matter who gets the credit so long as the school gets the improvements. Get a woman of good judgment on the school board, but be sure she has good judgment. Help the teacher get games for the children; play is just as necessary for the child's development as lessons. If you want to improve the grounds, a lawn mower placed in the children's hands gives good results, and as for flowers, flowering shrubs, rambler roses and old-fashioned flowers like holly-hocks, and poppies are most easily grown at the school.

These are just the after thoughts from a two-days' jaunt. If you get a chance to take one, too, don't forget to notice the schools along the road.

But That's Another Story

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 56.)

"Now, boys," said the schoolmaster, "I want you to bear in mind that the word 'stan' at the end of a word means 'the place of.' Thus we have Afghanistan—the place of the Afghans; also Hindustan—the place of the Hindus. Can any one give me another example?" Nobody appeared very anxious to do so, until little Johnny Snaggs, the joy of his mother and the terror of the cats, said proudly: "Yes, sir, I can. Umbrellstan—the place for umbrellas."

The conversation around the long dinner-table ended, as do most conversations nowadays, with the subject of spiritualism. The guests and the members of the family gave their opinions as to whether or not the dead could communicate with the living, but it remained for "Sweet Sixteen" to present the only original thought on the subject. "It's hard enough now for me to keep up my correspondence," she said. "When I die I want a rest."

She looked in the pantry. She looked in the larder. She looked in the kitchen. She looked in the boot-cupboard. Where was that michievous boy? She looked in the hall. She looked in the bed-rooms. She looked in the nursery. She looked in the garden. She even looked in the hen-coop and the rabbit-hutch. All in vain. At last she climbed to the top of the house till she came to the little trap-door in the roof leading to the loft. "Willie! Willie!" she called. "Are you up there?" "No, mother," replied a shrill voice. "Have you tried the cellar?"

At a time of crisis in the Civil War a politician telegraphed Horace Greeley. "Are there any news?" "Not a new," promptly wired back the great editor, who was a stickler for good English. William Marion Reedy liked to tell the following: "I was laid up in the hospital with a broken leg and was editorializing. Some one met Fred Lehmann downtown and remarked, 'Fred, don't you think Bill is writing good stuff from the hospital?' To this Fred replied, 'Yes, I do. He writes so well with a broken leg that I could almost wish for the sake of literature that he'd break his neck.'"

KLIM Separated Milk Powder

40 Days' Supply in a 10-Pound Tin

THE ten-pound tin of Klim will make forty quarts of pure pasteurized separated milk. Think of the economy and convenience of buying six weeks' supply in a compact tin that you can keep on your pantry shelf. You can make a cupful, a pint, or a quart of pure separated milk whenever you need it by simply mixing Klim in water with an eggbeater. Eight level tablespoonfuls of Klim added to a pint of water and whipped thoroughly until dissolved makes a pint of natural-flavored liquid separated milk for cooking, baking and flavoring coffee, tea, and cocoa; larger and smaller quantities require Klim in proportion. Read directions on the tin.

Klim is a dry powder—the food solids of pure separated milk made by removing the water which forms 9/10ths of liquid separated milk. Klim will not sour nor spoil. It keeps sweet and fresh until all used. Make liquid Klim fresh for each meal or for baking. It is ideal for camping trips and picnics. The tin has a handy cover that slips on tightly and keeps the contents clean and dry.

Klim is packed in three sizes, the half-pound tin is a splendid "trial package," or for use at a picnic or on a day's outing. The pound tin makes four quarts. The big ten-pound tin is the favorite for family use, it is the economical size to buy. Order from your nearest grocer.

CANADIAN MILK PRODUCTS LIMITED

10-12 St. Patrick St., Toronto

81 Prince William St.,
ST. JOHN

319 Craig St. W.,
MONTREAL

132 James Ave., E.,
WINNIPEG

B.C. Distributors: Kirkland & Rose, 132 Water St., Vancouver, B.C.

Always Ready for Use

Natural Flavor

For Cooking, Baking and Table Use

IN 3 SIZES
TO SUIT
ALL NEEDS

KLIM BRAND POWDERED WHOLE MILK contains all of the fat of the original rich whole milk from which it was made. Because of its richness in fat, the product is not sold by grocers, but is sold direct to the user. Clip out the order form and send to our nearest office. You will receive by return parcel post a trial pound and a quarter tin with price list.

Order your tin to-day and learn how convenient and good POWDERED WHOLE MILK is.

CANADIAN MILK PRODUCTS LIMITED

(Address our nearest office)

Please mail a pound and a quarter tin of KLIM Brand Powdered Whole Milk and price list. Enclosed is ONE DOLLAR.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

(Print name and address for clearness.)

9-105

He's Particular About the Bristles

Exercise the Greatest Care when You Select His Military Brushes

Does the man of the house need new Military Brushes? Are you going to give him a pair for Christmas?

Get his viewpoint before you purchase them. First of all, he would buy his brushes for service. Of course, he admires a finely finished brush—but he is more interested in the bristles of the brush than he is in its back. He knows that only stiff, glossy—not dull—white bristles will stand hard wear. Men who select their own, buy

Keystone TRADE MARK EBONY BRUSHES

Keystone Ebony Brushes are closely filled with the best grade of long, glossy, pure white Russian Bristles, carefully arranged in uneven lengths to produce perfect penetration. The genuine Ebony Backs of Keystone Military Brushes are exquisitely finished and conveniently shaped to the hand.

Every Keystone French Ivory or Ebony Brush is guaranteed. Sold in Drug, Jewelry, and Department Stores throughout Canada.

STEVENS-HEPNER CO., Limited
PORT ELGIN, ONTARIO

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37.)

Storing of Vegetables for the Winter by Miss Jones, and Winter Hygiene by Mrs. Hicks. Rev. Mr. Biggs and Rev. Mr. Wyman also gave addresses.

Pipestone Women's Institute, which is only a year old, tells the story of its work:—

"When the Patriotic Society ceased to be a necessity, Mrs. Robert Forke made a plea for a Women's Institute, and securing the co-operation of a few ladies of the village and district, succeeded in organizing. We then invited Miss Helen McDougall to visit us. This she did early in May, 1919, outlined the work and told us to proceed. Her visit awakened much interest and enthusiasm. In July we put on the short course in dressmaking. A class consisting of between thirty to thirty-five received instruction from Miss Senior of the Extension Service. Many of those attending the classes were young girls to whom the valuable instruction given, meant much, although Miss Senior, the instructor, worked under great difficulties as the class was so large.

When the School Fair came in September, we did what we could to assist financially. In January, we put on our second short course in dressmaking. Owing to the weather conditions and sickness in many homes, the class, fourteen in number, was much smaller than we had expected. It consisted principally of young girls and women who were anxious to gain all the information, and learn the best methods regarding the use of patterns and so on, as taught by the instructor, Miss Price of the Extension Service.

At Easter time we sent forty-two dozen eggs to Tuxedo Military Hospital, and have been assured that these were much enjoyed by the men.

Our meetings during the year have been interesting and profitable. The attendance has been good, the President setting a splendid example by being present at every meeting held.

We have always had interesting and helpful programmes at our meetings, and for this we owe our gratitude to Mrs. Forder, the energetic convener of our programme committee, and her assistants. Mrs. Forder is a very busy woman, but always sees that the Institute is well provided for by way of programme.

Our Social Service Committee under the leadership of Mrs. Bromley, is very active, visiting and doing whatever they can to bring a little more cheer, a little more comfort to the homes of our sick ones. Our Boys' and Girls' Club is in charge of Miss McLachlan, principal of our school. In this work she has the assistance of Mrs. Royle, Mrs. Campion, and many other capable women of the Institute, who are keenly interested in our boys and girls.

Our Institute has not yet accomplished all we would like, but we are looking forward to doing more efficient work. We had planned for a busy winter, but owing to the flu epidemic, many of our meetings were not held at all. However, we hope for better things in the future. When our Memorial Hall is accomplished, we hope to make our much talked of Rest Room a reality.

ONTARIO CONVENTION DATES.

THE date of the Central Ontario Women's Institute Convention to be held in Toronto, has been announced as November 9, 10 and 11, 1920. The Eastern Convention at Ottawa, and the Western at London will be held one or two weeks earlier.

Earnest attention is being given by the Board of Directors to planning the programmes and it is hoped that these Conventions will be even better than any already held. Full announcements will be made to the Institutes in good time.

Circulars No. 31 and No. 32.

TWO new circulars issued by the Women's Institutes Branch of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, give much valuable information. Circular 31 deals with the uses of milk and its products. With "Use more Milk" as a heading, the value of milk as a food is outlined as follows:

MILK—

(1) Milk fat contains substances absolutely necessary for growth of the young.

(2) Cheapest animal food.
(3) May be bought anywhere.
(4) Contains as much solids as one pound of meat.
(5) Has no waste; all used.
(6) Comes nearest being perfect food.

(7) Best source of lime; keeps teeth hard; good bone-builder.

(8) Best protective food; especially for boys and girls.

(9) Cannot be substituted in diet for children.

(10) May be used in more than two hundred ways in cooking.

Milk is the cheapest, most common and most important food that we have. It contains all of the food principles necessary for nourishing the body.

Cheese dishes and soft cheese making also find a place in the circular.

Whole milk, buttermilk, skimmed milk, cheese, butter, condensed milk, powdered milk, evaporated milk, and ice cream are all nutritious, wholesome, digestible, economical and impossible of substitution.

CIRCULAR No. 32 tells of the necessity of a liberal supply of vegetables and fruits in the diet, and gives many recipes for the preparation of vegetable dishes.

These two circulars may be secured by writing to the Women's Institute Branch, Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

The 1919 Annual Report.

THE report of the Ontario Women's Institute Conventions held in the fall of 1919 is being issued and will be in the hands of Institute members at an early date. This report contains addresses upon subjects of present day interest, and has many suggestions for the carrying on of Institute work.

Extension of Women's Institute Work in Ontario.

IT is interesting to note that in some districts, Institutes which had disbanded at the close of the War are being re-organized, and from new points inquiries are coming regarding the work, with a view to organizing. At a number of points along the C.N.R. in Northern Ontario, organization meetings have recently been held and interest in Institute work is developing.

District organization has been effected in East Algoma, where each Branch is aiming to add at least one new Branch to the district. In Rainy River, the work is extending so as to make it necessary to divide this district into three districts.

IMPRESSION OF THE WELLAND DISTRICT CONVENTION.

I BEGAN the work at Stamford on June 2nd, says a lecturer, and found this a most enthusiastic branch. Their energies for some time to come will, of course, be devoted to raising money to pay for their new Memorial Hall. Besides this, they are supporting two French orphans, and helping in all other charitable works coming their way. They furnish a truly remarkable example of co-operation.

The district annual at Chippewa was the best I ever attended. The Willoughby Branch showed a true spirit of hospitality and all their guests were made to feel at home. The branch reports were well given and there was much discussion concerning the lines of work open to the Institutes. As a district, Welland County is asking for medical school inspection. I was much impressed with the prevailing desire to be of service. Many of the branches are assisting the Children's Shelter at Welland, and maintaining war orphans.

The Crowland Institutes are interested in securing a rest room in Welland, and, I believe, have been promised assistance by the U. F. O.

Welland Junction impressed me especially because, though a new Institute and, as they claim, ignorant of Institute matters, their report was one of the best at the district annual. Then, they have quite a number of English and Scotch women in their Institute who are particularly good workers, always ready to help out.

The Institute at Humberstone is facing the problem of recreation for the boys and girls—some means of keeping them off the street. They are

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 66.)

COWAN'S COCOA

MAKES CHILDREN ROBUST

A Foundation of Health for thousands of Canadian children who enjoy its DELICIOUS FLAVOR.

OF INTEREST TO INSTITUTE MEMBERS

There is a renewed interest in an "art" of the past—the making of samplers—this is resulting in many a girl after being given an opportunity sitting in a home.

We wish to receive photographs of these and for the purpose are offering a prize of fifteen dollars for the best photograph of an old-time sampler, with the words "they work while you sleep" written on the back. Prize, fifteen dollars.

We also wish to have photographs of historic or unusual quilts, with story attached—limit of eight hundred words in length. Prize, fifteen dollars.

Photographs and stories must be sent by November 1st, 1920. Competitors must be subscribers to this journal and also members of the Women's Institute. Mention branch of Institute when writing. The stories should be written on one side of the paper. Photographs will not be returned. Address "Institutes," Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond St. W., Toronto.

Luxuriant Hair

Luxuriant Hair artistically arranged adds charm to your appearance. Have you sufficient hair to dress it in the most attractive and fashionable modes? You can secure at "Dorenwend's" the required hair-piece, that will furnish the desired effect.

"Dorenwend's" hair goods are known everywhere, for giving satisfaction, to the most fastidious users.

May we send price list and illustrated booklet containing hair suggestions?

Mail Orders given prompt attention.

Dorenwend's
Limited

Hair Goods Hair Dressing
105 YONGE STREET, TORONTO.

The Brunswick

ALL PHONOGRAPHS IN ONE

Here's the reason the Brunswick plays all records as they should be played

THERE'S only one RIGHT way to do anything. And this is just as true of playing phonograph records as it is of anything else in the world.

The Three-in-one Ultona illustrated above is an exclusive Brunswick feature which enables EVERY make of record to be played exactly as it was DESIGNED to be played.

It describes just the right ARC on each make of record.

It uses the CORRECT NEEDLE and gives the EXACT WEIGHT required by each make of record.

Nothing to take off—nothing to put on.

The Ultona is COMPLETE. A mere twist of the wrist gives the precise needle, the correct diaphragm and the exact weight for any type of record.

These points are of supreme importance, because upon them so largely depend PURITY and POWER of TONE.

Let Your EARS Be The Judge

Ask any Brunswick dealer to play you any make of record, including the Brunswick Record, on the all-record Brunswick Phonograph. Write for Catalog H.J. and name of your nearest Brunswick dealer.

The Musical Merchandise Sales Company

Sole Canadian Distributors

General Offices: 79 Wellington St. W., Toronto

Eastern Office:
709 Drummond Bldg., Montreal.

Western Office:
143 Portage Ave. E., Winnipeg

Ask to hear
BRUNSWICK RECORDS artistic companions of the Brunswick Phonograph

Columbia Grafonola

"And, oh, she dances such-a-way"

You'll never need to leave your favorite partner in the middle of a dance. With the Columbia Grafonola you can dance to the last lingering note and step. The Non Set Automatic Stop takes care of that. This exclusive Columbia feature is at its best for dancing. Nothing to move or set or measure. Just start the Grafonola and it plays and stops itself.

The leading stars of the stage make records exclusively for Columbia

Standard Models up to $360

COLUMBIA GRAPHOPHONE CO.
Toronto, Ont.

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 8.)

which Mrs. Frushing at last managed to glean two salient facts.

Old Man Fraser was to bring along two specially sworn-in constables to see that everybody got fair play at the wedding, and Bill was to be married to Sam Floyd's daughter at Cory Harrigan's shack to-morrow afternoon.

Why the two constables should be considered necessary Bill would not explain. It was a secret, he said.

"Can you kip a see-krait?" Bill asked his audience.

Being assured that it could, the catechist continued: How could they keep a secret?

"By not telling anybody about it," he was informed.

"Dat's de way I kip de see-crait, too," Bill assured the ladies, without the ghost of a smile.

THINKING that possibly she might make Bill talk more freely, Mrs. Frushing quietly signalled the others to retire. But after all her cajoling, pleading and threatening, all she learned was that the constables were required to see fair play at Bill's wedding, and not at Harrigan's.

"How's Cory looking?" asked Mrs. Frushing, somewhat anxiously.

"Lak' always," answered Bill, "he shave a few days ago. His shack look lak' all de tam'."

"When is Frank coming back?" Hayes had been away several days on his homestead, "Slats" had said that morning at breakfast.

"Cory didn't know. Mebbe to-night, mebbe not for two, t'ree night. If Frank don't come back in tam', I don't tink Cory bodder feex up his shack lak' a cat'eedral for the weddin', eh, Jo. W'at you tink?"

"I think not, Bill. What time do you figure coming back?"

"Pretty late for supper, I tink. It's twelve mile' to Ol' Man Fraser, and mebbe he's not ready to start right w'en I get dere. And, say, Jo, I can get a horse from you for go tell Sam Floyd an' de li'l girl to-morrow morning. My cayuse will be all in."

Assured that a horse would be at his disposal, Bill loped away, whistling merrily. Whatever trouble he anticipated on the morrow was not affecting his light-heartedness to-day.

Mrs. Frushing went back to the house.

"Where are the girls?" she inquired of Mary Parsons.

"They're up in their room," answered the maid. "I think Miss Aiken is trying to make up Miss Ingraham's mind about this rush wedding."

"I'm not going to interfere," said Mrs. Frushing, very firmly.

"You're butting in good and plenty as it is," volunteered Mary, with the easy familiarity that comes of long companionship on the ranch. "You don't suppose Slats can get Harrigan to come here if he stays with the colt?"

"Not a chance in the world," sighed Mrs. Frushing. "Slats couldn't get him to budge. Mary, if that colt isn't dead or better to-morrow afternoon, Harrigan will insist on being married in the barn. But in any case it's up to us to get the wedding supper ready. We'll have our work cut out. There's nothing unpacked yet? Well, let's get busy."

Anticipating that the ceremony would take place at her house, Mrs. Frushing had brought from Soda Creek the necessary foodstuffs for a regal repast. She had not mentioned this to her guests, nor to Cory Harrigan, but had intended that Frank Hayes should somehow contrive to induce Harrigan to select her house as the proper place for the ceremony. The programme also provided for Cory calling on his fiancée that evening, and she would have chaperoned the girls to Harrigan's a day or so later. But Hayes' absence, and the sick colt, had complicated matters.

Most of the wedding supper would have to be shipped to Harrigan's ready cooked, and this would mean an early start, as the road was considerably longer than the trail. If, as seemed probable, "Slats" did not return, Mary would drive the democrat, as the other hired man would have to stay at the ranch.

The two women were already deep in their culinary preparations when Mollie entered the room. She was serene enough, but showed traces of having recently been under considerable mental anxiety.

"Well," asked Mrs. Frushing, somewhat sharply, "What seems to be the trouble with the young lady upstairs this time? Was it the special constables, or the hurry-up double wedding that upset us this time?"

"She wants to be married in a Reformed Episcopal church," sighed Mollie. "And she doesn't want to be married by a veterinary surgeon with two policemen as witnesses. She's afraid he may bungle the job and marry her to that excitable Frenchman instead. But I've promised her we'll see there's no mistake made. There isn't any Reformed Episcopal church around here, by any chance, is there, Mrs. Frushing?"

"The nearest is several hundred miles away, and there isn't a church of any kind nearer than Soda Creek," answered that busy woman, fixing a stern eye on Mollie. "It seems to me, young woman, that you're somewhat keener on this wedding than your friend. What's the reason?"

"Of course I have an interest in the wedding," assented Mollie quite seriously. She did not add that the interest was a round hundred dollars, and expenses. That was the business of the Cupid Exchange, and no concern of Mrs. Frushing.

"Well you two girls better give us a hand with the preparing of this wedding feast. What do you know about high altitude cookery?"

"I know very little," confessed Mollie, "and Bessie knows a great deal less. But she'll learn."

"And mighty quick, too," broke in Mary, "after she's had Harrigan's flapjacks for breakfast for a week or so."

"Here's Miss Ingraham now," said Mrs. Frushing, as Bessie came downstairs. "Miss Aiken tells us your knowledge of cooking is away below zero."

"Tisn't either," Bessie bristled up. "I can make fudge and all sorts of candies. I know all about chocolates, and can dress a sweetshop window as well as anyone in British Columbia."

"Which will be an incalculable advantage on Harrigan's ranch," sarcastically remarked Mrs. Frushing. "Still, candies won't be out of place at a wedding, so you can get busy. But don't start any thing until you're sure we've got all the ingredients you need. I don't feel like running thirty miles to the store to buy a ten cent bottle of vanilla extract. Anything you need, ask Mary. She's the boss in this cooking bee."

Molly's brown eyes opened wide.

"It seems to me everybody's the boss except the boss. Mary's the kitchen queen, 'Slats' and 'Spike' tell you in the morning what they're going to do, instead of being told, and this Bill Frenchy invites himself, a judge and two policemen for supper and all-night guests, and that after declining a dinner to which he hadn't been invited. And then he tells you he'll borrow a horse."

"It's the way of the northern country," smiled Mrs. Frushing.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN.

BILL FIGHTS FOR HIS LI'L ALICE.

SWIFT changes were made in the programme in the morning, when the two girls discovered they were expected to make the journey over the nine mile trail on horseback. Neither had ever been on a horse, and the ride was out of the question, even if they had not flatly refused to ride astride, insisting on side-saddles, a request which Mrs. Frushing remarked was quite reasonable, coming from a young lady who asked for a Reformed Episcopal church in the vicinity of Quesnel Lake.

So, with Mrs. Frushing driving, the three women set out in the democrat shortly after nine o'clock, planning to arrive at Harrigan's about two o'clock. They were to have a cold lunch on the way, and the wedding would take place almost immediately on arrival.

Bill Laflamme, Old Man Fraser, and his two burly sons, whom he had sworn in as special constables so as to keep the fees in the family, had arrived quite late in the evening, and had turned in at the men's bunkhouse without being seen by any of the

*How famous Movie stars
Keep their Hair Beautiful*

NORMA TALMADGE
"You may use my testimonial to the value of WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO."

MABEL NORMAND
"I never knew that a shampoo could be so delightful until I used WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO."

PAULINE FREDERICK
"Not only is the use of WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO beneficial to one's scalp and hair but the refreshing and stimulating after effects are delightful and indescribable."

ALICE BRADY
"I consider WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO an ideal shampoo. It can be used with such little effort and keeps my hair in wonderful condition."

MAY ALLISON
"Of all shampoos I have ever used WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO is by far the superior."

BLANCHE SWEET
"I am pleased to endorse WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO for shampooing."

MARION DAVIES
"WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO is the kind of a hair shampoo one has hoped to find. I like it."

PROPER SHAMPOOING is what makes your hair beautiful. It brings out all the real life, lustre, natural wave and color, and makes it soft, fresh and luxuriant.

Your hair simply needs frequent and regular washing to keep it beautiful, but it cannot stand the harsh effect of ordinary soap. The free alkali, in ordinary soaps, soon dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it. This is why leading motion picture stars, theatrical people, and discriminating women use

WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO

This clear, pure, and entirely greaseless product cannot possibly injure, and does not dry the scalp or make the hair brittle, no matter how often you use it.

Two or three teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and has the appearance of being much thicker and heavier than it is. It leaves the scalp soft and the hair fine and silky, bright, fresh-looking and fluffy, wavy and easy to manage.

You can get WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO at any drug store. A 4-ounce bottle should last for months.

Splendid for Children

THE R. L. WATKINS CO.
Walkerville, O.

Each Bottle
Now Packed in a Carton

Be SURE it's
WATKINS
If it hasn't the Signature of "MULSIFIED"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 68.)

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 62.)

also co-operating in offering two prizes in the senior rooms in the public schools and in the high schools. One prize is for general proficiency, the other to the pupil making most progress during the year.

At Fenwick the Institute is assisting in erecting a small library the need of which has been acutely felt.

The Annual District Convention of East Parry Sound Women's Institutes, was held at Sundridge, June 29th, branches represented being Burk's Falls, Emsdale, Lount, Maganetawan, McMurrich, South River, Sundridge. The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Mrs. A. A. Anderson, Sundridge; 1st Vice-President, Mrs. (Dr.) Freeborn, Maganetawan; 2nd Vice-President, Mrs. Elliott, Sprucedale; Sec.-Treasurer, Mrs. McArthur, Burk's Falls; Delegate to Federated Institutes, Mrs. J. Dunbar, Sundridge.

From British Columbia.

ARMSTRONG WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—Although but recently formed this has done some excellent service to the community along lines of public welfare. The local hospital has been supported and donations of money and material have been made. The subject of "Neglected Children" is receiving attention from this Institute and efforts are being made to have children of this type placed in the proper institution. Agricultural work is coming in for its share of attention. Assistance is being planned for the local fall fair. The health of school children, especially in regard to the teeth, is a line of work that will be taken up. Dr. Summers gave a talk in June on "The care of Teeth." As soon as the hospital is in good financial condition the public health nursing will receive the support of this Institute.

BARRIERE WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—School improvement has always been one of the principal branches engaging the attention of this Institute. Through the winter months a hot lunch was served by the Institute to all children who were unable to go home. Too much emphasis cannot be laid on this subject. Five million children in the United States are suffering from malnutrition, and the same proportion will be found throughout Canada. One of the principal causes of malnutrition is the cold lunch eaten by the children during the noon hour. Every school should have some appetizing drink and a properly supervised lunch period.

KALAMALKA WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—The members of this Institute have shown great interest in the subject of food values, conservation and preservation of food and other lines connected with home economics.

This is probably the principal Institute which makes the children's department in exhibiting at any fair their particular work, and the Annual Juvenile Fair conducted by Kalamalka Women's Institute is receiving almost Province-wide recognition. Great interest is shown in this community in the subject of Public Health Nursing, more especially that branch included in school nursing. Current events in the form of the Prohibition Referendum received all the attention at the meeting held on the 14th of July. The speaker for the occasion was Mrs. Despard. The secretary reports: "On account of the excessive heat the attendance was very poor, but those who were brave enough to face the discomfort of the weather were rewarded by hearing a very clear explanation of the prohibition question. Mrs. Despard dealt clearly with the two alternatives, Government Control and Prohibition."

NARAMATA WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—This Institute is co-operating with the only other women's organization in the district, "The Unity Club," and has the use of the club room, which is one of the most cosily built and daintily furnished club rooms that any community could boast. The one topic of discussion, from which it is hoped some definite action will result, was the co-operation of the Women's Institute with the Unity Club in helping to beautify the cemetery. The Institute also is to donate a medal for the boys' and girls' gymnasium. This Institute also has for a member, Mrs. N. B. Smith, who has done such wonderful work in demonstrating the feasibility of the industry for the drying and evaporating of fruit. This has been carried on in the Naramata District to the satisfaction of Mrs. Smith herself, and to all others who have taken the trouble to inquire into it. It is hoped that more can be known of this method and that the fruit, which was otherwise wasted, can be utilized as in food products.

MOUNT IDA WOMEN'S INSTITUTE has largely specialized in school work. The school grounds have been improved and beautified by the planting of trees and shrubs, providing gardens, and the beginning of playground apparatus for the children. Through the efforts of the Women's Institute and the school children, a well has been bored on the ground and a pure water supply provided for the children. With the assistance of the teacher, the walls of the school room have been decorated with suitable pictures and altogether the school room and school grounds are a credit to that community.

OKANAGAN CENTRE AND WOOD'S LAKE WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—A talk on "The Public Health Nurse" and "Care of Children," has been part of the programme of this Institute. This district would seem to be very much in need of the services of a public health nurse as the nearest doctor is a good many miles away. Meetings are held in the district school room, and in connection with this it may be stated that an unusual sight, at least unusual in the most of our country schools, was to be seen on June 7th, when the whole school consisting of about sixteen children were engaged on the school ground in a most enthusiastic game of ball. Perfect good nature prevailed, skill and strength were shown, and when the children and teacher repaired to the school room the same spirit of good will prevailed. The rules of the game of ball were applied to the school work and the teacher explained later that the understanding was that if he played the game with the children during the recreation hours they were to play the game with him during school hours. The result was obvious. Discipline was perfect, with good will and mutual understanding between pupil and teacher. This is the spirit which should prevail throughout the Province as a whole because it is inculcating the spirit of good sport in our boys and girls, and upholding the traditions of the British nation, which as a nation is noted for being a nation of good sports.

PEACHLAND WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—The following report of the secretary will give a good idea of the trend of work in this Institute: "This Institute has voted funds for putting up swings in school grounds. We are holding a bazaar at an early date. A very entertaining and successful concert was given during March, from which we realized $36.75."

PENTICTON WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—The following account may be of assistance to other Institutes. The secretary reports: "Our society—Two papers and three-minute discussions of important questions relating to our work as Institute members." This Institute is one of many in supporting the local hospital. The secretary reports that a resolution regarding a maternity hospital be sent to the Hospital Board.

RUTLAND WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—A very successful Baby Clinic was held on June 8th, when a number of babies were weighed, measured and examined by the practising physicians. An unusual feature was the display of two layettes. The layette of olden times was on exhibition and was admired principally for the fineness of the work and the almost invisible stitches. Some little garments had been in existence for over sixty years; while the layette of later days was much less cumbersome and showed evidences of labor-saving. This Institute is keenly interested in Public Health Nursing, and it is hoped that some arrangements can be made to provide a public health nurse for this and the surrounding districts before long.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 70.)

On Buying Curtains

If it's a dainty thing—a brilliant chintz, vivid cretonne, shimmering silk or gossamer chiffon—buy it with never a fear of not being able to wash it. Remember LUX is at your service—its pure, bubbly suds whisk the dirt away, leaving colors bright and clear, and the daintiest fabrics sheer and fresh as when new.

Silk and colored curtains---and LUX

Whisk a tablespoonful of LUX to a whipped-cream-like lather in a gallon of very hot water; then add cold water till lukewarm. Swirl the curtains about—work quickly—press the rich suds through and through the curtains, but never rub. Rinse in three lukewarm waters. If you can, roll in a towel to dry. Or, dry in the shade.

For white curtains—not silk—soak for an hour in cold water. Then wash in the same way, using hot suds. Rinse in three hot waters and dry in the sun.

A handy LUX recipe booklet, "The Care of Dainty Clothes," will be gladly sent on request.

Lever Brothers Limited
Toronto

208

The New Edison Phonograph
Violins
Guitars Ukuleles
Mandolins
Brass & Reed Instruments
Phonograph Records & Player Piano Rolls

The R. S. WILLIAMS
& SONS COMPANY LIMITED

145 Yonge Street Toronto.
'Canada's Home of Music'

Established 1849.

The water swirls through the clothes in a figure 8 motion four times as often as in the ordinary washer.

Sunny Windows with Crisp Frilly Curtains—

What a Joy to See Them Fresh and White!

HOW simple a matter—with a "1900" Catareact Electric Washer! Down come the mussed, soiled curtains, into the "1900" they go, and swiftly, thoroughly the soapy, cleansing water swirls back and forth through them, in the magic "figure eight" movement—that wonderful, exclusive feature of the "1900" which makes it the perfect washer.

Not a single part in the shiny copper tub, to cause wear and tear! Nothing to catch the most delicate lace or the finest frills! In 8 to 10 minutes the curtains come out, all the original whiteness and freshness restored, all ready to be put through the swinging, reversible wringer, which also works electrically.

Everything from delicate sheer blouses to heavy blankets and table linen is thoroughly washed in the "1900" by that magic "figure eight" movement.

THE NINETEEN HUNDRED WASHER COMPANY
368 Yonge Street, Toronto

1900
CATAACT
Electric Washer

*The Perfect
Washer—Costs But a Few Cents an Hour to Operate*

1900 WASHER CO., 368 Yonge Street, Toronto.

Please send me the name of the nearest 1900 dealer, and a copy of the book, "George Brinton's Wife," interesting fiction with some surprising facts included.

Name .....

Address .....

City and Prov. ....

CANADIAN SHOES FOR CANADIAN PEOPLE

The Price of Shoes vs. The Price of Other Things

It has been said that "comparisons are odious."
And so they are—as a rule.

But it has been so repeatedly stated that shoe prices are "excessive" or "ridiculous," that we feel justified in making a comparison between the present price of shoes and the price of some other things that we buy.

The following prices are from Government statistics and cover the period from January, 1914, to January, 1920,

|  |              |
|--|--------------|
| Advance in price of Iron and Steel - - -           | 124 per cent |
| Average wholesale advance in all commodities - - - | 146.4 "      |
| Advance in price of Fruit and Vegetables - - -     | 153.2 "      |
| Advance in price of Textiles - - -                 | 206.2 "      |
| Advance in price of Western Grains - - -           | 259.6 "      |
| Advance in price of boots and shoes - - -          | 118.2 "      |

Shoe prices had to increase—naturally. The price of everything that enters into a pair of shoes has gone up tremendously in late years. For instance, hides have advanced 154.6 per cent. in six years. One of the principal materials used in making fine shoes has advanced 500% in the same period. In fact, there is no single commodity used in the manufacture of shoes that has not advanced by leaps and bounds during late years.

But in spite of this a close margin of profits, efficient manufacturing methods, and keen domestic competition, has resulted in lower prices than the above advances would seem to make inevitable.

These comparisons will show why shoe prices are higher—they have simply followed in the wake of general advancing prices.

But, in Canada, they are neither "excessive" nor "ridiculous," but proportionately lower than most other things.

The Shoe Industry in Canada is an efficient and competent one—making shoes for the Canadian people which, grade for grade, are as low, or lower in price, as shoes obtainable in any Country.

Canada produces footwear of every desirable type, and of standard quality in all grades. When you buy Made in Canada Footwear you are assured, at fair prices always, of the utmost that modern skill can produce in Comfort, Service and Style.

SHOE MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Barber - Ellis
FRENCH ORGANDIE

Is used by all who appreciate high class stationery

In note paper
and tablets with envelopes to match

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 65.)

women folk. Very early in the morning Laflamme had come into the kitchen and had breakfast before starting off on his four-hour ride to Sam Floyd's ranch, where he would convey the first intimation that the wedding was to take place that afternoon. It would not give the bride much time to get ready, but her trousseau was simple enough to demand only a few minutes' attention. Bill's great fear was that Floyd's horses might be somewhere out on the range, in which case Old Man Fraser might have to stay over another day, "an' de double-barrel weddin' won' go off," as he expressed it pathetically.

Old Man Fraser had left early with Laflamme, so had not seen the ladies. His two boys had not met with much conversational success with the two city girls at the breakfast table. They had tried, valiantly enough, to interest the visitors in horses and their ailments, but after Miss Ingraham had artlessly inquired whether "roan" was a disease or a vice, and Miss Aiken had supposed a ringbone to be part of a harness, the talk had gradually become more and more hopelessly unintelligible, until finally the girls gave up trying to appear interested.

After breakfast the Frasers and Mary started over the trail for Harrigan's, the men to look at the sick colt, and Mary to see whether she could possibly make Harrigan's shack in any way presentable before the bride arrived.

As it happened, the colt had practically recovered during the night, and Old Man Fraser's veterinary knowledge was only manifested in reminiscences on his arrival. The Frasers, Slats and Harrigan spent the morning around the barn, while Mary took possession of the shack and attempted the impossible. Bill Laflamme, Sam Floyd and his daughters Alice and Emma arrived in time for lunch, accompanied by Frank Hayes, whom they had met by accident. Hayes had been surprised to learn of the imminence of the wedding, as it had been understood that the ceremony would not take place until his return. But, as was his custom, Harrigan had not considered anyone else when making his arrangements to have Old Man Fraser come to his ranch for a double purpose.

After dinner the postmaster of Khakala drew the justice of the peace aside and had a long conversation with him. The Frenchman was in a great state of excitement, gesticulating around the phlegmatic Fraser like a drunken Siwash. Finally Laflamme appeared to be satisfied, and returned to the shack.

Taking up a position near the door, Bill announced his intention of making a speech. Nor did he keep his audience waiting.

"I jus' wan' to spik for two-t'ree minute, Mary, and gentlemen, and you more so, Mister Sam Floyd, and before I mak' my spieh, I wan' to ask you, Sam, how ole are you?"

"I'm fifty-six," answered Floyd in some surprise.

"Good," continued Bill, "dat's w'at I say is very good. And also, Sam, how ole is your li'l girl Alice, and how ole is your li'l girl Emma?"

"Alice, is twenty-one last March, and h'Emma is seventeen last December," answered Floyd.

"Good again. And now, Mary and gentlemen, make good attention to w'at I'm tole you now. Mr. Judge, you hear w'at Sam say when he say Mees Alice is twenty-one las' March. Now I ask you am I twenty-t'ree of age mysel'. You see, everybody, de Judge nod his head, lak' dat. He say yes. And now, Judge Fraser, am I of age legal to get married if it is my good pleasure, and can anybody stop me? De Judge say nobody can stop me from get married. Also Judge, can anybody—I don' wan' mention any name, but you know who I mean—can anybody stop Mees Alice marry me if she lak', when she's twenty-one? You kip quiet, Sam; I let you spik bimeby. I give all notice dat I'm goin' marry Alice dis afternoon, and if Sam don' lak' it, he can come outside right dis tam' and fight. I can leek him, I can leek —"

"There ain't going to be no fight," drawled Floyd, "these two kids are coming home with me right away. Unless you quit being crazy and agree to marry h'Emma, like you promised to."

"We talk 'bout dat lots of tam' already, Sam, and we always come to de sam' ting. You wan' me to marry Emma, and I wan' to marry Alice. Now we fight."

"All right, then," laughed Sam, "we'll fight. Somebody tie up my right arm, so we'll have an even break."

"No, no, no," broke in Bill, "you need bot' your arm and bot' your han' too. You don' know how strong I feel on de weddin' day. I leek you sure."

Again Floyd laughed, as he made his way outside, followed by the others, except Harrigan, who busied himself clearing the table. It was not Cory's fight, and he would not even enquire how it ended, later on.

BILL LAFLAMME was no match for Sam Floyd, in spite of the latter's handicap of thirty-three years. Bill was lithe and wiry, fully fifty pounds lighter than his opponent; he could dance and hop around in a way that would have done credit to a professional boxer, but of the science of fisticuffs he knew as much as the average Frenchman, which is nothing.

Floyd, on the other hand, was an American toughened by constant outdoor exercise. In his younger days he had mastered the rudiments of pugilism, and been considered a fair rough-and-tumble fighter. In brute strength he was almost equal to two men of Bill's physique.

Lafamme opened hostilities with a whirlwind attack, his two fists going into action simultaneously. Sam saw a splendid opening on the point of Bill's chin, but he contented himself with dropping on one knee, and the torrent of blows fell on empty air.

The Frenchman returned to the charge, leading with what he meant to be a feint with his right, and swinging viciously for the jaw with his left. Sam took a quick step forward and trod on Bill's toes. The Frenchman danced away and came back with a right uppercut that just missed Floyd's nose, because Floyd's fist had gently thumped Bill in the chest. Three inches advantage in the reach is of great advantage even in an ordinary brawl, as Bill soon discovered. Try as he would, he could not damage his opponent's features. On these rare occasions when his blows did get home, they carried no sting. Sam dodged, ducked, side-stepped and parried with an ease that exasperated the Frenchman. Floyd played with his opponent as might a father with a fractious child. He slapped and whacked and thumped Bill, but always tried not to hurt him. And, to make matters worse for the unfortunate postmaster, Floyd accompanied his light taps with unwelcome advice, the urging of h'Emma as a mate for William.

So the fight progressed, Floyd confidently defensive, Lafamme impotently aggressive. The Frenchman's only hope was that he might tire out the older man, but the hope was slight. Floyd was not exerting himself, and Bill was. And Floyd had a lot more staying power.

"Any time you want to quit, kid, just say you'll take h'Emma," said that young lady's father, as he boxed Bill's ears.

"Nevaire," shrieked Bill, sending a mighty blow where Floyd's face had been a second earlier, "you jes' stay w're I heet, instead of jumping aroun' lak' a jack-rabbit, an' I leek you yet."

"You couldn't lick a two-cent stamp," retorted Floyd.

Imagining in the retort a slur on his professional standing as postmaster of Khakala, Mr. Lafamme's excitement increased. His attacks redoubled, his arms working like flails. Probably because he no longer tried to place his blows, a miracle happened.

Bill's right landed squarely on Floyd's nose.

"Ha! W'at I say? Look at de blood on de nose! Now I get my li'l Alice, hey Sam, or you wan' me to heet you on de nose once more again, hein?" Bill cackled in his delight.

The onlookers cheered Lafamme, urging him to maintain his valiant efforts. They all liked Bill, and their sympathies were with the under-dog. And they knew it would probably be their only chance to cheer.

Although Floyd knew the blow could only have landed by the merest chance, he was somewhat annoyed. The postmaster's jeers ruffled his temper. So Sam decided the fight must soon come to a stop, even though the stopping process must needs be painful to the other party.

"First blood to you, Bill," he snorted, "but second blood to me. I'll give you a nose for a nose." And suiting action to words he sent a swift right straight from the shoulder to the exact centre of Bill's face.

Then he proceeded to decorate the aquiline features of Monsieur Lafamme, though without further injury to that young man.

Floyd's tactics drove Bill frantic, but he was wholly at the mercy of the older man. He sought in every possible way to land home another blow, but Floyd was well on his guard, and parried most of Bill's lunges with his left, reserving his right for decorative purposes. He had finished the face to his satisfaction, and started on Bill's hair when he happened to glance towards the gate. He saw the Frushing democrat approaching.

"Better stop this foolishness now," he counselled.

But Bill only shook his head and continued his windmilling.

"Aw, quit, kid. I don't want to hurt you." And Floyd grabbed Bill's arms and held him pinioned for a moment.

But the Frenchman was determined to continue the uneven struggle, and he wrenched himself free. In so doing he trod on Floyd's toes—on Floyd's corn.

Then Floyd broke loose and rained blow after blow on Bill, until that unfortunate young man staggered under the severe punishment. Floyd was angry, very angry, and he accompanied the blows with a string of invectives that made the women shudder, while the men memorized the choicest for future occasions.

Suddenly Lafamme crumpled up and staggered. He was all in.

Hayes and Slat's jumped into the ring to save him from further punishment, but their intervention was unnecessary. Floyd's foot no longer hurt, and he was already sorry for his outburst of temper. He readily agreed to accompany Hayes to the creek to wash his face. He knew by experience that the other man would want to renew the fight, and he wished to be merciful. A few moments' reflection would probably bring Bill to his senses, in the absence of his opponent.

Through the group that surrounded him Bill saw Floyd going away.

"Stop heem," he yelled, "don't let heem run away till I leek heem."

"D'jer want him to die of old age sticking around here?" jeered Slat's, "beat it for the house and have a wash, kid."

Bill knew the advice was good, so decided to follow it. He stood up, somewhat gingerly, and started towards the shack. Then he halted, as a girl's horrified cry was followed by another girl's horrified shriek.

Mrs. Frushing gazed indifferently enough at the blood-stained figure, but her two guests were decidedly unstrung. They had seen the battle on approaching, but had supposed it to be merely rough horseplay. And now...

"It's the double-barreled Frenchman," chattered Bessie, "and the two special constables have murdered him."

"His head is hurt," said Mollie excitedly. "Mrs. Frushing, can't we do something?"

"Sure," answered that practical lady, "we can leave him to Slat's. All he needs is a wash. The young pup, getting into a fight with a man like Floyd! What was the trouble about, Steve?" she asked one of the younger Frasers.

"The same old trouble," answered Steve laconically. "Bill wants to marry Alice, and Floyd is trying to wish Emma on to him. So they had a scrap to try and settle it."

"And Bill got licked. Alas for romance!" smiled Mrs. Frushing.

"They seem to have a primitive way of picking out wives in these parts," remarked Mollie.

"They certainly have," agreed Mrs. Frushing, meaningly.

Bessie saw the point. "Where's Mr. Harrigan?" she asked, turning towards the shack for the first time.

"Cory, ho, Cory," hallooed Mrs. Frushing, "Come here."

Harrigan stepped out of the doorway and came towards the group.

"Is that Harrigan?" Mollie whispered anxiously.

Grains so Flimsy that they seem unreal

Now there are two Puffed Grains, remember, and both ever at your call.

Both are bubble grains, airy, flaky, toasted. Both are so flavory that they seem like food confections.

Both are whole grains—Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice—puffed to eight times normal size.

They make premier foods, so tempting that children revel in them, morning, noon and night.

The perfect cereals, experts say

These are Prof. Anderson's creations—the best cereal foods in existence. A hundred million steam explosions occur in every kernel. Every food cell is blasted for easy, complete digestion.

Puffed Wheat in milk, therefore, forms the utmost in a food—yet in the form of tidbits. And whole rice is thus supplied in its most hygienic form. Millions of dishes are served daily. The two Puffed Grains with their many ways of serving supply folks an endless variety. But think how much oftener they could supplant foods not so delightful, not so hygienic.

Serve the two kinds, and both of them in plenty.

Puffed Wheat

Puffed
Rice

Both steam exploded—8 times normal size

Between-meal confections

Crisp and lightly douse with melted butter for hungry children after school. Let them eat the grain bubbles like peanuts or popcorn. Puffed Grains do not tax digestion.

The Quaker Oats Company

Peterborough, Canada

Sole Makers

Saskatoon, Canada

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 66.)

SALMON ARM WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—The secretary reports a very interesting meeting at which a review by Mrs. Bowman on the "Brown House" was very amusing, while Dr. Arnett's talk on the live problem of malnutrition was of keen interest to the forty members present. The advice given will be of assistance to the mothers of the school children. The information given on malnutrition should be in the hands of all mothers in the Province. It is a subject which cannot be over-estimated in its direct bearing on the stability of our nation.

SALMON RIVER VALLEY WOMEN'S INSTITUTE held the usual meetings. The subject which is receiving the most attention in this district is "Consolidation of Schools." The situation is somewhat peculiar, and there are a great many difficulties to overcome, yet with the enthusiastic support of the Farmers' and Women's Institutes of the district it is hoped some practical arrangement can be reached.

SILVER CREEK WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—This Institute is in the vicinity of the Salmon River Valley and the residents are equally interested with the former Institute in promoting this scheme. A talk in June was given on "Child Training," followed by an animated discussion by the members present. It would seem that "the child" is coming into its own and is being considered as the most important factor in the future of our nation.

SIMILKAMEEN WOMEN'S INSTITUTE. This Institute has been very active in supporting a public health nurse in the district, and during the last two meetings has given attention to the classes which can be carried on through the night school. The secretary reports: "The Institutes all seem to be interested in night school and I am writing to Mr. Kyle, Organizer of Technical Education for the Province, for further information."

SUMMERLAND WOMEN'S INSTITUTE has given a good deal of attention to the Home Economics, but Public Health Nursing has come in for its share. At one meeting, salad making was not only the topic, but a demonstration was given, "and the consumption of milk in the home" was also discussed. It was decided as regards the public health nursing that at the present the greatest need was for a resident dentist. At a later meeting, the topic for discussion was "Exercise in relation to Health," with a demonstration of different exercises. The secretary reports: "The attendance was small which was to be regretted as the subject was very interesting."

WEST SUMMERLAND WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.—The secretary reports at the last meeting of this Institute: "Following an appeal made to the Council by the Children's Aid Society of Vancouver, the Institute decided to have a tag day for their benefit on the day we are holding our Flower Show. At a previous meeting it was decided that the first thing we could do should be to provide a Red Cross cupboard and first aid equipment for the Central School, also stretcher bed, pillows, etc., and games for the school yard. It was decided that the easiest way to raise the money was to get voluntary subscriptions from the members. This was done with excellent results."

Prominent People Appreciate Women's Institutes.

The Women's Institutes are commanding the attention of people of note for the splendid work which they are doing in communities—not only in Canada but in Great Britain. Following are some expressions from famous people.

"Tell the women of Canada of my sincere interest and best wishes for the continued success of the work of Women's Institutes."—Her Majesty Queen Mary, President of the Sandringham Women's Institute.

"Women's Institutes fill a gap that has long existed in the institutions of rural life. They attack the rural problem at its vital point. They begin with the farmer's home as a fundamental social and economic unit in the state. They are mobilizing the varied energies of the country women

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 74.)

"The Book of the Month"

THIS is a book of Diamonds and Pearls—of Gold and Silver—of Rings and Brooches—of Watches and Purses—of superb Silverware—of Gifts for Weddings, Birthdays and Anniversaries.

Every woman who expresses her individuality in her jewels, her silverware and in her choice of gifts for friends and relatives, will enjoy many happy hours looking through this Mappin & Webb book.

Is your name on our mailing list? If not, will you write us at once, so that we may send you a copy? It is the book of the month, indeed, for within its covers are the treasures of the world and the supreme workmanship of the master craftsmen of a dozen nations.

It is a book you will consult frequently and come to rely on more and more as you test the efficiency and thoroughly satisfactory service of our mail order system.

Write for it.

Mappin & Webb

(CANADA) LIMITED

353 St. Catherine Street West, Montreal

LONDON      PARIS      ROME      LAUSANNE      SAO PAULO
RIO DE JANIERO      BUENOS AIRES      JOHANNESBURG

48

The Proper Food for Baby

Unwholesome and unsuitable food causes most of the diseases of infancy.

The bottle-fed baby should receive the best substitute for human milk—cows' milk, properly modified and diluted with barley water made from ROBINSON'S "PATENT" BARLEY.

ROBINSON'S "PATENT" BARLEY

is the best for making barley water.

For older children use ROBINSON'S "PATENT" GROATS which is also excellent for invalids and nursing mothers.

Sold by all druggists and grocers. Write for our booklet "Advice To Mothers," containing information about feeding and care of children. No mother should be without it. Free on request.

MAGOR, SON & CO., LIMITED
Canadian Agents
MONTREAL      TORONTO

Cuticura Is All You Need For Your Skin

Bathe with Cuticura Soap to cleanse and purify the pores. If signs of pimples, redness or roughness are present smear gently with Cuticura Ointment before bathing to soothe and heal. For every purpose of the toilet, bath and nursery Cuticura Soap and Ointment are ideal.

Soap 25c, Ointment 25 and 50c. Sold throughout the Dominion, Canadian Depot: Lyman, Limited, St. Paul St., Montreal. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

Film makes teeth dim and dingy

You may not realize it, but remove the film and see how teeth look then.

Compare your teeth now with the teeth you see after this ten-day test. It will be a revelation.

Every woman owes this to herself.

Millions of Smiles

Now show beautiful teeth—this is why

All statements approved by authorities

Look at people's teeth when they smile. Many teeth are dingy and discolored. All one's attractions are marred by them.

Other teeth now glisten. For millions of people now brush teeth in a new way. Twice a day they fight the film which dulls them.

Your teeth are coated more or less if you brush them in old ways. See the difference when you brush them in the new way for a while. Ask for this ten-day test.

You must combat film

Brushing does not clean teeth if it leaves the film. It removes some debris, but it does not end the teeth's great enemy.

Millions find that well-brushed teeth still discolor and decay. Tooth troubles have been constantly increasing. Now modern dental science finds the reason in a film.

New film is viscous. You can feel it with your tongue. It clings to teeth, gets between the teeth and stays. Then, between your dental cleanings, it may do a ceaseless damage.

The ordinary tooth paste does not end film. A soapy tooth paste makes it more viscous. So brushing teeth in old ways has left much film intact. Its daily removal has in late years been a major dental problem.

How film ruins teeth

It is this film-coat that discolors, not the teeth. Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acids. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. Thus most tooth troubles are now traced to film, and very few escape them.

Dental science, after painstaking research, has found new ways to combat film. Able authorities have proved them by clinical and laboratory tests. Their efficiency is now beyond all question. These methods have with millions revolutionized teeth cleaning.

These new factors are combined in a dentifrice called Pepsodent—an ideal tooth paste which complies with all the new requirements. Leading dentists everywhere advise it. To prove it quickly to all careful people, a ten-day tube is being sent to everyone who asks.

Five quick effects

Pepsodent brings five desired effects with every application. Some are at once apparent, and all soon show their benefits to teeth.

One ingredient is pepsin. Another multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva to digest starch deposits that cling. Another instant result is multiplied alkalinity of the saliva to neutralize mouth acids.

Two factors directly attack the film. One of them keeps teeth so highly polished that film cannot easily adhere.

Thus with every application Pepsodent combats the teeth's great enemies in new and efficient ways. Both in Europe and America it is fast bringing a new era in teeth cleaning.

The way to know it is to try it. The first application reveals some new effects. A few-day test is most convincing. See these effects, read the reasons for them, and judge this new method for yourself.

If it brings you whiter, safer, cleaner teeth, tell others about it. There are few things more important.

Few children escape

Children's teeth seem most susceptible to film-caused attacks. Very few young folks escape them. Dentists advise the use of Pepsodent from the day the first tooth appears.

Old methods have proved inadequate. See what the new way does. Right tooth protection in early years means much in years to come.

Men who smoke will also see conspicuous results. Their teeth are often much discolored, for tobacco stains the film.

Pepsodent CANADA
REG. IN

The New-Day Dentifrice

A scientific film combatant, acting in new ways. Approved by the highest authorities and advised by leading dentists everywhere. Druggists supply the large tubes.

Watch the change in a week

Send this coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth whiten as the film-coat disappears.

These effects mean much to you. Cut out the coupon now.

10-DAY TUBE FREE

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY,
Dept. 921, 1104 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Mail 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to

Only one tube to a family.

Carhartt Overalls

The sort of things, madam, you admire in a well-made garment are to be found in my Carhartt Overalls — staunch materials, sound workmanship, long wear. The button holes are made to fit the buttons and then reinforced. Interlacing suspenders (my own invention) cannot slip off the shoulders, nor separate in the wash. Reinforced bands, too, hold the buttons with a bull dog grip. An angular rule pocket is placed conveniently on the right leg. Generous sizes — but examine Carhartt's for yourself, madam. You won't wonder then why they are so popular with the men. My unqualified, written guarantee goes with each pair.

Hamilton Carhartt
President

HAMILTON CARHARTT
COTTON MILLS, Limited
Toronto Montreal
Winnipeg Vancouver
Manufacturers of Men's Overalls and Work Gloves and Carhartt Allovers for men and boys

TRADE MARK

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 69.)

MISS INGRAHAM sat very still, her eyes fixed intently on the approaching rancher. She did not say a word.

Cory was not looking at his best, bad as that was. He had been up for two nights with the sick colt, and had neglected all meals until Slat's arrival the previous afternoon. As a result he looked gaunt and hollow-eyed, and was unashamed of his vigorous yawns. He had shaved a few days ago, and his hair had reached that stage when a hair cut would have been advisable quite early in the month. He was bare-headed, and wearing a heavy shirt that in remote ages had been three shirts and a pair of lumberjack stockings. The stockings were doing service as sleeves, the red shirt protected Cory's manly bosom, the blue shirt covered the back and neck, while the grey shirt joined the blue and the red with substantial twine stitches. Harrigan's legs were encased in the famous Harrigan pants, the pants that had in the course of years become the foundation for an agglomeration of repairs which included pieces sewn and pieces tied on, patches laced on and patches riveted on, the pants which had had buttons on the seat, now had buckskin seat and knees; the pants, in brief, which had made Harrigan famous from Ashcroft to the Arctic regions.

On his right foot Cory was wearing a new russet brown Penetang shoepack, while his left shuffled along with all that remained of last winter's two pairs of overshoes and rubbers, wondrously compressed into one foot covering.

In his hand Harrigan carried the dishcloth he had been using when Mrs. Frushing summoned him.

As he neared the democrat, Cory smiled a greeting: "Hullo, Jo, we got the colt fixed up all right."

"Mr. Harrigan," said Mrs. Frushing very formally, "permit me to introduce Miss Bessie Ingraham, your fiancée, and her bridesmaid, Miss Mollie Aiken."

"I'm delighted to meet you, Mr. Harrigan," lied Mollie bravely.

"I'm sure you ladies are very welcome here," replied Cory, bowing very low, following certain oft-repeated instructions from Frank Hayes. The dishcloth trailed on the ground, thereby obtruding itself on Harrigan's notice. He twisted it around his rawhide suspender and held out his hand to assist Miss Ingraham to descend.

That young lady ignored the proffered assistance.

"Are you," she inquired, in the tone of one who would doubt a sorry fact, "Are you the party we've come four hundred miles to marry me to?"

"Certainly, Miss Ingraham," beamed Harrigan.

"That being the case," continued Bessie, "if you don't mind, Mr. Harrigan, we'll call it off before it gets any worse. There isn't going to be any wedding as far as I'm concerned. I came here to marry your pocket-book, but of course I had no idea you were anything like this. And surely you didn't expect me to live in that hutch?"

"Sure," answered Cory with composure, "That's as warm a shack as you'll find anywhere in these parts. I've been quite comfortable in it for twelve years, and you'll like it after a while. Come in and have a good look at it. Anyway, you'll be a guest at Bill's wedding."

The group around the democrat were openly interested in the unexpected development. The general sympathy seemed to be with Cory.

Mary Parsons had a little trouble all her own. "After all the work we went to in getting that wedding supper ready, too. Here, you boys, take those boxes to the house, we'll have a feast anyway, whether there's two weddings, or only one, or none at all."

"You needn't have brought no grub," spoke up Harrigan. "There's plenty cooked for everybody. I got a mess of beans, a big dish of rice pudding, and a whole stack of sour dough bread."

"Beans! Rice Pudding! Sourdough bread! For a wedding supper!" cried Miss Ingraham, aghast, glaring at her chum as if she had been the guilty cook.

Jaeger for Children

There is underclothing, night dresses, pyjamas, coats, stockings, knitted jerseys, knitted suits, knitted caps, slippers, sandals, gloves, mitts, and, for infants, there are spencers, bootees, infants, overalls, etc.

A fully illustrated catalogue free on application.

For Sale at Jaeger Stores and Agencies throughout Canada.

DR. JAEGER Sanitary Woolens CO. LIMITED
Toronto Montreal Winnipeg
British "founded 1883"

Maybelline
Darkens Eyebrows and Lashes

Making them appear much longer, thicker and more luxuriant than they really are — easily applied, harmless, shades black, brown.

Lash-Brow-Ine

a pure, harmless cream, applied nightly aids Nature in a marvelous way in nourishing and promoting the growth of the eyebrows and lashes. Dark, luxuriant eyelashes and well-formed eyebrows, how wonderfully they bring out the deep, soulful expression of eyes, adding charm and beauty to any face. These famous Maybell Beauty Aids are used and recommended by Stars of the stage and screen and beautiful women everywhere. Why not you?

"MAYBELLINE," "LASH-BROW-INE" Obtainable at your Dealer's. To avoid disappointment with imitations always look for "The Maybell Girl," same as above, on every box of both preparations. We guarantee you will be delighted or refund price.

MAYBELL LABORATORIES
Chicago, Ill.

Healthy Babies Laugh and Play

Health in babyhood comes from proper digestion — by regulating the stomach and causing the bowels to move as they should.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SYRUP

The Infants' and Children's Regulator

for this purpose produces most remarkable and gratifying results. Best of all children's remedies to relieve constipation, flatulency, wind colic, diarrhoea and other disorders.

This health-giving preparation is purely vegetable—contains no opiates, narcotics or alcohol—just an agreeable, highly beneficial and potent remedy, made of the very best, harmless ingredients obtainable, as the formula below shows—

|         |                    |              |           |             |
|---------|--------------------|--------------|-----------|-------------|
| Senna   | Sodium Citrate     | Oil of Anise | Caraway   | Glycerine   |
| Rhubarb | Sodium Bicarbonate | Fennel       | Coriander | Sugar Syrup |

ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY
215-217 Fulton St., New York

General Selling Agents
HAROLD F. RITCHIE & CO., Inc.
New York; Toronto, Can.

Abolish Blue Monday

Are you discouraged with the color of your wash? Use and your wash will have a pure snowy whiteness that cannot be obtained otherwise.

KEEN'S OXFORD BLUE

Sold by all dealers.

MAGOR SON & CO.,
Limited
Montreal Toronto
Canadian Agents.

Macey SECTIONAL BOOKCASES

ARE THE BEST

For sale by All Leading Furniture Dealers.

"MACEY STYLE BOOK," full of information, free for the asking.

CANADA FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS LIMITED
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO.

Mollie had said nothing. She had realized, with the first glimpse of Harrigan, that there would be no wedding. She felt very sad. The big fish had jumped out of the net. The Cupid Exchange was broke!

CHAPTER SIXTEEN.

TWO THOUSAND A YEAR IS ATTRACTIVE.

BY special invitation Miss Aiken accompanied Miss Ingraham for a short walk where they could have a confidential chat. Mollie did not relish the prospect of this interview, but if her friend had anything unpleasant to say—and there was no doubt she had—it would be only the more disagreeable if told in the presence of all these strangers.

Bessie did not waste any time in preliminaries, she had too much to say for that. For once the aggressive Mollie had to assume a defensive position as her friend reviewed the sequence of events which had brought them to Quesnel Lake, and it was only by pleading that she had been deceived by Harrigan's descriptions that she was able to avoid an open rupture.

"I was only doing what I really thought was best for you, dear," pleaded Mollie. "You know you complained so much of your dull and cheerless life—"

"No matter about that," cut in Miss Ingraham. "You didn't overlook any chance of reminding me that life was dull and cheerless. What I want to know is this: How much money do you expect to make out of this deal? Now, answer me that."

"Oh, Bessie," and Mollie's voice quivered, "you ought to know better than that. I'm not going to make a cent—not one cent—out of this. I—I didn't—didn't even get the dollar fee," she blurted, as she dabbed at her shining eyes with her handkerchief, wiping away tears that welled up because of varying emotions; that her friend should be so angry with her, that their great adventure should have such a sorry ending, and that her hundred dollar bubble should have so sadly burst.

"That's right—go ahead and bawl," snapped Miss Ingraham. "This is all your fault and you know it too. It seems to me that if anyone has cause to be tragic over this mixup, I'm the one. I've been victimized and abused shamefully—"

Miss Ingraham sat down on a convenient log and gave way to tears. Mollie joined her and plied her handkerchief with renewed vigor, but a casual observer might have been pardoned for supposing that she was merely echoing her friend's grief, for there seemed to be an absence of sincerity in her sobbing. Be that as it may, she won the endurance contest, and had the satisfaction of seeing Bessie make the first step towards reconciliation.

"Oh, stop blubbering, Mollie," said Miss Ingraham, "do turn off the tap, for goodness' sake. Even if I hurt your feelings you needn't get your eyes all red and your nose shiny when you're going to a wedding."

Mollie, assured of victory, continued her sobbing. It would never do to surrender her advantage too easily.

"Do straighten up, Mollie, and be sensible. There's a man coming this way, a tall young man. I'm sure he's going to speak to us."

Miss Aiken was still struggling desperately to remove all traces of emotion when the stranger reached the log. Miss Ingraham, with a sales clerk's instinct for making a first good impression, had regained her composure and smiled inquiringly at his approach, but she did not speak first. Neither did the man, for Mollie, after one discreet peep, gave a gasp of surprise and jumped to her feet, wide-eyed with amazement.

"Billie!"

"Good Lord! Mollie Aiken!" said the man, wonder and joy in his tone. "How do you come to be here?"

They were clapping hands now. Mollie felt a thrill such as she had not experienced for years as the rough work-hardened hands closed over hers. Her whole being vibrated with emotion, blushes suffused her face and she trembled with suppressed excitement. She gazed deep into those clear blue eyes, seeking to read there the answer to a question she dared not put into words. What if—

The man studied Mollie silently, almost reverently, as if trying to realize the marvel that had come to pass, that she should be there by his side, glad, even happy, to see him.

Miss Ingraham coughed discreetly and the spell was broken.

"I'm so surprised, I'm forgetting," laughed Miss Aiken, nervously. "Billie, may I introduce you to my dearest friend, Miss Ingraham. Bessie, meet Mr. Hazelton, my—er, formerly of Vancouver."

As if that explained anything. Not that many explanations were needed, Bessie thought, as she expressed her pleasure at meeting Mr. Hazelton, and politely murmured something about going to see how Mrs. Frushing was getting along. Miss Ingraham knew there is a tide in the affairs of men and maids which, taken at the flood, leads to those uncharted seas on which she had just refused to launch her barque. So Miss Ingraham gracefully made her exit and the man took her place on the log.

"What are you doing here, Billie?"

"What are you doing here, Mollie?"

The questions were simultaneous. Each laughed at the other's eagerness, and the laughter set them a little more at their ease.

"You tell your story first, Billie," she smiled. "Tell me everything, beginning from—from the day after," she concluded a little lamely.

"There isn't so very much to tell after all," commenced Hazelton. "The day after you so very definitely gave me my congé because it looked as if I insisted on walking arm-in-arm with John Barleycorn through life, I decided to break away from city life altogether. As you, of course know, I wrote a brief note, resigning as advertising manager of the North Coast Steamship Company, and never even went near the place to collect my books and things. Somehow, I felt we couldn't both be in the same office after what had happened. Of course you could talk the way you did to your lover, but not to your boss."

"I didn't know you'd quit for a long time, Billie. You see, I never vent back either, for the same reason."

"You don't say!" ejaculated Hazelton. "What a time they must have had straightening things out!"

"It's probably smooth sailing again by this time," smiled Mollie, "we left the old ship in the lurch eight years ago, remember. Go on with your story, Billie."

"Having no ties of any kind," resumed Hazelton, "I started for the east, but I lost the train at Ashcroft, and by the time the next one came along I wasn't interested in trains. I stayed in Ashcroft a few days, and then came up the Caribou road with a freighter. At Soda Creek I fell in with Cory Harrigan and I've been here as hired man ever since. Now, about yourself, Mollie?"

"A hired man! You, Billie!" Miss Aiken was amazed, even shocked.

"Of course," smiled Hazelton, "the dignity of labor and all that sort of thing, you know. Now tell me all I want to know about you."

"There's very little to tell," said Mollie. "I just got another position as stenographer and moved to another part of Vancouver so there would be less chance of us meeting. Rather an unnecessary precaution, wasn't it?"

"But what brings you up into the Caribou? And why were you crying just now? You might as well tell me, Mollie; we all know each other's business in this part of the world, anyway."

MOLLIE was silent. She had never been proud of her activities as a matrimonial agent, but just now she was really ashamed of the part she had played in bringing Miss Ingraham and Cory Harrigan together. She did not wish to tell the whole truth to Hazelton, and yet she did not see how she could avoid this. Finally, in desperation, she made the plunge.

"You know about Mr. Harrigan's matrimonial intentions, Billie. Well, I...."

"By Jove. How stupid of me not to see it all right away," broke in Hazelton. "Of course that's it!"

Mollie stiffened. "I hope you don't suppose I've come up here to get married to Mr. Harrigan," she said coldly.

Hazelton roared so heartily at this that Mollie became quite human

Fabrikoid Fills Many Wants Around the Home

THERE are many little jobs of upholstery that can be done at home providing the right materials and right instructions are available. The replacing of the seats in the dining room chairs, reseating the comfortable old rocker, the re-covering of cushions, footstools, and even some of the larger jobs can be done easily with Craftsman Fabrikoid.

And when you have finished, you are assured of a job as neat as could be done by a upholsterer, that looks like leather and yet has cost less than the cheapest leather. You have done a job that will not need to be done over again for years, for Fabrikoid possesses wonderful wearing qualities and does not rot, tear, stretch or stain.

Our booklet, "Fabrikoid in the Home" is a valuable guide to this kind of work. It gives you all the hints necessary. Your dealer can supply you with the Fabrikoid. It is sold by the yard, in various widths up to 60 inches and, unlike leather, there is no waste. Every bit of it is usable.

Send for your free copy of "Fabrikoid in the Home" today.

Canadian Fabrikoid Limited

Head Office, Montreal

Halifax Toronto Sudbury
Winnipeg Vancouver

Safe Milk for INFANTS and INVALIDS

Nourishing,

Digestible,

No Cooking.

For Infants, Invalids and Growing Children. Rich Milk, Malted Grain Extract in Powder.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 76.)

Ford
Sedan

The Car for Women

*Ford Motor Company
of Canada, Limited
Ford, Ontario*

22

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 70.)

for a far-reaching forward movement in the reconstruction of our entire national life. Success to them."

CHARLES STEWART,
Premier of Alberta.

"I would like to express my good will, my personal appreciation of the great work of the Women's Institutes. I speak with knowledge as my wife is a member of the Women's Institute."

HON. E. C. DRURY,
Premier of Ontario.

Notes From British Women's Institutes.

Endowment Fund News.—The Endowment Fund is making steady progress. A generous gift of £100 has been received from Mrs. Eva McLaren, which has a special interest as coming from one who has always worked for women's progress in politics. Another generous offer comes from Mrs. A. W. Foster, Chairman of the Hereford County Federation, who promises the sum of £200. Six more offers of £100 each will now make up the ten £100 promises for which a special appeal was made last month.

Buckingham and Devon County Federations.—We have to congratulate Buckinghamshire and Devonshire on the formation of County Federations.

These are the forty-third and forty-fourth County Federations in England and Wales, and we hope that before long there will be one in every county.

First British Institute.—While new County Federations and new Institutes are steadily being formed, it is interesting to realize how the earliest Institutes still flourish and what excellent work they are doing. The oldest Women's Institute in England and Wales is Llanfair P. G. Institute which started in 1915. Its meetings are held in a pretty cottage and are always well attended. Among its other activities the Institute runs a baby clinic with the greatest success.

Progress of the Movement.—The number of Women's Institutes continues to increase steadily. There are now 1,622 in existence, and each week sees the formation of from ten to twenty new Institutes.

NOTES FROM ONTARIO

Watson's Corners purpose building a hall which will include a library.

Beachburg Institute, (in N. Renfrew) held a "Field Day" for the school children, and gave prizes. They also gave prizes to Fall Fair for best layer cake, open to members of the Institute only.

Westmeath Institute, (in N. Renfrew) is enlarging and renovating a town hall and making a community hall of it.

The members of the Women's Institute at Carleton Place have assisted the Horticultural Society in beautifying the town. At the Children's Fair they have given prizes for knitting, sewing, preserving, baking and candy making.

Tiverton Institute is interested in Medical Inspection, and follow-up work; is also renovating the Public Library, which will include a reading room and magazines. They are all anxious to have more Canadian literature.

Paisley Institute is raising money for the Children's Hospital, London. They also send treats to Byron Sanatorium.

Belmore Institute gave $26.40 to Salvation Army for the Children's Fresh Air Camp; $50.00 to the Institute for the Blind; $25.00 for seeds for schools; 30 dozen eggs for Girls' Home. They have also built a shed for farmer's horses and put down cement walks in village. They also have good community singing.

Goderich, St. Augustine and Duncannon helped to instal an X-Ray in Goderich Hospital.

The Women's Institute at Gorrie has undertaken to beautify the park and have had three rows of maple trees planted on the west side as a beginning. The trees were donated by Mr. W. Gamble and the members of the Institute appreciate this generosity very much and take this opportunity of thanking him for his kindness and liberality.

It is very encouraging to note that the Institute work in the Rainy River district has grown to such an extent,

Tasty and Healthful—
KEEN'S D.S.F. MUSTARD
gives an improved "taste" to all meats, fish, game, poultry, and makes them easily digested. Use it with every meal.

Canadian Agents: MAGOR, SON & CO., Limited, MONTREAL—TORONTO

Silk-Like Texture and Brilliance

are the qualities that commend our new cotton fabric finishes—

"Supasayda" and "Beausayda"

for charming—and durable—frocks, blouses, negligees, etc.

These finishes are obtained in only B. D. A. fabrics, and come in plain and figured effects in all the popular shades.

Insist on having B. D. A.—the best in cottons and woolsens.

BRADFORD DYERS' ASSOCIATION
Limited
LONDON, ENG.

America's Pioneer
Dog Medicines

DOG DISEASES

And How to Feed

Mailed free to any address by author

H. Clay Glover Co., Inc.
118 West 31st St. New York City

DOMINION EXPRESS

MONEY ORDERS

There is no better way to pay your out-of-town accounts.
On sale in 5,000 offices in Canada.

You'll like this salad

1 envelope COX'S INSTANT POWDERED GELATINE, 2 cups (1 pint) water, 3 large grapefruit, 1½ cups (¾ lb.) sugar or honey, 1 cup (½ pint) chopped pineapple, crisp lettuce leaves, French dressing.

Mix gelatine and sugar, and dissolve in water. Remove peelings and separate grapefruit into small pieces, being careful to remove all white skin. When gelatine is cool, add pineapple and grapefruit, pour into a wet mold, and allow to set. Serve on lettuce with dressing.

You will also find Cox's Gelatine excellent for smooth sauces, creamy rich desserts and nourishing soups.

It is surprising in how many ways the use of Cox's Gelatine, unsweetened and unflavored, can improve your cooking. Did you know that the use of gelatine is one of the most valuable secrets of the successful chef?

You'll recognize Cox's by the checker-board box. Keep a box on the pantry shelf.

Write for Cox's Book of Selected Recipes

Cox's

Instant Powdered

GELATINE

J. & G. COX, Limited
Dept. G P. O. Box 3009
MONTREAL

For Better Cleaning Easy to Run—Gets All Dirt

BRIEFLY, those are the chief advantages of the Bissell's Vacuum Sweeper. But its low price and great convenience are hardly less important.

The name itself is evidence of utmost efficiency in carpet and rug cleaning. "Bissell's" could not be placed on a vacuum sweeper that did not measure up to the world-wide Bissell's reputation.

Be sure to see this handy and inexpensive vacuum sweeper demonstrated. You, like thousands of others, will be surprised at its really marvelous results. At most good stores.

Prices—$13 to $17.50. "Cyco" Ball Bearing Carpet Sweepers, $9 and less, depending upon style and locality. Send for booklet.

BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER CO. (Limited)

of Niagara Falls (Factory) and 240 Erie St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Oldest and Largest Sweeper Makers

BISSELL'S

Strong Suction
Vacuum Sweepers
(Not Electric)

Put Your Sweeping Reliance on a Bissell's Appliance that at their last District Annual meeting it was unanimously decided that it would be in the best interests of the work to divide the District into three Institute Districts, namely East, West and Centre. The retiring District Secretary, Mrs. Sullivan, of Emo, states that the first year she had the books the entire finances of the District were less than $900, but that they have been steadily increasing until now over four times that amount is handled yearly. This year's finances have exceeded the previous year's by $700.

At their District Annual meeting held at Fort Francis, over 150 women attended (every Branch being represented) and two sessions (afternoon and evening) were held. The afternoon session was devoted entirely to business and in this they were ably assisted by Mrs. Patterson of Gads-hill, the Government Lecturer for their district. In the evening the School Inspector, Mrs. McDowell, addressed the meeting giving some splendid suggestions as to what might be accomplished by the co-operation of the schools and the Institutes. Reverend Mr. Cowan also addressed the meeting on "The Child."

Big Fork had thirty women out at their meeting. These people are much scattered and come in big farm wagons in loads.—Some from across the Rainy River and consequently from Minnesota—women altogether wonderful in their capabilities who can take their place anywhere—working together for social and community advancement. Every activity is backed and supported by their men, organized into U.F.O.

Barnhart is similar to the first named, quite isolated from main lines—no railway close by, and considerable bush land everywhere, and on first entering their little hall (that serves for worship and all public meetings) you are struck with the originality displayed everywhere. The women are all interested in the school. They have no other organization, all work together for the children.

Emo has a fine big Branch with excellent talent. They are just now putting a fine bronze tablet in memory of their heroes lying in Flanders, with their school at a cost of $300. They are also promoting a movement for a Cottage Hospital, wherein Big Fork is fitting up a room in memory of one of their early settlers who for many years was doctor and nurse and practically all things to the scattered settlers for thirty or forty miles around.

Chapple.—Here the Swedish women come in with the English-speaking class and are working sweetly and truly wonderfully together, each in their varied experience helping the other.

Shenston, a fine body of farm women who have struggled through the pioneering of the country and are now taking up the social side for their young people and co-operating with their school boards for better conditions in the school. The old log school is everywhere giving way to the modern building suited to the times.

Stratton is a well organized Branch, perhaps needing a little encouragement and vision for new work that they are now anxious to go on with.

Pinewood stands out because of the splendid working together of the French-Canadian and English speaking women uniting their efforts most admirably for the betterment of community conditions socially and educationally.

Rainy River, Beaver Branch is just organized since last October. Have over fifty women, going into big things for their town. Aiming for a Community Hall and a Hospital. This last is much needed. They are alive to everything that will better conditions educationally and socially.

Fort Frances District Annual meeting was a revelation to your Eastern delegate. The attendance, somewhere around 300 in the afternoon, would do credit to a much older district in older Ontario. The reports were promptly dispatched and given in fine style. The women of Rainy River District are second to none; splendid executive ability and beautiful harmony was evidenced throughout. The members received with applause the possibilities of dividing the work into East, Centre and West. Everyone felt the advantage of better work and opportunity of extension in each of the three smaller districts that could no longer be met in the one large field. I think I never saw anywhere such enthusiasm and united effort.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 78.)

1847 ROGERS BROS.

SILVERWARE

The Family Plate for Seventy Years

Fine Silverplate for Gifts

IT seems that a wedding would hardly be complete without a gift of silverplate.

The reason is a simple one—silverplate is attractive; it is expected to be of lasting quality; naturally, "1847 Rogers Bros.", the favorite for over seventy years, is chosen.

In this brand, you have an infinite variety of patterns from which to choose new pieces—each one the work of a talented artist.

Those who choose fine silverplate always ask for it by its full name "1847 Rogers Bros."

MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO., Ltd., Hamilton, Ont.
Made in Canada by Canadians and sold by leading Canadian dealers throughout the Dominion.

Old Colony

PALL MALL

Famous Cigarettes

at the Tea Hour

Cork Tips and Plain Ends
1/3 in London,
30¢ here

THIS BEAUTIFUL Black Wolf Set

Black Manchurian Wolf Scarf is of medium quality, glossy, durable and hard wearing. Trimmed with paws, heads and tails and measures about 47 inches in length and about 7 inches wide. Lined with Poplin. M 375. Scarf, delivered to you $8.00

Muff to match is made pillow shape, large and roomy, with cosy, soft bed. It is trimmed with head and tail and lined with satin Venetian. Complete with wrist cord and ring. M 376. Muff, delivered to you $7.95

The above scarf or muff will be sent promptly on receipt of money.

ADDRESS IN FULL AS BELOW

John Hallam Limited

The Largest in Our Line in Canada

(Department No. 1042) TORONTO

Spare Hours

Spare hours are few and far between for the woman who does her own cooking and baking. But the Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet certainly does save a lot of time and work by holding everything in readiness for you when you are baking,—everything within arm's length. It gives you more time to fulfil your social duties in the afternoon and evening.

Find out more about this wonderful kitchen helper by writing for our Booklet "C."

The Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet Co.
Limited
Hanover, Canada

Corns

Lift Right Off!
No Pain at All

Apply a few drops of "Freezone" upon that bothersome corn, instantly it stops hurting; then shortly you lift that sore, touchy corn right off, root and all, without the slightest pain or soreness.

End Any Corn—Anywhere!

Tiny bottles of "FREEZONE" cost but few cents—drug stores

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 73.)

again, though she said she couldn't quite see the point of the joke.

"If I hadn't been so flabbergasted at seeing you here," Hazelton explained, "I would not have been quite so cavalier in my courtesies to the mail-order bride. We have a few photographs of your friend in the House of Harrigan, and I will say she's every bit as charming as we were led to believe by the fat, middle-aged woman who runs the Cupid Exchange. . . . What's the matter, Mollie. Choking?"

"N-n-no. Go on, Billie, I'm all right," said Mollie, weakly, trying hard to suppress her mirth.

"And I take it you've come up with Miss Ingraham to be bridesmaid at her wedding. I suppose this is your annual vacation."

"You always could jump at the right conclusions, Billie."

"There's just one thing where you're wrong, though, Billie," she remarked, gravely. "I'm not going to be bridesmaid, because—because there isn't going to be any wedding. Bessie has seen Harrigan."

"Reason enough," gruffly commented Hazelton. "But what did the girl expect? A matinee idol on a cattle ranch?"

"Not necessarily," defended Miss Aiken. "but this Harrigan is positively the worst specimen I've ever seen, on or off the stage. Now you've got awfully rough clothes, and you're sunburnt and everything, but you look a regular dude alongside Harrigan."

"Oh, this is nothing to the front I can put on when I'm really 'dolled up,'" bragged Hazelton. "I meant to cut quite a dash at the wedding, and now —"

"There isn't going to be any wedding," finished Miss Aiken.

"Harrigan may try to keep me here by force now that there's no wife to replace me," said Hazelton, after a short pause. "But for once he won't get his way."

"Oh, are you leaving?" asked Mollie.

Hazelton nodded. "I've got nearly five hundred acres of my own now, and over a hundred of cattle, so I can see about two thousand dollars from the start. That's enough to live like a lord up here. And I've just finished building a very comfortable house—something after the style of that one I showed you one Sunday in North Vancouver. Do you remember?"

Did she remember? That stab of pain that shot through her heart was the answer. She could not trust herself to speak, so she merely nodded her head.

"Are you going to live—alone—on your ranch, Billie?"

"I hope not," he said gently, "I've been a total abstainer now for eight years and I'm cured, absolutely. I've the start of a good cattle ranch, and there's no reason why I shouldn't settle down and be comfortable, and even happy. I'm sure of the comfort, Mollie, but the happiness depends upon you. Sweetheart, can you say 'Yes' when I ask you to be my wife?"

"Oh, Billie," sobbed the girl, "I was afraid you had found somebody else."

After that what could any reasonable man do?

From a discreet distance Mrs. Frushing and Miss Ingraham saw the passionate embrace.

"Just as I thought," said Mrs. Frushing.

"I always knew that would be the end of it," said Miss Ingraham.

Considering that these two ladies had no previous knowledge on which to base these sage assertions, they were certainly entitled to great credit for the correctness of their deductions.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

O Canada!

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 3.)

may seek to exterminate vermin and foul language and obscene interests, it is impossible that they should altogether succeed, especially in large industrial towns. There is no supervision of the play-ground; no ears are open to the homeward path. Boys particularly are gregarious and natural democrats. Their sense of good fellowship often condones what their finer feelings shrink from. It is an impressionable age, the first school years, an age at which the mind can be stained beyond the power of all the cleansing processes of later times, an age when habits and bearing and behaviour and conversation are all in the making, an age which is apt to give the child its "stamps" for life. Now that this stamp should be gracious and noble is, without doubt, the greatest luxury of civilization, and more to be desired than much gold. We are still a little careless of it. The new automobile costs as much as giving Jack a year at a good private boarding-school would cost, which will do its best to turn him out a little gentleman in the right sense of the term, as well as to educate him along the lines of his own capacities. But we buy the automobile and send Jack to take his chance with the imperfectly combed son of the latest arrival from Southern Europe, whose acquaintance with the less desirable side of life is out of all proportion with his knowledge of English or his ability to keep himself clean in mind or body. Jack takes his chance and so does Jill—and it is immensely to the credit of them both that they come out of it as well as they do. But they might have a better chance, and make—as they would—even more of it. Nothing is too good for the children of Canada—that is the sentiment to snap our fingers with in the face of Demos. If democratic ideals can be attained only by levelling down we should scrutinize them again. And whether, for the sake of politics or uplift or outlook or any other of the pleas which are so popular we continue to run our country on general democratic principles, we should at least make the widest exception possible to our purses in the interests of our children.

Kolton's Klean-Al

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11.)

About the humble house of the chemist all was quiet. A neighbor-woman stood at the kitchen table, stirring some mixture with a spoon. In the next room they could see Minna bending over a couch.

"He is better now," said the woman calmly.

"Then he did not die?" gasped Rose.

"No. The doctor says he had a slight stroke; but may rally, and be pretty well again for a time."

They stood for a little while, uncertain what to do. Then the rich man went forward and stood beside the couch of the old chemist. From pure amazement Minna made room for him.

"I'm sorry, Baretti," he said, grasping a thin hand that lay on the quilt. "We've brought back your piece of paper. No doubt you missed it. I can't say I haven't read it. I can't forget what it contains. It is a wonderful discovery, and will save thousands of dollars. Give it to me, Baretti. I can use it better than anyone else. I will pay you what it is worth. I will try to be honest with you—more honest than I was one other time."

"Give me time to think about it, Kolton," murmured the sick man. "Perhaps we can come to terms. Somehow I don't feel very revengeful this morning. I went almost into the presence of God last night—and that makes revenge look small to a man."

Out in the kitchen two girls were embracing each other with happy tears.

"I'm so glad, Rose!"

"We can be friends now, Minna!"

"Yes," responded Minna, soberly, as was her nature. "and what is better still, our fathers can be too!"

Flowers in the House

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 13.)

to live and thrive, when it wants water, water it just once, and let water moisten the soil well in the pot. It will go then for two or three days, before it will need another watering. By tapping the pot with a piece of stick, you can determine by the ring the conditions of the interior of the pot.

In conclusion, try each year and add something new to your collection of plants. It has often been remarked and it is still the wish of a large number of plant lovers, "How I should like to grow an orchid in my sun room." But they are exotic plants, and need such a high temperature to get the velvety and crystallized flower, which we often see in the florist window. The cultivation of the orchid can come within the reach and easy management of the amateur. The well-known lady slipper orchid (Cypripedium), the barkerias, the laelias and the dendrobium noble, can be regarded as ordinary window plants, only by giving them a little special attention. They demand a temperature of from 60° to 70° and in the winter from 50° to 65°. Twice a week they should be bathed with a little soft-soap added to the tepid water. All plants in the living rooms, and in the sun room should never be watered with direct cold water from the tap, in the fall and winter months; but it should be made tepid by taking the chill off by the addition of hot water. The beautiful gloxinia used to be known as a choice exotic plant, but I have seen the lovely plant flower profusely in a sun room in Canada. They are of a bulbous nature like the cyclamen and can often be purchased from a local florist's establishment.

You might sow two or three pots of the Cupid Sweet peas mixed—about six seeds in a four inch pot. Grow them on a shelf in the sun room. They only grow about six inches in height and make a capital plant for decorative work. Also a few pots of Schianthus can be sown now. This plant has come into great prominence of late years, as it is indeed a very prolific plant, sending up abundance of flowers of an interesting nature. Hence it is often called the poor man's orchid.

How to Make Good Pies

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21.)

sugar and two beaten eggs. Line a deep tin with paste rolled thin, put round a firm edge of crust, fill with custard, and dust with powdered nutmeg. Bake in a very moderate oven until firm to the touch. Another method. Line a deep pie plate with pastry, pinch down the edges, and fill in with custard made as follows. Scald one and one-half cupfuls of milk, add it to two eggs beaten with three tablespoonfuls of sugar, then add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla extract and a pinch of salt. Bake in a moderate oven until firm.

Lemon Pie.—Mix one cupful of sugar or honey with one-fourth cupful of cornstarch, add one cupful of boiling water slowly and cook until thick, stirring frequently. Add one and one-half tablespoonfuls of butter, yolks of two eggs beaten and grated rind and strained juice of one lemon. When the mixture is cold, place on a baked crust. The whites of eggs may be beaten to a stiff froth and folded into the custard when taken from the range, or it may be mixed with two tablespoonfuls of sugar, spread on the top and baked a delicate brown.

Cranberry Pie.—Line pie plate with pastry. Mix together two cupfuls of washed and chopped cranberries, one cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of honey or syrup, four tablespoonfuls of water and one tablespoonful of butter. Cover with upper crust or a lattice of pastry strips; or bake without any upper crust. Decorate with fancy pieces of baked pastry. If desired, one tablespoonful of fine bread crumbs may be added to the mixture. Another method. Mix together one and one-half cupfuls of chopped cranberries, one-half cupful of seedless raisins, one cupful of grated maple sugar, one-fourth cupful of chopped nut meats and one-half cupful of water. Mix and bake in two crusts. This is sometimes called Mock Cherry Pie.

Cocoa Pie.—Mix together one-half cupful of cocoa with one-half cupful of sugar, one-fourth cupful of flour or cornstarch, three yolks of eggs, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt and two cupfuls of milk. Cook in a double boiler until thick, stirring all the time, remove from the fire and when cool add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract. Pour into a baked pie crust, cover with a meringue made by beating the whites of eggs to a stiff froth and adding two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Brown in the oven and serve cold. If desired, two squares of melted unsweetened chocolate may be used in place of the cocoa.

Fish Pie.—The fish for this pie may either be cooked or uncooked according to the kind used. Cod or halibut would be required to be cooked first, but such fish as haddock or flounder may be used raw. Break or cut one pound of fish into small neat pieces and put them on a plate. Season with salt, pepper, red pepper, grated lemon rind and a little lemon juice. Add two tablespoonfuls of thick white sauce and one hard-cooked egg cut into dice, and mix all thoroughly together. Roll out a piece of pastry into a square. Put the fish mixture in the centre of the square, wet the edges of the pastry with cold water and fold them upwards, making them meet and overlap slightly in the centre. Press the joints well together and brush the pie over with beaten egg or milk. Decorate the top with some leaves cut out of any scraps of pastry. Lift the pie on to a greased baking tin and bake in a hot oven until the pastry is thoroughly cooked and of a brown color. Sometimes a little cooked rice is mixed with the fish.

Meat and Potato Pie.—One pound can of meat, four tomatoes, one cupful of cooked beans or peas, seasonings and potato pastry. Any kind of canned meat may be used, beef, mutton, rabbit, etc. Chop it, or cut it into small pieces, removing any superfluous fat, but keeping the sauce or jelly with which it is preserved. If the tomatoes are fresh, wipe, skin and cut them into thin slices, but if in a can, break them or mash them with a spoon. Then make some potato pastry, roll it out to one-half inch in thickness and line a greased pie dish with it. Fill up with the meat, tomatoes and beans, salt and pepper to taste, and if the meat is dry, a little stock or gravy may also be added. Cover the pie with more potato pastry and make a hole in the centre. Brush over with milk, and bake in a moderate oven for one hour. To make the potato pastry, sieve one-fourth pound of cooked potatoes. Rub one-half cupful of butter into one cupful of flour, add the potatoes, a pinch of salt and add enough milk to bind all together, or the yolk of an egg with a little milk may be used. Do not make the pastry too moist, and when it is formed into one lump turn it out on to a floured baking board, and roll out at once, flouring the rolling-pin well. Potato pastry may also be made sweet by using no salt and adding one tablespoonful of sifted sugar.

Veal and Ham Pie.—Cut one pound of veal and one-fourth pound of ham into small pieces, season with salt and pepper, grated lemon rind, a little lemon juice and one tablespoonful of chopped parsley. Mix well and add a little cold water. Pack the meat loosely into a pie dish, piling it high in the centre, and arrange one hard-cooked egg cut in slices in a circle on the top. Then cover with pastry and bake in a hot oven for one and one-half hours. When ready, pour in one-half cupful of stock making a small hole in the centre of the pastry. Serve either hot or cold.

IN TOWN AND COUNTRY

ALL YEAR 'ROUND

CREX

GRASS RUGS

TRADE MARK REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
MADE IN AMERICA

The Ideal Floor Covering

SELECTING the dining-room silverware is a matter of good judgment and pride. You would not think of saying, "I want some knives, forks and spoons." You would either ask for "Sterling" or a well-known brand in plated ware, both of which have stood for generations as the standard of quality.

So in buying grass rugs, whether for the dining-room, living-room, bedroom—no matter what room or porch—they have their logical place in each through all seasons—you should ask for and insist on getting genuine CREX rugs.

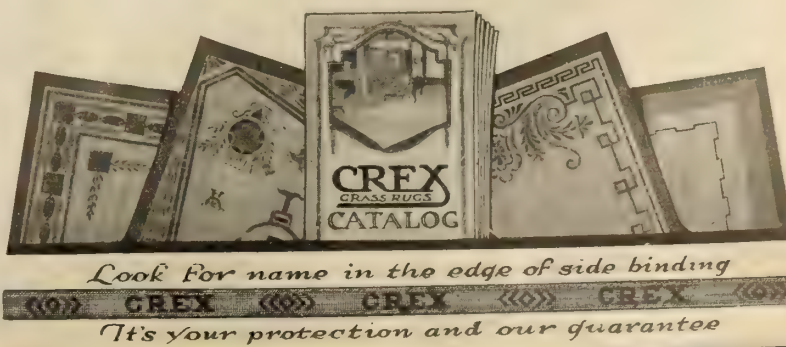

Strong in sanitary and wearing qualities—rich but not offensive in coloring and design—CREX rugs are a joy and comfort to the housewife. No beating required. Dust sifts through to floor. Surface dirt quickly removed with broom or damp cloth and light shaking.

Beware of imitations, some of which are even made of split or crushed straw. Buy CREX rugs, that for more than twenty years have graced the floors in millions of homes—modest and pretentious alike.

CREX is easily said and easily read. The name woven in the side binding provides an ineffaceable identification mark.

Handsomely illustrated catalog showing actual colors and sizes of the three CREX weaves—DE LUXE, HERRINGBONE and REGULAR—mailed free on request.

CREX CARPET CO., 212 Fifth Ave., New York

Look for name in the edge of side binding

CREX CREX CREX

It's your protection and our guarantee

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 75.)

NATIONAL NOTES.

Two provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan, have taken up the "Scholarship idea" as part of the programme of the Women's Institutes and Homemakers Clubs. Alberta began last year, and to Daysland and Verdant belongs the honor of being the first institutes to raise two hundred dollars each for this purpose—for that is the sum required to pay the expenses of a girl for a year at one of the agricultural schools of the province. The Homemakers' Clubs are devoting their efforts, with the ideal in view of getting teachers for the non-English speaking districts.

Mrs. Jean Robson, the national convenor of immigration for the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada has just returned from England where she was in connection with the work of bringing girls to Canada. The plan of the Council of Immigration for Household Service is as follows; the selection and inspection of the incoming women is to be done by women members of the overseas staff of this department; the girls are to travel in parties of 75 accompanied by a woman conducting officer of the department. The institutes can do splendid work in follow-up care of any of the girls who go to communities where there are institutes.

"The second important phase of immigration is the Canadianizing of our citizens," says Mrs. Robson. As more and more one goes into this subject one realizes that it centres upon the foreign mother in her home and seems to bring us back to the old fashioned idea of neighborliness. No greater patriotic work for young Canadian women can be thought of than teaching in some of our non-English speaking schools, where these teachers may become self-supporting home missionaries for the best British ideals. Two books that I would like to suggest for reading and study in the different institutes are "The Immigrant in the Community" by Grace Abbott, and "The New Canadian" by Professor Anderson of Regina.

Women's Institute members throughout Canada will be interested to know that Hon. E. C. Drury, Prime Minister for the Province of Ontario, has expressed his appreciation of the great work of the Women's Institutes—especially Ontario. Premier Drury in speaking at one of the conventions of the Ontario institutes stated: "I did not come here to make a speech but rather to express my good will, my personal appreciation of the great work that the Women's Institutes of Ontario are doing and the greater work I think they may do, and should do in the future. I speak with knowledge, because as you know, I come from a rural neighborhood where there is a Women's Institute; my wife is a member of the Women's Institute and I know of its possibilities as well as of the good work of which the institute is capable. I think I can assure you of this; that our government which has come into power, really on the crest of a moral wave, will stand behind you for all that is best in the work you are doing for the betterment of all conditions—particularly child welfare. I think the fullest latitude should be given the Women's Institute. In the future the work of the Women's Institute so far as our government can help will be expedited and the work will be facilitated."

Miss Mary MacIsaac, superintendent of the Alberta Women's Institutes will be one of the speakers at the convention of New Brunswick Women's Institutes which will be held next October in Moncton.

Mrs. Harold Bayly, a British journalist, is in Canada at the present time studying industrial conditions, especially in relation to women. Mrs. Bayly will visit a number of Alberta Women's Institutes in order to investigate rural conditions and rural life with its advantages and disadvantages to women.

The work of the Federation has been hampered considerably for the lack of funds and the delay of the provinces in getting their donations to the national treasurer. The policy of the Federation in raising funds has been that of voluntary contributions from the various provinces. Some provinces are raising this in proportion to their membership. This proportion ranges all the way from three cents per member to a dollar. The provincial presidents are asked to urge upon their institutes to get their donations in as quickly as possible. As the national president has stated, "This should be one of the first duties of every institute as it is through the national medium that their efforts are culminated and taken on to the larger sphere of a 'National' effort."

The South Oxford Branches of the Women's Institute met for their annual meeting on June 22nd. The following officers were elected: Honorary President, Miss McCrae, Tillsonburg; President, Miss Stronach, Mount Elgin; Vice-President, Mrs. J. B. Reil, Tillsonburg; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Austice, Springford; Delegate to the Federation Convention, Mrs. Downing.

Tuesday, June 8th, was an interesting day in Rutland, B.C. During the afternoon, Drs. Knox and Boyce were busy examining and vaccinating the scholars, going from there to the Methodist church to render kindly service at the first part of the day's health programme, arranged by the Women's Institute. This took the form of a baby clinic at which eleven children were examined, and was pronounced by those well versed in the subject a great success both as to arrangements and results.

The Province of Alberta is giving a thousand dollars toward the fund of the Federated Canadian Institutes. This amount, which is collected by voluntary subscriptions from the different institutes (and there are 277 in Alberta), is to be raised by the end of August.

MORE NEWS FROM BRITAIN.

"Home and Country" is the name of the Women's Institute's paper of the National Federation of the Women's Institutes of Great Britain. It is a very bright and interesting journal and contains everything from notes of Women's Institutes to advertisement of private schools, poultry, apartment at the seaside and a private gamekeeper who undertakes charge of dog during the owner's holidays. The editors of this paper are Miss Alice Williams and Mrs. Nugent Harris.

The annual general meeting of the National Federation of the Women's Institutes was held at the Church House, Dean's Yard, London, recently and there were between 1200 and 1300 women present with the result that it was a very inspiring meeting. The meeting expressed its approval of the policy of the executive in the establishment of an endowment fund and expressed its gratitude to the anonymous donor for the generous gift of £5,000. A strong protest was registered against the entertainer tax. It was embodied in the following resolution—"That this general meeting, representing nearly 2,000 villages and over 100,000 members, strongly protests against the recent interpretation of the new duties (Entertainment tax) Act, given by H. M. Customs and Excise which renders member subscriptions to an institute liable to taxation and must inevitably have disastrous effect upon the W. movement, whose work for the improvement of rural life has been officially recognized and encouraged by His Majesty's government; and further instructs the executive committee of the national federation to take a possible steps without delay, to urge upon His Majesty's government the immediate amendment of the Act in whatever directions it affects the development of rural life."

The British institutes have a splendid showing at the London exhibition which opened recently—the stall showing the variety and individuality of the institutes themselves. West Kent took the prize for the best stall. The Right Hon. H. A. L. Fisher, M.P. president of the Board of Education opened the exhibition on the first day when the Ministry of Agriculture was represented by Dame Meriel Talbot D.B.E., and the chairman of the National Federation of Women's Institutes, the Lady Denman, C.B.E.

Mrs. H. G. Stobart, chairman of the Durham County Federation, and Ingham, Lady Molesworth St. Aubrey, president of the Cornwall County (England) Federation of Women's Institutes, have been enrolled as members of the Order of the British Empire. Mrs. M. E. Hobbs, president of the Oxfordshire county Federation has been made an M. B. E., all for the splendid services in the Women's Land Army.

Make Less Gasoline Do More Work

THAT lightning-like spark of Columbia Hot Shot Ignition Current forces every drop of gasoline to yield its last atom of power.

A Single Dry Battery of Many Cellpower

especially for stationary gas engine ignition in shop, factory, mill, on farms, everywhere; for tractor ignition, all types; to ignite Fords and save prolonged cranking at starting. For motor-boat ignition and lighting use Columbia Waterproof "Multiple" type.

There's a size of Columbia Hot Shot especially to light cellars, garrets, closets, barns, woodsheds and all outbuildings.

A wide variety of sizes for bell and buzzer service in homes, offices and apartment houses.

Demand the genuine Columbia Hot Shot—high cell-power, long life, low cost. At electrical, hardware, auto and general stores—garages—hardware, auto and electrical departments.

Canadian Made for Canadian Trade.

CANADIAN NATIONAL CARBON CO.,
LIMITED
TORONTO

Fahnestock
Spring Clip
Binding Posts on Columbia
Cell No. 6, No
Extra Charge.

Columbia Dry and Storage Batteries

No Wrinkles at Forty

WRINKLES tell others how old you are. They destroy a woman's youthful looks before she knows it.

Those dreadful lines can be avoided and removed with little trouble and slight expense.

Try this simple formula—"A little CREME ELCAYA rubbed gently into the skin; then if you need color, a very little rouge spread carefully over the cheeks before the cream is quite dry; and after that the film of Elcaya face powder over all."

CRÈME ELCAYA

is a delightful, non-greasy, disappearing toilet cream that makes the skin like velvet.

In jars at 35c and 75c

MacLean, Benn & Nelson, Limited
Montreal

Distributors for Canada

The favorite for 20 years.
Sold all over the world.

Made in CANADA by
THE ELCAYA CO. OF CANADA, Limited
James C. Crane, Pres't.
Montreal, Canada

McClary's

Make good stoves and Cooking utensils.

You will like Lantic fine!

For BAKING. For pound, tea and sponge cakes, coffee cakes, angel cake, layer cakes, fruit cakes, cocoanut cakes, pork cakes, nut cakes, short cakes, macaroons and biscuits, crullers, rolls, buns—ALL cakes—Lantic creams quicker with the butter—because it's FINE.

For PRESERVING. For peaches, pears, plums and grapes—if you use Lantic you can smile at the old caution "Let it simmer until all the sugar is dissolved." While yet the fruit retains its beautiful color and attractive form, the preserving is done!—because it's FINE.

FINE in granulation—finer than all other sweeteners in actual use—finest in results obtained. "Fine" has many meanings to the Lantic user! In snowy glistening crystals of pure cane sugar—all sugar and nothing else—Lantic brings you concentrated sweetening. And because each crystal is fine and even, Lantic dissolves at once—it instantly delivers its great sweetening power without hesitation. Of course it goes farther. Of course it costs less. Of course you will like it fine.

In PRESERVING late fruits such as pears, plums and peaches, it eliminates the danger of over-cooking, which robs fruit of its natural color and shape, and some of its flavor.

In BAKING, Lantic creams quickly with the butter—which makes the cake light and dainty. Creaming need not be tedious.

In CANDY-MAKING fine granulation gives candy a soft velvety quality. Most of the highest grade chocolates and finer candies are made with Lantic. The exquisite "velours" of the best chocolate creams comes from Lantic fineness.

In TEA or COFFEE, in fact in all beverages (hot or cold), every Lantic crystal dissolves at once, yielding readily the full sweetening of the purest cane.

ATLANTIC SUGAR REFINERIES, LIMITED
MONTREAL

10 lbs. 21bs. 5lbs. 100 lbs. 5lbs. 2lbs. 20lbs.

Sugar

For BEVERAGES. For tea, coffee, cocoa, lemonade, root beer, orangeade, lemon pop and fruit punch—in fact for all home-made beverages—use LANTIC. There will then be no wasted spoonful left at the bottom of the cup or glass—because it's FINE.

For CANDY-MAKING. For fudge, taffy, butterscotch, caramels and fondants, walnut and maple creams, marshmallows, peppermints, peanut brittle, candied fruits, and of course all icings, Lantic has the call with the best candy makers because it's FINE.

The Hoover lifts the rug from the floor, like this—flutters it upon a cushion of air, gently "beats" out its embedded grit, and so prolongs its life

Immaculate rugs are safe playgrounds for the children. Clean thoroughly to protect childhood's precious health. Beat out embedded dirt and germs. Sweep up all litter that clings. Suction away all loose grime. Do it frequently. Only The Hoover performs these essentials of sanitary cleaning. And it is the largest selling electric cleaner in the world.

The HOOVER

ELECTRIC SUCTION SWEEPER

Write for booklet "How to Judge an Electric Cleaner," and name of nearest dealer

THE HOOVER SUCTION SWEEPER COMPANY OF CANADA, LIMITED
The oldest makers of electric cleaners
HAMILTON, ONTARIO

It BEATS... as it Sweeps
as it Cleans

Made in Canada — by Canadians — for Canadians

LUX

The sheerest batistes and nainsooks, the finest handkerchief linens, voiles and organdies—they can give as good service now as gingham.

It is all a question of how you wash them. Never rub soap into them—never twist or wring them. You can always keep them beautifully clean, as fresh as new—with LUX.

The delicate blues, the pinks, lavenders and bright yellows in linens, lawns, batistes and organdies keep bright and clear when washed with LUX.

There is nothing like LUX. There is no substitute for LUX. LUX is in a class by itself.

So why not wash those dainty things EVERY TIME they are used, in the creamy LUX Suds? 'Twill prolong their life. Do it yourself. It's so easy and pleasant. See the recipe.

How to launder fine fabrics with LUX

Whisk a tablespoonful of LUX into a foamy lather in a gallon of hot water. Let white things soak for a few minutes—then dip them up and down and gently press the rich suds through and through them. Never rub or twist. Rinse in three lukewarm waters and dry in the sun.

For colors—add cold water until the suds are lukewarm. Wash quickly. Rinse in three lukewarm waters and dry in the shade.

A dainty little LUX Recipe Booklet, "The Care of Dainty Clothes," will be sent you on request.

LEVER BROTHERS LIMITED, TORONTO, CANADA

A miniature set of Woodbury's skin preparations sent to you for 25 cents

Send 25 cents for this dainty miniature set of Woodbury's skin preparations, containing your complete Woodbury treatment for one week.

You will find, first, the little booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch," telling you the special treatment your skin needs; then a trial size cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap — enough for seven nights of any treatment; a sample tube of the new Woodbury's Facial Cream; and samples of Woodbury's Cold Cream and Facial Powder; with directions showing you just how they should be used. Write to-day for this special new Woodbury outfit. Address the Andrew Jergens Company, Limited, 5210 Sherbrooke Street, Perth, Ontario.

Any girl can have the charm of "A skin you love to touch"

REMEMBER that your skin is changing every day—each day old skin dies and new takes its place. By giving this new skin as it forms, intelligent care, any girl can have the charm of a fresh, attractive complexion. Begin, now, to give your skin day by day the special care it needs, and see how quickly it will recuperate from past neglect—how wonderfully its own vital power will help you to overcome its defects!

In the little booklet on the care of the skin, which is wrapped around every cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap, you will find special treatments for such common skin troubles as blackheads, blemishes, conspicuous nose pores, etc. These treatments have helped thousands of women to gain a clear, lovely complexion. Get a cake of Woodbury's to-day, and begin to-night the treatment your skin needs. By simple, regular care you, too, can win the charm of "A Skin you love to touch."

A 25-cent cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap lasts for a month or six weeks of any treatment, or for general cleansing use. Sold at all drug stores and toilet goods counters in the United States and Canada.

Woodbury's Facial Soap

CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL

VOL. 17 No 7

Marked TORONTO

NOVEMBER
1920
PRICE
20 CENTS

It is a delightful sense of satisfaction to know there can be no disappointments or failures when Magic Baking Powder is used.

"COSTS NO MORE THAN THE ORDINARY KINDS"

Made in Canada

E. W. GILLETT COMPANY, LIMITED
TORONTO, CANADA

WINNIPEG

MONTREAL

The Armistice Anniversary.

NO Canadian of this generation is likely to forget the eleventh of November, Armistice Day, which meant a rift in the darkest war-cloud that ever stretched above this suffering world. Already we have begun to regard the day as a notable anniversary, although we may differ as to the way in which it should be kept. Mr. Alfred Noyes, the English poet, who has paid more than one visit to Canada, wrote some bitter lines recently on "The Victory Ball" for an American weekly. He regarded with wonder and contempt the crowd of profiteers and women of the vampire type, who cared little what sacrifices were made, so long as their bridge and jazz went on. It was a depiction of coarse rioting, with "the fat wet hand on a fat, wet back." Surely, we can find other ways of keeping Armistice Day, for the dance, while it can be an innocent pastime, is hardly a fitting way of observing our anniversaries, associated with the war. We are not to mark these days with gloomy records, but should they not stand for something more than an opportunity for social festivity?

On this page is reproduced a beautiful memorial, recently unveiled in St. Boniface, Manitoba, in honor of the French soldiers of Western Canada, who died for their country in the Great War. It was fitting that a French sculptor should be chosen for this work, and in the figure is suggested the vigor and the gallantry which belong to the race that held Verdun. Throughout all the years to come, it will remind the people of the Prairie Province that their freedom and security have been dearly bought, that they owe eternal homage to the brave men in the Deathless Army, who gave their lives that righteousness might prevail. The eleventh of November will always be a memorable day in the Lands of the Allies—and may it be worthily kept!

Our Recent Correspondence.

THE writer of the articles which have been published under this heading is a Canadian by birth, who has lived for some years in England and whose experiences in many lands have not dimmed her interest in the land of her nativity nor her concern that its future "may copy fair its past." For the September issue the letter was delayed, and a contribution on the University girl by another writer was used in its place. The ship finally arrived with the "O Canada" letter and the intimation that the writer, owing to pressure of many activities, would be unable to send us any further articles for some time, but hoped to let us hear from her again in less hurried times. We have received from many sources the assurance that the articles have proved both interesting and stimulating. That which considered the shortcomings of the Canadian voice was especially noted and a faithful reader said the other day:

"That article was only too true. I attended a meeting lately where several Canadian women spoke. The material was good, quite above the average public speech, but the manner of delivery and the high-pitched voices of the speakers spoiled what they had to say. It is a great pity that our schools do not pay more attention to voice production. I don't mean 'elocution', as it used to be called, which degenerated into mouthing

They Are Asleep

By Edith Moss.

They are asleep—
Who rest beneath the fields
Of Flanders, where the blood-red poppies grow.
Though through the land the summer
breezes blow,
They are asleep.

They are asleep—
No sound disturbs them here.
The poppies wave in silence o'er a heart
Stilled now forevermore in perfect rest;
They are asleep.

They are at rest—
While time rolls on to God;
And through our span of life God helps us keep
The Faith for which they died, that they may sleep
And be at rest.

They are at rest—
While we fight on with Life.
Their work is o'er, their troubles have had cease,
Their hands are folded now in calm, still peace;
They are at rest.

FRENCH SOLDIERS OF WESTERN CANADA HONORED

This memorial to the French soldiers of Western Canada who died for their homeland in the Great War was recently unveiled in St. Boniface, Manitoba. It is the work of Eugene Benet, the Parisian sculptor. The figure is seven feet high and, with the base and pedestal, will reach a height of twenty-one feet. The inscription on the base reads: "To the French soldiers of the West who died in the Great War (1914-1920)."

and was accompanied by too many gestures. I mean the scientific study of how the voice may be made an effective expression of thought and feeling, how it may be controlled and most artistically used. Listen to the Canadian boy or girl who chatters to her friends. You hear: 'Whatcha gon' do? Gotta stay home t'night?' There is no distinctness in their speech and no distinction in their tone or modulation."

This may be rather sweeping, but it is not pleasant to listen to the Canadian voice—unless, indeed, it comes from Halifax or Fredericton. When we consider our political leaders, however, even the critic will admit that they are gifted with tongues. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had a silvery voice, Sir Robert Borden has a pleasing note and our present Premier has a voice which is both resonant and melodious.

The Canadian Voice.

THE voice is a mere trifle, some impatient reader will say. That is quite a mistake, for a soft answer turneth away wrath and a pleasant voice will often soothe a distracted household. Mr. Arnold Bennett, who writes more fluently and frequently than is good for him, sent forth an excellent and appealing booklet, "The Human Machine," in which he pled with us to be more careful in the use of the voice, and warned us especially against what he called "The note of friction," which is so likely to creep into the higher register and create an unpleasantness. The state of the nerves can often be ascertained by the presence of this note of friction—and it can be avoided, if we will only be on guard against its coming—or, rather, its tarrying. As a proof of the melodious possibilities of the Canadian voice, we have the existence of excellent choral organizations. The Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto, for instance, has been hailed for years as the champion organization of its kind on the continent. New York, Boston and Chicago critics have been unanimous in their favorable verdict. So, the Canadian voice, under discipline, is capable of the finest achievement, but it is well for us all to realize that the Canadian "speaking voice" is in need of improvement. There is little doubt that women are going to take more part in public speaking in this country, as the after-the-war years go by. Wherefore, such details as intonation, modulation and pitch are to be considered, not only as an improvement to social intercourse but also as a public advantage. It is not necessary that the Canadian girl should be able to recite "Curfew Shall Not Ring To-Night," but it is highly desirable that she should possess a pleasing voice and that she should be able to express herself briefly and effectively.

The trouble, in our public schools, in the matter of voice training, is that so many pupils regard correct inflection or pronunciation as affectation. We do not admire those who go to extremes in the attempt to attain good English standards; but we feel that there should be no ridicule of those whose aim is to cultivate correct habits of speech and to eliminate the harshness which has too often marred the Canadian voice. In our homes and schools the work of making the voice a pleasing and effective means of expression is carried on—and may the Canadian of to-morrow be a joy to hear!

A booklet of the most famous skin treatments ever formulated

You will find complete treatments for all the commonest skin troubles, as well as scientific advice on the skin and scalp, in the booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch," which is wrapped around every cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap. Among the treatments given are:

BLACKHEADS—A confession

BLEMISHES—How to get rid of them

CONSPICUOUS NOSE PORES—How to reduce them

ENLARGED PORES—How to make your skin fine

OILY SKIN AND SHINY NOSE—How to correct them

SLUGGISH SKIN—To rouse it

TENDER SKIN—The new treatment and many other treatments

To what type does your skin belong?

IS your skin dry or oily—sensitive or resistant—fine or large-pored?

Study your skin and find out to just what type it belongs—then give it the care that suits its individual needs.

Remember—different types of skin need different care. If your skin is extremely sensitive—then it needs a very special form of cleansing which, instead of irritating and coarsening its delicate texture, will render it firmer and more tolerant. If it is pale and sallow—then it needs to be roused and stimulated.

For every skin condition there is a special treatment which, if followed regularly and faithfully each day, will help you overcome the faults in your complexion and gain the smooth, clear, flawless skin you long for.

Begin, now, to take care of your skin in the way that especially suits its particular type—see what a fresh, individual charm you can give it by this care. In the little booklet that is wrapped around every cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap, you will find careful and scientific directions on the care each type of skin needs. Study the treatment recommended for your skin and begin using it to-night. In a week or ten days you will notice a marked improvement in your complexion—the gradual perfecting of your skin by natural methods, which is the special achievement of Woodbury's Facial Soap.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is sold at all drug stores and toilet goods counters in the United States and Canada. Get a cake to-day—begin, to-night, the treatment your skin needs. A 25-cent cake lasts for a month or six weeks of any treatment, and for general cleansing use.

A skin that is sensitive or easily irritated needs special care. Consult the little booklet that comes with each cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap and learn the right treatment for this type of skin.

"Your treatment for one week"

A beautiful little set of the Woodbury skin preparations sent to you for 25 cents

Send 25 cents for this dainty miniature set of Woodbury's skin preparations, containing your complete Woodbury treatment for one week.

You will find, first the little booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch," telling you the special treatment your skin needs; then a trial size cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap—enough for seven nights of any treatment; a sample tube of the new Woodbury's Facial Cream; and samples of Woodbury's Cold Cream and Facial Powder, with directions telling you just how they should be used. Write to-day for this special new Woodbury outfit. Address: The Anderson-Jerrens Co., Limited, 5211 Lakeshore St., Perth, Ontario.

The Closing Chapters in a Story Which Has No Dull Moments

A Mail Order Bride

P.W. Luce

Illustration of a woman sitting at a desk, looking at a mail order form. The form is titled "A Mail Order Bride" and includes fields for "Name", "Address", "City", "State", "Zip", "Color", "Size", and "Total". It also has a section for "Use Separate Order Form For Merchandise, Pages 475 to 542, On Which We Do NOT Pay Shipping Charges".

Illustrated by H. W. COOPER

SYNOPSIS OF FORMER CHAPTERS.

Frank Hayes, the partner of Cory Harrigan on a ranch in Northern British Columbia, writes to a Cupid Exchange in Vancouver, with a view to securing a "mail order bride" for Cory. Mollie Aiken (the head of the Exchange) persuades her friend, Bessie Ingraham, to journey to the ranch, with the intention of becoming Mrs. Harrigan. When they arrive, after a pleasant journey, thanks to Tony, the vivacious driver, they are surprised at the roughness of the ranch, and Bessie refuses to marry Harrigan. In the meantime, the post-master, Bill Laflamme, has lost in a severe fight, because he refuses to marry the wife Sam Floyd has selected, and prefers the sister to h'Emma Floyd, Sam's favorite daughter. Mollie finds that Frank Hayes is really Billie Hazelton, a former lover, who has given up his devotion to alcohol, and has made a successful assistant to Cory. Mrs. Frushing (Jo) has the most civilized house in the neighborhood and acts as "first aid" to the two girls from Vancouver.

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN.

H'EMMA PLAYS THE MOUTH ORGAN.

"HO, Jo," shouted Harrigan, from the open door of the barn, "come and have a look at the colt. He's sure looking fine."

"Coming," shouted back Mrs. Frushing, adding to herself, "But we're going to talk about other things than colts, Harrigan."

She found Harrigan alone in the barn. All the other men were congregated around the shack, discussing the day's startling events, but these held no interest for Harrigan. What was a mere fight, or even a jilting, compared to the illness of the best colt on the ranch?

Cory had just finished strapping the blankets on the horse when Mrs. Frushing entered. He leaned back lazily against the stall, thoughtfully chewing a wisp of hay.

"You can believe me, Jo," he commenced, "this colt is lucky to be alive. I've worked over him..."

"Never mind the colt, Cory," interrupted Mrs. Frushing. "I didn't come here to look at the colt. I came to tell you a few things that you'd never discover for yourself in a thousand years. What are you going to do about this crazy girl now she's decided not to marry you? She's spent all her money to get up here, and she'll want to go back to the coast as quick as she can."

"No money was to be paid to anyone until after the wedding," explained Cory, passively, "and of course me and Frank never considered having to ship back unsatisfactory goods at my expense. But if she's broke I won't see her stuck. I'm willing to pay her freight back, even if she does show poor judgment."

"Don't ever think she shows poor judgment," snapped Mrs. Frushing. "If you could see yourself as others see you, Cory, you'd think she showed darned good judgment. Why, man alive, don't you ever realize that you look like a Bohunk in those rags you're wearing, and that you're pigging along like a miser in a miserable little shack when you can afford decent clothes and a good house? Don't you ever think of yourself at all, or is your mind always on your ranch and your horses and your cattle?"

Harrigan was almost amused at the woman's tirade, but not the slightest bit annoyed.

"That's just it, Jo," he answered. "I just won't bother about a house, or clothes, or cooking, or anything like that. That's a woman's work, and that's why I decided to get married when Frank said he'd pull out. I'd just as soon wear fine clothes and live in a big house, but I'd just as soon wear these clothes and live in this shack, too. It's all the same to me."

"But why in the name of common-sense didn't you pick out some woman from this country, instead of getting that—that parasol from Vancouver?"

"Didn't we look the whole country over? There wasn't one that would suit me that I would suit, or versey versey, as Frank says. The only woman that came near filling the bill's got a long distance husband somewhere in the States." Harrigan nudged Mrs. Frushing slyly in the ribs at this elephantine jest.

"Not now, Cory. Frushing died three months ago. And you may well believe me, I'm not having any monument erected over his resting place."

"Well, isn't that fine!" remarked Harrigan.

"How lucky that girl bucked me off!"

"Lucky for her, all right," agreed Mrs. Frushing.

"Oh, I'm not thinking about her," remarked Harrigan, complacently. "I was thinking how easy it would be to run the two ranches as one concern."

"What two ranches?" demanded Mrs. Frushing in amazement.

"Why, yours and mine, of course," patiently explained Harrigan. "All the same, Jo, I don't quite like the way that colt coughs. The two places will make a dandy proposition."

"What the devil have you got on your mind now, Cory? What do you think I'm going to do?"

"Why, marry me this afternoon, of course. If you'd told me two or three months ago Frushing had died I'd have cancelled this Vancouver order right away. You'll do ever so much better—you won't need any training at all. Hey, where're you going, Jo?"

For Mrs. Frushing had stalked out of the barn in high dudgeon. But she did not go to the shack, nor did she join any of the groups outside. Instead, she took the trail that led to the meadows, and in her solitary walk she coolly and calmly reviewed Cory Harrigan's proposal. She quite understood it was a business proposition, purely and simply, for tender emotions could form no part of Cory's make-up. Incidentally, Mrs. Frushing had her romance; she had married in haste and repented with a horsewhip. She was more worldly-wise now.

WHEN Mrs. Frushing returned to the shack she found the company grouped around Bill Laflamme, who had just announced his intention of making a second speech.

"Listen, Mr. Judge and everybody, you too, Sam Floyd," Bill was saying. "I tell you some tam' ago dat I'm goin' to marry my li'l Alice. You say 'No.' Den we fight, and lak' always you bus' me up. I know you could bus' me up, but dat don' make no difference. Now I got a black eye an' a beeg nose and two teet' not dere, nobody can say I'm scare'. I tak' my mede-seeen. But all de sam', I got to marry my li'l Alice. She lak' me pretty good, and she's old enough to do what she lak'. Dat's right, Mr. Judge? So we goin' to get married right now, and, Sam Floyd, if you try to butt in again, here are two special po-lesman all ready to bus' you up."

Much to the relief of the two Fraser boys, whose rate of remuneration was fixed by a paternal government at three dollars per day, scrap or no scrap, Floyd bowed to the inevitable, and lac-onically gave his consent to the union.

Harrigan was almost amused at the woman's tirade, but not the slightest bit annoyed.

"Go to it," was his parental injunction and benediction.

"Things are shaping up fine," commented Mary Parsons to Mrs. Frushing. "I guess we'll have a double barreled wedding after all. Old Man Fraser's been fixing up the papers for Frank Hayes and this Mollie girl—she's a pretty swift worker, believe me, meets Hayes and marries him all within a couple of hours."

"Swift worker nothing," answered Mrs. Frushing. "I saw them meet, and I'll bet it was old stuff to them. Miss Ingraham doesn't know any more about it than we do, but it's a cinch Miss Aiken gave Hayes the mitten long ago, and has been so sorry ever since she isn't taking a second chance of letting him get out of her sight until she has him safe."

"She'll find him pretty easy to handle," remarked Mary. "Frank's not at all a bad sort. I'd lots sooner have him than Harrigan, if I had my choice."

"Your advice is not being asked," snapped Mrs. Frushing. "All right, I'm coming." This last in answer to a "Ho, Jo, come here," from Old Man Fraser, standing in the door of the shack.

"Cory's just told me to make out a license for you," said the J. P.-parson. "Has he discussed it with you at all, or is he taking things for granted as usual?"

"He's taking a lot for granted," answered Mrs. Frushing, "but at that I'm willing to make a deal with him if he signs a few deeds first. He can manage my ranch, but I handle all the cash and retain complete ownership. If that suits Cory, we'll make a team."

"You can draw up them papers," remarked Harrigan, from inside the cabin. "I guess anything Jo wants will be fair enough."

"Would you like to know what I think of the two of you?" inquired Old Man Fraser, caustically.

"It don't make any difference," answered Harrigan. "We're both old enough to know better."

"You're only a justice of the peace, not a lawyer," seconded Mrs. Frushing, "so don't go scattering advice around. Come in and help me fix up these documents instead."

A WEDDING is an event in the northern country. A double wedding is almost unheard of, but a triple wedding—not one of the principals or guests had ever dreamed that such a thing could happen in the Cariboo. Small wonder then that Mrs. Frushing had to be dictator of ceremonies, in addition to her own important part as a principal. She grouped the sextette in proper order, disregarding Bill Laflamme's demur that on such an auspicious occasion the men should stand together, presumably for mutual moral support, and the women in another group. The postmaster had been inclined to protest, and had appealed to Old Man Fraser to look in his Bible for explicit directions.

"All you'll find in the Bible, Bill," cut in the mistress of ceremonies, "is that marriages are not made in heaven."

"Which is very true," murmured all that was left of the Cape Bretoners, admiringly.

"Also," added Bessie Ingraham, casting a critical eye around the hall—home that might have been hers—"that it is a good thing for man to be alone. I know St. Paul said that, and he must have known, for he was a bachelor. But he never lived in a place like this, or he couldn't have been a saint."

Though averred on this point, the unrepres- sible Bill was positive on another. He had been present at only a few weddings that was true, but at every one there had been music, and this must not be an exception. Bill constituted his sister-in-law to be the discarded h'Emma, as the festival orchestra.

H'Emma was white. She always was. She had come to Harrigan's ranch that morning fully ex- pecting to be Mrs. Laflamme before the sun set. The gory turn of events which had resulted in her relegation to the background in favor of her sister had not visibly affected her. H'Emma didn't care, whatever her father decided would suit her. He had always arranged everything which concerned her, and it never occurred to the young girl to oppose his wishes. Perhaps if she had lived less in the backwoods, and been more in the company of other young people, h'Emma might have known something of Women's Rights. Perhaps not. For, intellectually, h'Emma was not a giant. She never would fill a niche in the Hall of Fame. But in the work-a-day world in which she lived, h'Emma could always be de- pended upon to do something useful, even though humble.

So, to the stirring tune of "I'm Afraid to go Home in the Dark," played on a seventy-five cent mouth organ, Old Man Fraser proceeded with the ceremony. For a time all was plain sailing until the parties had to make the usual responses.

"Wilt thou, Cornelius, take this woman, Jose- phine, to be thy wedded wife. . . ."

"Sure," rumbled Harrigan, "that suits me."

"Wilt thou, William. . . ."

"I tink you got to use my right name dere, Mr. Judge," Bill interrupted.

"The devil you say," protested the parson. "I can't twist my tongue around that name you told me yesterday. I've long since forgotten what little French I ever knew, and you'll just have to be married as plain Bill or William."

"But it won't stick, mebbe, Mr. Judge," plead- ed Bill. "You just got to make a stab at it."

"Nothing doing," was the curt answer.

"Then sing it, or whistle it, or," broke in Floyd, in a burst of inspiration, "Spell it."

So Old Man Fraser overcame the linguistic difficulty by varying the question, prompted by the interested party:

"Wilt thou, G-U-I-L-L-A-U-M-E, take this woman, Alice. . . ."

To which Guillaume replied with a triumph- ant "You can jes' bet I will, Mr. Judge."

Miss Aiken avoided a possible confusion of names in her case by stating that she had been christened Emmeline, and was now willing to marry William Hazelton, but not a non-existent Frank Hayes. It was at this stage that Harrigan made things a little clearer by explaining that he always called his hired men "Frank," and also that he had shortened Hazelton to Hayes at a time when a name was a matter of little moment to the stranger he had befriended.

One wedding ring, provided by Mrs. Frushing, had to serve for the three couples. Mr. Laflam- me expressed amazement at his lack of foresight in this matter, and was hardly consoled when told by the more experienced persons that such an omission was by no means unusual on the part of a bridegroom.

The ceremony over, wholesale congratulations followed, while h'Emma continued playing rag- time on the mouth organ. Her repertoire was not great, but it was lively. As a concession to the solemnity of the occasion, she twice played "Onward, Christian Soldiers." It was the only hymn she knew.

Then came the wedding feast, Harrigan's beans and sourdough bread being unceremoniously thrust aside by that efficient cateress, Mary Par- sons, under whose direction the famous Stude- baker table supported a repast such as had never been dreamed of in that shack.

Mary had intended to devote all her attention to the guests, but at the last moment she vigor- ously re-arranged things to make a place for her- self at the table. In answer to a mild protest from her employer, Mary snapped:

"You don't suppose I'm going to let anyone sit down thirteen to a wedding supper, do you, and have somebody spill the salt and die before the year's out?"

The guests shuddered at the narrow escape.

After supper the two Vancouver girls had a few minutes' private conversation.

"I've been talking things over with Mrs. Frush- ing—I mean Mrs. Harrigan," said Miss Ingraham, "and she's very kindly offered to finance me to start a Palace of Sweets in Soda Creek. I'd rather stay up here than go back to Vancouver just now. Later on, I don't know. . . ."

"Things have turned out very different from what we expected, haven't they?" remarked Mollie.

"They certainly have," assented her friend. "I don't want to add anything to what I told you this afternoon, just after we met Harrigan. . . ."

"Thank you, dear. You didn't overlook any- thing worth while."

"—But I'd like to know, now that we've seen the inside of this hutch, why Harrigan thought it necessary to tell such awful lies about the fur- niture and everything. You didn't make that up, did you, Mollie?"

Mrs. Hazelton shook her head vigorously.

"It's all true, Bessie," she explained. "Yes it is. Wait till I tell you. Billie was explaining it to me, and I think I understand it all now. It seems that Harrigan's amanuensis is an advanced Euphuist, who inclined to Hyperbole. Billie says that in the final analysis we would find that the writer did not depart from the fundamental truth."

"Is this what-d'you-call-it a religion, or a drug habit, or what?" inquired Miss Ingraham.

Her friend looked at her in amazement: "Why, honey, don't you know?"

"Oh, well, it doesn't matter now, anyway. I'll have a toney little place of my own at Soda Creek pretty soon," answered Bessie.

"If it wasn't so slangy," laughed Mrs. Hazelton, "I'd say 'heavy on the Tony'." Then she ducked.

Late that evening the men left the shack to the women and proceeded to the hay mow, where Cory Harrigan swung a pitchfork vigorously for a couple of minutes. As the men dug themselves into the opened hay for their night's sleep, only Guillaume Laflamme had any comment to make on this unusual way of commencing a honey- moon.

"A lot of tam's I dream of my weddin' night," he said to his seven bedmates, "but nevaire in my dream do I dream dat my wife sleep wit' five oder women in a shack fifty yard' away, and I sleep wit' seven oder men in a haystack, and me all bus' up. . . . Mr. Judge, don' put your foot on my stom-mok lak' dat, please. . . . An', by gar, now I come to tink of it, I tink it's yesterday I got to go to Soda Creek for de mail. Oh, well, de gover'ment won't mind if I tak' a li'l holiday jes' to get married. De mail can wait dis week lak' it waits every oder week. . . . Say, de way everybody grab a wife to-day, I'm t'inkin' I'm lucky somebody don' grab my li'l Alice, and den mebbe I've got to marry h'Emma after all. . . . Mr. Judge, your foot—t'ank you. . . . Dat was some fight we had, eh Sam? Wat's de mattaire, You wan' to sleep. . . . No, I won' shut up; I'm married man now an' I spik when I can. Excep' dat I got two teet' not dere. I'd sing you a nice little French song about a weddin' night not at all lak' dis."

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN.

A DAY JUST LIKE ANY OTHER.

SIX thirty! Outside all was dark, silent and cold. Not a pitchy blackness, for the white mantle of a newly fallen snow lightened the night, though not sufficiently even to distinguish outlines at a short distance. In the stillness one could vaguely guess at the house fence rails shivering under the crystal bandage the snow- flakes had placed so softly upon them—a tremb- ling ridge that could not survive the morning's activities. The well-worn trails from the house to the barn and to the water hole were hiding, but not hidden, under the fresh snow, for only a couple of inches had fallen since evening.

On the wall, close to the door of the shack, hung a thermometer, cheap and presumably un- reliable. The mercury, perhaps by force of habit but possibly because such was the case, marked thirty below zero. Later the day would warm up, maybe thirty or forty degrees. But to-mor- row the thermometer would tell the same tale at half past six, unless to-morrow happened to be a Sunday, when it would be colder, for a change.

A mile or so down the meadow a coyote howled. A long-drawn-out lugubrious howl that informed the continent of North America that the wild dog was hungry, cold, miserable, alone, friendless, dis- appointed, despondent, and out of tune with the infinite. The howl expressed all this, and more. It started on the high note, and worked up and up, and lasted a long time before it was half way through. The melody of agony was taken up by another coyote five miles east, another far to the south, and yet another and another. The world awoke to a realization that it had been a poor night for coyotes, but no sympathy was wasted on the "four-footed friars in gray," as Bret Harte called the brutes in better poetry than the subject deserves.

The hungrier coyotes become, the better pleas- ed men are. But, unfortunately, coyotes do not die of starvation. They may be shot by good marksmen, or trapped by experts, or burned in a forest fire, or killed by accident, or may die of old age, but they cannot starve. They will live for weeks on the memory of a shrivelled rabbit, and grow thin in retrospect. And, smarting under the urge of a million fleas who will not let them die, they ceaselessly forage for food—a rabbit, a dead cow or horse, a young calf—anything that will stop the pangs of hunger and provide the wherewithal for a gorge that may be the only meal worth while for still more hungry weeks.

The coyote's howl has not set the world in mo- tion, but nevertheless it is. Inside the shack someone is stirring—shuffling, rather, and evi- dently fussing with kindling and a jack-knife in a cold attempt to start a fire. Soon a thin curl of smoke rises from the chimney, indicating that the warming up of the house has started in real ear- nest.

Presently a man comes out, carrying a lantern, and plods his way to the barn, scuffling the snow with his rubbers and thick German socks. A pair of brown overalls, a heavy sheepskin coat, a cloth cap, and a pair of wool-lined leather mitts complete his visible clothing.

The barn is fifty yards from the house, close to a small stream dignified by the name of Crystal

Creek. The man first goes to this creek, breaks the surface ice with a picket so the cattle and horses may drink, then proceeds to turn the animals out of the barn while he performs the first "chore" of the day, cleaning up the stalls, in a vigorous manner, partly because he is natu- rally energetic and partly because it speeds the circulation of the blood. The job does not take long for only two milk cows and four horses—a work team and two saddle ponies—are kept un- der shelter. The balance of his stock is sleeping in that piece of timber which is becoming dimly visible across the pasture.

The barn cleaned hay is piled into the mangers and the animals having sparingly assuaged their thirst at the icy waters of Crystal Creek return to their stalls and eat greedily. Even a cow feels warmer with a full stomach, though warmth is a comparative term that is possibly out of place in a barn where boiling water would cool and freeze in twenty minutes.

Chores accomplished, the rancher returns to the house. Two water pails are on the doorstep, mute evidence that some other person is up and about, and has evidently reasoned that one trail- ing of snow into the kitchen before breakfast will be enough. The person must be a woman; men are not so particular about trifles.

So a trip to the water hole is in order, which means breaking the old trail anew. The water hole is in the centre of the creek, and in summer is approached by a precarious log that is forever threatening to give up the job, but forever de- laying dissolution. In winter the log is fast in the ice, unused and unnecessary.

Because Crystal Creek, except during freshet time, is only three or four inches deep, a hole has been dug in the bed of the stream and a large box sunk in, so that a pailful of water may easily be dipped out. That is, in summer. In winter, the water is chopped up with an old axe and taken out in chunks before the liquid can be reached with the bucket. This system of water service is somewhat slower than the city tap, but it also has its advantages. It enriches no plumb- ers, nor does it cause the rate collector to be told to call again. But it does sometimes shatter tra- dition, as for instance, when the good man is re- quested to "bring up an armful of water, so you won't have to go back again," an armful being about equal to two gallons, depending on just how the ice splits and how thick it happens to be that day. But usually, as on this occasion, pails and not arms are the carrier agency.

Arrived back at the house, the pails were set down while snow was brushed from footwear and socks. Then the man entered the kitchen, now cheerfully warmed by the roaring fire in the range. A woman was bending over the stove, busy with the cooking of the breakfast.

"How cold this morning, Billie?" she asked without turning round.

"Thirty below, as usual, Mollie," he answered, busy stripping for a wash before sitting down at table. "Breakfast about ready?"

"Just about," answered Mollie, "so look alive. And don't be so free with the soap. We're run- ning awfully short."

BY which scrap of conversation it will readily be seen that Frank Hayes, alias Billie Hazel- ton, and Mollie, nee Aiken, have become quite domesticated in the five months that have elapsed since their wedding in the Harrigan shack. Life has been running fairly smoothly lately, and they have long since become used to each other's whims and fancies. Mollie knows a great deal more about ranch life than she did on that Au- gust morning, when Mrs. Frushing introduced her to a few of the mysteries of the country, though, truth to tell, she still has a great deal to learn. There are things her husband some- times tells her, that no one can teach her until she does otherwise, a remark which is by no means so obscure in speech as in print. Elabo- rated, it means that there are certain daily tasks on the ranch that can only be performed in one way—not by the wildest flight of the imagination does anyone suppose that any person would pro- ceed on a different tack—then some Mollie comes on the scene and adds to the merriment of the community.

The interior of the shack does not require a lengthy description. It is divided into two rooms, one a large kitchen and the other a small bed- room. The walls are papered with four thick- nesses of newspapers. In deference to the artistic taste of the owners, careful selection of the pages has kept away flamboyant advertisements which so soon become annoyingly obtrusive; the small print of the news pages is so much more restful to the eye. The ceiling—also newspapered—has here and there a suspicious sag that reveals to the initiated that things are not what they seem. The ceiling is but burlap stretched under light poles equidistant from beam to beam, and toe-nailed to the walls. In truth, the ceiling is a great concession to Mollie, as her lord and master had not provided for such a superfluity when he made plans for the house which he little thought would shelter a wife as well as himself.

There is not much furniture; a table, four chairs, a sideboard, a couple of cupboards, a long box masquerading as a settee, and an easy chair—another concession to the lady. There are a few pictures on the wall. All the furniture has been manufactured by Billie, who is rather proud of the chairs with their netted rawhide seats and backs, and who stoutly disputes Mollie's asser- tion that the easy chair is improved by the ad- dition of two cushions made of flour sacks which

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 62.)

A Story Showing the Power of a Tragic Past

THE HANDS OF ESAU

By BEATRICE REDPATH

ILLUSTRATED BY P. C. SHEPPARD

Mavis noticed how Rodney Tennant paused on the threshold, regarding her quizzically, while frowning upon the black severity of her widow's attire.

"I had forgotten that was necessary," he said, as he came forward into the room. And then as he faced her across the width of fireplace his tone expressed all his pent up impatience. "Must we give up a year, a whole year, Mavis, to the mere task of forgetting him?"

"A year, Rodney?" Mavis repeated, her head resting against the rose-colored back of her chair, "but can one forget in that time?"

She turned grave eyes upon him and felt a suddenly achieved balance in his mere physical presence, a balance which she had sorely lacked of late. The sudden and welcome release had come attended by crowding memories of the dead man, memories which tormented and with which she became obsessed. She had struggled hard to forget, she had striven to obliterate from her mind all thought of Wyndham Andrews. But she had not succeeded. Even now she pressed her fingers down upon her eyelids to shut out the hateful vision of his face, which rose so constantly before her.

"Oh," she exclaimed, from the depth of a profound weariness, "sometimes I feel as though I could never forget, as though he had left his imprint on me forever, as though his memory would coil up in my mind like a serpent, ready to spring, ready to bury its fangs and poison all that is pleasant."

She paused, shuddering at the impression created by her own words, till Rodney's voice came, dominating and reassuring.

"I will show you how to forget," he said with great gentleness, "I will give you other things to remember."

His voice seemed to imbue her with a fresh courage. He would teach her how to forget. Mavis lifted her eyes to send a flash of gratitude across the intervening firelit space.

"You've given me so much already," she said gratefully, "and yet still I can't forget, Rodney," and she leaned one elbow on her knee and sought for reassurance in his face. "Can one live six such years and yet come through unscathed? It seems to me, sometimes, that no matter what you may put into my life, those years with Wyndham will always be there, a dark morass in the back of my mind."

Rodney Tennant gave a glance about the long room, so pleasant with its atmosphere of comfortable living, and then looked back to Mavis's face, to the blue shadows beneath her eyes, full evidence of the strain which she had been undergoing.

"This place," he said emphatically, "is horrible for you. It's simply haunted by memories. You must get away from here at once. You must not allow your mind to dwell on what is past."

Wyndham Andrews is dead and all the evil he brought into your life is dead with him.

You must forget, Mavis, you must forget. Such as Wyndham Andrews was are not meant to be remembered."

It was as simple as that to Rodney. Mavis almost smiled at his simple and easy adjustment of her mental attitude. She must forget. She was only too willing to forget. Rodney had no conception of how she had striven to this purpose. A man like Rodney, practical and without imagination, could not understand the vagaries of her brain. And she did not want him to understand. She would defeat this thing herself, these memories which threatened to rob her of the present. But she must have a little time, just a little time in which to do so.

"Memory," she said slowly, her eyes drawn to a flaming log in the fireplace, "is so beyond one's control. It creeps to one's side at night, a hood over its head, and suddenly stands out in all its stark horror." She paused, and then with an involuntary shudder went on in a stifled tone. "Things come and cry to me in the night. . . . creatures he has injured. . . . their faces come to me out of the darkness. . . . tears in their eyes. . . . a curse for him on their lips!"

"Mavis!" Rodney Tennant rose quickly and took both her hands in his, forcing her to lift her face. "You are not to talk nor think in this way. Wyndham Andrews is dead. . . . forever! And now you are to begin life all over again. You are going to forget him. Promise me that you will never speak in this way again. It is bad for you, Mavis, terribly bad. Besides, we have other things to think of, haven't we?"

Mavis nodded as Rodney released her hands with a firm pressure. Her glance rested upon a shaft of sunlight which had pierced through the half-closed blinds and lay like a broad bright ribbon across the floor. It was as though some of the golden miracle of that Autumn day was creeping inside, tentatively, with small shafts and tender stealings, touching the gilt of frames, lighting up the backs of bindings, picking out the high lights upon a bit of brass or rich colored pottery, dispelling the gloom which had hung over the house for so long; even to that upper chamber where the dead had lain. The house was to be swept and garnished, swept clear of all hateful memories, garnished with a sweet cleanliness of living.

Mavis continued sitting beside the fire for some time after Rodney had left, watching the slow consuming flames eating into the logs, while her thoughts recurred to the visit she had received from her lawyer earlier in the afternoon. She had not spoken of this to Rodney. She had omitted to tell him that Wyndham had left his entire fortune to her, for her inclination was to refuse the money. She wanted nothing which should come to her through Wyndham Andrews. Only her insight was beginning to tell her that were she to do so, some day, as Rodney Tennant's wife, she might feel that she had robbed him of what might have been his. Was it quite fair to him? That was the question she must answer for herself. Rodney, in his lifetime had had so little. If she put aside her own personal feelings she could give him so much. And that was her desire, just to give, to give all she had and was to the man she loved.

It puzzled her that Wyndham should have left everything to her, so unconditionally. That was not like Wyndham. He could not have been ignorant of just how largely Rodney had figured in her life. Moreover he could not have failed to draw the conclusion that if the opportunity ever occurred she would marry him.

For the fact that Rodney Tennant had been the pillar to which she had turned in the complete wreck of her life was common property. She knew the public wonder why she had not long ago taken her fate into her own hands. She also was quite aware of the mercenary motives attributed to her having not done so. But those who ascribed such considerations had discounted her Puritan ancestry, the adamant streak which had kept her clear of the mire through which Wyndham had suggested. She could not have been so faithful to a man who even to her seemed a stranger as Wyndham Andrews. If fate had not been so cruel, she herself would have had no hand in the breaking of it.

She had left Rodney sitting in the library with a book.

But at the very moment of the other, the smile was on her face. In the complete sum of her happiness. To be able to call her hours her own, to be at the door of life which had darkened and closed to be open and unburdened, this was the miracle. Life had been darkened, withdrawn from her, and memory could be obliterated, and she was a date. This was not present and future purpose. To banish from her mind all thought or recollection of that which was past.

Mavis had been married to Rodney Tennant for some months, and these had been quite all that she could have wished. The long period of waiting upon which she had insisted, had not in the end altered the reality, as so often happens when the reality grows frayed by too constant dreaming. No, it had been in every sense quite all that her imagination could have pictured it. There had been no flaw which she could discover in her union with Rodney Tennant.

She was pondering upon the extent of her happiness one evening, as she wandered slowly about the garden. A harvest moon was rising behind the house, like a yellow coin flung up in the sky, accentuating the black masses of masonry from which points of light escaped between closed shutters. Even the surroundings had not flawed the whole. For the greater part of a year after Wyndham's death she had travelled, and then on her return the impossibility of finding a purchaser for the house had presented itself. She and Rodney had at first viewed the advisability of living where she had been so unhappy with some misgivings, but she had trampled down her distaste and brought her good sense to bear on the situation. No, life had no flaw which she could discover, was her thought as she wandered about in the delicately perfumed dusk of the garden.

She had left Rodney sitting in the library with a book. She was too much self-centred these days, too much absorbed in her own personal happiness to feel any interest in spelling out the lives of others in the novel she had just thrown aside. Her happiness filled her with a supreme power to love and live. From the depths out of which she had come it made it appear as though she were now upon the very pinnacle of the summit of life, where nothing could touch her, where she was unassailable.

She paused, just outside the library, with a sudden impulse to look in at Rodney through the interlacing leaves which shrouded the panes. She stepped into the long grass growing beside the brushes and put up her hands to push aside the leaves of the hawthorn bush. The light from inside flowed over her face and shoulders with a white glare. Suddenly her face became transfixed with a strange terror, an utter bewilderment of horror which made her eyes round and glazed as those of a doll. For the man seated in the chair with the book in his hands was to all appearances . . . Wyndham Andrews!

She gave a strangled, choking cry, and then she heard her own voice raised, shrill, uncontrolled. "Rodney . . . Rodney!"

Immediately she saw the absurdity of her illusion. Rodney jumped to his feet and crossed the room, looking anxiously down into her frightened face, framed in the thick foliage.

"What is it?" he asked hastily, "whatever is the matter, dear? Did you hurt yourself?"

"No, no, how foolish of me!" Mavis responded, ashamed and embarrassed. "It was nothing but a horrible fancy which swept over me," and she put up her hands to her eyes, pressing the fingers down tightly upon the closed lids. And then she dropped her hands and looked up at him keenly, while she inquired with an assumed carelessness.

"Rodney, why do you smoke cigars? I've never seen you smoke anything but cigarettes before?"

Rodney was still regarding her with a puzzled frown.

"I don't know, dear. I suppose I'm developing expensive tastes. You don't object to cigars, do you?"

Mavis shook her head slowly while she looked away into the shadowy garden.

"No, of course not," she said, slipping her fingers into his. "It is only, my dear," and she turned away from him back to his face, "it is only that I have to be so good to anything he did."

Rodney pressed her hand affectionately, and threw his arm round her as he sat upon the grass. She felt grateful to him that he did not laugh at what she had said.

"I didn't know," he said, lighting a cigarette from his case and lighting it. "There is that better?" and he smiled down upon her intense seriousness. "How wonderfully sensitive and imaginative you are, dear."

Imaginative! Yes, Mavis supposed that was all it was. Her mind kept too long the impressions of things pleasant or unpleasant. She allowed her imagination to work upon them to build up strange fancies and ideas. How often it had been for her to enter the past! Had she not even succeeded yet in completely doing so? She had been so sure that she had forgotten, that her mind had been freed of the imprint of Wyndham's personality, but here it was in a new guise, and a peculiarly horrible one.

The idea kept recurring to her. This grotesque fancy then was to persist, was to encroach unbearably upon her happiness. She found herself watching Rodney continually, seeking to discover what it was that was actually beginning

The Morality of Clothes

By NELLIE McCLUNG

The suave saleslady was showing me gowns, serges and tricolettes.

I timidly asked for my old friend Black Velvet, whereupon there was an embarrassed pause, and instinctively I knew I had made an unfortunate remark.

"Black velvet," said the lady, in tones of mild yet unmistakable reproof, "is not good this year."

I apologized, and murmured something about not having heard. How did it happen? Black Velvet had been the soul of propriety when seen last by me!

The lady, with true politeness, passed on to speak of pleasanter things.

"Serges and tricolettes are VERY good—tricolettes are so new, and serges are always good."

I rejoiced over the steady-going goodness of serge, but could not forget my old friend, about whom I still refused to believe evil.

From that I fell to thinking of the Morality of Clothes. Clothes are thoughts made manifest. The history of womankind has always been written in their clothes. The Eastern woman, who veiled her face to her eyes and must not uncover in the presence of anyone but her own family, revealed not her face, but the bonds of her soul.

The tightly-laced, high-heeled, long-skirted lady loudly proclaimed her economic dependence. She cried aloud to some man to support her, for, by her dress, she admitted quite frankly that she could not support herself.

Women will never be free until they are free from the bondage of dress. Fine raiment, silk linings, ornamentation, seed pearls, embroideries, have caused more women to sin than poverty or passion.

This will never be eradicated, any more than the thirsty man's predilection for cold water. But it can be changed. Beauty is a relative term. It varies with the season, locality, race and with the years. Hoop skirts bear witness to the length to which humanity will go. The Fiji Islanders hang rings of iron as large as horseshoes in their ears and think them beautiful.

There is no limit to what may be called and really thought beautiful. Do you remember the toboggan-slide hats we wore, along about '93, or the basques of 1880? We liked them. Everybody—I mean all the best of us—wore them.

Now there has come a wholesome movement in the direction of useful working clothes. It is no longer considered a fine, ladylike thing to be idle, but, rather, a disgraceful condition. Everyone works since the war, or at least makes a bluff at it! So, working clothes are coming into their own—skirts wide enough to step in; fine big pockets; neat, well-fitting hats that defy the wind; skirt bands wide enough to give room for deep breathing; one-piece dresses, easy to put on and take off. The business woman of to-day dresses handsomely. There is a morality in their clothes because sex is not emphasized.

Unfortunately, it is not so in the present style of evening dress with its shamelessly low-cut bodices, front and back, especially back, where the bare neck is prolonged into the bare spine!

How can we expect men to respect women when the women show by their dress that they do not respect themselves; for the women who dress indecently confess their poor opinion of themselves, in the honest ways of life, and admit by their costume that they have to descend to the grosser plane in order to be attractive. Unable to charm the beholder by legitimate means, they lower the standards to the level of the animals. The history of women, past, present and future, is written in their clothes!

to make her see a strange resemblance to the dead man growing up in him.

He was becoming stouter, his clothes were different, he was assuming the sleek, groomed appearance of Wyndham Andrews. She knew there was sufficient reason for this. His clothes were better made, better cared for, and he was no longer worried by business affairs. But to her mind the resemblance was gaining greater proportions than these things alone could signify. And she watched him with a growing fear in her eyes lest she should see other things, other resemblances from which she would shrink the more.

It was beginning to form invisible barriers between them. She would meet his eyes and look swiftly away with a tinge of embarrassment in her own lest he should read there her fears. How could she possibly tell him, how could she even suggest to him, that to her, his personality was becoming merged with that of the man whom she had loathed? No, she must kill, she must destroy this monstrous idea, before it gained too great headway upon her, before it took entire possession of her mind.

Rodney had commenced to play golf and to ride, and Mavis listened to him discuss a play at golf or the points of his horse, as she had once listened to Wyndham speak on the same subjects. She bought books which at one time would have interested him intensely, placing them about the house conspicuously, but he barely glanced at them.

"You never read any more?" she remarked to him one day.

She noticed how his manner stiffened immediately as though he perceived criticism in her tone. It made her realize more fully than she had yet done, the strained atmosphere which was growing up between them.

"It used to be all the amusement I could afford," he replied, and then with his eyes narrowing until they had become quite hard, "I wonder why it is that you always seem to object to anything I do these days. Is it," he hesitated a moment, glancing sharply at her face, "is it because you think I am spending your money on my amusements?"

Mavis's cheeks grew hot and tears sprang into her eyes. At one time he could not have said such a thing to her. It was the fashion in which Wyndham had so often spoken to her in the past, the same intonation, the same cold cutting speech. And yet . . . and her reason granted him some excuse for his words . . . what must Rodney think when she so constantly appeared to dislike these new ways which he had adopted?

"You know it is not so," she said, her voice very low, "I never said that I did not like you to play golf."

"It wasn't very necessary for you to say so," he retorted, turning coldly away.

THEN it was that Mavis made up her mind that she would not show the slightest aversion to whatever he did. If she could not banish it from her mind she would at least endeavor to hide from him any trace of it. For he could never understand. All the meaning he would take from it would be that now she felt towards him as she had once felt towards Wyndham. His matter-of-fact mind would not be able to comprehend anything so shadowy and so unreal.

Each day brought to her somehow, in one way or other, that strange sensation, that, with averted eyes she was watching Wyndham Andrews. It was no longer as though Rodney Tennant sat opposite to her at the table, to whom she talked, with that self-inflicted restraint, for whose comings and goings she daily more tearfully watched. She found herself letting her book slip into her lap, while she sat seeking to discover the reason for that strange resemblance, as he sat under the lamp at the desk, or as he stood looking out of the window, his back to the room.

Sometimes when he touched her she shrank back quickly, feeling upon her shoulder the very touch of the dead man. And she remembered how she had once said that the memory of Wyndham Andrews would coil up in her mind like a serpent, ready to spring, ready to poison all that was pleasant.

She had gone up early to her room one evening, feeling unable to sit in the same room with Rodney, where the atmosphere seemed so impregnated with unspoken words. She felt as though storm clouds were pressing down upon her, thick and stifling, smothering her with their weight. She leant far out of her window, glad of the freshness of the damp night air, so filled with the scents of the garden, muffled perfumes which broke one upon another, drowning each other's scent. Mavis clasped her hands upon the sill and stared out into the purple darkness, fretted by starlight. She felt within her the weight of something intolerable, something heavy laid across her heart. What would be the outcome of this fancy which was making such a mockery of her happiness?

She did not hear the door open behind her, but she heard a step sound in the room. She got quickly to her feet to find herself held close in Rodney's arms. He was looking down into her face with love in his eyes while he pressed his lips upon hers.

She stood passive for an instant, and then, hideously, she felt that the arms of Wyndham Andrews were around her, that his were the lips which were laid upon hers. The old shuddering repulsion which she had always felt for Wyndham swept through her body. She opened her

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 58.)

THE JADE ELEPHANT.

BY VIRNA SHEARD.

ILLUSTRATED BY MANLY MACDONALD

#25-
#40

"Not so long, Sir, they've got to her hair and sash, Sir."
"Good!" he returned starting to whistle. It was pleasant to hear him, Biddy thought. The stillness of the place got on her nerves as she often remarked below.
Presently came the tap-tapping of crutches and young Neil stepped down the hall again.
"Hello, Princess!" he said. "I didn't want you to hurry you know!"
The little girl smiled in a wan, mirthless way. "I didn't hurry, really. They had me about finished when you arrived."
"Good!" he answered as they entered the Elephant Room.

"Had breakfast and what not—princess?"
"Yes, she replied. "Oh, yes—or no. I didn't, I sent the tray away, I was not hungry."
"Oh I say!" he cried. "What's being hungry got to do with it? Breakfast time, breakfast comes on tray. Eat, just like that. Don't stop to analyze your old symptoms; fall to."
"It's all very well for you," said the child. "You have an appetite."
"Not so, Princess," he averred contrariwise. "Never hungry in the early morning. Breakfast mere matter of form. Duty, and, so on."

NADINE had settled herself in a corner of a black Chesterfield, and Lawrence was busy snapping up the blinds. The sudden sunlight revealed a room that even in that city of the rare and unusual must have been unique. Everywhere there were carved heads of elephants.
On the door panels in bas-relief, on the arms of the high teak-wood chairs, the legs of the teak-wood tables, the pillars at the sides of the teak-wood mantel. Sombre black elephant heads gleamed everywhere.

The effect was bizarre, arresting, but not unpleasant. Nearly everyone likes elephants.

The mantel-piece held the eye longest, for on the wide black shelf was arranged a motley collection of the jungle kings, from a huge ebony one three feet high, to a tiny fellow made of mother-of-pearl; compliment to the sacred elephant of Siam.

As a rule Nadine came to that room because of the big teak-wood piano. She liked the tone of it. Now Larry seated himself at the instrument and played a few chords. The chords ran into Madam Butterfly music; the "One fine day."

Nadine leaned her head against the black velvet cushions and shut her eyes. Presently she opened them widely.

"Don't play that, Larry," she commanded, "it hurts."

"Perhaps it does," he said with a grin, "the way I play it."

"I didn't mean that," replied the child. "I know you haven't technique, but you get something out of the piano that is music just the same. I can't stand it to-day."

"All right, princess," he returned swinging round on the stool. "That's the Amen. But I've got a day. Let's go and play. Shall us?"

"Picnic? Park? Coney Island? Beasts at Bronx?—What?"

"No," she said. "No, thanks, Larry. Not but what you are very kind."

"Oh, come now!" he cried, "give it a thought."

"I have," she returned gravely. "There's too much disparity in our ages for you to play with me."

"Well, really, Princess!" he laughed. "When did you find it out? I've played with you off and on ever since I came over—since the bally war ended."

IT was one of Nadine's restless days and it was a summer day at that. From sunrise to sunset would be a "linked sweetness long drawn out."

The servants in the great house facing the park were heartily glad the little girl was not allowed by her physicians to rise until noon. At least her general dissatisfaction with things was visited only on her nurse and one maid. Later the tap-tapping of her crutches would be heard along the mosaic halls—down the onyx stairs—through the high echoing rooms—up and down—up and down—until night-fall. There was little peace for any of the servants then. On Nadine's restless days nothing was right.

Now it was noon. A blue and gold noon out of doors, but a purple twilight within the room when the little girl was being dressed by her two attendants. She had ordered the purple silk curtains to be drawn closely and only a few shaded electric lights glowed here and there. Always this dressing was a tedious ordeal by reason of the complicated metal frame which the child wore.

The adjusting of this was something to be dreaded, not only by Nadine but by her nurse and maid. "It took it out of them" as they often said:

That stage was past, and the last touches put to her lovely garments and shining fleece of golden hair, when a maid knocked at the door, then entered.

"It's yer English cousin, Miss Nadine," she said smiling. "He wants to know shall he come up?"

"No. No, Biddy. Tell Mr. Lawrence to wait for me in the Elephant Room."

"Sure I will, Miss Nadine," answered the girl with a little dip curtsy. "It's like sunshine in the house he is, Miss Nadine!"

"That will do, Biddy," the child said curtly. "Go at once."

A bit of red flew into the maid's bright face as she turned. The tone had hurt her somewhere.

"It's herself has a way with her makes ye that mad!" she muttered, all her smile gone. "The little spalpeen! The airs of her! Sure I never come to this country to be put in me place neither. Here ye be free an' equal. But, Holy Virgin! She 'minds me somehow of me own shmall brother at home. Lame he is too. The angel face on her an' the devil's temper in her! He has the same. Belike they go along with withered legs. God help them!"

Lawrence Neil was at the foot of the stairs as Biddy came with her message.

"Am I to go up?" he asked in his dashing, impulsive way.

"You are not, Sir," she said. "Her royal highness towld me to ask ye to step into the Elephant Room an' wait."

There was a twinkle in the girl's eye for her flash of temper had passed.

Larry Neil answered it with a twinkle in his own eyes. He understood that the words held no hint of impertinence.

"Thanks," he nodded. "Will it be a long wait, Biddy, do you think?"

From the green hollow rolled a string of pearls.

"I know," he nodded. "But it's bored you and you mustn't call me 'Princess.' It's absurd." "What's absurd?" he exclaimed. "What's absurd about it? You are the daughter of the man they call the 'Green King,' ain't you? And it never bored me to play with you either. So!" He came over to the Chesterfield and stood looking down at the little white figure.

As for her, he continued. "Well, you are seven and I am twenty-two. A nice difference I call it. No more!" She shook her head. "I don't want to play (more) with you. I'm not in a happy frame of mind."

"Now I give you what the old man once gave to me. I see you are not too proud of it. So be it. If you drive me away, you drive me away. I will not stand on the order of my going. But isn't there any little thing you pine for? Something I can get for you, what?"

She drew a long breath. "I can't think of anything, only to run around without crutches, Larry, and to have this," she glanced at the metal bands. "This off my foot. Dad gives me everything you know. But you are so very kind."

There was a little pause and her eyes fell on the wide black mantel-piece with its colony of elephants.

"There is one thing I've sometimes fancied I wanted," she said slowly.

"I live to learn what it is," returned the boy. "It's a green elephant," she answered. "There isn't one amongst them. There's a black one and a slate-blue, and a reddish-brown, and a white one and lots of grey ones. I want a green one, Larry; about middle-sized."

"Ask me something hard, Princess!" he smiled. "They don't make them. There ain't no such animal; but," with a low bow, "should there be, trust thy henchman to return with him at heel. Give me a fortnight to seek him through the jungles of New York. Then watch with thy maidens on the turret." He swept the floor with an imaginary befeathered cavalier's hat, as he bowed again.

Nadine was used to his ways, and usually fell in with them. To-day she waved them aside.

"Thanks," she said. "Don't trouble too much." "No trouble at all," he assured her. "It's only the hard things that are really worth doing, as the copy books have it. What? I'll be on my way, green-elephant-ward. But first will you promise to be good and go down to the sea if I corral the brute?"

The child hesitated. "They look at me so," she said. "Everywhere I go they stare and stare. That is why I stay at home. But—but yes, I will go to the sea if you get it, Larry."

"Good!" he said briskly, and went out, a vision of the lonely child going with him.

ABOUT a week later, on one of the benches of a little park, a ragged man sat down dejectedly at the noon hour. A small Syrian boy had the end of the bench and was curled up on it with a newspaper covering his head. Soon he sat up and brushed the paper to the ground.

"I was waiting for that, son," said the ragged man picking up the paper.

"Why didn't ye take it?" questioned the boy. "It was your paper, wasn't it?" queried the other. "It was a-keepin' the sun off ye anyways."

The boy grinned, his dark face lighting. "Most anyone would have took it," he remarked. "W'at ye readin', mister?"

"The want ads," he said. "Ye can't tell w'at they might be wantin'. P'raps somethin' yer could get."

"That's right," said the boy. "Well, read 'em out, mister. What they want?"

The tramp drew a finger down the column. "Wanted," he said croakily. "Old tambourines and triangles, Crazy things them to want, I'll say," he commented.

"Wanted—second hand set Balzac. What that, kid? Wanted—old jewelry—Anyone would, kid. Wanted—Human hair, apply, etc. Wanted—A green elephant, not piece of jewelry but standing ornament. Twenty dollars paid for information regarding whereabouts of one. Apply, &c., &c. Listen to that, kid!" said the man sarcastically. "Wanted, a green elephant. Say! let's go and find one?"

The boy was gazing ahead of him with bright unseeing eyes.

"Wanted—" the man said returning to the next item.

"Hold on!" cried the boy. "I seen a green elephant somewheres—somewheres, mister, somewheres."

"Did ye?" said the man hoarsely, "honest? Where did you see it?"

The boy stared, held by some elusive memory. "I seen it," he muttered. "I seen it—in a window somewheres. A window."

"Think!" whispered the man grasping his arm. "Think hard. Twenty dollars paid for the information. We'll dive up, kid."

"All right," said the boy absently. "In a window—wonder. Oh, yes, mister. A Jew's window down the east riverside! Three gold balls overhead. Savvy? A dusty, old, green elephant made of glass, standin' on a blue plate. Come on, we'll find it, mister!"

So they started for the East Side, a memory leading them. As the crow flies the boy went to the Jew's window, and there within, on a willow-pattern plate, amid a clutter of bent spoons and bits of tarnished silver, and amber beads, there was a green elephant nearly a man's hand long. The dust upon it could not hide the translucent green of the jade from which it had been carved.

It was an elephant of worth; this both the man and the boy dimly comprehended.

"That's him!" whispered the ragged man jerking his thumb towards the window.

"Yes," assented the boy. "That's him. It's halves on this mister? Ain't it?"

"Sure," said the man, "halvers. We'll mosey along and give the information, the ad. says an uptown club." He looked at the bit of paper. "Come along, son."

The ragged man dealt with the porter at the club door.

"I reckon it's easier to get into the new Jerusalem than into thish yer place," he said, "but either I'm going to get in or yer going to take a message to thish yer man what his name is Lawrence Neil."

The boy stood by, the calm of the East in his eyes.

"It's important information he wants to give him, mister," he remarked softly.

Some occult influence made the porter feel that it was.

"Page Mr. Larry Neil," he commanded a bell boy.

The two outside leaned against the grey stone wall of the club and waited.

Then Larry appeared. He lifted his young eyebrows as he beheld them.

"Well?" he said brightly. "Did you ask for me—you two?"

"It's the elephant, Sir," commenced the ragged man. "The green elephant."

"Yes," echoed the boy, "the green elephant."

"What about it?" exclaimed Larry. "Do you know where there is one—what?"

"Sure we know!" said the two together, "sure we know!"

"Good! On with the dance. Where is he? Big or little? Alive or stuffed?"

"Information were to be paid for," suggested the ragged man. "Twenty bucks."

"Righto! if it's a proper green one, portable."

"It's all that," they said together. "Show us the coin mister."

Larry Neil drew a twenty dollar bill from his pocket. "Yours," he said, "when you lead me to your find."

"Get yer hat, mister," remarked the ragged man.

The three took their way to the Jew's shop. The willow plate with its jumble of trinkets was brought to the counter, and Larry disentangled the jade elephant from the amber beads.

His boyish face was non-committal and the old Jew watched it for a sign. At the door the ragged man and the boy waited in suspense.

Larry blew the dust from the carved jade, then suddenly turned towards the door. "Oh, I forgot!" he said. "Here's the twenty; it's a green elephant all right."

They gulped with joy and departed swiftly with the money. Then Larry lifted the jade again. Something seemed to roll within it as though it were a child's toy.

"How much?" he asked the Jew.

"I sell not," the old man shrugged.

"Why?" he demanded. "Every elephant has his price."

The Jew threw out his wrinkled hands. "That one is different," he explained. "He belonged to little dark woman. I think she be Hindoo, high caste maybe. A lady. Vell. She has pawn ticket, she vill redeem him. The days are not accomplished to redeem him yet, I play fair."

"Good!" said Larry, "I like to myself. Where does she live, the Hindoo lady?"

"Nearby, I think. She slips past evenings with a boy. She is shawled over her head. Some neighbor might tell you where she live. There are Assyrians, Armenians, Turks, Hindoos, round about."

"Thanks," nodded the man, "I will look."

The Jew put the willow plate back in the window, and Larry took his way along the crowded river street.

"Feels like a bally game I am playing,—call it 'needle-in-the-straw.' But so far, so good. I'm on the trail."

A small girl darted past him, and Larry called to her.

"Wait a moment, little girl! Can you tell me if there is a little dark woman living near by—wears a shawl over her head—has bangles and what not?—A little dark woman and a boy?"

The child looked into the boy's attractive face. "You mean Mrs. Damayanti and Bhima?" she questioned.

"Perhaps I do," he said.

"They live in that house on the corner," she pointed. "But you must go up the stairs to the top."

Larry put a quarter into the grimy little hand and then made for the corner house.

The stairs were many to the top floor—many and broken. Reaching the top he knocked at the first door before him.

A boy opened it, a dark boy of about ten years. "Does Mrs. — does a Hindoo lady live here?" asked the man.

"I am Bhima," said the boy. "My mother is Damayanti."

"Righto! That is thanks. May I come in?"

"She is sick," said the boy hesitatingly.

"Kindly ask her if she will see me," Larry requested. "I wish to speak to her about a green elephant—a jade, don't you know?"

The boy gave a startled cry. "My mother's jade elephant!" he exclaimed. "Oh, wait! I will tell her—please wait." He passed into an inner room, but in a moment came back. "My mother will see you," he announced gravely.

The man parted the curtains before the door and entered the inner room with the boy.

It was a very empty room, but clean and sweet with some aromatic perfume. There was a low couch covered with worn and curious silk, and a woman lay on it. Her little dark face against the old silk cushions was stricken with grief and poverty. A still young face. She lifted her half-frightened eyes to his friendly ones.

"I spik little," she commenced. "My son he spik."

Larry turned to the boy. "Please tell her," he said, "that I want to buy the jade elephant in the keeping of the Jew at the pawn shop. Tell her I will pay well for it if she will be good enough to let me have it."

The boy interpreted swiftly and the woman suddenly clasped her hands against her heart.

"No! No!" she repeated excitedly. "No!"

Again Larry tried. "Say I will give much money for the jade," he insisted. "Much money."

As the boy interpreted her little cries of "No! No!" ceased and she lay very still. Then slowly from her dress she drew a worn pawn ticket and handed it to her son.

"Go!" she said, making a gesture of renunciation.

The boy asked her something further, and she replied sorrowfully.

"My mother says I am to go with you to the Jew. If you will redeem the jade and bring it to her here, then she will decide. Very little money will redeem it—but we have it not."

The woman's eyes pleaded.

"All right," assented Larry. "We will get it first and then talk business." Then to the woman. "I feel you are ill?"

"Ill," she nodded. "Ill."

"Well, we've got to do something about that," he smiled down at her.

"No go to hospital!" she cried looking at the boy.

"Not unless you jolly well want to," Larry returned, some answering sensation in his throat.

The boy and he descended into the abyss of the lower hall, and went to the shop of the Jew. With the pawn ticket and the money working in harmony the Jew relinquished the jade: albeit reluctantly.

"It is an antique," he explained.

"No! Do you think so?" said Larry.

The Jew looked at him searchingly. There was more to this he felt than showed on the surface.

Together the two returned to the upper room, and gave the little green elephant into the woman's hands.

She laid her dark face against it lovingly, then held it out to Larry.

"How much?" she faltered.

He named many dollars.

"It is enough," answered the boy for her. "It is yours."

So Larry gave them their price, and took the carved treasure. As he lifted it something again rolled softly, as in a toy.

"What is within it?" he asked.

"Only, we think, some small pieces of jade that have loosened and fallen with time or jarring. It has travelled far and is old. Very. It is hollow. Two pieces of the rock have been carved and joined together, cemented by some lost art. One cannot see where they are joined. There is no way to find out more."

"Oh," said Larry. "Oh, indeed."

He looked at the woman and at the boy. "Could you—would you tell me about this odd thing? Not if you do not care to of course. But there is a little girl who might be interested. She is lame. I am taking it to her."

The boy interpreted. There was silence—then the woman began to speak. The words came rapidly in a smooth ancient tongue. A flame of regret and longing seared them. Her eyes burned as with destroying grief. She stopped speaking as suddenly as she had begun.

The boy raised his calm eyes to Larry's. His dignity permitted of no emotion it seemed. "My mother says that the jade was a wedding gift to her from my grandfather, my father's father. He told her it was very old and very precious. That it held a charm against evil. He was the Maharaja of a great principality of India. Kosala. My father was his second son, but when I was only a baby my father chanced to offend him most bitterly, and was banished from his presence. Then my father took my mother and me and brought us to this new country. English he knew, being the son of a Hindoo Prince. They carried little with them; but few silks, but few jewels. My father died of the trouble. All the jewels were sold that we might live. The jade failed to keep evil away; still my mother kept it till the last. But very lately she has heard that my grandfather, the Maharaja, is dead, and his elder son, my uncle, is dead. It was the plague. My uncle left no son. My mother tells me that now I am Maharaja of Kosala. They have no other prince though I am far away." he ended simply.

"Here be news!" said Larry, his eyes very wide open. "Here be news. It holds a quality of conviction." He looked squarely at the little boy, and then bowed. "Accept my salutations, O Prince!" he said quite gravely.

The boy returned the bow with an Eastern up-lifting of the hands.

The woman's eyes gleamed and she smiled softly. The man believed.

"Jolly story," Larry said. "A regular one! Queer about stories: the stranger they are—the more likely they are to be true. I could tell you some—some waf ones—what? Well, I am

A Tale Which Shows How Very Easily Things Go Wrong THAT PREPOSTEROUS AFFAIR

By CHARLES G. BOOTH

ILLUSTRATED BY CAMPBELL-DUNCAN

"Indeed not!" I exclaimed emphatically, the blood suffusing my face.

"Mamma," the youngster immediately qualified to my relief. I perceived it was not addressing me as a parent in particular, but as representative of parents in general.

Then I remembered Mrs. Rimmills, my housekeeper. Of course she had placed the child in my bed! My relief was short-lived, however, when I recalled that Mrs. Rimmills was a childless widow, and that this being Wednesday, one of the evenings on which Mr. Bemis called, they had left for a nearby moving picture theatre an hour or more before. Of course they would not have left the child alone. Mr. Bemis was a condition of my agreement with Mrs. Rimmills. He was a very worthy fellow, though somewhat radical in his views. A blacksmith, I had judged him to be on mentally comparing his brawny arms and massive frame with the subject of Mr. Longfellow's excellent poem.

I looked around helplessly. Then I searched every room in the apartment, even venturing into Mrs. Rimmills' room, something I had never done before. Of course, I found no one. Then I remembered finding the door open when I entered my flat. Apparently Mrs. Rimmills and her escort had neglected to lock it on leaving; this had happened before. But the child could not have entered the apartment and got into my bed of its own volition as even my rudimentary knowledge of infants informed me that the child was very young.

Though the delicate perfume still lingered it was becoming fainter. I wished it would remain. It suggested a friendly solver of this remarkable problem.

I reapproached the child, the sex of which I had no means of determining. It was quite a pleasant little mortal, I reflected. I felt a desire to take it in my arms, which of course I at once suppressed. At least I could contemplate my mystery if I could not solve it.

THEN quite suddenly catastrophe threatened my temporary security. Even as I watched the tiny progeny its rosy mouth puckered up, its eyes dimmed, its tiny nose dilated, and it commenced to cry,—a plaintive, hungry little cry that turned my heart topsy-turvy.

I sought wildly for some object that would distract its attention from its stomach, as I was convinced that the fundamental cause of the infant's distress was its stomach. A respectable bachelor's apartment should of course contain nothing that would appeal to a child. And I have, I trust, sufficiently emphasized my respectability. Then I remembered my pipe. It was my only hope. The child's wail was growing more persistent, more pitiful.

Its tiny dimpled fingers closed firmly around the stem of my briar. Its wail died away. It regarded the pipe wisely. Then it put the stem into its mouth in the oddest way imaginable. I at once made a mental note of this illustration of the laws of heredity. The child's male parent had been a smoker.

I perceived I had gained a respite.

Then I heard the elevator clang and footsteps approaching. I listened intently. The missing parent, I concluded hopefully, until the footsteps grew familiar. "Jack Evans!" I exclaimed aloud. Panic seized me. Jack and his wife live on the floor above mine. My suite is 506; theirs is 605. We are great friends, but, well, Jack is Jack. Our temperaments, both amiable, and both eminently respectable, are quite dissimilar. Jack has a buoyancy of character, an effervescence of spirit that sometimes completely demoralizes me. Sometimes I fear he is a little irresponsible. Perhaps, however, I am rather too conservative. We are the best of friends—have been for years. But not to save my ten thousand dollars a year would I have allowed Jack Evans to find me with an infant in my apartment. I should never have heard the last of it. In his wild exuberance he would have spread it over the entire town. My reputation, cherished possession of years, would have disappeared at one fell swoop. He would have revelled in the ruins of my good name; he has always deprecated its unblemished virtue.

One acts quickly at such crises.

Dismissing my former fears, I clasped the child, gaped frantically about the room. Jack was at the door—was knocking. I espied a cedar chest, a gift of Aunt Phyllis, in the corner of my room. I could hear Jack's hand on the door knob. He never knocks more than once. I raised the lid of the chest and deposited the child in a soft nest of undergarments and nightclothes. It seemed to regard the affair as amusement for its benefit. It chuckled and gurgled happily. The lid dropped with a bang just as Jack entered my room, his face beaming.

"Hullo, Arnold, old top," he grinned, "just dropped in to say how do."

"How do," I returned as calmly as I could, seating myself casually on the cedar chest.

"You look flustered, old boy." Jack will persist in addressing me in this irresponsible fashion. He commenced to fill his pipe. "I've got some new tobacco I want you to try," he went on. "Why there's your pipe on the floor—broken." My eyes followed his pointing finger. I had not noticed that the infant had dropped the pipe. There it was—broken in two. Rhoda had given it to me on my last birthday.

Campbell-Duncan
1920

"Explain!" sniffed Mrs. Rimmills. "There ain't no explainin' to be done. Nice goin's on for a respectable woman like me to find in her home."

AT the outset I must explain that when this tremendous affair occurred I was as innocent of all cognizance of its sequel as I was of responsibility for what, at the time, threatened to prove the most disastrous event in my uneventful life. Jack refuses to believe me in this and as Vi remains neutral, I shall probably unsuccessfully continue to protest my innocence to the end.

A young man of good family, impeccable virtue, and studious habits, I had attained my thirty-second year with an unspotted reputation, a taste for worth-while books and good pictures and an income of ten thousand dollars a year. Particularly do I wish to emphasize my impeccability as it has much bearing on what follows. I was the possessor of a well-furnished bachelor apartment kept in excellent condition by a housekeeper installed by my Aunt Phyllis. Aunt Phyllis supervises my welfare when her various uplift movements permit her to do so. And I had Rhoda.

Rhoda was the only one of the opposite sex with whom I had more than a passing acquaintance. I called every Wednesday evening at eight o'clock. We discussed literature, art, and current topics. Rhoda being an exceedingly interesting conversationalist our discussions were frequently stimulating. Rhoda had a rather more liberal temperament than I. Particularly on sociology did we disagree. Being of excellent family, as I have mentioned, and eminently respectable, I always felt it behooved me to deprecate the spirit of radicalism so evident in international life. I now remember that on several occasions Rhoda had evidenced a disposition to depart from the subject under discussion to more personal topics. I recall that on such occasions Rhoda's eyes had seemed unusually bright. We thoroughly understood each other until this tremendous experience of mine—or I believed we did. Some of my beliefs have been shaken of late—especially those pertaining to the weaker sex. Its apparent perspicuity had always convinced me that I thoroughly understood it—there seeming so little to understand.

I remember, it being Wednesday, that I had been to see Rhoda on that memorable evening. She had seemed inconceivably restless with an unusual propensity to depart from our discussion, the subject of which has escaped my memory. I left earlier than usual and returned to my apartment in anticipation of a comfortable hour or so before turning in.

My sitting room opened from a tiny hall; it also had another door leading into my bedroom. I passed through this in search of my slippers and my pipe, my only dissipation, and stopped suddenly. My skin goosefleshed unpleasantly up and down my back. I became intensely conscious of another's presence. At the same time, a faint perfume assailed my nostrils. My knowledge of perfumes at that time was confined to Rhoda's cologne and Aunt Phyllis' lavender. But this perfume was delicious, sweetly intoxicating, fit accompaniment of dreams. I have since learned it was the scent of violets.

Yet I neither saw nor heard anyone, anything. I tiptoed to my bed every sense a-quiver. And then I saw it—a little rosy faced cherub of a child, a baby pitifully tiny, yet wonderfully, amazingly, smilingly dominant of the situation, tucked up in my bed. It cooed and gurgled at me even as I stared at it, my heart chugging painfully.

I recovered myself by degrees. Gradually coherence entered my brain.

"Who are you? Where did you come from?" I gasped.

A gurgle, quite unintelligible, was the only reply. I approached a few steps nearer and poked my finger at it inquiringly. "You must belong to some one," I declared in a more natural voice.

"Dadda," it chuckled with obvious humor.

The Witches Are Out!

By LOUISE MOREY BOWMAN

Illustration by F. N. Mann.

Oh! dark November day!
The shrivelled dry leaves madly swirl,
Caught in a wild fantastic whirl;
One might mistake for dancing glee,
This grim and tripping mockery—

Oh! dark November day!
My heart craves eagerly the snow—
That hushed, benumbing lullaby
The grey sky sends us, bending low
To soothe such piteous fantasy.
Now all bewitched the weird leaves whirl,
Flitting like gnomes that skip and twirl;
Their eerie voices shriek, "Come! Play!"
Till shudderingly I shrink away—
Oh! dark November day!

* * * * *

Yet softly, softly, all the time,
In lilting, homely, deathless rhyme,
Earth croons her tender hearthstone runes
Till, almost, I can catch the tunes,
And croon them, too.

The Chrysanthemum—Queen of November Blooms

WHEN the chrysanthemums in the Akasaka palace garden have fully unfolded their marvellous petals, the Emperor, whose crest is the 16-petalled chrysanthemum, sends envoys to the lords of his realm and to a few visiting folk of other lands acquainting them with the beautiful event and inviting their presence at a "viewing" of the national flower as it stands in the glory of its perfection within latticed bowers. Like ladies in waiting to a queen they look on their stand in rows beneath heavy silk curtains embroidered with the royal crest of Japan, arrived in the most gorgeous colors known to the flower world. Each blossom, signed with the grower's name, titled like pictures in a gallery, hardly needing the cabalistic cards with which to identify them as "Sunset," "Early Snow," "Quiet Morn," "Pensive," "Caprice."

The first Japanese royal chrysanthemum party was held in the era of Heian in the eighth century, to pray for the long life of the Emperor, in celebration of the myth of a man who escaped death by drinking wine in which lay a fairy-charmed chrysanthemum. It is even to-day regarded as the symbol of longevity and called Oginagusa, the old man's plant. After the restoration of Meiji, the chrysanthemum festival was suspended for a while, probably owing to the troubles which marked the years following the Restoration. But, at the desire of the late Emperor, who took a great interest in chrysanthemum cultivation, the festival was revived.

After the garden party at the palace is over, the flowers, at the Emperor's request, are taken beyond the close-guarded gates into Hebeia and Ueno Parks, that his people may enjoy them also. At this same season, the Red Leaf Month—the curious exhibition of historical and mythological figures, made of growing chrysanthemums, takes place. Few there are who call them beautiful, but all must admit their cleverness and acknowledge the supreme skill of a cultivation that can make a single root produce enough blossoms to form a life-sized figure, or a series of diminishing circles, the outer one forty feet or more in diameter and bearing hundreds of perfect flowers.

This flower that arouses the love and enthusiasm of high and low alike is doubtless of Chinese origin. It was introduced into Japan, so say some authorities, during the reign of the Emperor Kwanmu, (seven hundred eighty-two—eight hundred and six), through Korea. It immediately sprang into favor, was adopted as crest and official seal of the Mikado, crept, as decorative device on sword hilts, pottery, porcelains, lacquerware, bronze and in textiles. "The Order of the Chrysanthemum" was instituted; its emblem a star in the form of a cross with thirty-two rays attached to red ribbon by a gold chrysanthemum, being reserved as an especial honor, for crowned heads and the highest dignitaries.

IT is impossible to fix the date of the introduction of the chrysanthemum into Europe, for authorities differ greatly, or to give a complete chronology of varieties or records of its development from single to double, from yellow, white and purple to the multi-colored wonders of the present day. As an exhibition flower it has no equal, for it responds amazingly to the whims of experimenters. They have apparently done everything with it that interested imagination could suggest except to create a blue one. Here they are provokingly baffled, Nature being chary of bestowing the color of the mid-day sky, and the hues of the morning and the evening, even to this favorite of man.

Varieties succeed varieties so rapidly that only general classification is possible—styles in chrysanthemums being set by China and Japan as rapidly and arbitrarily as a woman's gowns are by Paris. How could their whims be fixed in a single article? But all developments are now under certain main divisions. The single with its flat disc and ray-like florets, which will almost be mistaken for a marguerite, or aster are made to show regular or raised, pointed or blunt-edged petals of graded tints, with light or dark centres at will, early and late flowering suitable for indoors and out.

The large anemone chrysanthemum has a raised disc in the centre formed by quilled florets surrounded by flat or nearly flat ones. The Japanese anemone chrysanthemum has a similar raised centre, but the outer rays are flat, twist or droop in manifold diverting ways.

Then there are the two lovely chrysanthemums the pompons and the anemones; the wonderful incurved ones with quilled petals turned inward, covering the heart; and the reflexed, circular blossom with broad, overlapping florets turned outward.

Chrysanthemums in the hands of growers can be dwarfed for edgings and pots, or expanded until the stem can scarce hold the weight of their blossoms. Thread-thin petals droop like waterfalls or flash upward like bursting rockets—wide petals unfurl to the sun as symmetrically as lilies upon a quiet pool, or bend and curl and turn and twist like foaming cataracts. Flat, quilled, fluted and thread-like are the petals, incurved and reflexed in an infinite variety of ways. From less than an inch to fully a foot in diameter can these remarkable, adaptable flowers be grown.

Chrysanthemums, the Crest of the Mikado, and the Favorite of the Little Garden

Every grower has his own distinguishing names and rules for growing, but certain broad laws will do for each, for they are hardy, accommodating flower friends who can be depended upon to take a hint, who are not easily offended, who, if slighted a very trifle from stress of circumstances, do not sulk or lose their brightness. They are easily propagated—grown from seed within a few weeks (hardy annuals), from cuttings or even from roots stored from the previous season. They are not particular as to soil, nor do pests annoy them much. As exhibition plants they are supreme, because of their possibilities for freakish size, shape and color. For gardens they are indispensable, for their season of blooming is a long one; they are the last to hold the colors of summer in remembrance, the easiest to cultivate, the most useful for almost every need, the showiest, and because the memory of their fragrant perfume and their staunch, loyal way of standing by their colors even after the frost has vanquished their leaves, touches a chord in the heart of everyone who ever walked in a garden on a bleak November day. For conservatories and for home decoration, their popularity is unquestioned because they make such a cheerful color and lend themselves to bowls tall or squat, grey, green or gold, of bronze, pottery, or glass, and because they last a long time. They will bloom profusely in town or country, even come up year after year in abandoned door-yards, thrive in poor soil, though of course they develop much more wonderfully when sympathetically attended to, put forth as perfect a flower in a Bowery tin can as in a royal garden. They have inspired designers and decorators as perhaps no other plant, unless it be the rose. Names of creators of new varieties are cherished and honored as are victorious generals, poets or explorers.

IN both East and West, plants should be lifted from the ground before the heavier frosts are expected. Many roots will survive a winter, but the best results are obtained from a more careful attention. Cuttings taken from lifted plants thrive better, seem to be more vigorous. By the end of February, cuttings should be started in boxes; when well rooted set in three-inch pots and transfer to cold frames. Hardy treatment being good for them from beginning to end, a little cold air will not prove injurious. When transferred out to the garden, the ground must be prepared by deep digging and manuring. If soil be too light, add good leaf mould. Many growers set stakes in position when plants are transferred to ground. This seems the easier way, for then the matter is on one's mind and a tie need not be given again for a month or more. A little hoeing now and then is all that is needed for the ordinary garden cultivation. If especially large blooms are wanted instead of a show of color, disbudding must be attended to, even to thin the shoots somewhat.

It is difficult to write of this flower honored by Emperors, loved by everybody, without drifting into a rhapsody. How impossible to record all the vagaries of a plant whose nature is as capricious as the mind of man and as steadfast as the course of stars—one which freakishly improves even upon the madcap motive of an enthusiastic breeder when released from laws, or which will bloom true to type year after year in the door-yard of those who like its golden yellow familiar face in the old-fashioned way. A flower that is modest in royal gardens and proud in the factory yards, though ignominiously covered with soot, one that has the love and admiration of every flower grower on earth, is surely worthy the admiring eulogy of poets, as well as calm statements of biographers. No garden is truly complete without a display of such dependable beauty.

From August to November, chrysanthemums supply both home and garden with feathery blossoms of all the shades the most romantic or critical-minded enthusiast could desire. Indeed, they seem to have borrowed nearly every note of the scale of color, from the faintest to the boldest tones. With their brilliance in the autumn, they form a splendid climax for the garden symphony that began with the snowdrops in early spring. All through the summer the different flowers have added their rich notes of harmony, until the advent of fall the crescendo reaches its greatest height. And it is at this season of the year, when the pageant of the preceding months nears completion, that the chrysanthemums achieve their triumphant finale.

Someone has said of the flowers of the year: "Yes, we admire the asters and the chrysanthemums when they come to us in the months of the waning year—but we value them, only after the roses have gone."

This is a rather pessimistic estimate of our feeling towards the blossoms which come to us in the weeks of autumn and make a glory of the last month before December is upon us with the real cold and gloom of winter. There is something truly regal about the fashion in which the chrysanthemum displays her gold and tawny brown and crimson. She has a place—and a large one—in the heart of the lover of flowers—and we willingly crown her Queen of November.

At the right is shown a small Anemone Chrysanthemum. Below is a lovely single variety, freakish as the Shirley Poppy in color.

The Japanese Anemone Chrysanthemum shown at the right has a raised centre of close-packed tiny florets: its outer petals twist and turn in every direction assuming manifold diverting forms of flat or pointed tips, which in the hands of experts grow in a long graceful feathery fringe.

To the right is the Polly Rose, peony like of growth.

At the left is a small Pompon, Belle L. Isoloise: the strong yellow or vivid lavender and white varieties thrive with little or no care.

Above is a group of easily grown Chrysanthemums that bloom abundantly, making a fine show of color in the garden.

MOTHER reads her baby's eyes and knows that his sweet, serious, drowsy look spells deep contentment.

Contentment because he has just been bathed with the velvety, soothing lather of Ivory Soap. How soft it felt against his tender flesh; how clean and smooth and satiny his roseleaf skin after clear water had rinsed away the soapy bubbles.

Contentment because he is clothed in fresh, sweet garments, washed snowy white with Ivory. No soapy smell or chafing harshness to the soft, fine fabrics cleansed with this pure, mild, easy-rinsing soap.

Physicians, nurses, careful mothers know that Ivory is the ideal soap for nursery use.

IVORY SOAP . . . . . 99  $\frac{44}{100}$  % PURE

The Manufacturers of Ivory Soap also make in Canada the following general household soaps: P. & G.—The White Naphtha Soap, Gold Soap, Pearline and Sopade, thus enabling the housekeeper to use a Procter & Gamble high quality soap for every purpose.

This Gives Directions for the Manufacture of a Piece of Furniture Which Is Useful, Ornamental and a Daily Gratification

HOME-MADE FURNITURE

THE SIXTH ARTICLE

WALL CABINET

THE whole charm of this wall cabinet lies in the subtlety of the curves in it, and a number of trials may be necessary to the builder of it, but perseverance will repay, as a thing that is worked over is almost invariably better than the first attempt. In bringing the tenons through the ends, the projection should be just as slight as possible and allow the chamfering of the edges of the tenon.

MILL BILL OF LUMBER FOR WALL CABINET

|                   | Pieces | Rough  |           |         | Finish    |           |
|-------------------|--------|--------|-----------|---------|-----------|-----------|
|                   |        | Long   | Wide      | Thick   | Wide      | Thick     |
| Ends .....        | 2      | 21 in. | 8 3/4 in. | 1 in.   | 8 1/2 in. | 3/4 in.   |
| Shelves .....     | 2      | 31 in. | 8 in.     | 1 in.   | 7 3/4 in. | 3/4 in.   |
| Small shelf ..... | 1      | 31 in. | 3 1/4 in. | 1 in.   | 3 in.     | 5/8 in.   |
| Top of back ..... | 1      | 30 in. | 4 in.     | 1 in.   | pattern   | 3/4 in.   |
| Back .....        | 1      | 30 in. | 10 in.    | 3/4 in. | 9 3/4 in. | 1 1/2 in. |
| Back .....        | 1      | 30 in. | 10 in.    | 3/4 in. | pattern   | 1 1/2 in. |

HOME TRAINING IN CABINET WORK

You Are Sure of Satisfaction

When Buying

Hallam's

Guaranteed
Furs
by Mail

"Direct from Trapper to You"

Hallam's guarantee is "to satisfy you or give you your money back."

No matter where you live you can obtain the latest styles and the highest quality in Furs from Hallam's by mail—at the same prices as if you lived 10 miles from Toronto.

Canadian
Grey Wolf

Natural Grey Canadian Wolf Scarf, measuring about 30 ins. in length and about 10 ins. wide. Lined with a shirred crepe-de-chene, crepe frill around edge and streamers. Trimmed with natural head, tail and paws.

M367. Scarf delivered to you . . . . $24.25

Muff to match, in ball shape, velvet lined, crepe cuffs, trimmed with head and tail, complete with wrist cord and ring.

M368. Muff delivered to you . . . . $24.25

The above scarf or muff will be sent promptly on receipt of money.

Send to-day for your

Copy of

Hallam's

1921

Book of Fur Fashions

It is better than ever, contains 48 pages fully illustrated from actual photographs, showing the fur coats and sets as they really appear on live people. In it you will find many bargains in the latest modes of fashionable fur coats and sets. Send at once. It will be mailed Free.

Address in full as below.

John Hallam

Department No. 812, Toronto

The largest in the world in Canada

GENUINE DIAMONDS

CASH OR CREDIT

TERMS: $1-$2 $1 Weekly

We trust you honest

1921

Write for catalogue to-day

JACOBS BROS.

Diamond Importers

15 Toronto Arcade

TORONTO

Mercury

Fashioned Hose shaped in the knitting without seams insures style comfort and durability

Gift Suggestions

LADY MARY

La BOHEME

MAVIS
6 PIECE SET

LILAS ARLY

MAVIS
3 PIECE SET

MAVIS
4 PIECE SET

HOLIDAY SETS MAKE ATTRACTIVE GIFTS.

There is no more appropriate gift than one of Vivaudou's Combination Toilet Sets.

Women delight in fragrance that lends charm and individuality.

Perfumes—Talc—Face Powders—Toilet Waters.

Your local Dealer has them.

VIVAUDOU
PARIS NEW YORK

MAVIS

Irresistible!

PAINTED EXPRESSLY FOR VIVAUDOU BY
FRED L. PACKER

Send 15c to Vivaudou, 344 St. Paul St. West, Montreal, for sample of Mavis Extract.
Lymans, Limited, Montreal. MacLean, Benn & Nelson, Limited, Montreal

The Permanent Farmerette—The Farmer's Wife

IT seems to me that before a woman can intelligently and effectively grasp the problems of home making on the farm, she must first approach the task from the proper view point. It will make things vastly easier for her if she fully realizes and appreciates the fact that when God made Adam in the Divine image and fashioned Eve as a perfect and beautiful helpmeet, their first blissful abode was the Garden of Eden, and man's primal vocation in life during his short stay in Paradise was agricultural in nature. A thorough examination of this historic event should surely make a woman satisfied with her estate as a farm resident, if not with the realities incident to modern rural localities. Her habitation seems to bear the stamp of Divine ordination and her chief problem is to rescue her lot from the abuses due to man's bungling manipulation.

The next requisite is to fully digest the fact that she farms to live, but that she does not live to farm, and that the days of slavery have passed away, for the abuse of the body by hard labor is as much a crime as its abuse by liquor or uncleanness. No woman has any more right to disfigure her fleshly being by unnecessary physical dissipation in the way of unwholesome and degrading manual labor than she has to warp and starve her soul by spiritual neglect or abuse. Consequently the woman who develops a passion for incessant toil, forgetting the benedictions of rest hours, leisure time and diversion, not only advertises her poor management and her weakling judgment, but reveals a total lack of appreciation of the gift of life.

But to come down to particulars. Before a woman undertakes to farm, she should ponder and examine Tennyson's dictum "That woman is not undeveloped man," and that she cannot, and never was fashioned to take a man's place physically. And whilst there are some male duties she may shoulder with caution, there are others she should eschew entirely. Now outside war time, a wife with a farm house to keep has no more right to plough in the fields than the city wife has to go and help her husband in the factory or machine shop. Her kingdom is the home, and in normal times it should not be neglected to save the wages of a hired man. A ditch-digger, or a coal heaver doesn't take his wife along in the morning to carry his shovel or assist with his task. Exclusive of the present National crisis a woman should limit her outdoor activities to correspond with the adequate accomplishment of her homemaking and housekeeping. And as a rule the ordinary duties of the house on a fairly comfortable farm are far greater than one pair of hands can possibly tackle. There is the care of the milk, no matter who does the milking; there is cleaning, baking, washing, ironing, sewing, fruit canning and chicken-raising with all the attendant setbacks and contretemps, and the constant wearing anxiety to match time, strength and finances. And as soon as the home standard deteriorates, the male bread-winner loses in efficiency.

A HOUSE, of course, fitted with electricity, lavatories and machinery is considered the ideal farm environment. But there are some labor-saving devices that only create fresh labors, and some conveniences that only multiply tasks. My first vision of the cream separator in action made me sympathize with the woman who refused to adopt it, so exhausting a task it proved to turn the crank. Barrel churns and washing machines often fall into the same category, and chopping the turnips with a knife or hatchet is often easier for a woman than running a pulper.

The essential aim should be after simplicity in furnishings, cookery and dress, and the saving of money should be a secondary consideration to that of saving health and strength. For, once a man possesses his land, even if sickness overtakes him his means of livelihood does not cease. Many a wife can manage a farm and secure an income without doing an hour's rough work. The fear of "losing his job" is a fairly idle possibility to the thrifty soul who has his land paid for. So the necessity for saving money is largely removed because his earning opportunity is secure. Then he should feel freer to spend his profits not only on field machinery but on genuine household improvements. I sometimes wonder whether the woman who bungles along with a rag-plugged dishpan and one saucepan, is a shiftless, slovenly housewife or merely the victim of masculine niggardliness.

So much of the home life depends on the kitchen on a farm that I would begin there to tackle the strength saving. And above all things, a farm kitchen should be large, well-lighted, and easily ventilated. There should be plenty of room to move about in. There should be as little furniture as possible, plenty of cupboard space, a big table, good stoves, handy soft and hard water, a rocking chair and a sofa. A waxed table and a painted floor would obviate all necessity for "knee scrubbing," and there should not be one article more to dust than can be avoided. But there should be room—oceans of it,—and light—floods of it. Let the dining room be as small as possible for convenience, you only need to eat in it. Have your linen for the table and your china ready for use, and some clean baskets hanging in the kitchen would save many a trip back and forth at dishwashing time. Also a basket to carry necessities up and down cellar would make one journey take the place of six. The rocking chair should be in constant use, for apples and potatoes can be as well peeled sitting as standing, and when you cannot leave bread or cakes, a favorite book on a handy shelf would make the rocking chair a more enticing waiting place than the end of the table or the nervous, racking, impatient tramp up and down the kitchen floor.

A Consideration of An Old Subject From a Modern Point of View

By A. H. HERBERT

$15.00

There isn't any profession under the sun necessitates keener logic, shrewder brains, more menus and endless table accessories are out of place, but nice white cloths, shining cutlery and pleasing delft are absolutely essential, for an attractively served meal gains several per cent. in digestibility. Home-made bread should be deemed indispensable, and baking should be limited to twice a week or once, if possible. And there should be no between time orgies devoted to cakes, pies and tarts. Try a freer use of eggs and milk, garden stuff and fruit for extras and puddings, and you will have a better nourished family and less work. Keep at least two house dresses and three aprons for morning kitchen work and dress after dinner. You will save a lot of washing, and get strength from self respect, if you live tidily and work calmly. An old skirt, old rubbers and old thick gloves should be stored in the wood shed, where they may be donned for a temporary descent into outdoor or inside slushing so that they may be thrown off and burnt when too unsightly and malodorous. Set yourself to count your steps, and then like an army commander, move your furniture to lessen your miles of travel. For instance, have your cupboard nearest the side of the dishpan on which you drip your dishes. Reserve the day's supply of milk and eggs in the pantry. Get your wash tubs near the source of water, hot and cold, and the kitchen door, out of which you carry clothes and suds. If you have not a sink keep a waste pail handy and don't waste two hours a day running a few yards every ten minutes to fetch and carry.

If you get up at five and work till dark you are either a stupid manager or a miserable work fiend. Custom discourages a man from working more than eight hours a day in town for a living wage. Out-door labors are less exhausting but the woman who "slaves" from daylight till dark isn't a very efficient member of society and certainly not a desirable companion. Don't plan as many tasks for the day as you think you can accomplish, and vary your programme occasionally, as a change of work is often as good as a rest. Take an hour off every other day to study your system. Examine your methods. Keep a list of needed groceries. Buy seldom and in proper quantities. Have a little medicine chest in your kitchen with batting, white cotton, needles and drugs, and see that it is well stocked for all rational emergencies. Don't stint yourself in dishes and pans, in towels and dusters, in lifters and bowls and pitchers. But keep your eye fixed on wash day and housecleaning and study the latest styles in simple furnishing and housekeeping economies.

Remember, skill, brains and artifice will often compass finer results than brute force. A woman can learn to dig with a spade so skillfully as to obviate the necessity for much strength. And many a man's job, if tackled with gloves and an observing eye, can be as easily performed by a woman as her own.

Above all, cultivate brains for house-keeping, there is no place in national economics where they are more necessary than on the farm, and no one to whom they are of greater advantage than the farmerette.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The writer of this article contributed to our September number also, a few observations on the "Business Man," as seen by some business women. Miss Herbert has convictions—and the courage which does not always accompany them. She knows both country and city and is always ready for a discussion of the topics in which she is interested. The farm—always an important sphere of work—has suddenly grown larger and nearly everywhere in the cities one hears the declaration: "I'm going back to the land!" Happy is the man or the woman who owns a few acres of Canadian land. There is a sense of proprietorship which comes from such possession that gives a delightful "lord-of-the-manor" sensation. There are drawbacks to offset the farm advantages, however, and we realize that too often all work and no play has made "Janey" a dull girl. We do not wish to revive the lifelong discussion of high school pupils on the relative attractions of farm and city life;—but a consideration of how the former may be made such as any girl of ability and ambition would be glad to choose, will do us all good. Incidentally we may come to consider whether it is better to be lazy or over-tired. The woman who suffers from ennui, however, is not easily found in Canada—certainly not on the farm.

The matter of conveniences for the farm household is one which demands instant and serious consideration, for the farmer's wife has suffered too long from old-time discomfort and "extra steps."

The incurved Chrysanthemums, like the one on the left, with petals folded over the heart protectingly, are among the most satisfactory of the modern hybrids, for they can be grown in every shade of yellow, pink, white and shaded lavenders.

The picture above shows one of the favorite exhibition Chrysanthemums of the Japanese. The beautiful lavender pink Cataract to the left is named the Mrs. Chamberlin.

This group of chrysanthemums shows some autumnal beauties, and is connected with the article on page fourteen.

alert intelligence and accurate organization than that of housekeeping. Whereas, through lack of system, stupid management and vulgar, inartistic means and methods it has become a nightmare to the feminine majority. Even under a hard mistress, the life of a maid is more sheltered, and less cruel than the well-paid hours in a factory. Yet women are rushing into factories, shops and offices so as to work under the superior jurisdiction of male enterprise. However hard that is to swallow, it is true, is it not? And it cannot be because the servant eats alone and lives socially apart from the family; no factory hand on earth, no stenographer living, expects to dine with her employer's family, nor share his home fire-side.

IT is quite evident that woman has not even tried to inspire male creation with a proper veneration for housekeeping. She has simply accomplished colossal tasks and unthinkable labors in silence and sacrifice. In her gentle, unselfish way woman has left mankind blind to the practical necessities of the home, and the fascinations of housekeeping as a business proposition. Indeed housekeeping has been one of woman's heroic economic contributions to the world's welfare that has been shamefully minimized and ignored.

Home is the source of family inspiration and of each member's training in efficiency. So the woman on the farm must plan for her household's physical and spiritual sustenance. And her biggest problem is the food problem. Elaborate

Good Cheer for November

By MARION HARRIS NEIL

AUTHOR OF "HOW TO COOK IN CASSEROLE DISHES"

NOW that the days are shortening, and we dine by lamp light again, comfortable meals are once more appreciated. This month the housekeeper is well provided with all kinds of food, and she is looking forward to having every variety of game and poultry at her disposal. We regard this month as the birth of the winter, which makes us look to our winter garments, so that we are externally protected from the cold weather. The same may be said about our food, though many do not take the necessary precautions in this respect. Our diet should now undergo a radical change; the basis of our nourishment should be more solid during the winter months to enable our systems to generate the necessary amount of heat to face the colder season of the year. The following are some excellent recipes.

Fruit Cake.—Take one pound of cake or pastry flour, one pound of butter, one pound of sugar, twelve eggs, two pounds of seedless raisins, one pound of currants, one-half pound of candied citron peel, one tablespoonful each of powdered cinnamon and ginger, two teaspoonfuls each of powdered mace and nutmeg, one pound of seeded raisins, one teaspoonful of salt, one-half cupful of grape juice and one-half cupful of sherry wine. Mix the grape juice and sherry wine together and soak the spices in them over night. Clean the fruit, chop the peel and dredge all lightly with flour. Beat the butter and sugar until creamy, add the beaten yolks of eggs, flour, then add the stiffly-beaten whites of eggs, fruits and soaked spices. Pour into a buttered tin lined with paper and bake in a moderate oven for three and one-half hours.

Beet Soup.—Two beets, one tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one-half of a lettuce, four cupfuls of stock or water, three tablespoonfuls of milk or cream, a few drops of red color, salt, pepper and paprika to taste. Peel and slice the beets rather thinly. Melt the butter in a saucepan, stir in the flour, and let it cook over the fire for a few minutes, taking care, however, that it does not brown. Add the stock or water, and stir over the fire until it boils and thickens. Then add the slices of beets, put the lid on the pan, and let it cook for half an hour. If it is cooked longer the color will be spoiled. Rub it through a sieve, add the cream or milk, make it very hot, but remember it must not boil, for if it does the cream will curdle and spoil the soup. Then add the seasonings and the red color. Wash and shred the lettuce, put it into a hot tureen, pour the soup over and serve hot.

Sweet Cider Jelly.—Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of gelatine in one-half cupful of hot water, add four cupfuls of sweet cider, one-half cupful of sugar and the strained juice of one-half lemon. When cool pour into a wet mould and place in the refrigerator until firm. Turn out on to a pretty serving dish. Whip up one cupful of thick cream or evaporated milk, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar to it with a little grated nutmeg. Put into a forcing bag with tube and decorate the jelly.

Pumpkin Pie.—Select a solid meat-ed, golden, glossy pumpkin, not too large. The smaller ones, flat at the ends, are usually the sweetest. Cut into small pieces without peeling, rejecting the seeds and the inner shreds. Put the pieces into a large porcelain-lined kettle with one cupful of boiling water to keep the pumpkin from sticking and cook from five to six hours, preferably longer. At the end of that time the pumpkin should be sweet, tender and nearly dry. Pull off the loose skin and rub through a sieve or colander. If it seems watery, let it drain over night. When ready to bake the pies, measure the pulp, and to every five cupfuls allow one teaspoonful of salt, one-half of a grated nutmeg, one tablespoonful of powdered mace, two teaspoonfuls of powdered ginger, one teaspoonful of powdered cinnamon, one cupful of sugar, one-fourth cupful of maple syrup, four beaten eggs, and four cupfuls of milk. Beat well and turn into plates lined with good pastry and bake three-fourths of an hour or until a rich brown. Serve cold with cheese.

Glazed Sweet Potatoes.—Cook sweet potatoes in boiling salted water for ten minutes, drain, skin and cut in halves, lengthwise and put in a buttered baking pan. Make a syrup by boiling for five minutes one cupful of grated maple sugar and one-half cupful of water, then add two tablespoonfuls of butter. Brush the potatoes with the syrup and bake for ten minutes. Baste the potatoes with the syrup twice during the cooking.

Salmi of Ducks.—Singe, draw, and truss one duck, peel and slice one small onion, and cut one-fourth pound of bacon into small dice. Cook the bacon in a baking tin and when crisp take out one-half the quantity and put it on a plate, put the onion in the tin, place the duck on this, add one bunch of pot herbs, season with salt, pepper and paprika and dot over the top of the duck with butter, and bake in a moderate oven for twenty minutes, so as to half cook the duck. Take up, untruss, and cut the duck into neat pieces. Fry two tablespoonfuls of flour in one tablespoonful of butter to a nice brown color, add two cupfuls of stock or water, boil up, skim, add this to the gravy in the tin, stir the sauce until it boils a second time. Put the pieces of duck, twelve stoned olives, and the dice from the reserved bacon into a clean saucepan, strain the sauce over this and add a bouquet of herbs. Simmer gently for forty minutes, season to taste, skim off the fat, and remove the herbs. Arrange the pieces of duck in the centre of a hot platter, surround with the olives and bacon. Pour over the sauce, garnish with parsley and serve hot.

Tomato and Green Pepper Salad.—Have both the red and yellow tomatoes for this salad. Peel them by dipping into boiling water, cool, cut in thin slices, and arrange on crisp lettuce leaves. Cut the stems from the peppers, remove all the seeds, then cut the peppers in very thin slices, crosswise. Put the yolk of one hard cooked egg into a small bowl, add a pinch of mustard, a pinch of sugar, one-eighth teaspoonful of white pepper, a saltspoonful of salt and six tablespoonfuls of salad oil. Stir until smooth, and then add one tablespoonful of vinegar and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice. Beat for a few minutes and then pour over the salad. Chill before serving.

Jugged Hare.—Wash and wipe one hare; joint it neatly, and remove the bones from the legs and the breast, then cook the bones in two cupfuls of water for one hour. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, allow it to get brown, then flour the hare and three-fourths of a pound of lean beef, cut in pieces and fry them in the butter until a brown color. Remove the hare and meat from the pan and add two small onion slices and four tablespoonfuls of flour and brown them also, then add two cupfuls of stock and stir until it boils. Put the pieces of hare into a stone-ware jar, add one-fourth pound of sliced ham, then the beef, pour over the gravy, add one-half teaspoonful of pepper, one blade of mace, one bay leaf, four cloves, two sprigs of parsley, one teaspoonful of salt, and the strained juice of one lemon. Cover the jar and set in a pan of boiling water, which should come within two inches of the top of the jar. Boil for two and one-half hours. Meanwhile prepare some forcemeat balls. Mix together in a bowl three tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, one-half

"D-e-lighted"

YOU will be, too, when you use the 1900 Cataract Electric Washer and find how quickly it washes your clothes, without bother and fuss, and at an amazingly low cost.

It's the magic figure eight movement that makes this washer such a great success.

The sudsy, soapy water swirling through your clothes in this figure eight movement is forced through them four times as often as the ordinary washing machine.

Just connect with the electric light. Off starts the washer, and in eight, or ten minutes the clothes are clean and spotless! And it costs less than 2 cents an hour to operate.

It has a swinging reversible wringer, too, which also works electrically. You can swing the wringer from washer to rinse water, to blue water, and to clothes basket without moving or shifting the washer an inch! There are no heavy cylinders to lift out and clean. Nor are there any parts to rub against the clothes. You can wash your daintiest blouse and finest curtains in your 1900 Cataract Washer.

It is likely that we have a Dealer in your vicinity—if you will write us and ask for a copy of our new booklet entitled "George Brinton's Wife," we will send the name of the "1900" Dealer near you.

The Nineteen Hundred Washer Company

357 Yonge St.

1900
CATARACT
Electric Washer

TORONTO

Finished and Furnished by Waring & Gillow
Specialists in all Branches of Interior Decoration.

WALLPAPERS! In stock, a large selection of English Wallpapers.

WARING & GILLOW LTD
London : Paris : Montreal : Buenos Aires.

394 Phillips Place

MONTREAL

We Teach

Shorthand, Bookkeeping, Mathematics at Day School, also by Mail. Come to us, or let us come to you. Dominion Business College, Ltd. 357 College St., Toronto. V. Mitchell, B.A., Principal.

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF

—Every Deaf Person Knows That I made myself hear, after being deaf for 25 years, with these Artificial Ear Drums. I wear them day and night. They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them. Write me and I will tell you a true story, how I got deaf and how I make you hear. Address: Pat Nov. 3, '06 Geo. P. Way, Artificial Ear Drum Co. (Inc.) 7 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

Medicated Ear Drum

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 59.)

The Finest Fish Story You Could See or Taste

At the top (centre) is fish with potato shape; to the left is steamed fish; on right, oysters on half-shell; centre (lower) is fish on plank, ready for oven; on right, baked fish.

Tasty and Economical Fish Recipes $60.00

FISH, to be good, ought to be in season and very fresh. Moderate-sized fish are usually the best, especially those which are thick and plump in proportion and size. There are several signs by which the freshness of fish can be judged—the fish should be firm and stiff, the gills red, the eyes bright and not sunken, and there should be no unpleasant smell.

The thorough cleansing of fish is essential to its wholesomeness. Although in towns, fish is usually bought ready cleaned, it is always as well to know how it ought to be done, as sometimes in the country districts, the knowledge is necessary. First empty the fish. Some fish such as flounders and the like are emptied by making a small cut on the dark side of the fish across the round cavity, which lies close below the gills. The inside can then be easily withdrawn and the gills removed. Other fish such as haddock, are cleaned by making a slit down the length of the abdomen, from the head about half way to the tail. Again, there are small fish such as smelts, which are not opened at all, but merely drawn through the gills.

When the inside has been removed wash the fish well in cold water, being careful to remove any black skin lining the cavity of the fish, rubbing it off with salt if necessary. If this were left in it would give a bitter taste to the fish. Also remove any blood from the backbone.

If there are any scales on the fish, they should be scraped off from the tail to the head with a small sharp knife. Hold the knife slanting against the fish and scrape slowly to prevent the scales from flying about. If the fish is to be served whole, cut off the fins with a pair of scissors, cutting from the tail to the head, and then trim the tail. Also remove the eyes. If the skin covering these is tough, cut through it first with a pair of scissors and then the eyes can easily be pulled out, or pushed from the inside.

To skin haddocks and fish of a similar shape, cut a thin, narrow strip off down the backbone, taking off the back fins and those on the underside. Loosen the skin round the head and bony part of the gills, take the skin between the thumb and finger and pull it off towards the tail. Repeat this on the other side as well. Dipping the fingers in salt will prevent them from slipping. For flounders and other flat fish, the skin on each side is raised just by the tail, the little finger pushed in under the skin right along the fins, the raised piece of skin by the tail seized in the finger and thumb and pulled off towards the head. This is repeated on the other side also.

To fillet the fish, make a cut straight down the middle of the back to the back bone. Then remove the flesh first from one side and then from the other. Two fillets are taken from each side. It will be found easiest to raise the first fillet from the left hand side of the fish, working from the head towards the tail; and then to turn the fish round, and to raise the second fillet, working from the tail towards the head. Turn the fish right over, and do the other side in the same way. Use a sharp knife.

By MARION HARRIS NEIL

AUTHOR OF "THE THRIFT COOK BOOK."

Halibut with Tomatoes.—Wipe two pounds of halibut, and cut it into small neat pieces, free from skin and bones. Put one tablespoonful of flour on a plate, and coat each piece of fish lightly with it. Dip three or four fresh tomatoes into boiling water for a minute or two, lift them out, dry, and skin them, or use canned tomatoes. Put them on a plate and cut them in pieces or slices. Grease a fireproof dish, lay in a few pieces of the fish, season with salt, pepper, paprika and a little lemon juice. Over these put a layer of the tomatoes, then more fish and seasonings, and so on until all are used, making the last layer tomato. Sprinkle over with bread crumbs, and dot all over with pieces of butter. Bake in a moderate oven for one hour. Serve hot in the same dish.

Baked Fish.—Wash, dry, and trim the fins and tails neatly of three white fish, such as haddock, cod, etc. Mix four tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, three tablespoonfuls of chopped suet, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper and enough milk or water to prevent it from crumbling. Press this stuffing into the fish and sew the edges together. Rub the fish all over with flour to dry the surface. Lay thin slices of fat bacon in a fireproof dish, put the fish on these, then add three tablespoonfuls of drippings and bake the fish in a moderately hot oven for twenty to thirty minutes according to the thickness, baste them frequently. Serve hot with tomato sauce, garnished with parsley.

Planked Fish.—Fish is planked when baked on a board as oak, hickory or ash. Secure a plank the size of your oven, or one that will fit the underneath portion of your gas stove. The plank must be at least one inch thick, a little wider than the fish and as long as the oven. Place the plank in the oven or in the broiling chamber of the gas stove until very hot. Place the fish skin side down on the board, fasten it with small pins, season it with salt, pepper, and paprika and brush it over with melted butter. Cook for at least forty minutes until the fish is a nice brown color. Baste often with melted butter. Serve hot on the plank and garnish with parsley, lemon slices or pickles. Cucumber or lettuce salad and creamed potatoes are the usual accompaniments. White fish and trout are best served in this style.

Sometimes the fish is garnished with potatoes. Pare and boil six good-sized potatoes, when done drain well and rub through a sieve, then add one-fourth cupful of hot milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of white pepper, and beat until very light. Put them into a forcing bag with a star tube, and press the potatoes through the tube, making a circle of roses the entire round of the board, brush the potatoes lightly with beaten egg, put back into the oven, and allow the potatoes to brown. Serve hot.

Oysters on Half Shell.—Open oysters and loosen. Serve in shell on bed of cracked ice, having the small ends of the shell pointed toward the centre of the dish. Mix one tablespoonful of grated horseradish, one-eighth teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of vinegar, two tablespoonfuls of tomato catsup, one teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika and a few grains of red pepper. Serve in small dish and pass to each person, with one-half of a lemon in the centre of each serving plate.

Steamed Fish.—Fish may be cooked by steam instead of boiling it. It is a slower process, but the flavor of the fish is retained better than by boiling, especially in smaller pieces of fish. The fish is placed in a steamer which fits on to a saucepan and success depends upon keeping plenty of water boiling under it. Slices of fish, small skinned fish, or fillets of fish can be cooked to perfection both as to flavor and substance by steaming, whereas boiling would render them tasteless. If it is only a small quantity of fish which requires cooking it may be steamed on a plate. Grease the plate with butter and lay the fish neatly on it. Season to taste with salt and pepper and squeeze a little lemon juice over the top. Put a piece of well greased paper on the top and cover with a second greased plate as well as the saucepan cover. Allow to steam for thirty minutes, or until the fish is sufficiently cooked. The liquid on the plate should be served with the fish or made into a sauce with flour and butter added, and then poured over the fish. This is an

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 43.)

TO SOLVE THE CHRISTMAS PROBLEM

Make your selections easily, comfortably, now, from these newest, brightest novels. The authors' names alone are assurance of their acceptability.

BERTRAND W. SINCLAIR.

Poor Man's Rock

We suggest that you see what "Canadian Home Journal's" reviewer says regarding this book in an adjoining column. We believe it is the strongest Canadian book of the year, and well worth while reading. $2.00.

ANTHONY HOPE.

Lucinda

A new book from Anthony Hope's pen, with its characteristic attractiveness, will make a welcome gift to almost anyone. The book is said to be one of his best. $2.00.

FLORENCE M. BARCLAY.

Returned Empty

The author of "The Rosary" speaks again, this time dealing with problems of Spiritualism and Reincarnation, all this compressed in a thrilling romance, full of vivid situations. $2.00.

MARIE CORELLI.

The Love of Long Ago

This is the title of a book of shorter stories than Miss Corelli usually writes. Full of her strong characteristics, and sure to appeal to anyone who has liked her other books. $2.00.

RIDGWELL CULLUM.

The Heart of Unaga

Here is one of those tales of the Northwest, which rings breezily and wide, with real, flesh-and-blood people, and with an out-of-the-ordinary mystery. Cullum at his best. $2.00.

ROSE McCaULEY.

Potterism

This is a woman's book, which is setting all England astir. The author has written of present day world conditions in a manner which is appealing to women with big hearts and big minds. $2.00.

GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON.

West Wind Drift

McCutcheon has been imagining things again. This time the passengers of a great Atlantic liner, lost in 1917, and not heard from until McCutcheon brings them to life on a hitherto unknown island. Imagine the possibilities for yourself. You know how McCutcheon would take advantage of them. $2.00.

FRANCES R. STERRETT.

Nancy Goes to Town

Another of this author's lively, charming stories, full of humor and alive with the spirit of youth. A girl of heart and fine spirit, who who has had some "trouble" in her happiness, provides an all-round delightful romance. $2.00.

Your Bookseller Has These. Spend an Hour Occasionally Browsing in His Shop

THE RYERSON PRESS

Publishers

TORONTO

The Book Corner

"Poor Man's Rock." A novel by Bertrand W. Sinclair. Published by the Ryerson Press, Toronto. Price, $2.00.

THE writer of this romance of today has chosen the scenes of the salmon canning industry in British Columbia for a story of ambition, revenge—and love. It is a wild, almost primitive, life to which we are first introduced, and the reader feels the stern fascination of the adventures of the fishermen in the Gulf of Georgia. The first chapter tells of an ancient injury and the undying grudge it begets—resulting in the lifelong hatred of Donald MacRae for Horace Gower. The former dies just as his son, Jack, returns from the war, but he bequeaths to the son a story of the old-time wrong, which the latter feels in honor bound to avenge. Of course, Cupid plays a complication and sends Betty Gower, an aggressively charming young person, across the path of Jack MacRae's vengeance. The story is one of romantic interest, to which the strenuous endeavor to wrest a living from the sea affords a vivid background. The writer's style is graphic and picturesque and he knows the life of the Coast. Yet, strong as the human interest is, the

They are an appreciation of our boys from the standpoint of the sympathetic and understanding teacher, who had seen them go forth to the conflict, from the class-room and the campus. The writer has been for years on the staff of the Parkdale Collegiate Institute and knew the hundreds of pupils and graduates of that school who served in the war—and Parkdale was but typical of Canadian schools. These essays are written by one who has a charming literary style and possesses, moreover, a Celtic warmth of feeling and expression which brings the heroism of those Canadian lads who paid the price of freedom very close to our own lives. Surely, the land will be dearer to us for the sacrifice they made!

"Glen of the High North," a novel by H. A. Cody, author of "The Long Patrol," "The Frontiersman," etc. Published by McClelland and Stewart, Toronto.

THE author of this book has associated his work with the life of the far North—and the present volume is another tale which takes the reader on a magic carpet of modern fiction to the outer trails of the reader will remember not only Jack and Betty, but the high-flung seas that broke on Poor Man's Rock. There is a bit of reflection which comes to Jack, which shows this side of the story: "And when they were all dead and gone, Poor Man's Rock would still bare its brown hummock of a head between tides, the salmon would still play along the kelp beds, in the eddies about the Rock. Other men would ply the gear and take the silver fish. It would all be as if it had never happened. The earth and the sea endured, and men were passing shadows."

ONE OF CANADA'S LITERARY LANDMARKS

This is the picturesque old home in Windsor, Nova Scotia, where Judge Haliburton (Sam Slick) resided for many years.

"Learning To Read: Phonics Made Easy for Primary Teachers and Mothers," by S. B. Sinclair, Ph.D. Published by The Macmillan Company, Toronto.

THIS little book, in contents and style, is typical of the best work in our modern text-books. The writer is a well-known authority on educational subjects and the various lessons show that they are arranged by an experienced instructor. This book is intended to assist the "many over-worked primary teachers and mothers who find themselves confronted with the difficult problem of how best to teach a little child to read, with the least expenditure of time and energy." The stories, told by Miss Anna E. Sinclair, are narratives just suited to help and please the Small Person who has set out to learn "the letters Cadmus gave."

"The School-boy in the War," and "Some Young Immortals," by Nellie Spence. Published by the Mussen Book Company, Ltd., Toronto.

THESE are articles contributed to the "Canadian Magazine," and now republished, making two booklets, that many will be glad to keep.

Yukon and the life of the mines. The writer has a directness of style which plunges the reader at once into the whirl of youthful romance. A book which opens with this sentence is almost sure of attracting the attention of the public which loves a good story:—"It all happened in less than two minutes, and yet in that brief space of time, his entire outlook upon life was changed." Of course it was a girl's face which made all the difference in the life of Tom Reynolds. Straightway, Tom decided to follow the gleam of the new face—and the first thing he knew he was on the "Northern Light," bound for the Northern Pacific. Perhaps it is difficult for the reader to believe it—but along came the girl of the epoch-making glance and Tom discovered that her name was Glen. There follow chapters of high adventure, in which the course of true love runs with its usual turbulence. However there are no disappointments to the reader who enjoys a happy ending, and the story is a thoroughly enlivening and wholesome piece of fiction.

"Returned Empty." A novel by Florence Barclay. Published by the Ryerson Press, Toronto. Price, $2.00.

THE author of "The Rosary" is one of the most popular writers of fiction in England, and the present volume is likely to appeal to a large number of readers, who like melodrama in large doses. This is a story of reincarnation which is wildly improbable and sentimental, but may prove of great comfort to those who are seeking knowledge of "the other world." Sir Nigel Tintagel as Luke Sparrow, is a decidedly bewildering hero, whose amorous and military adventures are curious to the matter-of-fact reader but may prove highly satisfactory to all who found "The Rosary" a delight.

Through the Looking Glass

by VAIN JANE

TO have or not to have the Permanent Wave—that is the burning (no reflection intended on the hairdresser) question which is agitating the minds of the fashionable feminine world at the present moment. You simply hear it talked of everywhere that women are gathered together for no other purpose than the intimate discussion of frivolous topics. It seemed to be the natural subject to bring up when Isabel and Miriam wandered into my room, kimono clad, for a last-thing-at-night gossip and found me religiously bestowing fifty strokes upon my scanty tresses with a stiff hair brush.

"Why don't you have your hair permanently waved?" inquired Isabel, snuggling herself into the softest chair and settling a cushion to fit her back. "It would make it look ever so much more, and be so much less trouble to dress."

"Twenty - three, twenty-four, twenty-five," I counted, and began the strokes on the other side before replying: "It's always superior people like you with so much hair that it gives you a headache, who ask: why don't you do this, and why don't you do that? Why don't I have it permanently waved? Well, in the first place, it costs too much."

"Oh, no," interposed Miriam soothingly, from the depths of the eiderdown in which she had wrapped herself. "It really is not so expensive. Five dollars a curl is the charge, and you have so little hair, dear, that you wouldn't need very many."

"Now look here," I announced indignantly, turning on them, brush in hand, "I simply will not be patronized by two woolly-headed creatures, who wander into my room uninvited. Just because my hair is short and of too beautifully fine a quality to be considered luxuriant, you think you can walk into my room and make disparaging remarks about it. Where was I?" I turned back to the mirror, "you've made me lose my count! What do you two know about the permanent wave anyway?"

"Well," replied Isabel, "of course I have had no personal experience with it, my hair being curly enough," and she swung a heavy golden braid over her shoulder tantalizingly, "but I went with one of the girls from college the other day and saw her through the first stages of having hers done. She took her knitting and I took Walpole's 'Jeremy,' which I was just in the middle of reading, for the hairdresser told us it took from three to four hours to perform the miracle.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 31.)

A Dainty Afternoon Gown

And do you know we were so interested that we neither read nor knitted?"

"What's the process?" asked Miriam out of the depths.

"Oh, it would take too long to go into details," said Isabel, "but all the time is taken preparing and winding the hair—only fifteen or twenty minutes is required for the actual curling. You see each curl has to be wrapped exceedingly carefully on irons, tied at both ends, and then slipped into a tube and tied into this again. Then a little pad has to be put under each tube next to the scalp so that there is no danger of burning the skin. You never saw anything so funny as Margaret when those thin tubes, fourteen in all, were standing straight up on her head waiting for the big cone in which they are baked, to be lowered on them. I had to leave at that stage; I just remembered an appointment I must keep."

"And how did it turn out?" asked both Miriam and I in one breath.

"Oh, she is satisfied," replied Isabel. "It looks a bit frizzy to me, but Margaret says the hairdresser told her to wet her hair, and place combs in it and that she would have a very nice water wave."

"But what a nuisance," I said, "having to bother with it every day, and besides, constant wetting is not good for the hair. I would rather go every two weeks and have mine marcelled."

"My dear," said Miriam, getting up and stretching herself. "You could never have yours done; they say it is ruinous to fine hair. Isabel's, on the other hand—"

"What about Isabel's?" demanded Isabel herself. "You were probably going to say it is so coarse and thick that nothing could do it injury. Well, my dear, it is at least not the color of a brick wall. . . ."

"Nor is mine, if that is what you are insinuating. Only the other day someone told me that red hair has more character and commands more admiration. . . ."

In this friendly spirit they left me, their arguing voices trailing into indistinctness, and the patter of their slipped feet ceasing as they reached their rooms. It is not a very helpful discussion. I feel that I shall have to find out for myself just how effective, lasting and beautiful the permanent wave really is.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NESTLETON.—Far be it from Vain-Jane to decry the wisdom of improving on Nature's plan when she has

Westclox

Baby Ben will slip snugly even into small stockings

BABY BEN does his work with a smile—and gets you up the same way. Not so easy sometimes, either, on those cold, dark mornings when you'd a lot rather stay in bed for another little roll-over nap.

Maybe it's his littleness that gets him so many friends: folks chum up with Baby Ben on sight. But he's a lot more than just cute! Otherwise his friendships wouldn't last.

He's a good timekeeper and a dependable alarm—true to the Westclox reputation.

Baby Ben will call you once with a long ring or he'll coax you gently out of bed with intermittent calls—any way you say.

He's just about as big as a minute but he takes every minute seriously—as a good timekeeper should.

That Westclox construction inside his case is what helps him make good. The name, Westclox, on the dial and tag always means Westclox patented construction; and honest, faithful time-keeping.

Western Clock Co., Ltd., makers of Westclox
Peterborough, Ontario

She never had a more enjoyable evening. Everyone commented on her appearance. Her women friends envied the velvety softness of her skin with its beautiful, pearly-white appearance. Her shoulders and arms matched perfectly her complexion. Not one of her friends knew that had rendered this beautiful appearance to her skin as its use cannot be detected. It will not rub off like dry powder or leave the skin with a greasy appearance. Absolutely non-greasy. Healing and soothing. In use over 70 years.

Gouraud's Oriental Cream

Size 15c for Trial Size.

Gouraud's Medicated Soap

Keeps the skin pure and healthy, removes the dust, dirt and grease that daily collect in the pores. Ideal to use in preparing the skin before applying Gouraud's Oriental Cream. Unsurpassed for washing the hair and scalp.

Size 15c for Trial Size.

FERD. T. HOPKINS & SON, 314 W. St. Paul St., Montreal

THROUGH-THE-LOOKING-GLASS COUPON

Should a reader desire to avail herself of any advice which might be given through this department, her inquiry, written on one side of the paper, should be accompanied by this coupon. In the case of desiring a private answer, a stamped and addressed envelope should be enclosed.

Ottawa Garden Suburb

LINDENLEA, the garden suburb of Ottawa, the development of which is being carried out under the administration of the Ottawa Housing Commission, has already established a standard for housing development. The sort of street system—if lines at right angles to each other can be called system—by which most of our housing developments have been straight-jacketed, cannot stand the competition of such projects as Lindenlea, which is but fifteen minutes' ride from the heart of the city.

Such developments are bound to have a profound effect for good throughout the country. They represent an escape from the gridiron development and give a freedom to domestic life which is spiritual as well as physical. Workers who have lived in such towns will not be content with less advantageous surroundings. Building operations must equal these developments or go out of business sooner or later.

If it is worth while, as a civic policy, to encourage escape from congestion to better and healthier living conditions, it is worth while to study out and provide means whereby recreation and neighborhood can be stimulated.

In the ten-year period prior to 1911 the population of the County of London, England, had fallen off to the extent of 0.3 per cent., whereas in the outer fringes of the metropolitan areas it had increased 33.5 per cent. in the same period. This rapidity of decentralization of city population is becoming nearly as great in this country.

There is, however, an imperative need for social and recreative facilities in developments of this kind. This movement has come into prominence since the war, and must be taken into account in preparing housing and town planning schemes.

Men and women returning home from service in the army, used to the recreative huts in camp, have awakened their fellow citizens to the need for social centres, where they can meet their friends and enjoy mutual intercourse during the evenings or find means of self-expression in music, dancing or art.

Suggestions are now under consideration at Lindenlea to promote such a social community project, with the hope of realization when the Community Hall is built.

The progress made with this scheme will be appreciated by recalling that it was not until the autumn of 1919 that building operations were commenced, whereas now over 60 houses are completed or nearly so and further contracts have been placed for the erection of another fifty.

The roads are now taking shape, emphasizing the physical expression of the development; also, by utilizing the surplus rock and boulders incidental to the excavation of the houses, the wading pool is being formed. Even the casual visitor must be impressed by the rewarded efforts of the home builders—random rubble paths, grass lawns and beautiful flowers, which are only part of the evidence of the effect of community life under favorable conditions.

It is the duty of all to co-operate in a social and democratic way to create attractive local communities on the outskirts of cities wherever practicable, thereby working in accordance with the broader meaning of housing reform, defined as the furnishing of healthful accommodation purchasable at reasonable prices, adequately provided with facilities for privacy and comfort, easily accessible to centres of employment, culture and amusement, and accessible from the centre of distribution of the food supply.

DUNLOP CORD TIRES

STABILITY OF THE COMPANY

ENSURES

STABILITY IN THE PRODUCT

Q TWENTY-FIVE years of growing bigger, keeping in daily touch with rubber markets, having the opinions of tire experts the world over on our product—does it not stand to reason we can the better serve you? It is as if you were buying in London, Paris, New York, simultaneously, when you buy a Dunlop Tire in Canada.

Cord Construction—"Traction," "Ribbed."

Fabric Construction—"Traction," "Special," "Ribbed," "Clipper," "Plain."

When the tire selection is "Dunlop," you can Feel the Comfort, See the Mileage, and Sense the Safety.

"REGULAR GREY," "EXTRA HEAVY SERVICE GREY," and "BRITISH DUNLOP RED" TUBES

DUNLOP ACCESSORIES

Dunlop Tire & Rubber Goods Co., Limited

Head Office and Factories:

TORONTO

BRANCHES IN THE LEADING CITIES

Time and Money

We want and we will liberally pay one energetic lady in each community to represent the "Canadian Home Journal."

We already have scores of local representatives in our big Home Journal Club, and some are making as high as $100.00 per month.

There are still many towns and villages in Canada in which we have not a representative, and if you have any spare time that you desire to turn into money, write us to-day.

The remuneration of a "Canadian Home Journal" representative is according to the time and activity devoted to the work.

If you have plenty of time and energy there is practically no limit to your income or territory, for we make special provision for the live ones.

The women of Canada require more money to-day than at any time in the history of the nation. The "Home Journal" will supply that money in exchange for your time.

Write us to-day.

Canadian Home Journal

71 Richmond Street West, TORONTO.

Some Notes on the Art and Personality of the Greatest of Singers

The Centenary of Jenny Lind

By HECTOR CHARLESWORTH

SOME months ago on the occasion of the death of Adelina Patti, I wrote an article for the "Canadian Home Journal," on the childhood of the three most famous singers of the nineteenth century, Malibran, Jenny Lind and "La Diva." Circumstances have once more focused a public interest on Jenny Lind. On October 6th, the centenary of her birth at Stockholm in 1820, was celebrated in England, her adopted home, in Sweden, her native land, in the United States, where she made a permanent fortune in two years, and I do not know how many other lands. Having within so comparatively recent a period written of her artistic apprenticeship, it would perhaps be more interesting to many readers if I confined myself to the later aspects of her remarkable career. Of those who heard her at the zenith of her fame in 1850 very few survive, but allusions to her in books of recollections and memoirs are innumerable; and the consensus of opinion is that as a young woman her voice was the most beautiful that they had ever heard. With flexibility and warmth matching that of other great singers, who were her contemporaries and successors, it seems to have possessed an ecstatically spiritual quality which gave her a unique place in musical annals.

Her career, apart from her vocal eminence, was unique in several respects: first, the furore which surrounded her appearances both in Great Britain and America from 1847 to 1852, has never been equalled in the history of music, before or since; second, in the very height of her popularity as an operatic artist, she from religious motives gave up the stage, at what, in the long run, meant a large financial sacrifice; third, her tremendous vogue left her quite unspoiled, for when little beyond thirty she settled down to domestic life, and though she made occasional appearances, devoted herself chiefly to her husband, Otto Goldschmidt, one of the best and happiest of wives.

This latter circumstance is perhaps the most extraordinary of all; a woman, who in her youth had been the most courted personage in the world, save perhaps a few royalties, submerging herself in her own little artistic circle in London, where she was seen by thousands of people who did not know that she was the great Jenny Lind. This past summer an actor friend, who was originally a boy chorister in the Chapel Royal, St. James Palace, London, told me of an occasion when a number of boy singers were borrowed to assist the Bach Choir of London. This would be somewhere about 1880. At rehearsal a sweet grey-haired old lady shared her music with him and discussed points of expression. What was his amazement when he learned afterward that for three hours he had been sitting beside Jenny Lind of immortal fame!

THE facts of her early career are briefly these. Born at Stockholm, Sweden, on October 6th, 1820, she early lost her father, a lace manufacturer. The family was left in poverty and the mother became a school teacher in a suburban town.

The clerk and organist of the village church taught her music and was so impressed with her abilities that through a dancer whom he knew he interested the intendant of the Royal Opera at Stockholm in her. The consent of the mother to her becoming an apprentice at that institution, receiving a thorough training in music and dancing was obtained, and at the age of eighteen she made her debut in a leading capacity as Agathe in "Der Freischutz." The fame of her lovely voice gradually spread to Germany and France, and in 1842 she went to Paris and studied with Manuel Garcia, the brother of the great prima donna, Malibran. It was well that she did so, for Garcia is credited with having saved her voice, which was in danger of ruin from a bad method of singing.

Her greater fame dates from her appearance at Covent Garden, London, on May 4th, 1847, as Alice in Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable." Shortly afterward, while making a concert tour in northern England, she met Edward Stanley, Bishop of Norwich, father of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, afterwards Dean of Westminster. He became her spiritual adviser and persuaded her that the stage was sinful. So as soon as her existing contracts expired, early in 1849, she bade farewell to the operatic stage forever. Learning of her great success in England, P. T. Barnum, the great American show man, secured her for an American tour, and by unparalleled skill in the arts of publicity made it throughout its duration (1850-2) the most memorable success in the history of this continent. At Boston, in 1852, she married Otto Goldschmidt, the pianist of her concert party and went with him to reside in Dresden, Germany, but continued to make concert and oratorio appearances in England and elsewhere, confining herself to sacred and ballad numbers as a rule. In 1858, her husband was appointed teacher of singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London, and founded the Bach Choir. England thenceforth became her home, but her last public appearance was at Dusseldorf, Germany, in 1870, in her husband's short-lived oratorio, "Ruth." For the rest of her life, she used to sit among the first sopranos at the concerts of the Bach Choir, and had for her neighbor, Princess Christian, one of the younger daughters of Queen Victoria and her devoted friend. She died at Malvern, Nov. 2nd, 1887. By the consent of the Dean of Westminster, son of her old spiritual adviser, a bust and memorial tablet to her were afterward placed in Westminster Abbey. No other singer in history has received a similar honor in Britain or elsewhere.

There died in Toronto a few months ago a gentleman who heard Jenny Lind on her first appearance in Canada in October, 1851. He was Mr. W. H. Pearson, of the Consumers Gas Company, and at that time was a lad of nineteen. She gave two concerts under Barnum's management in St. Lawrence Hall, near St. James Cathedral on King St. East, Toronto, and Mr. Pearson's record of the event shows her immense fame at that time. The scenes in connection with her Canadian concerts were typical of

THE FAMOUS SINGER
This is reproduced from a portrait of Jenny Lind painted in 1866.

The Canadian Academy of Music

With which is amalgamated The Toronto College of Music, Limited

PRESIDENT:

Lt.-Col. A. E. Gooderham.

MUSICAL DIRECTORATE:

Albert Ham, Mus. Doc.

Frank S. Welsman.

W. O. Forsyth.

Peter C. Kennedy.

MANAGING DIRECTOR:

Alfred Bruce.

The most artistic school in the Dominion, with a reputation earned by famous teachers and brilliant students.

ORCHESTRAL, ENSEMBLE, CHORAL AND THEORETICAL CLASSES.

Descriptive Year Book, Examination Syllabus or Students' Residence pamphlet, mailed on request.

12-14 SPADINA RD.

TORONTO

Symbols of Love Eternal

LOVE that endures is most beautifully expressed by gifts that last.

Let jewels and jewelry carry your Christmas messages of love and friendship.

Diamonds, pearls, gems, jewelry, watches, clocks and silverware are gifts that keep alive the sentiment that inspires the giver.

Let Your Jeweler Be Your Gift-Counselor at this Christmas Season

©1919

That everyday, plain key that you see in the pantry door can be every bit as much a YALE key as the small, flat key in your pocket.

Maybe that small flat key in your pocket is not a YALE key at all—take a look at it and see.

No key is a YALE without the name YALE graven into it.

In future, don't worry about the design—buy by the YALE name.

That's the test for the best, in keys that are flat or keys that are round.

—as well as in all that is finest in reputation, invention, design, workmanship and material in Builders' Locks and Hardware, Padlocks, Night Latches and Door Closers.

Yale Made is Yale Marked

Canadian made YALE Products are for sale throughout the Dominion.

Canadian Yale & Towne Limited, Makers of the Yale Locks
St. Catharines, Ontario

The Journal Puzzle for November

By TOM WOOD

In the centre of each of these strange art flowers you will find a little picture. If you guess what is represented correctly and place the words in proper order—they are not arranged in proper order on the panel—you will find that the initials spell the name of the favorite flower for the month.

The six larger pictures beneath portray things or words, all of which may be found in the word "November."

Two prizes will be given—first, two dollars, and second, one dollar—for the best solutions, judged according to neatness and accuracy.

All are eligible to compete. Answers must be received by November 20th to be included.

Correct Solution of the September Puzzle.

- |                        |                         |
|------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1—Bell Island.         | 5—Sleepers Island.      |
| 2—Mansfield Island.    | 6—King George Island.   |
| 3—Coats Island.        | 7—Baker's Dozen Island. |
| 4—Two Brothers Island. | 8—Marble Island.        |

Birthstone—Chrysolite.

First prize, Edith L. Dunkin, Box 157, Burlington, Ont.; second, D. E. Green, P.O. Box 279, New Glasgow, N.S. The first prize for the August puzzle was won by Ruth Howard, of Springfield, P.E.I.

Address Puzzle Department, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto.

The Land of P'raps

By BETH SADLEIR

DIDDY HAPPEN, and Dedder Naherrin, and also the little If, were at the far end of the October road, but a curtain-cloud with a smiling face shut off their view of the November path.

Surely this could not be journey's end, thought Diddy. Even, as he thought, a cloud rolled upward, just like a window-blind, and a broad, beautiful roadway stretched out in front of them.

There were few flowers, but the leaves that carpeted the pathway, as well as those which still decked the trees, bore all the rich tints of Autumn. There was a pleasant tingling in the I've opened up the nut-burrs for the winter eaters. What can I do for you?"

The speaker was Jack Frost, and though Diddy thought him a cool customer, there was a friendliness about him too:

"And what can I do for you?" asked Jack Frost again.

"Paint us a picture, of course," answered Dedder Naherrin.

The frosty chap stretched out his strange single arm, and, hopping and dancing here and there with amazing quickness, changed everything that he touched. Blades of grass became little white plumes, dead leaves changed morning air, and a freshness to the wind, and Diddy saw many of the little people of the outdoors making ready for the cold days to come.

THE P'RAPS

DRY

WARM

"They have found the box with all the winter beds in it," said Diddy. "Jack Frost must have brought his key and opened it."

A sudden gust of icy wind nipped Diddy's ears. Dedder's nose, and the If's curly tail. They were no longer alone, for a sharp, clear voice spoke crisply:

"I've brought bed-time for the winter sleepers."

FROST

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 30.)

from leathery-brown to velvet-white. A tiny wayside pool was now surfaced in a glassy stillness, on which a million snow-stars sparkled.

Jack Frost touched Dedder Naherrin too, and the old man's long beard was covered with a glistening rime. He painted Diddy's nose a cherry red. The little If had not escaped either, for he was hopping around briskly to keep his toes warm.

With a laugh and cheery word, Jack Frost danced along, back and

THE JOURNAL JUNIORS' CLUB

Conducted by
BERTHA E. GREEN

MY Dear Club Members:

I was very glad to hear from so many of our boys and girls. You see it is through your letters that I get acquainted with you all, your tastes, your ambitions and your plans. It is from your letters, too, that I shall look for your co-operation in making the page the best that can be—it is our page, you know.

There is another way of getting acquainted. Each winner in one of the contests shows the other members a new way of doing something, perhaps, or it may be shares an encouraging thought. If it is a photo in a camera competition, there is the sharing of something beautiful and new to your comrades. With this thought in mind, and with summer past and more indoor hours to spare for all, I look for keen interest in the contests from now on. Our Club is the meeting place of understanding friends.

I enjoyed your story, Mary Jackson, ever so much even though it was not the prize winner. "The Good Shepherd," painted by Plockhurst is indeed a fine picture and I am glad you have it in your room. It certainly was a lovely birthday gift and doubly precious when it came from your "Daddy."

Your story of the dog, Irma Fraser, was indeed most interesting and how you must have enjoyed meeting him. I am fond of dogs too, Irma, and hope you will compete often in the contests from month to month.

What a charming story you sent me, Tessie Tadman, about your favorite picture, "The Melon Eaters," a copy of Murillo's famous picture. It is the prize winner and the members of the Journal Juniors' Club and myself extend our congratulations and hope you may grow to like art better and better and so see the beauties which lie hidden to a casual observer.

In reply to your letter, Kathleen Dawes, I am so sorry your journal reaches you so late. I have spoken to the editor and I hope you may get it next month in time to compete. "Anne of Green Gables," is one of my favorite books, too, as well as "Sowing Seeds in Danny." I am sorry your "My Favorite Book and Why" was so late reaching me. But try again and write me if the journal does not reach you earlier. So you would really like my picture to be put in the journal. That is very nice of you, Kathleen, and some day when we have a little more space I should be very glad to do so.

Trusting to hear from you all early this month, I am

Sincerely your friend

BERTHA E. GREEN.

Prize Story for September.

"The picture I like best and why," awarded to Tessie Tadman, age 10 years, 107 Lisgar Ave., Winnipeg, Man.

THE PICTURE THAT I LIKE BEST AND WHY.

By Tessie Tadman.

IN my bedroom I have a large copy of Murillo's picture. "The Melon Eaters." I insisted on having this picture bought because it appealed to me so greatly. I am about to relate the story as my Dad told it to me.

It's a picture of two street urchins who lived in Seville, Spain, a long time ago. From their surroundings we judge they had gone into the country for vegetables, and when returning had loitered by the way. Their clothing indicates that they are from poor families, but the expressions on their faces show them to be contented and happy.

If you have a copy of the picture, notice the attitude of the boy about to eat the piece of melon. How eagerly his gaze is fixed upon it! The expression of the other boy shows that he is enjoying the sport as much as his companion. Perhaps the first boy is about to swallow the piece of melon on a wager, and the second boy seems to be very much interested in what his companion is doing for he has delayed eating his own share.

A cute little dog is also interested in the sport. See how eagerly he is watching his master, and his wistful expression shows that he also would like to share in the feast.

The rest of the picture shows a basket of vegetables and a shrub. Both are to the right of the picture.

Boys and girls, don't you think that this picture is, or should be a favorite with all children? The man who painted it must have loved children of all classes. I think so. Don't you?

TESSIE TADMAN, (10)

107 Lisgar Ave.,

Winnipeg, Man.

THE YEAR'S LAST ROSE.

By Bertha E. Green.

NOVEMBER brings within its days a time of peace: it is the Indian summer, when, after the first frosts and cold rains, there comes a mellow softness to the air. There is a blue smoke-haze behind which dull red suns seek to hide, and nights with softened moonlight.

It is as if nature hesitated, and took a long, slow breath before the plunge into the depths of winter.

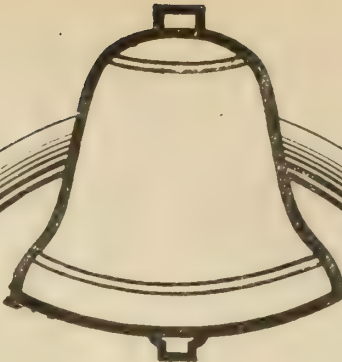

In Spain, in Southern France, in Sunny Italy, there is the same period of rest between seasons. But among the peoples whose homeland borders the Blue Mediterranean Sea, it is St. Martin's summer. The festival of good Saint Martin falls in November, the eleventh. We may read of it in lines written ever so long ago, and when November comes each year, we, too, with Shakespeare in his Henry VI, "expect Saint Martin's summer halcyon days."

One may hear stories told in many lands, of why the springtime comes, and why it is that winter brings its snow. But I would tell you the Indians' reason for their summertime,

A LITTLE WELSH COUSIN

Here is a picture sent to us all the way from Wales from a family interested in the Journal's Juniors.

Clear as a Bell

THE SONORA has the clarity and vibrant charm of the great bronze bell in the church tower which peals its chime lazily over the town on a quiet Sunday morning.

The purity, sweetness, naturalness of expression and mellow richness of Sonora's tone make it superbly beautiful.

THE INSTRUMENT OF QUALITY

Sonora

CLEAR AS A BELL

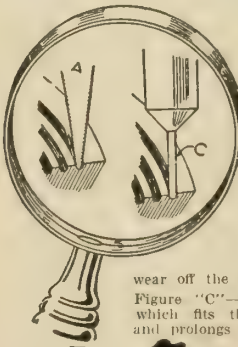

INVINCIBLE

NOCTURNE

You Pay No Luxury Tax on a Sonora
Write for Catalogue, Dept. "C."

I. MONTAGNES & COMPANY

3rd Floor Ryrie Building, Toronto.

40c

For Package of 5 Semi-Permanent Silvered Needles

Ask your dealer for a package of these wonderful new needles. They play from 60 to 100 times without being changed.

Figure "A"—Ordinary Steel Needle fitting record groove. It is quite logical that the ordinary needle becomes of larger diameter at the engagement point as the needle wears down (owing to its taper form) and thus tends to wear off the edges of the groove of the record.

Figure "C"—Sonora semi-permanent needle, with parallel sides, which fits the record groove accurately always while wearing, and prolongs life of record.

Sonora Needles

Three Grades—Loud—Medium—Soft

I. MONTAGNES & COMPANY

Distributors Dept. "C," Ryrie Building, Toronto

Solve This Puzzle and Win a Phonograph

1st Prize:
Phonograph.
2nd Prize:
Wrist
Watch.
3rd Prize:
Camera.

|   |   |   |
|---|---|---|
| 1 | 2 | 3 |
| 4 | 5 | 6 |
| 7 | 8 | 9 |

4th Prize:
Gent's
Watch.
100 Prizes of each a Fountain Pen.

ALSO A GREAT MANY CONSOLATION PRIZES

All you have to do to win one of these splendid prizes is to re-arrange the figures in the above squares in such a manner that they will count 15 every way, and send us the answer together with your name and address, and if it is correct we will at once forward you an "Inkless Pen" for your trouble, and also the particulars of one other simple condition that you must fulfil before you are eligible for one of the larger prizes. This condition is very easy and need not cost you one cent of your money. Remember, the "Inkless Pen" will be sent FREE by RETURN MAIL. So send right away NOW to what happened everywhere she went. The legend, not only of her beautiful voice but of her religious and benevolent character, had been exploited by Barnum to the full. At the sale of tickets which opened at Nordheimer's Music store on King Street, the sidewalk had to be barricaded to keep back the clamorous and disorderly throng. The price of admission was $2.50, which would represent at least three times that sum to-day; but very few got in for so small a fee, because ticket speculation was rife, and many paid fabulous sums for those days. The number which lingered in Mr. Pearson's memory was her rendering of "Comin' thro' the Rye," but he said that her voice was strangely thrilling in more important works. He recalled her as of medium height with blonde hair and plain features, relieved by a very sweet expression, and everyone was impressed by her unassuming manner.

SELFST SPECIALTY CO., Dept. F., Station F., Toronto

The Centenary of Jenny Lind

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25.)

HERMANN KLEIN, a veteran London music critic, and the official biographer of Patti, was a boy in Norwich in the sixties when Jenny Lind's memory as a singer was still fresh in everybody's mind. As the scene of her conversion she honored the city with many visits and founded there the Jenny Lind Infirmary for Children, to raise funds for which she sometimes gave concerts. At one of these, when she was approaching fifty, he heard her sing Agathe's prayer from "Der Freischutz," the work in which she had made her debut at Stockholm thirty years before. Her voice was still as fresh and clear as a young girl's. Its sweet tones long haunted him and he can never forget the wealth of religious sentiment with which she invested the number. In the opera Agathe falls on her knees as the aria begins, and Klein saw her revert to the old custom on the platform of St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich. The sincerity of her personality prevented her action from seeming incongruous. Many years later he was present at the unveiling of the tablet in Westminster Abbey, when all the celebrities of the day were present to honor her memory.

The loyalty of the English public to musical artists whom it loves is proverbial, and as early as 1847, it became sacrilege to speak in terms other than eulogy of the "Swedish Nightingale." At that time the leading music critic of London was H. F. Chorley of "The Athenaeum." The singer had brought to him from Germany, a letter from his friend, Mendelssohn, and they became close friends. Chorley, however, at the height of the "Lind Fever" (when well-dressed people would wait for hours to obtain admission to Covent Garden) showed his candor by raising a single voice of protest against what he termed the "chorus of idolatry." He claimed that the enthusiasts ignored the existence of any defects in the public favorite and forbade the discussion for any other claims than hers (Grisi, for instance, had been deposed). He has left it on record that his sincerity brought on him "such ignominy as belonged to the idiotic slanderer. Old and seemingly solid friendships were broken forever in that year." The prima donna herself, remained his friend.

The association of Jenny Lind with Barnum, "Prince of Humbugs," has always seemed incongruous to many. But in her old age, the singer herself told Sir George Henschel a story which in his opinion entitles the show man to the "grand old name of gentleman." Her first contract with him, made in London, seemed advantageous from the European standpoint, but on her arrival in America, Jenny Lind discovered that her remuneration was out of all proportion to the enormous receipts. For instance, at the opening concert in New York, Genin, the hatter, paid $300 for a single seat. She spoke of her surprise and disappointment in a good-humored way to Barnum and to her surprise he immediately took from his pocket the precious contract, which insured him incredible profits, tore it up, and said, "Madame, send me your lawyer to-morrow, and I will sign any contract he may see fit to submit to me." The result was a sharing arrangement based on equity, which gave her a fortune.

Ganong's GB Chocolates

In 1/2, 1, 2 and 5 pound boxes.
Ask for the "Delecto" Box.

IT is so easy to entertain unexpected guests when you have a "company box" of G. B. Chocolates expressly for such occasions.

Nothing to prepare—no trouble to serve—and a delightful treat for your visitors.

Originated by
GANONG BROS. LIMITED
ST. STEPHEN, N. B.

Makers for 50 Years of Fine Chocolates.

19

The finest in the Land

Health and The Home

Our Family Physician is writing one of the most helpful departments in this JOURNAL. The writer has had many years of varied experience, and we are fortunate, indeed, to have secured her services. The department is not for diagnosis, but for suggestion and discussion of all topics associated with well-being and the healthful home.

1,000 Eggs In Every Hen

Don't Kill Your Yearling Birds.
New System of Poultry Keeping.
If You Keep Chickens
CUT THIS OUT

"The great trouble with the poultry business has always been that the laying life of a hen was too short," says Henry Trafford, International Poultry Expert and Breeder, for nearly eighteen years Editor of "Poultry Success." The average pullet lays 150 eggs. If kept the second year, she may lay 100 more. Then she goes to market. Yet, it has been scientifically established that every pullet is born or hatched with over one thousand minute egg germs in her system—and may be made to lay them on a highly profitable basis over a period of four to six years' time if given proper care. How to work to get 1,000 eggs from every hen is the poultry system explained in a Bulletin issued by Mr. Trafford, one copy of which will be sent absolutely free to any reader who keeps six hens or more. If you want your hens to make more money for you, cut this out and send it, with your name and address, to Henry Trafford, Suite 342P, Tyne Bldg., Binghamton, N.Y., and a free copy of his 1,000 EGG HEN Bulletin will be sent by return mail.

THE Romantic Girl sighed deeply as she helped herself to a cheese sandwich. "I've been at Marion Grey's wedding this week, and, do you know, there was something sad about it? She was engaged to Billie Markham, who was killed at Vimy—and—well, she might have remembered him a little longer."

"But she's married an awfully decent man," said the Practical Person. "Harry Grange was a friend of Billie's and came back with several decorations."

"Oh, I suppose it's all very sensible and wise of Marion to be married and have a home of her own—and the Madeira table-linen she got was simply lovely—but it seems so soon to forget."

"That kind of love wears off more quickly than any other," said the Practical Person with a wise nod of her brown head. "Look at the war widows who are being married again! After all, how many widowers remain true to a memory? Most of them marry again within two years of the dear wife's death. They're too silly for words over the second venture."

"I suppose you're thinking of that tiresome Mr. Hornby, who has made such a goose of himself over May Win-surveyed such wealth of peaches as even this garden district has seldom known. "It is no wonder," said Stella, "that Canadian artists are always painting October scenes. It is Canada's month."

When one reads of famishing citizens in certain stricken parts of Europe, there comes a wonder that the fruits of the Earth seem to be so curiously distributed. Here are heaps of peaches which cannot be picked—and apples are rotting on the ground. If we only had a magic carpet or an aeroplane that would make the journey across the sea in a day, what largesse we might give to those with whom even the daily bread is a problem!

Then we wandered through a glorious old woods, where old trees spread their sturdy branches above us and the leaves came fluttering down so gently that we felt summer was stealing away in the quietest fashion, as if she were unwilling to say good-bye to so much beauty. Golden was the leafy pathway, and russet, brown and tawny gold were the branches overhead, beyond which was a deep-blue expanse of sky. There were surely good fairies in the old woods that day, telling us that life is

"WHO WANTS APPLES?"

Mayor Gray, of Winnipeg, is here showing some of the Ontario apples he imported in an effort to supply Winnipeggers at low prices.

ton. And he declared to my brother George, that his heart was buried in his first wife's grave and that he didn't care to see any woman again."

The Practical Person chuckled gleefully. "I'm glad he has married May, for she's an extravagant little thing and will spend his money on ever so many gowns and hats. He was rather stingy with the first wife, you know:—affectionate, but thrifty."

"Well, to go back to Marion's wedding! I could quite understand how Billie's mother didn't care to go. She was invited, of course, and sent some beautiful china, but Mrs. Somers told me that she refused to be at the wedding."

"Oh, mothers are different," admitted the Practical Person. "They always remember, and I shouldn't think that Marion would have expected Mrs. Markham to be at her wedding. It's curious how stupid some brides can be. But it's a cruel old world, after all, which forgets very soon—and it's just as well, perhaps, that these war widows are so easily consoled. You are dreadfully uncomfortable if you have much heart—and, you know, there's nothing more effective than a young widow with a pathetic little air of bereavement that just cries out for sympathy and protection."

"Yes, I suppose it's all right—only you would like to think of Marion cherishing Billie's memory."

"Perhaps she will cherish it all the more when her husband scolds because the dinner isn't ready or because she's put too much powder on her nose," said the Practical Person.

"You're hopeless," said the Romantic Girl with a sigh.

ON a certain golden day in mid-October, several of us went over to a perfectly wonderful fruit farm which is enough to make Niagara famous, and good and the Earth has always beauty at its heart—that "through showers the sunbeams fall."

THE announcement of the marriage of Miss Roberta MacAdams, a member of the Alberta Legislature, leads to many conjectures as to what the feminine legislator who takes unto herself a husband is to do with her public career. Will she retire from the legislative halls or will she endeavor to combine politics and domesticity? This western bride is an able and charming woman, who has many friends in East and West, who showered best wishes on her wedding day. During the war, she went overseas and gave valuable service at Orpington Hospital. Naturally, when she became a candidate for political honors, the soldiers' vote was hers without the asking and the election could hardly be called a contest. Cupid is no respecter of parliaments, however, and has not the slightest compunction in sending his arrows over the desk of the woman legislator. The marriage of the feminine member is somewhat different from that of her brother in the legislative seat. She is supposed to occupy herself with the cares of the household; and in these days, when the domestic helper is a vanishing quantity, it will not be an easy matter to look after the affairs of a menage and worry about such trifles as budgets for the province. However, the modern woman is equal to many emergencies and the world may soon become accustomed to the charming hostess, who pours tea with one hand and draws up an amendment to the home-stand laws with the other.

Far-famed for Quality

Every packet of "Salada" is good alike. For 30 years a household word in Canada and the United States because of its genuine value and unequalled flavour.

Black, Green and Mixed

see packets only

The Brunswick

This Christmas

Choose a

Brunswick

Now's the time to consider the special value of the Brunswick as a Christmas gift for the whole family.

Choose it for its unrivalled Tone and Versatility—for its matchless beauty.

Choose it because of its exclusive all-wood oval horn which amplifies tone according to the laws of Acoustics—for its exclusive Ultrona that plays all makes of records exactly as they should be played.

Hear! Compare! Decide!

Ask your nearest Brunswick dealer to play ANY make of record—let your own ears be the judge.

Write for the book, "What to look for in buying a Phonograph"—sent free and postpaid on request.

The Musical Merchandise Sales Co.

Sole Canadian Distributors

Dept. H. J.

79 Wellington St. W., Toronto

Read Canadian Literature

The best way to know your country is by reading the stories, essays and poems of your own writers. The Canadian has made a place of his own in fiction and poetry, and the productions of Canadian artists are winning recognition everywhere. If you wish to keep in touch with Canadian thought and problems of native importance, you must read the daily, weekly and monthly magazine forth through the November days, painting his feathered pictures, sometimes only playful, sometimes a bit of a mischief.

M A D E I N C A N A D A

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26.)

The travellers came at length to a part of the road where they found all the flowers blackened and withered, and many of the green things were dead or drooping. Jack Frost had touched them once too often.

But all was not dull and desolate, for, immediately beyond this part of the road, Diddy and his friends passed through the quiet, restful days of Indian Summer-time. There were tented fields of shocked corn, and great golden globes of pumpkins.

After this, there were days of rain, and days of sleet, and little skiffs of snow sometimes. But the weather didn't bother Diddy and his friends at all, for countless numbers of two kinds of letter-men came with them through the unpleasant days. These were the D-r-y-s and the W-a-r-m-s and they were surely a great comfort to the travellers.

As they went along the November road, old Dedder Naherrin grew a little more excited every day, for, as he told Diddy, they were nearing the city of Am.

There was hardly a moment when some of the little letter-men that they had met before were not in sight. Often, indeed, there were whole processions of words that told the travellers they were on the right road.

Their journey had led them through the Province of the Unexpected on the road of the long year, from one November to another.

And now they were coming to the city of Am where the Grand P'raps lived.

The first glimpse that Diddy had of the city of Am was the tip of a high tower that showed above a hill ahead of them. When they reached the top of the slope, a strange sight unfolded, a strange city spread out before them circled by stone walls. The November road led the travellers to one of the great gates in the wall, before which stood the letter-man S-t-o-p. He would not open the gate until he caught sight of the little If.

They might go in, the Stop said, because the Grand P'raps was fond of Ifs. So the great gate swung wide, and Diddy and his friends passed up a wide street between odd houses. These houses were the homes of the letter-men, and each one had an A for a roof, and an M for the walls. There were crowds of little word-men, and all were very noisy as they rushed from their homes and followed Diddy and his friends.

They came at last to a great square, in the centre of which was a fountain, and, standing in front of the fountain was a letter-man almost as tall as Diddy himself.

It was the Grand P'raps. Standing beside him was old Father Time smiling in welcome. It was he who spoke first.

"So you are home at last, Dedder." "But the city of Am can't be your real home, Dedder," said Diddy quickly. "You are not a letter-man."

Old Dedder Naherrin did not reply. He seemed to shrink, his beard disappeared, and, quicker than it takes to tell, instead of the kindly old fellow there was a wobbly little letter-man, whom Diddy made out to be A-G-E.

At a sign from the Grand P'raps, the A-G-E took his place with the other word-men who stood in rows at the side of the square, and as the P'raps waved his knobby arms again, all the queer word-people of the city of Am sang their closing ode.

While they were singing, Old Father Time unhooked the alarm-clock from the If's curly tail, saying that the If would need it no more on this journey. Then, taking both Diddy and the If, he set them both on his hour-glass.

A strange thing happened then. The hour-glass rose from the ground, and so did Father Time. The Grand P'raps and the word-men were still singing as Diddy and the If mounted higher and higher.

Through and over the clouds they journeyed, far and long, until—

A sleepy Diddy Happen rubbed his eyes. He was sitting on the ground.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 54.)

Barber - Ellis
FRENCH ORGANDIE

Is used by all who appreciate high class stationery

In note paper and tablets with envelopes to match

FRENCH ORGANDIE
"THE STATIONERY OF THE REFINED"
ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR IT

Gathering sap for Small's in the great maple forests of Quebec.

The real maple flavor— a secret known to Nature only

That tantalizingly delicious maple flavor that always earns a call for "more!" cannot be imitated, at least not successfully.

There's no necessity of putting up with imitations, anyway, when your grocer can supply Small's Forest Cream Syrup, Sugar and "Sugar Butter." The genuine syrup of your younger days that adds a new delightfulness to pancakes, that is so good with just plain bread and butter, and is "simply heavenly" with Johnny cake. And Sugar—the good old-fashioned kind that you used to eat until you couldn't eat more. Grown-ups as well as youngsters of to-day crave this characteristic Canadian sweet.

Small's Forest Cream Cake Icing and Bread Spread or "Sugar Butter" is a more modern product, but it has the same old-time natural maple flavor. It can also be had with Chocolate, Honey or Coconut flavor. Spreads like butter—great on bread. A delicious cake icing that needs no preparation.

"Small's"—that's easy to remember—at your grocer's.

made the mistake you mention. White lashes and brows are a serious defect, in my opinion; also there is a freckle lotion which has been successfully used; therefore I may be able to help you on both scores. Remember, though, great care must be exercised in altering the natural color scheme. I have known a perfectly charming expression of countenance to be given a villainous cast by an inartistic darkening of the eyebrows.

L. E. N.—There is nothing so disagreeably noticeable as a color line distinction between face and neck. Now that the holiday season is over it is high time to begin a reform in that direction. The sun and wind have a darkening effect which sometimes requires careful treatment to counteract. However, a few minutes attention each day will work wonders and I would advise thorough massage with a good cleansing cream as first aid. After this an application of the preparation whose name I am sending you, will, I hope, restore your discolored skin so that its whiteness may not fear comparison with a peaches and cream complexion.

Through the Looking Glass

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23.)

PEARL.—Not many of us object to a generous supply of color, my dear girl, provided it stays where it belongs. But when it forgets that the parking spaces for a really well-behaved rosy flush lie east and west of the nose, and proceeds to intrude over forbidden area, then indeed must we take means to protect ourselves. Poor circulation might easily be the cause of your distress and the other trouble seems to me to be quite worthy of consideration. There are simple ways of dealing with both of these which everyone knows and meanwhile you may purchase the cream, the name of which I am sending you, and which will keep your nose white and unshining for hours at a time.

ANNETTE.—If I knew of any restorer for grey hair which was not a dye, my fortune would be made, my friend. Also, I would be glad to tell you about it, for it is a real trial to find those stiff white hairs making such inroads among your pretty brown locks. You are so young that I am inclined to think a good tonic applied regularly would do wonders to restore health and beauty to your hair, and that in the new growth the intruders would be so lost and uncomfortable that they would disappear altogether. I shall send you the name of a successful tonic and wish you good results. There are dyes, of course, some may be satisfactory, but I would advise the greatest caution in dealing with them.

the Northland story of "The Year's Last Rose."

A river flows through the land ever towards the morning, just as in the time back through uncounted suns. Over the wide snows walked Giant Wendigos in the dark of the moon, the evil spirits of the night. There was much game, and hunters kept to their tents after the sun had set.

On the bank of the river, one early summer, was a tent of cariboo hide, and close around it played a little girl—Neenah of the Star Eyes. A laughing sprite was Neenah, with all the straight, supple grace of a young birch, and a voice as a bird in spring.

Oh, happy hearted was Neenah in the summertime. Hers was a world of berries, of frisking squirrels, of friendly, brown rabbits, of laughing waters. But, mostly, hers was a world of roses.

It came to Neenah that with the snow would come the end of her rose-days, and, hunting in her mind as to why this should be, she said:

"It is a Wendigo who covers up the roses."

All that day Neenah thought, and the next morning saw her gathering roses, sweet briar roses, and with twining vines and roses, Neenah wove a flower chain as long as the canoe of her father.

The Journal Juniors' Club

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27.)

That night, when all was quiet, Neenah crept from the tent and out to the top of a hill bare of trees. Here in the misty light of the stars, Neenah waited for the coming of a Wendigo.

How long she waited Neenah never knew. From the north there came a sound as of a cloaked figure passing in the darkness, a cold whisper as of the night wind in the pines. As the sound came near the hill top, Neenah flung out her rose-decked flower-chain to bar the way.

There was a hush, the Wendigo could come no nearer. To Neenah he looked as a mist in the starlight, but finding his way blocked by the flower-chain, the Wendigo began to plead. So Neenah knew that she had indeed caught him.

CONTESTS FOR NOVEMBER

- 1—Boys and Girls 12 to 16 years—Not more than 500 words on any one of the following subjects:—
  - (a) If you were a great artist, what sort of picture would you paint?
  - (b) If you were a great musician, what would you like your music to tell?
  - (c) If you were a great writer, what sort of book would you give to the world?
- 2—Boys and girls 8 to 12 years—Not more than 300 words; subject, "My Favorite Game."
- 3—Camera Contest—Subject, "A Winter Country Scene."

In vain the spirit promised her more sunshine for the snowy days, in vain he offered to let the spring come earlier. To neither of these would Neenah listen. She wished to keep her roses a little longer from the snows.

So it came at last that, though the Wendigo would not agree to hold back the cold rains nor the first light fall of snow, he promised that after these, each year, would come a little time for Neenah to say good-bye to her roses.

So every year since then, following the first snows has come the Indian Summer, the resting time days of the year's last rose, the time to say "good-bye" to flowers and summer days.

WIND WHEEL OF THE DJINN.

There is a place for the home-coming of all the winds, and there lives he who calls them back, the Djinn, their master. As each wind returns, the Djinn winds it slowly on his wheel as wool is wound upon a reel. As the wheel turns, the Djinn sees on the reel, as on a scroll, the pictured story of its wandering in far-off lands, so we shall tell you tales of this wonderful wheel.

SOCIAL SERVICE AND THE SARNIA BABIES

The women of the Sarnia Branch of the Red Cross Society have been doing a good work in baby clinics. In top row (left to right) are Mrs. Samis (President), Dr. Logie, M.H.O.; Dr. Young, Assistant M.H.O.; Miss Grace Menzies (Red Cross Nurse).

Try This Way of Making Liquid

KLIM

READ the label on the tin for proportions, pour fresh water into a fruit jar, add the KLIM, then shake the jar for a moment or two. In actual practice, this method is the quickest and most convenient way of making liquid KLIM in whatever quantity you require. If you make more liquid than is needed for immediate use, leave the balance in the jar and put in a cool place until required. Keep the jar handy to the Klim tin and you can quickly make a supply of liquid separated milk that has the fresh flavor so necessary in getting the best results from your favorite recipes.

Good cooks recognize the advantages of Klim. It guarantees a reliable supply of fresh pure separated milk at all times and under all conditions. It eliminates waste. It saves the ice bill and is not affected by variable weather conditions.

KLIM is packed in three sizes, the half-pound tin is a splendid "trial package," or for use at a picnic or on a day's outing. The pound tin makes four quarts. The big ten-pound tin is the favorite for family use—it is the economical size to buy. Order from your nearest grocer.

Place Klim on top of water in a fruit jar

Close top, shake for a moment

Pour Liquid
Klim into a pitcher

CANADIAN MILK PRODUCTS LIMITED

10-12 St. Patrick St., Toronto

81 Prince William St., ST. JOHN    319 Craig St. W., MONTREAL    132 James Ave. E., WINNIPEG

B.C. Distributors: Kirkland & Rose, 132 Water St., Vancouver, B.C.

Send a Dollar for a Tin of Klim Brand Powdered Whole Milk

KLIM
POWDERED WHOLE MILK
WITH THE FAT IN IT

which contains all of the fat of the original rich whole milk from which it was made. Because of its richness in fat, the product is not sold by grocers, but is sold direct to the user. Clip out the order form and send to our nearest office. You will receive by return parcel post a trial pound and a quarter tin with price list.

Order your tin to-day and learn how convenient and good POWDERED WHOLE MILK is.

CANADIAN MILK PRODUCTS LIMITED
(Address our nearest office)

Please mail a pound and a quarter tin of KLIM Brand Powdered Whole Milk and price list. Enclosed is ONE DOLLAR.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

(Print name and address for clearness.) 9-11

But That's Another Story

Lee County, Mississippi, has had a health campaign in which prizes were offered for health slogans contributed by school-children. Four thousand slogans were produced; the first prize was won by this: "Chew your food; you have no gizzard." Fifteen hundred mile-posts bearing this and other useful health precepts were erected by enterprising merchants throughout the country.

A returned vacationist tells us that he was fishing in a pond one day when a country boy who had been watching him from a distance approached him and asked, "How many fish yer got, mister?" "None yet," he was told. "Well, yer ain't doin' so bad," said the youngster. "I know a feller what fished here for two weeks an' he didn't get any more than you got in half an hour."

The late Ambassador Walter Hines Page was formerly editor of "The World's Work" and, like all editors, was obliged to refuse a great many stories. A lady once wrote him: "Sir: You sent back last week a story of mine. I know that you did not read the story, for as a test I had pasted together pages 18, 19, and 20, and the story came back with these pages still pasted; and so I know you are a fraud and turn down stories without reading same." Mr. Page wrote back: "Madame: At breakfast when I open an egg I don't have to eat the whole egg to discover it is bad."

"The religious knowledge of too many adults resembles, I am afraid, the religious knowledge of little Eve," says a well-known clergyman. "So you attend Sunday-school regularly?" the minister said to little Eve. "Oh, yes, sir." "And you know your Bible?" "Oh, yes, sir." "Could you perhaps tell me something that's in it?" "I could tell you everything that's in it." "Indeed." And the minister smiled. "Do tell me, then." "Sister's beau's photo is in it," said little Eve, promptly, "and ma's recipe for vanishin' cream is in it, and a lock of my hair cut off when I was a baby is in it, and the ticket for pa's watch is in it."

A number of English officers were sitting in a German restaurant in Cologne having a very good time for people who were away from home. They were struck by a rather lively conversation between the leader of the orchestra and several of its members. All of a sudden the orchestra began to play "Die Wacht am Rhein." Every one rose to his feet, while the officers, including the English, stood at attention, until the last note had been played. The leader was so surprised that he came down to the English officers and began the following conversation: "Gentlemen, may I ask you a question?" "Go ahead!" "Did you recognize the piece we just played?" "Sure!" "Do you know that was 'Die Wacht am Rhein'?" "Why, certainly," said one of the Englishmen, raising his voice so as to be heard all over the hall; "but that's all right. Die Wacht am Rhein—that's us."

Have you ever paused to realize, while reading my page, how arduous is the business of hunting up new stories? Like savory omelettes, they should be served hot, for they soon grow stale, and are passed from mouth to mouth with the speed of wireless. Nelson Jackson supplied me with a most amusing anecdote last week, says a writer in "Answers." I noted it eagerly for your benefit—and have just heard it repeated by another comedian. Nevertheless, the odds are that you have not heard it yourself, so I will quote it here on the chance. A very fat man, of Chestertonian proportions, decided to find out how much he weighed at a railway station. Two small urchins stood by and watched him as he struggled on to the automatic weighing-machine. (Two small boys nearly always watch whatever fat men do.) Unfortunately, the weighing-machine was out of order, and the indicator moved slowly and sluggishly, refusing to go beyond five stone. "Blimy, Bill!" exclaimed one of the urchins. "E's 'oller!"

Our Christmas Number

Our December issue, from its fairy-tale cover to the closing page will tell a story of cheer and good-will, and present such a varied programme that you will find it one of the good things of the Yuletide Season. Fiction, cookery, stories and puzzles for The Journal's Juniors—all these will arrive in our December packet.

The Newer Knowledge of Nutrition.

DO you ever learn anything? The Bourbons learned nothing and forgot nothing. (What a terrible type of mind that—a mind that forgets nothing! The healthy mind can forget.) But you are not a Bourbon, are you? They do say there are quite a number of that famous family still "carrying on."

But about that "Newer Knowledge of Nutrition." Now is the time for you to understand it. You say the older knowledge is good enough for you. Three cheers! All I say is—do you carry out your knowledge? No—of course you don't. Well, then, let me put it in a new way to you and perhaps you will feel more like carrying it out. It takes about seven years to get a new idea before people and it is quite seven years since this knowledge began to be available. As always, "some believed, but some doubted," and so history went on repeating itself. It appears, moreover, to take more than seven years to put new ideas into the heads of some nations, e.g., the Germans. At least the German experts on food, as late as 1916 or 1917, made a special report on the food supply of the German Empire (you know why) and they did not once mention in that report the new word which is the key to the new knowledge. That word is Vitamines. Now stop thinking about the Germans. They were desperately over-rated, but then that was because they rated themselves and did their own advertising. Let us be warned to do the opposite and try to learn something. Live like Lord Roberts for example.

"E's a wonder for his size:
And 'e does not advert'se."

Vitamines.

THE first glimpse of an idea about Vitamines came from the East. A terrible and fatal disease known as beri-beri, (the name is derived from a Hindoo word meaning fetters) characterized by multiple neuritis, wide-spread in China, Japan and Polynesia, and because of its wide-spread character thought to be infectious and epidemic, gave doctors the first hint where to direct their thinking. Look in any Medical Dictionary published in 1910 or thereabouts, and you will find something like this: "Beri-beri is supposed to be due to a diet of rice or of fish or to decomposition or infection of these foods, but the causative agent is not certainly known." It was not a bad guess, but it was a first guess and there was a long, long way to go before the guess gave place to sure knowledge.

Too Much Up-To-Date.

THE next gleam of light came from the conjecture that only those who lived exclusively on rice that had been ground by up-to-date steel rollers and polished, suffered from the disease, while people who lived exclusively on rice that was home-milled, or not milled at all, escaped the disease. How was that? The "Silver Skin" of the rice, the "pericarp" as the botanist calls it, was lost and with it that part of the grain right next to the husk, (Serve your potatoes in their jackets!) containing the "germ" of the rice hidden away under the "silver skin." That was what was lost.

That Guess Was Right.

THIS conjecture was proved to be true in two ways. First, pigeons, fed upon an exclusive diet of polished rice, took the disease. They could not walk, any more than a man could who had the disease. Such a patient, poor man, walked, if he could walk at all, like a man bound hand and foot with fetters. (Hence the Hindoo word). And the pigeons when they tried to walk, "turned cart wheels backward." Second, the doctor, who made the clever conjecture, whose name was Casimir Funk, now made an extract from the polishings of the rice, thrown away in the process of milling, (whole wheat flour and old-fashioned oat meal are good for you) and gave a little of this extract to the pigeons. It cured them in from six to twelve hours. They were perfectly well again! There is a miraculous cure for you. So then we knew how to cure Beri-Beri.

There Were Others.

CASIMIR FUNK was not the only one. There was Braddon and Stanton and Sir Thomas Barlow, and especially Professor Gowland Hopkins who all worked at it, and all helped to solve it.

But Casimir Funk was the one who gave the new name to this new bit of knowledge. He found that his extract that he had made from the polishing of rice was of a nitrogenous character. It was related in chemical composition to certain organic compounds that you used to call "amines" when you studied chemistry. And as it seemed to be necessary to life he called it "Vita-mine," a name that is used now for all these substances.

They are necessary to life. And there are a good many of them. Professor Gowland Hopkins called them "accessory food factors," and that's a good name too. No one has ever yet "caught" a vitamine. They cannot be isolated or "got pure" as it were, as we can get salt or sugar. Nobody has analyzed them, but it is known that there are at least three different vitamines. We do not know much more about them than these two facts:

1. They are necessary to life.
2. What foods contain them. But we cannot live on vitamines alone. Hence the wisdom of the name "accessory food factors." We need meat (protein) once a day, bread, sugar starch, cereals, etc., (carbohydrates) butter and other fats, salts, and water. Milk contains every one of these and so is the indispensable food for children and a good food for anybody. But what we must have in addition is something "fresh" and uncooked. Boiling and cooking at a high temperature destroys that "vitamine", whatever it is. When you see lettuce, cabbage, parsley, apple, orange, tomato, onion or any other fruit or green vegetable, have some if you can.

Three Kinds of Vitamines.

VITAMINES are named, in classes or orders:

A. Vitamines. Soluble in fats. Found in green leaves and the growing parts of plants. Stored up in the fat of the body, and found in milk and most milk products. The lack of these has terrible results to children. The war has taught us this, especially in enemy countries.

B Vitamines. Soluble in water. Found in the germs of seeds, the seeds of yeast, and in the yolk of an egg.

C Vitamines. Found in fresh vegetable foods. These foods prevent scurvy and therefore are often called "anti-scorbutic." The ultimate source of all these vitamines is plant-life. Man gets them also from eggs and flesh of animals which he uses for food. You do not like canned food too often, do you? Of course not. Nor "sophisticated" foods, all "fuss-ed-up." No. As Col. McCarrison, I.M.S., said last month at the Annual Meeting of the Research Defence Society, "The more men substituted for foods made in Nature's Laboratory, those of their own invention, the more freely would Death stalk unchallenged in their midst, and the greater would be the burden of humanity's woe."

HAVING THE COUNTRY FAIR.

This shows the gayety of the autumn fair as seen in Ontario this year.

PRIZE ROSES.

At the show of the Rose Society held at the Horticultural Hall, Westminster, England.

RED CROSS WORK IN SARNIA.

This Supervised Playground is under the care of The Red Cross.

You Owe It to Your Children

To see that they are surrounded at home, as they are in school, with influences that will assure their developing into real red-blooded Canadians—worthy successors of the men and women who, on the battlefields of Flanders, wrote Canada's name in letters of fire on history's page.

Surround them at home, as you know they are in school, with an atmosphere that throbs with the spirit that rings through every line of our stirring "O Canada" and "The Maple Leaf Forever"—the spirit that the greatest military machine in the world could not break down, but rolled back from, amazed.

Cultivate, by every means at your disposal, a love for their Canada that no power on earth can break down or conquer. Encourage them to read of Canada's greatest men and women—Wolfe, Brock, Cartier, Macdonald, Tupper, Selkirk, Strathcona, Ryerson and Laura Secord—to know of these first; and place Canadian books and magazines—plenty of them—in the bookcase and on the living-room table. Encourage your children to give Canadian publications always the preference. Let them read others if you wish, but let Canada's be first always.

Non-Canadian publications, good as many of them are, will not develop Canadianism. They cannot. It was never intended that they should. Their publishers frankly admit it. When you visit your American friends, you seldom see a Canadian magazine in their homes. Of course you won't. Canadian magazines don't promote Americanism. That's not their object. Neither is it the object, nor one of the objects, of American magazines to promote Canadianism.

It rests largely with Canadian mothers as to whether Canadian publications or non-Canadian publications will dominate in shaping the ideas and ideals of their children.

What is your decision?

The Canadian Home Journal

is a thoroughly Canadian publication, owned, edited and published by Canadians for Canadians. Its stories are Canadian. The questions it discusses are discussed from the viewpoint of Canadians. The home problems it solves are Canadian; the Children's Department is Canadian. In every line from cover to cover the CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL is Canadian.

Encourage your children to read it.

By NORMAN HARRIS

Editor Concerning Investments:

I think that you are quite right when you say "Inquire first and invest after," but my case is just the other way round, because I did not have anyone to whom I could look for advice. I think you will be able to tell me how I made out. My investments are as follows: Griffin Enterprises, bond at par, $500, with one share of stock as bonus. These bonds carry seven per cent. and are to be all terminated in 1929. I have fifteen municipal bonds of the City of Leipzig, Germany, each of 1,000 marks, and carrying four per cent. interest. I have also purchased K. 10,000 Vienna 4's. These investments I made through H. J. Dingman & Company, Royal Bank Building, Toronto. Then besides this I have something I think less of, namely 3500 shares of Baldwin Gold Mine Company, at fifteen cents per share. This vestments for consideration, gives an illustration of the things not to do. What, on the other hand, should be done?

Let us assume for a moment that none of us are trained in financial and investment matters. We then have only our general knowledge and common sense to go on. Our general knowledge tells us that true investment is based on an every-day necessity. The man who puts out his money wants to know what its disposition is going to be. He knows, after it leaves his hands, that he cannot trace its movements, so it is a natural feeling for him to say, "I do not want to release control of my money entirely; I would prefer to have some one employ the funds, and agree to return it to me after a period, and meanwhile pay interest on the same." The instrument that covers

PROVINCIAL BANK BECOMES POPULAR

The Province of Manitoba has established Provincial savings banks, which are finding favor with labor unions. The office shown above, which is the main office in Winnipeg, is receiving deposits at the rate of $125,000 a month. The picture shows a wage-earner making a deposit.

I bought of Tanner & Gates, Dominion Bank Building, Toronto. This is all I have invested, unless I buy more Austrian municipal bonds. P. O.

THE Griffin Enterprises bond is a security based on a luxury; therefore it is not the type of security to be chosen to represent the first section of capital to be lodged in well chosen securities representing the basic things of the community, but rather might be selected as the tail end of one's bond purchases. Your acquiring of the kronen and marks securities is against a federal enactment. If the chartered banks of Canada were carrying out Ottawa instructions, they would have refused to allow your cheques to go through. Ottawa says we cannot buy foreign securities at the present time. Apart from that, you are not investing, to my mind; you are simply gambling, because the element of investment usually inherent in a municipal debenture is almost totally lacking in the bonds you mention. If you can get clear of these securities without loss, or at small loss, I would let them go, and acquire either Victory Loan, or Eastern Canada Municipal Debentures which have thriving farm earnings behind them instead of a huge national and municipal deficit such as is most common in Europe to-day. The Baldwin stock is a speculation that is not active enough to be quoted. If you do not object to quite plain speaking, I would say that to date you have rather made a mess of your "investment" programme.

WHERE is the mystery about this subject of investment? I fail to see any. The inquirer on this page who submits a list of what he calls in-that reasoning is the bond. The bond returns the principal.

Suppose our untried investor settles upon the bond as the basis of his investment. The next question is, what kind of bond? Any first-class Bank manager will inform the customer as to the best and safest bonds. I should think that right away one's ideas would gravitate to the bond issued by one's Government, and after that the bond issued by the local Government, and after that to the bond or municipal debenture issued by the City or town in which he lives. He can see all around him the security for these issues. The selection of a foreign municipal debenture is good only to the extent that the security chosen is a debenture, and not an ordinary stock. Everyone knows in what position the war has left Europe. Every person who reads the newspapers, either carefully or once a week, is aware that the value in the world's markets of the continental currencies is away down. Why? Common sense will tell him the quotation value is down because there is not the real value behind the money of the country that there should be.

Information Coupon

November, 1920.

If a subscriber will fill in this coupon, and send along with the enquiry, the best service at our command will be ensured.

Name .....

Address .....

Quality Products

THE same care in the choice of ingredients and in manufacture that established the popularity of Swift's Premium Oleomargarine is making Swift's Gem Nut Oleomargarine a favorite with housewives all over the land. Equally high in quality, it differs from Swift's Premium in being a purely vegetable product. Both are made under the most sanitary conditions — never touched by hands — and answer every table requirement at a big saving in price. You are assured of satisfaction, if you insist on

"Premium" Swift's "Gem Nut" Oleomargarine

Made in Canada

Use either — you'll like both.

Your Butcher or Grocer has them or can easily get them for you.

Swift Canadian Co.
Limited
Toronto    Winnipeg    Edmonton

MONARCH-KNIT

SWEATERS HOSIERY YARNS

MONARCH YARNS, spun from fine, long-staple Australian wools, come in forty fashionable shades in handy balls of various weights for various uses. Book No. 5 "Art in Knitting Monarch Yarns" is just off the press. Copies at 25c each may be had from your dealer, or if he is not able to supply you, from the factory direct.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPING will be made much simpler, easier and more enjoyable if you have the forethought to include in your gift list Monarch-Knit Hosiery. Stylish as well as sensible, it will be welcomed no less for its usefulness than for its long wear and good looks. The new elastic-rib top, made with a special stitch, gives perfect fit with perfect comfort. Heels and toes are double spliced; legs are full length; ankles fit snugly and trimly, and the sizes are correctly marked. Your drygoodsman is now showing a full range of Monarch-Knit stockings and socks for men and women, in fashionable weaves and colors, at moderate prices.

If you wish your gift to be of a very special nature, let us suggest a Monarch-Knit Sweater Coat or Pullover, either of which may be had in delightful color combinations with that unusual refinement of finish which distinguishes the new Monarch-Knit styles. An early inspection of your dealer's display will convey far better than words just what we mean by this.

THE MONARCH KNITTING CO., LIMITED
DUNNVILLE, MONARCH KNIT ONTARIO, CANADA

THE MONARCH KNITTING CO. COMPANY LIMITED

MADE IN CANADA

CANADIAN WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

PROVINCIAL SUPERINTENDENTS

ALBERTA . . . . . Miss Mary MacIsaac . . . . . Edmonton, Alta.
 BRITISH COLUMBIA . . . . . Miss Olive E. Hayes . . . . . Victoria, B.C.
 MANITOBA . . . . . Mr. S. T. Newton . . . . . Winnipeg, Man.
 NEW BRUNSWICK . . . . . Miss Hazel McCain . . . . . Fredericton, N.B.
 NOVA SCOTIA . . . . . Miss Helen J. Macdougall . . . . . Truro, N.S.

PROVINCIAL SUPERINTENDENTS

ONTARIO . . . . . Mr. George A. Putnam . . . . . Toronto, Ont.
 PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND . . . . . Miss Della E. Saunders . . . . . Charlottetown, P.E.I.
 QUEBEC . . . . . Miss M. May Chute . . . . . Macdonald College, Que.
 SASKATCHEWAN . . . . . Mr. S. E. Greenway . . . . . Saskatoon, Sask.

Prince Edward Island Convention

WRITTEN BY DELLA SAUNDERS.

THE Seventh Annual Convention of the Women's Institutes of Prince Edward Island was held in Charlottetown, September 1st and 2nd, with fifty delegates enrolled. Considering the very unfavorable weather this was a splendid attendance.

The address of welcome was given by Hon. Walter M. Lea, Commissioner of Agriculture, who expressed his pleasure at the privilege accorded him of welcoming so many delegates. Mr. Lea referred especially to the good work which the Institutes are carrying on in connection with school and community improvements and urged the women to use their influence to increase the attendance in the rural schools. He laid stress on the fact that the Government does not legislate in advance of the wishes of the people and said that if the rural communities desire educational advancement they must agitate for it.

Mrs. Walter Simpson of Bayview replied to the address of welcome and after thanking Mr. Lea for his words of appreciation of the Women's Institutes, she spoke of the excellent programme which had been prepared for the enjoyment and profit of the delegates. She went on to state that to those who had attended the Convention in previous years it was an event which is looked forward to and planned for, as one of the greatest pleasures of the year. It is a time when the home cares and work can be dropped for a day or two and our women realize that after all, through the agency of the Women's Institutes, woman is coming into her own.

In our Women's Institutes there must be a living germ,—the germ of service, of mutual helpfulness. It is so easy in this busy world to attend to our own work and let our neighbor do the same, but how much we miss of the real joy of living and how much more it means to us through life, to once in a while drop our work and take some message of love and sympathy to one who is really in need of it. In closing, Mrs. Simpson said, "Let us all resolve at this Convention to do better—to remedy our mistakes and to put before the world a work of which no one need be ashamed." "Service" was the keynote of her address.

Mrs. C. L. Barnes of Georgetown, was appointed Secretary of the Convention, then Miss Saunders, Supervisor of Women's Institutes for P.E.I., presented her annual report.

There are now thirty-one active Institutes in the province with a membership of six hundred. Nearly five thousand dollars was raised by the clubs during the year, most of which was expended on school and community improvements. Fifty visits were made to the Institutes by the Supervisor and Assistants when demonstrations in millinery, home nursing and cooking were given as well as talks on Institute work and other subjects of interest. Teaching cooking to the pupils of the Charlottetown schools is also a part of the work of the Women's Institute Branch. Eight classes a week receive instruction.

During the winter months a series of short courses was conducted for the women of the rural districts of the Province. Each class lasted two weeks and practical work in cooking, laundry, home nursing, first aid, sewing and millinery was given as well as lectures on many subjects of interest to the home-maker. A six weeks' course for the wives and sisters of the P.E.I. soldier settlers was also put on by the Women's Institute Branch.

Miss Saunders spoke of the great opportunities for service afforded the Women's Institutes and urged the members to make the current year the very best one in the history of their clubs. She pointed out that the success of an Institute is not measured in dollars and cents but by the spirit of sympathy and co-operation which it has engendered throughout the community.

Following the report of the Supervisor the branch reports were read and these proved most interesting. School improvement is engaging the attention of most of the Institutes and many much needed reforms have been brought about by their agency. Covered drinking fountains, individual drinking cups, hardwood floors, new

Edward Island," she said, "and I have come back to it as often as I could. The Island is noted throughout Canada for its potatoes, its horses, its foxes—but there is something greater than all these which the Province is producing—Men."

Dr. MacMurchy explained the duties of the Department of Health at Ottawa and stated that before the formation of this new department eight different ministries were occu-curate registration of all marriages, births and deaths.

Dr. Ira Yeo, Chief Provincial Health Officer, then addressed the meeting. Dr. Yeo spoke on the subject of Medical Inspection of School Children. He emphasized its paramount importance not only to the children themselves, but to the country. This is an age in which efficiency is being demanded in every department. In the industrial world old ideas and methods have been discarded and it is time that they were being "scrapped" in our educational system. The necessity for medical inspection of the school children is urgent. It has been neglected in the past because its great necessity has never been brought before the public. "To the members of the Women's Institutes of this Province," continued Dr. Yeo, "the appeal is made to establish this great movement."

The Thursday morning meeting of the Convention opened at 9.30 a.m. with Miss Helen McKenna presiding. A talk on "Girls' Clubs" was given by Miss Bona Mills, Secretary, Y.W.C.A., and an interesting discussion followed. The idea of Junior Women's Institutes for the girls was received with much favor and it is thought that a number of these clubs will be organized in the near future.

Miss Helen J. Macdougall, Superintendent Women's Institutes for Nova Scotia was the next speaker. She gave a splendid talk on "Institute Work" which was thoroughly enjoyed by all, and those who listened to her could not but be impressed by the boundless opportunities for service confronting the Women's Institutes.

Miss Macdougall also explained the aims of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada and read the Constitution. The question as to whether Prince Edward Island would join the Federation was then discussed. Mr. W. J. Reid, B.S.A., representing the Commissioner of Agriculture, stated that the Department would pay the initiation fee and, for this year, bear the expenses of two representatives to the Board of Directors' meeting in Montreal. (Applause.) It was moved, seconded and carried that Prince Edward Island join the Federation.

Thursday afternoon meeting opened with Miss Saunders presiding. The nominating committee's report was read by Mrs. C. L. Barnes, when the following were presented as candidates to represent the Province on the Board of Directors: Mrs. John McGuigan, Mrs. Gordon Ives, Mrs. William Cotton. Vote by ballot being taken resulted in the election of Mrs. John McGuigan, Hope River.

The Convention decided to send only one representative to the Board of Directors' meeting along with Miss Saunders, Supervisor, who was duly authorized by the Convention to vote on all questions which might come before the Board.

At the conclusion of the business part of the afternoon meeting a paper on "Kitchen Wrinkles" was read by Miss Bessie Carruthers, Assistant Supervisor, which gave many practical suggestions regarding labor-saving devices for the home.

Mr. Wilfred Boulter, Director, Elementary Agricultural Education for P. E. I., gave a splendid address on "Women's Institutes and Their Part in Educational Progress."

At the opening of his address, Mr. Boulter commended the Institutes for the good work they had accomplished in the schools throughout the Province, and urged the delegates to see that every Institute had one of its members on the Board of School Trustees.

When we have done the things we set out to do and accomplished much that is worthy, we must not cease in our efforts but strive to make the best a little better until our schools are giving every child the chance to secure an education which makes for his best mental, moral and physical development.

AN ONTARIO OFFICIAL

Mrs. William Todd, of Orillia, is one of the most efficient and experienced officers in the Women's Institutes, and is Vice-President for Ontario.

blackboards, libraries, musical instruments for use in the schools, school gardens, pumps in the school yards and more sanitary conditions of schoolhouse and out-buildings are some of the improvements noted in the schools as the result of the work of the Women's Institutes.

The Wednesday evening meeting, presided over by W. J. Reid, B.S.A., opened with community singing and all joined most heartily in a song service of "Old Time Favorites."

A feature of the evening's programme was a talk by Dr. Helen MacMurchy on Child Welfare Work. Dr. MacMurchy received hearty applause in coming forward and opened her address by paying an enthusiastic tribute to the Island Province, to its resources and its beauty. "It is twenty years since I first visited Prince Edward Island," she said, "and I have come back to it as often as I could. The Island is noted throughout Canada for its potatoes, its horses, its foxes—but there is something greater than all these which the Province is producing—Men."

Dr. MacMurchy explained the duties of the Department of Health at Ottawa and stated that before the formation of this new department eight different ministries were occu-

Residence of Mrs. Todd, Orillia

So Easy to Use

Quick, clean, convenient
—no muss, no trouble,
when you use

Ideal Silver Cream

the perfect silver polish. It contains neither grit nor acids to scratch or stain. It will not stick in the chasing, and gives a beautiful, lasting polish to your gold and silver ware. It also cleans cut glass, mirrors, brasses and statuary. A cream you may safely use in cleaning your finest possessions.

Ask your dealer for a jar

CANADIAN POLISHES LIMITED, HAMILTON, CANADA

A Few Minutes a Day for a Good Complexion

IS it worth that to you?
There is a simple, sure way that costs little and if followed regularly will bring results.

Try this simple formula—"A little CRÈME ELCAYA rubbed gently into the skin; then if you need color, a very little rouge spread carefully over the cheeks before the cream is quite dry; and after that the film of Elcaya face powder over all."

CRÈME ELCAYA

is a delightful, non-greasy, disappearing toilet cream that makes the skin like velvet.

In jars at 35c and 75c

MacLean, Benn & Nelson, Limited
Montreal

Distributors for Canada

The favorite for 20 years.
Sold all over the world.
Made in CANADA by
THE ELCAYA CO. OF CANADA, Limited
James C. Crane, Pres't.
Montreal, Canada

When you buy—when you use—when you think of

MUSTARD

You Want
KEEN'S

the always reliable—the absolutely genuine.

MAGOR, SON & CO., Limited
Canadian Agents
MONTREAL — TORONTO

56

INDIGESTION

Millions of men and women now eat favorite foods without fear. If your meals don't agree, eat one or two tablets like candy. Help is prompt. Impaired digestion is usually corrected by neutralizing excessive acidity with

Large 60c Case—Drugstores

It was pointed out that the young teacher, going out to her first school cannot but make many mistakes. Mr. Boulter urged that the women show her sympathy rather than criticism, that they commend the good in her work and suggest ways to overcome her difficulties, and that they co-operate with her in everything that tends to the betterment of school conditions.

Speaking of the work that the Department of Agriculture was attempting to do, he described the organizing of the "Boys' and Girls' Clubs," the loaning of money to enable the members to purchase stock, and the grant offered this year to every school fair in the Province that complies with the regulations laid down by the Department.

In closing, Mr. Boulter suggested that the women study the platform of Agricultural Education as presented by Mrs. Laura Rose Stephen of Huntington, Quebec.

An interesting discussion followed Mr. Boulter's talk after which the delegates were conveyed in autos to the Experimental Farm where afternoon tea was served and a delightful social hour was spent.

At 8 p.m. Thursday evening, the closing meeting of the Convention met in Prince of Wales College Hall with Mrs. Bert Brown presiding.

The meeting opened with a short song service followed by a paper on "The Problem of the Feeble-Minded Child," by Dr. V. L. Goodwill, Medical Superintendent Falconwood Hospital, Charlottetown. Dr. Goodwill stated that a wave of increasing interest in the problem of the feeble-minded was spreading over our Dominion. The actual number of sub-normal children in our child population is much greater than generally recognized. Their management becomes one of our great, modern, social and economic burdens, and we cannot very well consistently neglect them as in the past.

The first step necessary in undertaking this work, if we are to grapple intelligently with it, is to have a complete and continuing census of all the feeble-minded children in the province. If we are ever to make any impression in reducing the number of dependents that crowd our institutions, we must begin with the children, find out where the defectives are, who they are and their number.

The census register should be strictly confidential, under the control of a central government authority or Board. Its responsible officer should have a splendid knowledge of mental deficiency and its many social expressions. The general health examination of the school children should be insisted upon and could be easily executed to include and require a mental examination of every child obviously retarded in school work.

In closing, Dr. Goodwill said that there is reason to believe that if the intelligent handling of the problems of the mentally defective child is undertaken, appreciable results in the reduction of our many classes of dependents will in time become evident.

The second speaker of the evening was Reverend G. D. McLellan, D.D., Rector of St. Dunstan's University, his subject being "The Influence of Good Reading on Character Building." The Doctor said in part: "The formation of character is an absorbing topic. Education that does not make for the formation of character is a sham and an injury. Character may be defined as the sum total of all our habits. If a habit is good we call it a virtue; if bad we call it a vice. We are not born with habits; they are of our own making. Youth is the time when habits are formed, and it is then that character is moulded. The work of moulding the character of youth is given in an especial way to mothers by Nature. Next perhaps to the mother's influence, is the influence of books upon the child. Words fly away but the written thing remains. The quality and character of the written word which reaches the child at an early age is of paramount importance. Reading develops the imagination and with our imaginations we can either live among the angels or wallow with the animals."

In conclusion, Dr. McLellan congratulated the ladies assembled before him for their handling of such problems as would give them higher ideals and send them back from their Convention refreshed and strengthened, ready to do their part in the world's work.

A resolution, moved by Mrs. C. L. Barnes, seconded by Mrs. Walter Simpson and unanimously carried, expressed the thanks of the delegates to Miss Saunders and her Assistants and to all others who had in any way helped in making the Convention a successful and enjoyable one.

Canadian Home Journal.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE CONVENTION—CENTRAL ONTARIO.

Toronto, November 9, 10 and 11.

November 8th, 2 p.m.—Board Meeting

November 9th.

Afternoon—Presiding, Mrs. William Todd, Orillia.

- 1.30—Registration.
- 2.00—Opening Ceremonies.
- 2.15—President's Address.
- 2.30—Reports and Discussions.

Evening.

- 7.30—Community Singing.
- 8.15—Continuation of Reports.
- 8.45—Solo.
- 9.00—Address, Dr. Reynolds, O.A.C., Guelph.

November 10th.

Morning.

- 9.30—Address, "Rural School Farms," Mr. R. S. Duncan, Department of Agriculture. Discussion, Miss K. E. McIntosh.
- 10.00—Report of Treasurer.
- 10.15—Reports of Committees.
- 12.15—Luncheon for Representatives (one from each District). Election of Board of Directors.

Afternoon.

- 2.00—Address, "Work of Provincial Board of Health," Dr. J. W. S. McCullough, Toronto.
- 3.30—Address, "Child Welfare Throughout the Province," Dr. Helen MacMurphy, Ottawa.
- 3.45—Address, "Consolidated Schools," Dr. Sinclair, Toronto.

Evening.

- 7.30—Community Singing, Chairman's Address.
- 8.15—Music. Report on Election of Board of Directors and Officers.
- 8.45—Address—Honorable E. C. Drury.

November 11th.

Morning.

- 9.30—Community Singing. Civic Improvement. Community Halls. Entertainments and Amusements. Demonstration Lecture Courses. Traveling Libraries.
- Address—"House Planning and Home Convenience"—Miss E. M. Chapman, Toronto.
- Address—"Medical Inspection of Schools"—Dr. J. Waugh, Toronto.

Afternoon.

- 2.00—Address—"The Responsibilities and Opportunities of Institute Officers and Members"—Miss E. J. Guest, Toronto.

District Work—Co-operation with other Organizations, Extension of Work, etc.

A NOTE FROM RENFREW.

The District Authority wrote as follows: The Medical Inspection survey is bringing results in our County. Two clinics have been held in Renfrew and one in Arnprior, sixty children having been operated on by the local doctors, so from this fact, I am presuming that the parents have become interested.

The Institutes are taking up the Rural School Hot Lunch and I hope to be able to report about seven schools, carrying on under the supervision of the Institutes.

The above, with the regular routine, has been practically all the work the branches have been doing. Generally they are taking an active interest in their schools. One of the most active members, an officer since 1914, was made a trustee and is working harmoniously with the male members of the School Board. The appointment was entirely voluntary on the part of the men, as they were not approached in the matter.

We are interested in Baby Clinics, and I feel sure such a thing would work out well in a centre like Renfrew.

ATHENS WOMEN'S INSTITUTE.

Our Institute has a membership of over eighty members. We are working in a two-fold way, materially and intellectually. In the first, considerable is being done to encourage the beautifying of the homes. Prizes have been awarded for the best kept and most attractive grounds surrounding residences. Trees have been planted around town halls, seats have been bought and placed on the lawn and window boxes filled with bloom placed in the windows. Steps are being taken for the purchase of a park, suitable for a playground for the children.

Turn Babies' Cries into Smiles!

When baby's little limbs are chafed and sore use Mennen Kora-Konia.

Mothers, doctors and nurses who use it on babies for diaper rash and teething rash say it is almost miraculous in the way it soothes and quickly heals the raw, inflamed baby skin.

Its medicinal properties, antiseptic and protective, aid Nature in healing and in giving quick relief. Dusted over baby's tender skin, it forms a thin protective film, that guards against the distressing results of further rubbing.

Mennen Kora-Konia will bring instant relief!

Kora-Konia should not be confused with Mennen Talcum Powder, which has made babies sweet and comfortable for nearly forty years. It has somewhat the same soothing and healing action, but, in addition, contains several other ingredients of recognized medicinal value which are indicated in the treatment of the more serious skin abrasions. It is antiseptic, absorbent, adhesive, moisture-resisting, cooling, soothing and healing.

MENNEN KORA-KONIA

The Mennen Company
Factory: Montreal
Sales Office
Harold F. Ritchie
& Co., Limited
10 McCaul Street
Toronto

253

dren. A committee has assisted in the care of the cemetery. In the spring, seeds are purchased and given out to the children—also eggs for setting. Visitors are appointed to visit those gardens during the summer noting the condition in which they are kept. In September, a school fair was held when the children competed for prizes on vegetables, flowers, plants, art, wood-carving, poultry, sewing, embroidery, crocheting, cooking, etc. To defray the expense of prizes, a concert by the children is given, the ladies of the Institute training them for their different parts. The children thoroughly enjoy the day.

The Institute also pays the librarian for the town. At each meeting an address or paper is given embracing such subjects as:—

(1) "Laws Relating to Public Health."

The Board of Directors' Meeting

By Elizabeth Bailey Price.

IF the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada, held in Montreal last month, did nothing else than go on record for its absolute dearth of resolutions, in this age of resolutions from women's clubs, it would be unique in the history of women's organizations whose representatives convene for three days in succession.

But it did much more. It evolved a strong, definite, practical, national policy with machinery and detail as to the working out of this policy.

Getting the work done is not the problem of women's organizations today—it is showing that it is worth while and backing it with a practical plan of carrying it out.

Women are getting tired of being emancipated; they are getting tired of pursuing vague abstract principles, which are alleged to save the nation, and they are getting very dubious about passing resolutions which just go on record.

Women are clamoring for the practical and the definite. All the talk of a great and glorious organization, of its national and international possibilities will be ultimately of no avail unless it can be translated into a definite benefit to the community or the fireside.

The work of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada is divided into departments, each department headed by a convener of a committee, the various Committees being: Health and Child Welfare, Laws, Immigration, National Events, Institute Technique, Agriculture, Education and Better Schools, Household Economics and Publicity.

Outstandingly helpful and practical were the reports of two of the conveners, Mrs. Alfred Watt, M.B.E., on Institute Technique which she interpreted as principles, aims, and methods of work, and that of Mrs. Laura Rose Stephen on agriculture, those because they seemed to strike at the fundamental and basic principles of the Women's Institute movement which has its strength in its rural membership.

Mrs. Watt explained that technique of any movement or art deals with the matters which belong to its execution, its method of performance, the way in which material, human or otherwise, is made to express mental conception.

"We all recognize," said Mrs. Watt, "that certain principles must underlie all good work, that certain aims and objects are common to Women's Institutes and cognate societies; that certain ways of doing things succeed better in Women's Institutes than other ways; that we have certain distinct features of our work that make for its success. But what we do not always recognize is that each member should be versed in this Women's Institute lore, that she should be able to enunciate its principles, define its aims, describe its method of work and distinctive features. But no one who has studied our movement will deny the need of such knowledge.

"This non-recognition has led us into error and has prevented a proper diagnosis of our case. We assume that Women's Institutes are simple little societies to which any one can belong, which can be run in any old way, which has only to secure a government grant, pass a resolution against cigarettes, and hold a whist drive to be a successful Women's Institute. We start out to reform the world and very often we cannot conduct a meeting or even hold an Institute together.

"No, a Women's Institute is a highly specialized business undertaking. Our members are from the two most specialized branches of our social system, namely, farming and home-making. It is an organization, a bit of machinery, to develop the country community and is intended to have a deep and far-reaching significance in the national life. And above and beyond all that it is a spiritual sisterhood, ever looking upwards to a fine and high ideal.

"Granting these fundamentals then, it is plain that we must have expert trained workers who will instruct in the principles and practices of the movement, who will help us perfect our machinery, who will bring dignity and order into our work and will uplift and inspire as those only can uplift, who know and love and respect their work.

"It must be remembered also that we cannot hope to have a clear field forever in work among country women. We have hitherto got government assistance (and often very generous assistance) on our past record. The time is fast approaching with the growth of independent provincial and county federations when we shall get this assistance only by showing complete and satisfactory plans for the future. We shall have to prove not only that we have the best machinery existing for the development of country life, but that our administrative ability is unquestioned, that we know how to run our own business, smoothly and efficiently and on lines that commend themselves to business people. Then too, no organization stands still. It must go forward or go back. In any movement which presses steadily forward with a healthy growth improvements are continually suggested, and what has been tested and found good in one part of the Institute world should be known to fellow workers. It follows that there must be some experimental work.

"The recommendations for the work of this section are on broad, simple lines and are general in their character and are given with the hope that there will be elaboration by leaders and organizers in the provinces with special relation to their individual needs."

At present we are making preparations for a series of entertainments to be put on by the Dominion Chautauquas, Limited. We have also contributed twenty dollars to the Armenian Relief Fund.

We have raised a goodly amount of money by collecting magazines and newspapers and selling them. We also served tea to the social club of the Robert Wright Co., Brockville, which added materially to our funds.

(2) "A Nurse's Experiences in the War Zone."
(3) "Making the Most of Our Opportunities as Citizens."
(4) "Food Value of Milk and its Products."
(5) "Christmas in All Lands."
(6) "Importance of Dentistry."
(7) "Canadian Patriotism and What it stands for."
(8) "Influence of Music in the Home" and many other such topics.

(2) "A Nurse's Experiences in the War Zone."
(3) "Making the Most of Our Opportunities as Citizens."
(4) "Food Value of Milk and its Products."
(5) "Christmas in All Lands."
(6) "Importance of Dentistry."
(7) "Canadian Patriotism and What it stands for."
(8) "Influence of Music in the Home" and many other such topics.

(2) "A Nurse's Experiences in the War Zone."
(3) "Making the Most of Our Opportunities as Citizens."
(4) "Food Value of Milk and its Products."
(5) "Christmas in All Lands."
(6) "Importance of Dentistry."
(7) "Canadian Patriotism and What it stands for."
(8) "Influence of Music in the Home" and many other such topics.

(2) "A Nurse's Experiences in the War Zone."
(3) "Making the Most of Our Opportunities as Citizens."
(4) "Food Value of Milk and its Products."
(5) "Christmas in All Lands."
(6) "Importance of Dentistry."
(7) "Canadian Patriotism and What it stands for."
(8) "Influence of Music in the Home" and many other such topics.

(2) "A Nurse's Experiences in the War Zone."
(3) "Making the Most of Our Opportunities as Citizens."
(4) "Food Value of Milk and its Products."
(5) "Christmas in All Lands."
(6) "Importance of Dentistry."
(7) "Canadian Patriotism and What it stands for."
(8) "Influence of Music in the Home" and many other such topics.

Recommendations for Educational Propaganda in Women's Institutes.

1. That a group of workers selected from the different provinces be trained in the principles and practices of Women's Institutes who will form this section and be prepared to carry out plans of work.

2. That schools of instruction be held in each province with some such programme as appended.

3. That text books and leaflets relating to methods of work be prepared and made available for Institute workers.

4. That this section be made a clearing house for new ideas and improvements which have been tested in the Institutes.

5. That journals which have a W.I. Department include a department of W.I. Technique, mainly for questions and answers.

6. That it may be recommended to the provinces that conference programmes include always items —"Out of your whole day give but a moment."

Before you dress in the morning—

Before you retire at night — powder all over with

MENNEN TALCUM POWDERS

The result will surprise you.

A feeling of freshness that lasts through the day.

No clothes clinging; no skin irritation; an atmosphere of cleanliness, freshness, charm.

Sprinkle a little in your shoes before walking.

After the bath—preparing for the party.

Mennen Violet Talcum—Fresh as the morning.

Mennen Sen Yang—Redolent of the East.

Mennen Cream Tint—For those who find a white Talcum unbecoming.

Mennen Flesh Tint—The "first" Flesh Tint Talcum.

And the famous Mennen Borated Talcum for Baby—Has been unequalled for forty years.

The Mennen Co.
Factory: Montreal
Sales Office
Harold F. Ritchie
& Co., Limited
10 McCaul Street
Toronto

232

10 to 20 times
the amount taken

That is the nourishing power (proved by independent scientific experiment) of

BOVRIL

"California Syrup of Figs"

All druggists sell the reliable and genuine "California Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna."

Laxative for Children

Full directions for children of all ages are plainly printed on label. Mother! You must look for our name—The California Fig Syrup Company.

DOMINION EXPRESS

MONEY ORDERS

There is no better way to pay your out-of-town accounts.
On sale in 5,000 offices in Canada.

Horlick's Malted Milk

Used successfully everywhere nearly 1/2 century
Made under sanitary conditions from clean, rich milk, with extract of our specially malted grain.
The Food-Drink is prepared by stirring the powder in water.
Infants and Children thrive on it. Agrees with the weakest stomach of the Invalid and Aged.
Invigorating as a Quick Lunch at office or table.

Ask for Horlick's And Get
The Original

2319

Small Farming as a Pastime

Jack & Jill on Their Sabine Farm

By JOAN

JACK and Jill were country-born and country-bred, but both had drifted cityward in their youth. Jack had learned railway telegraphy in Toronto, and later migrated to Detroit; but somehow he had failed to become Americanized, and after a while he returned to Canada. For some years he was a station-master in the Muskoka wilds; then he was moved nearer to the haunts of civilized men and was placed in charge of an important junction-station some two miles from a large town. Meantime Jill had donned a nurse's uniform in a Toronto hospital; but, in the course of time, it came to pass (the limits of this story will not permit a narration of the details) that she became mistress of Jack's home at the railway-station.

According to the Company's prospectus, the dwelling provided for the station-agent and his wife was "comfortable and commodious." It consisted of seven rooms, situated over the office and waiting-rooms, and was reached by a winding and rather "Never you mind!" said Jack. "We'll manage somehow. It's worth trying anyway."

"But what about the distance from the station?" queried Jill. "In the summer you won't mind the walk, and you can cut across the field; but in the winter with the snow ever so high, it will be a different story."

BUT Jack would not be discouraged, and without delay they moved their household goods over to the little cottage by the creek. And there I found them two years later when I came down to pay them a visit in the spring of 1920.

The two years had seen ambitious developments. When I arrived at the station, Jack met me with, "You'll find Jill and Dick at the back, waiting for you," and vanished down the platform in pursuance of his train-duties. Wondering, I went to the rear of the station. There was Jill in a smart little sleigh, holding in check a spirited Shetland pony. So this was Dick!

We drove cautiously, for it was March, and the roads were in a par-

SOLDIER LAND SETTLEMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Home of Edward Livesay, a Lieutenant in the 49th Battalion, in North Saanich, Vancouver Island. He has twenty acres, a general farming proposition, containing all the elements of success. This has nothing directly to do with "Small Farming as a Pastime," but shows the joys of the life.

treacherous flight of stairs. It was not so bad in the winter, except that the bedrooms were so situated that no warmth could by any chance reach them (it is an historic fact that Jill's nose was frozen one night), but in the summer the heat and the glare were almost unbearable. And it was a lonely spot, for two miles from a town spells isolation. What to do with the evenings became a problem. If only they could sit out under the shade of their own vine and fig-tree! Jack and Jill longed for a little garden of their own, with flowers and fruit and big, shady maples and bright mountain-ash. To go downstairs after the last train had departed and sit on one of the long platform-benches was not an ideal way of getting the fresh evening air. However, Jack felt as if he never got away from his job; from the tick of the telegraph-machine, the ringing of the telephone-bell, the sight of the railway tracks stretching off into the distance. This was as bad as the city—it was not living in the country at all. To give it all up—to take a little farm—only he was no farmer—what way out of the difficulty could be found?

A way was presently found. Where there's a will, there's a way—usually. Half a mile from the station Jack and Jill found one day, on a Sunday's ramble, a little untenanted cottage, with maple-trees in front and cedars at the back, and fruit-trees between. And, oh joy! there was a tiny streamlet gurgling its way through the field near by, and a spring gushing up in one place. Eagerly they sought out the owner, and almost on the spot rented the place, though it of necessity included five acres. "Whatever can we do with five acres, Jack?" asked Jill. "You won't have time to work on the land, and it would never pay to hire a man."

lous state, and Dick had to step warily to avoid ruts and pitch-holes. Jill handled the reins like an expert, and when we drove into the stable, she proceeded to unharness the pony with a dexterity that amazed me. Dicky was soon in the stall, munching contentedly at his hay and oats.

"You must see the rest of the Stock," said Jill, "before we go into the house." (I have noticed since the proud way in which Jack and Jill speak of their "Stock." "Have you watered the Stock yet, Jack?" Jill will say before Jack goes off in the mornings; and the word calls up a curious mixture of a questionable business concern and a long vista of stalls containing harness and cattle galore.)

Two little greedy, grunting pigs had also to undergo inspection. "It was necessary to get the pigs on account of the cow," Jill explained. I did not quite understand at the time, but I did later, when Jill poured a supply of Mollie's milk, after the cream had been "separated" from it, into the trough in the pig-pen.

"What do you call the pigs?" I asked.

"I shall call them Ham and Bacon before very long," said the practical Jill. "Meantime you may call them anything you like."

"Let them be Beatrice and Rosalind, then," I said.

"Doesn't that sound like sacrilege?" asked Jill uneasily. "Using Shakespearean names like that?"

"Shakespeare won't mind," I said confidently. "But I am not so sure of Peter McArthur. His cherished Beatrice—but my hostess was leading me to the poultry-house."

THE poultry-house seemed to be meant as a sort of piece de resistance of the whole establishment. Such an assortment of plump,

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 43.)

MADE WITH A 3A KODAK. EXACT SIZE

At home with a KODAK

After all, Kodak means most in the home—because home pictures mean the most.

The vacation album, the pictures of the summer outing, the travel pictures, our pet hobby pictures—Great! All of them! But the pictures of the children—just as they are every day about the home—these are the ones of which we never tire.

The two pictures shown here were both made with the same Kodak. In the lower one the Portrait Attachment was used. This attachment is simply an extra lens, costing but 75 cents, that slips on over the other lens and so alters the focus that sharp pictures can be made of a “close up.”

There are Portrait Attachments to fit Kodaks and Brownies of every size—and their use is very simple.

All Dealers'

CANADIAN KODAK CO., Limited
Toronto, Canada

MADE WITH A 3A KODAK AND KODAK
PORTRAIT ATTACHMENT. EXACT SIZE.

Don't be "Penny Wise"

The "penny wise, pound foolish" person continues to ruin expensive carpets with cheap brooms and beatings. The thrifty housewife uses a

CADILLAC ELECTRIC VACUUM CLEANER

She knows that in the end it is more economical. This method of cleaning keeps carpets, rugs, upholstered furniture, etc., in perfect condition, and makes them wear longer.

The Cadillac holds the Panama Exhibition Gold Medal as the best vacuum cleaner made.

Sold on the easy payment plan. Write for further particulars.

CLEMENTS MANUFACTURING CO., LIMITED

78 DUCHESS ST. - TORONTO

- A Canadian Industry

built on the good-will of Poultrymen and Stock-raisers

THE success of this big industrial plant is closely linked to the success of the poultrymen and farmers of Canada. For, only in so far as Pratts benefits poultry and stock, and makes larger profits for the farmers and poultrymen, can the business of Pratts Canadian plant increase. This big plant shows our faith in Canada, and in the value of our service to Canadians. Here, are made the tonics, remedies and foods, supplied to the Canadian trade.

CONSULT PRATTS EXPERTS.

At this office we daily receive letters from all parts of Canada, asking advice on the care of poultry and stock. We gladly give to any one in trouble the benefit of our years of experiment, and study of poultry and stock diseases. We advise how to get the best results from feeding. How to improve housing conditions—in short, how to make the most profit from poultry and stock. Write for this Free service. Booklets, also sent to those interested.

THE PRATT LINE

FOR POULTRY—
Pratts Poultry Regulator
Pratts Dip and Disinfectant
Pratts Buttermilk
Pratts Chick Food
Pratts Roup Remedy
and many other specifics.

FOR STOCK—
Pratts Animal Regulator
Pratts Cow Remedy
Pratts Hog Tonic
Pratts Healing Ointment and a full line of specifics for Horses, Cattle, Sheep and Hogs.

Pratt Food Co. of Canada, Limited
328 E. Carlaw Ave., Toronto Ad No. 1

pratts

ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"

The name "Bayer" is the thumbprint of genuine Aspirin. It positively identifies the only genuine Aspirin—the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada.

Always buy an unbroken package

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which contains proper directions for Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains, and Pain generally.

Tin boxes of 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Larger "Bayer" packages.

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 39.)

relating to Institute methods of work with ample time allowed for after discussion.

7. That it be suggested to the Institutes that their yearly programme contain from time to time similar items.

8. That it be suggested to the Institutes that their annual meeting being the business meeting of the year, could well be a model meeting illustrating W.I. procedure and conduct of business.

9. That educational institutions which have a Department of Agriculture be asked to inaugurate a short course in Women's Place in Rural Economy with special reference to Women's Institute work.

REPORT OF CONVENER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mrs. Laura Rose Stephen reported as follows:—

IN these days we read much about the woman in business, and nowhere is she more in evidence than on the farm. On the farm every woman is her husband's partner but her labors are so correlated that it is hard to separate the activities of the one from the other.

Nothing but the most hopeless conservatism would deny that there are great opportunities for the right woman in the field of agriculture.

During the war the farmerettes proved that there are many farm tasks that even an active, intelligent city girl can readily learn to do well and this opportunity to work on the land has removed much of the prejudice against rural life. That this should be reflected in the college statistics on this continent is creditable alike to the enterprise of women and to their good sense. We realize that brains and training count fairly spoke of the good work being done by the boys and girls of our Country. It is something that should receive much encouragement from us all.

During the past season I have met a number of women who are successfully managing fruit farms, market gardens and caring for bees and poultry. There are big possibilities along these lines for women who want to go into such work extensively, or for those who require to supplement a rather meagre income.

I believe there is a large opening in the flower Kingdom for the right persons to undertake. The demand for cut flowers is always increasing. There are women who grow sweet peas, gladioli, etc., in immense quantities for the Montreal shops. To a flower lover it is a delight to thus earn a living.

Incidentally I might mention that one of my hobbies is gardening. Strawberries, we have in plenty, and I would like to urge those who have even a small garden to put in some strawberry plants. From fifty to one hundred plants will supply an average family with delicious fruit. Asparagus is another delicacy that should be home grown.

For several years I have harvested my flower seeds, and the past two springs have sent out in all, over twelve hundred packages of seeds. This is a little home mission work I love to do.

The present time seems most opportune for women to enter commercially into the lighter branches of Agriculture. Both prices and markets are good and the scarcity of labor makes it all the more imperative that women should lend a hand in easing the situation. Dairying, poultry, bee-keeping can be well handled by women and bring in good

EDMONTON, THE NEXT CONVENTION

Edmonton, Alberta, will be the place of the next convention of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada. Suggestions for an interesting programme will be welcomed from each Province, and the final arrangements will be in the hands of the Alberta members of the Board of Directors; the President, Mrs. Arthur Murphy; Miss Isabel Noble, President of Alberta W.I., and Miss Mary MacIsaac, the Superintendent.

and no longer is agriculture considered a matter of reasonable weather and muscular strength. There is nothing better than an educational training as a foundation for any life work and we would strongly urge women who contemplate following some special line of agriculture to take advantage of the many splendid special courses offered by our agricultural colleges.

Last March I prepared propaganda for the Agricultural Section of the F.W.I. I sent out thirty-three copies to the Premiers, Ministers of Agriculture and Superintendents of Institutes of the Provinces of Canada and also to the heads of the Institutes in England and Scotland and to other special people. The many replies I received were gratifying in their expressions of continued interest and co-operation in our work.

The president requested that I write the various Provincial Superintendents of Institutes, asking them to see that a committee on agriculture was appointed and to send me the names. I heard from a number of them regarding the matter stating appointments would be made at their next Convention. I have but one name as convener of agriculture—Mrs. James McKay for Alberta.

Later I wrote for reports on women's activities in Agriculture, and while I received replies the department is so new that little available data could be had. These reports stated Agriculture is more and more being taught in our schools and nature study is being given much attention. Teachers in large numbers are availing themselves of the opportunity to attend the summer schools and thus further fit themselves to teach agriculture in the public schools. This education reflects itself in the more attractive appearance of the school buildings and grounds—plants in the windows and flower beds and shrubs outside are no longer novelties.

The School Fair has established itself in every province and is proving a wonderful factor in stimulating a love for and interest in growing things. The fine collections of vegetables, flowers, canned fruits, poultry, etc., exhibited this fall at the school returns. If we could make farming fashionable we would have a large following.

As Mrs. McKay of Alberta is the only one to send in a written report on Agriculture, I will read hers in full—knowing that it voices the work done in other provinces, and that when all have had time to appoint conveners on Agriculture they will greatly stimulate the work in their special branch:—

Provost, Alberta.

As this is the first year for the Province of Alberta to have a Convener of Agriculture added to the list of standing Committees on Institute work, the report will not be as definite and full as it should be. I hope to establish a system to secure definite reports from the different districts in our Province. I am situated in the central part of the Province and will try to give a general outline of the work as it is being taken up by our Institutes.

Bee-keeping is in its infancy in Alberta, and I have heard that quite a number of bees are in Alberta but the difficulty is in wintering them.

The Department has opened a summer school where teachers may take a short course in agriculture and a goodly number of teachers are availing themselves of this opportunity.

We have the three schools of agriculture in Alberta and the attendance is very good, increasing each year.

The school fair is being established throughout Alberta with great success. Wherever it has been tried it has been attended with unbounded success. Through Central Alberta school fairs are being held in all the live towns. A great many are being organized this year. The school fair is one means of interesting the child in the work of the farm and when the teacher is interested the children are very active. They do like to be asked every day or two, how the garden is progressing.

The work that a great many Institutes are taking up this year is the establishing of a Scholarship Fund so as to be able to send at least one girl to the Agricultural School for a term. This has been tried out at Daysland

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 44.)

Can You Make Good Mince Pie?

You are, of course, proud of your ability as a pie-maker, but have you ever tried making mince pie with Bowes' Mince Meat as the filler?

If you haven't, you have an excellent opportunity to surpass yourself the next time you make mince pie.

Just buy a trial tin from your grocer. You will be captivated by the pure, wholesome flavor of this popular mince meat.

Mince Meat in
Its Most Wholesome Form

A Helpful Hint for Housekeepers

Whether you do your washing in the old fashioned tub, or in a new electric washing machine—is indispensable, and produces a pure snowy whiteness.

Keen's Oxford Blue

Insist on Keen's.

MAGOR, SON & CO.,
Limited
Montreal, Toronto
Canadian Agents.

37

Never Cakes No Waste

REGAL
FREE RUNNING
Table Salt

THE CANADIAN SALT CO. LIMITED
MADE IN CANADA C205

Tasty and Economical Fish Recipes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 21.)

excellent way of serving fish for an invalid.

Cod Steaks, Fried.—Wash and dry the steaks, which should be cut about three-fourths of an inch thick. If the skin of any of the steaks has been cut through for cleaning purposes, fold the flaps of skin over each other neatly and bind round a piece of thread or fine twine, or close the edges together with a small wooden skewer to prevent them from opening. Sprinkle the steaks with a few drops of lemon juice, and seasoning of salt, pepper and paprika. Beat up one egg on a plate, mix with it one tablespoonful of chopped parsley and one tablespoonful of melted shortening. Brush each steak over with this mixture, roll in fine bread crumbs, flatten these down smoothly and fry the steaks in hot fat for twelve minutes. The fat must have a faint blue smoke rising from it when the fish is first put in; then lessen the heat until the cooking is done, otherwise the exterior will be far too dark, and the inside of the fish will be half raw. If a pan of shallow fat is used, the steaks must be turned so as to brown both sides. When cooked, drain the fish on kitchen paper, remove the thread or skewer if either was used, and serve the steaks neatly arranged on a hot platter. Garnish it with cut lemon and parsley. Pass separately any suitable sauce, such as oyster, shrimp, egg, etc.

Fish Soup.—Any white fish may be used for this soup, such as haddock, flounder, cod, or trimmings of fish, or a cod's head. Wash two pounds of fish well and cut it into pieces, put it into a saucepan with eight cupfuls of cold water, add one-half teaspoonful of salt and bring to the boil. Skim well and boil for twenty minutes. Then remove a few nice pieces of the fish free from skin and bones, and reserve them for serving in the soup. Prepare one small onion, one small turnip, and one carrot and cut them in dice, then add them to the soup, with one bunch of herbs, six white peppercorns, one blade of mace, two cloves and one bay leaf, and allow to simmer for two and one-half hours. Then strain through a sieve into a bowl. Rinse out the saucepan and melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in it, add four tablespoonfuls of flour and mix until smooth, then pour in the sieved soup and stir until boiling. Add one cupful of scalded milk, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, and the reserved pieces of fish, and cook the soup for fifteen minutes longer.

The yolk of one egg may be put in the soup tureen and the hot soup poured over it, stirring all the time. Or small egg balls may be served in the soup.

Broiled or Grilled Fish.—This is cooking fish on a grill, either in front of or over a nice clear fire, or under the grill of a gas stove. It is one of the best methods of cooking small fish, as the flavor is retained better than in any other way. Herring, mackerel, trout, haddock, etc., may all be cooked in this manner, also slices of steaks of the larger kinds of fish. They may be prepared in one of the following ways:

1. Wash and clean the fish, cutting off the heads and fins, and dry lightly in a cloth. Then score the skin across diagonally on both sides to prevent it from cracking during the process of cooking. Season the fish with salt, pepper, paprika, and a few drops of lemon juice, and brush it over with salad oil or melted butter, or allow it to marinate for one hour in a mixture of oil and vinegar with a little chopped parsley and onion.

2. The fish may be split open, the bone removed and then lightly coated with flour or fine oatmeal, or crushed vermicelli. A coating of beaten egg and bread crumbs may also be used if desired.

Thoroughly heat the gridiron, grease it well, and lay the fish on it. Keep the fish rather near the fire while cooking or it will become flabby. Cook it from eight to ten minutes according to the thickness of the fish, and turn it once at least during the process. If a gas stove is used, place the fish on the grill tin and make the grill red hot before placing the fish under it. When finished, it should be well browned on both sides and show the marks of the grill. Serve grilled fish immediately with cut lemon and small pats of maitre d'hote or any other savory butter. If there are any roes belonging to the fish, these may be cooked on a tin in the oven and used as a garnish. Some sharp sauce, such as tomato or tartare, may be served separately, and parsley used as a garnish.

Grilling in Paper.—Fillets of fish, such as salmon, or flounder, are sometimes wrapped in a piece of greased paper with a spoonful of good sauce and grilled thus. They should be served hot in the paper.

Small Farming as a Pastime

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 40.)

self-satisfied hens I had never seen—mottled Plymouth Rocks, and black and white Minorcas; and one dear, tawny, little Bantam. "And most of them are laying now," said Jill, "and eggs are still seventy cents a dozen."

"But what about the cost of feed?" I asked.

"Oh, it's awful!" admitted Jill sadly. "And the cost of feeding Dick and Mollie is shocking, too. In the summer, of course, they will be out in the pasture-field (so those five acres serve some purpose, after all)."

"Do you keep books?" I asked. "So as to find out if it pays? Debits and credits and balances in red ink, and all that sort of thing?"

"I haven't any red ink," said Jill (she never attended a Business College, you see), "but in a sort of way I keep account. But it will take a year or two before I can tell whether it pays or not—financially."

She seemed to stress the last word, and I suppose my look contained a question.

"I never knew Jack to be so contented," she said. "He loves to fuss over the Stock." ("Stock" again!) "And he doesn't mind the walk to the station at all. He's a lot better in health and so am I."

I had only to look at her to realize the truth of the last remark. The glow of health was in her cheeks, the sparkle of health was in her eyes, the buoyancy of health was in her step. When Jack came in a little later, I saw the same symptoms, somewhat accentuated, in him. Fresh and unjailed, he looked as if the day's work had been a mere nothing to him. Picking up an empty pail, he started off, whistling, for the spring.

"You don't have to go up the hill, Jack," I said, "to get a pail of water?"

"No," he laughed, "so I avoid the tragedy of falling down and breaking my crown, and Jill doesn't have to take a header after me."

A few minutes later we sat down to a supper of poached eggs and home-made bread and baked apples smothered in thick yellow cream. "We shall be having lettuce and strawberries from our own garden soon now," said Jill, surveying the table as if apologetically—a supper which was the final proof, if I had been disposed to be still skeptical, that the experiment of Jack and Jill in small farming as a pastime had been a paying venture, if not in the coin of the realm, then in that which the coin of the realm cannot purchase—the boon of good health.

"And we are not lonely now," said Jill. "Of course I go to town once or twice a week to take my butter and eggs to market and do my shopping, and I get a fresh book from the Public Library. And we have some kind neighbors and pleasant friends. And, of course, there's always the Stock!"

Mrs. Knox's Corner

Every-Day Surprises

ON holidays—at Thanksgiving and Sunday dinners, as well as for every-day occasions—the crowning delight is the surprise dessert that can be made with Knox Sparkling Gelatine.

One of these special desserts is the Knox Charlotte Surprise which seems at first glance to be only a cake—but when cut the center reveals a fine smooth ice-cream-like fruit filling, similar to a frozen charlotte—indeed a great surprise.

Another creation that brings happy exclamations is the Knox Apple and Rice Delight, a combination so unique that it is simply irresistible. Both are easy to make. Try them.

CHARLOTTE SURPRISE

1/2 envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine
1/4 cup cold water whites of 3 eggs
1/2 cup boiling water 1 cup sugar
2 tablespoonfuls lemon juice
1 cup canned peach juice and pulp
1 square or round sponge cake

Soak gelatine in cold water for five minutes and dissolve in boiling water. Add sugar and when dissolved add lemon juice. Strain, cool slightly and add peach or other fruit juice and pulp, which has been rubbed through a strainer. When mixture begins to stiffen beat until light; then add egg whites, beaten until stiff and beat thoroughly. When quite thick, but still soft enough to pour, fill a square or a round sponge cake, the top of which has been removed carefully and the center hollowed out to within an inch or inch and a half of the sides and bottom. Fill to within an inch of the top and then replace top part of cake, fitting it in place carefully so it looks as though it had never been cut. Place in ice box to chill. Serve on platter with or without whipped cream, or a fruit sauce. Cut like brick ice cream. If desired, this recipe may be served without the cake. Any fresh, preserved or canned fruit may be used in place of the peaches, or a cocoa or chocolate filling made if preferred. One cup of whipped cream may be used in place of the egg whites.

APPLE AND RICE DELIGHT

1/2 envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine
1/4 cupful cold water 1 cup cooked rice
1/2 cupful milk 1/2 cupful sugar
1 cup whipped cream or 2 egg whites
1 teaspoonful vanilla few grains salt coddled or stewed apples

Soak the gelatine in cold water for ten minutes, and dissolve by standing cup in hot water. To the cooked rice add the milk, sugar and salt. Strain into this the dissolved gelatine and mix thoroughly. Cool slightly, add the whipped cream or the egg whites beaten until stiff. Add the vanilla and turn into a wet mold. Chill and serve with coddled or stewed apples, made by cooking unpared, quartered or round slices of apple in a syrup of one cup of sugar and 3/4 cup of water until soft and transparent. Other fresh or canned fruits may be used in place of the apples. This recipe will make an ample dessert for a family of six or seven, and uses only 1/2 of a package of Knox Sparkling Gelatine.

SURPRISE DISHES

If you would like recipes for other Surprise Dishes send 2c stamp and grocer's name for my booklets, "Dainty Desserts" and "Food Economy."

MRS. CHARLES B. KNOX

KNOX GELATINE

DEPT. D., 180 ST. PAUL ST. W., MONTREAL.

"Wherever a recipe calls for Gelatine—
it means
KNOX"

This package contains an envelope of pure
Lemon Flavor
for the convenience of the busy housewife.

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 42.)

Why Junket is so Wholesome

If milk is properly digested, it is first coagulated upon reaching the stomach by a ferment in the stomach called "rennet."

Junket is cow's milk that has been properly coagulated at the right temperature by the pure rennet in the Junket Tablet before it is eaten. Thus it is cow's milk better prepared for sure digesting in the human stomach.

Junket

MADE with MILK

has long been a leading children's and sick-room food. With whipped cream, nuts, fruit, etc., it makes a delicious dessert. You will do well to have Junket often.

The Junket Folks, Little Falls, N.Y.

Canadian Factory:
Chr. Hansen's Canadian Laboratory
Toronto, Ontario

Nesnah—
the Powdered
Junket

is the same as Junket Tablets, except it is in powdered form and already sweetened and flavored. It comes in 6 pure flavors, delicious in taste and appearance. Simply add milk.

Beauty Lies in a Clear Complexion

The healthy glow of a radiant skin is the main asset in beauty. Through neglect, many have lost this charm, and their skin is marred by Pimples, Blackheads or Blisters. Care and the use of our preparations will remove these blemishes. Successful for twenty-seven years in the treatment of all non-infectious skin troubles, we ask you to write us confidentially. Consultation free.

Princess Complexion Purifier..... $1.50
Princess Skin Food ..... 1.50
Princess Face Powder, all shades .75
Princess Cinderella Cold Cream... .75

All preparations will be sent in plain wrapper to any address, carriage paid, on receipt of price. Send for Booklet.

The Hiscott Institute, Limited
61B COLLEGE STREET, TORONTO

The CANDY
Cathartic

"NICE to Take"

Cascarets

PLEASANT LAXATIVE

THEY WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

Institute this past year and a number of Institutes are following their example.

Nearly every farm woman, (with few exceptions) is giving her attention to the raising of hens, geese, turkeys, etc. In this particular district, since prices of beef and pork are so high, there are few farmers' wives but have all the fowl they need and also some to sell.

The co-operative spirit has not grown yet as it should; but by education along this line I feel that in the very near future we will have it so established that all the produce and butter, eggs, etc., will be marketed co-operatively.

There is one part of Mrs. Stephen's propaganda that I like very much and that is, "Wherever boys and girls show an interest in certain lines of work on farms they should be given a stated share of the revenue derived from that part of the work." This is a matter that has to be made popular too, or we will not retain our boys or girls on the farm and that is where we want them to stay.

One thing our Institutes are doing is having representatives on the Agricultural Fair Boards, and this is very general throughout the Province. I hope for 1921 to be in closer touch with the work over our Province and be able to send in a more definite report than this.

MRS. MARGARET MCKAY,
Convener of Agriculture,
Alberta.

The Women's Institute is so closely connected with rural life that it affords abundant opportunity to assist in carrying out as far as possible the many avenues of work as outlined in the propaganda—all of which is respectfully submitted.

LAURA ROSE STEPHEN,
Convener of Standing Committee of Agriculture.

"Strathdon," Huntingdon, Quebec,
September 28th, 1920.

EDUCATION AND BETTER SCHOOLS.

MR. GEORGE PUTNAM, convener of the Committee on Education and better schools, reported that from the recommendations of this committee he believed there was a growing interest in making the rural schools of greater value to boys and girls who intended to remain on the farm; that there was an increasing sense of responsibility on the part of trustees in the rural districts as evidenced in a better class of school buildings, and better salaries for teachers, while governments have increased their educational grants.

In reviewing the work of the provinces Mr. Putnam reported on three, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec.

Manitoba now has two Municipal School Boards, one comprising sixteen townships. Manitoba also has 110 Consolidated Schools, nineteen having been established during the year. Salaries for teachers have advanced considerably: for Rural Schools, from one thousand dollars to eighteen hundred a year; Intermediate, sixteen hundred to two thousand five hundred per year; High Schools, outside of Winnipeg, two thousand to two thousand seven hundred per year. The maximum salary for Principals of Public Schools in Winnipeg is thirty-two hundred, and for High School Principals, thirty-eight hundred a year.

Manitoba has forty school nurses under the direction of the Provincial Board of Health.

In Quebec, the Institutes have assisted in introducing drinking fountains with sanitary drinking cups, given assistance to improve the interior and exterior of the school buildings, also to improve the school grounds, equipped Shawville Academy with a household science apparatus, assisted in medical and dental inspection in the school to a limited extent. The Institutes have also provided a hot dish at the noon hour for the children, given prizes for the school fairs and taken an active interest in making the fairs a success, kept up an interest in the consolidation of schools and supported compulsory education. The Institutes are using their influence to secure permission for women to sit on the School Boards.

In Ontario, better school buildings, the emphasizing of the practical in education, advances in salary made possible by increased grants from the Government and liberal appropriations on the part of the districts concerned, enforcement of truancy regulations, liberal assistance in the consolidation of schools, medical school inspection, provision for greater efficiency in the ungraded schools, encouragement of permanency by the erection of teachers' residences or otherwise, are among the improvements which have characterized the real progress which has been made in Ontario educational matters during the past year. The expression of public opinion would seem to indicate that there will soon be a reorganization in the local boards of trustees.

The educational authorities in Ontario have appropriated funds for and are making a close study of auxiliary classes, the effect of rest and fatigue, proper nourishment and diet for the children, classes for the under normal, medical and dental inspection, the school nurse, etc.

While the above reports indicate progress a very hopeful feature of the present situation is the increased interest being taken by parents, teachers and organizations, especially the Women's Institutes, in health problems and wholesome social activities as related to the school. The child holds a more prominent place than ever before in our national planning, and we believe that the Women's Institutes of the Dominion can be a real factor in introducing and carrying out policies which will mean much in the health, efficiency and morality of the coming generations.

REPORT ON IMMIGRATION.

MRS. ROBSON, Convener of Immigration Committee, reported as follows: Your Convener expected to be in touch with the various annual meetings of the Provincial Women's Institutes last winter but, instead, early in February, had to go to England on business for the Department of Immigration. After a careful summing up of the situation in Great Britain as your Convener found it through conferences with different groups of women, she prepared a memorandum which, on June 25th, she sent to the provincial conveners of immigration. At the same time she wrote these conveners both on this subject and on the subject of a movement towards better citizenship among our foreign-born people. To this letter she only received one reply and that was from Miss Sutherland of Toronto, who reported giving assistance to the Provincial Employment Bureau in placing any houseworkers who went out into the rural districts, and in assisting the Soldier Settlement Board. Through newspaper accounts your Convener has learned of the splendid work being done by the Women's Institutes of Saskatchewan for our new citizens.

Since December 1st, 1919, under the new system of immigration of women inaugurated by the Department of Immigration, 4,815 unaccompanied women have come to Canada. Of this number, 783 were coming to be married; 1,796 to join relatives; 1,539 to assured positions, and 697 seeking employment. Commencing with this month the present system of conductresses on board ship, provided by the Canadian Government, is being done away with and an arrangement is being made whereby all passenger ships between Great Britain and Canada which carry parties of unaccompanied women shall have a special woman officer to be known as the "ship's matron." This officer will work in close co-operation with the women officers of the Department of Immigration in England and at Quebec. Orders-in-Council have been passed providing for the appointment of Principal Women Officers at the ports of London, Liverpool, Glasgow, also at the Atlantic ports in Canada, and for two Conductresses to work on the trains inland from the port.

The annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Immigration of Women took place October 5th to 7th. At the last meeting of this Council it was decided that with the increasing size of the Council, railway fares and travelling expenses of delegates should be paid by the organizations interested.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 60.)

"The ultimate choice of the prudent housewife"

IN the elegant and exquisite vanities of European courts, as in the simple wardrobe of the goose-girl on the hill—cotton has had its honored place for centuries. Its freshness and coolness heighten feminine charm. Its moderate cost places it in the reach of everyone. The best cottons, price for price, and the cheapest cottons—quality for quality—are "Prue Cottons." Ask your retailer for them

DOMINION TEXTILE COMPANY
LIMITED

MONTREAL TORONTO WINNIPEG

No. 17

Corticelli
MADE IN CANADA

FINGERING YARNS

—the best yarn for your winter knitting. Made from the choicest, long staple Australian wool—selected for evenness, elasticity and durability.

Garments knit of Corticelli Yarns are soft, pliable and wonderfully strong. They always hold their shape and do not shrink nor lose the lustrous beauty of their fascinating colors.

Put up in convenient one-ounce balls, loosely and evenly wound. Do not buy yarn in skeins. Winding from skeins stretches the yarn and robs it of its soft fluffiness.

Always ask for Corticelli Fingering Yarns. The best dealers everywhere carry them.

In our new Knitting Book, "Fall and Winter Sports, No. 1," you will find illustrations in color of the newest sport suits for men and women, sweaters, tams, scarfs, sport slip-ons, gloves, stockings, Teddy Bear suits for the kiddies, and the smartest of automobile wraps. Each of these articles was designed exclusively for us and the directions for knitting them can be found only in our new book. Ask your dealer for a copy to-day—or order direct from us. Price 15c.

Belding-Corticelli
Limited

Manufacturers of Corticelli Spool Silks, Corticelli Crochet and Embroidery Cottons, Corticelli Knitting Silks, Corticelli Embroidery Silk, Corticelli Roll Tape, Corticelli Lingerie Braid.

MONTREAL
TORONTO
WINNIPEG
VANCOUVER

The Jade Elephant

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 10.)

coming back with the Princess tomorrow. I mean with my little cousin, Nadine Atherton. Look after your mother then. Give the Princess a lot to do." He started, then stopped. "I hate to take the jade beast old boy—your highness, I mean. Please tell your mother I perfectly hate to take it."

The Maharaja smiled his inscrutable smile.

"We have accepted the money," he said, "we are grateful."

"Jolly nice of you," replied Larry, and hastened down the stairs.

THAT evening the young man took the green elephant in his pocket to the house of the wheat king. As the bronzed grilles opened he heard the tapping of crutches.

"Hello, Babino!" he called. "My, but you look little and sweet and fluffy! Commend me to those American things. At home—well the little girls have to wear such horrid plain frocks, even to come down to dessert. At least you would think them horrid."

She shook her head without preliminary welcome. "I am all wrong," she said. "Of course the plain gowns are correct. For children. The English know. But I like these best; and I don't feel like a child."

He laughed, "Well, I do—just to balance things, Princess. Have you been abroad in the land to-day?"

"I have not been out," she answered soberly. "It did not seem worth while."

"Moth and rust will certainly corrupt those seven or eight cars of yours," he smiled. "Gadzooks! this was a day for the gods."

"I know," she nodded. "I saw it from the windows. But I would rather stay in, they stare at me—out of doors."

He whistled softly. "Come along to the elephant room, Babino," he suggested. "I've something for you."

Her sea-blue eyes grew suddenly dark. "Not—not the green—"

"Yes!" broke in Larry. "Yes! and Yes!"

"Oh," she half whispered. "How wonderful you are! It's like 'open sesame' to ask you for anything."

Larry switched on the lights, as they sat down side by side on the black Chesterfield.

"Now!" coaxed Nadine.

"Oh come, Princess," he said, "guess about him a bit first; prolong anticipation!" She pouted prettily.

"I guess he will be little—very wee—like a charm; a jade elephant—charm. You see them in stores." The light faded from her face at this thought.

"I say!" cried Larry. "You'll annoy me presently. I certainly wouldn't play the game like that. But you are partly right. He is made of jade, and he carries good luck and what not. Is supposed to—that is."

A thought of the little dark woman and the boy swept over him and he swallowed hastily. Then he dived into his pocket.

"Well, here he is, Princess!"

She clasped the jade in her two hands, with a glad cry. "Oh, Larry!" she said. "Isn't he dear, and queer, and funny, and old-looking and valuable!"

"He is," replied Larry, "and historical also."

"Historical?" she queried absently. Then—"Hark, Larry!" she rattled.

"Bits of jade fallen down inside of him," he explained. "Don't ask me why, though."

She listened intently, the green elephant held close to her ear. "I don't know," she remarked looking puzzled. "They don't click together; they roll. Bits of jade wouldn't roll, exactly."

"The people I got it from—the owners explained it that way. They seemed to think it might be so, and that he was hollow, because carved in two halves and cemented together. But what does it matter, Princess? Take him at his face value and don't bother if he is a bit chipped inside."

Nadine was gazing at the wonderfully carved thing. Some old art had expended itself in his workmanship. Time would not avail to wear those delicate lines away. He was a faithful diminutive copy in translucent stone of my Lord the Elephant.

"Queer," the child meditated. "Queer they did not know more than that. Those little lines about his neck, now, I think his head screws off—like a toy you know. There is no distinct line—only a suggestion. Please see if his head will turn."

Larry took the elephant and with his strong young fingers tried to move the head. "She was full of fads this little cousin of his," he thought. "It was a fool thing to try and twist the solid jade." A sudden flare up of annoyance swept him. "A bally expensive fool thing the whole business," he continued to think still pressing skeptically;—and then the head turned.

"Oh!" breathed Nadine, Larry turned again, and the head lay in his hand.

The little girl reached and took the square green body, she upset it on the lace of her out-spread dress, and from the green hollow rolled a string of pearls. She and Larry did not touch them. They just looked. Never had they seen such pearls before. They were materialized moonlight. A faint radiance seemed to float from them. Into Larry's eyes came an odd expression.

"The story is true!" he said to himself. "He is the Maharaja. It certainly is a priceless tale to tell."

The little girl touched him lightly. "What are you talking about, Larry?" she asked. "You did not really know the pearls were there, did you?"

"Heavens, no!" he exclaimed. "They are not ours—not your pearls, Nadine. They belong to the mother of the Maharaja of Kosala."

The child gazed at him half started, then laid her hand over his a second. "Your hands are cool," she said. "And you don't look feverish, but you seem a little strange in your head, Larry dear."

"I should say I did! Look here Princess, this is a case for action, a sudden advance! Get your hat and things while I order the car. Those pearls must go back at once. She is ill; very. They might drift away down in the City, and I would never be able to locate them! Hurry! It is devilish important. Give me the elephant. Put the pearls into him, and screw on his head."

"Your are all mixed up," she asserted gravely. "The elephant is mine. You gave him to me. I will only give back the pearls. Tell me the story about him first."

"No! No!" he cried desperately. "Time counts. In the motor I'll tell you, if you hurry." So she hurried, and they drove towards the East River Street, and he told her the story.

AT the corner house they stopped, and Larry carried the child up the stairs into the room of the silk couch and aromatic perfume. She was introduced to the little dark woman and the small Maharaja. Looking at them no doubt of their tale could survive. There was a pathetic truthfulness about it. And there were the pearls. Only a Prince of India could bestow a gift of such pearls.

Larry and Nadine together told of how the elephant's head came off, and how they found them. All were excited, all but the little Maharaja, who looked on calmly.

"My mother says," he explained, "that they are the great moon pearls. My grandfather must have hidden them for a whim, a fancy, hoping to surprise her. He was old, and perhaps he forgot about them. He was a great Prince, and had many other pearls."

The woman fastened them around her throat and drew the shawl up over them tightly. "She says they will grow more beautiful by being worn," said the boy. "She tells me we will sell one pearl and with the price return to India. To my country."

"Good!" answered Larry. "But don't lose them, your Highness. That would be a dismal thing to do—what?"

"We will not lose them," he said soberly. "We thank you greatly. You are righteous and kind. My mother thinks you must be a noble."

Larry gave away to sudden mirth. "Nice of her," he said politely, "but I am really not. How about the elephant? Nadine may keep it—what?"

They assured them the jade had passed from their possession. It belonged to the beautiful little girl forever.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 62.)

THE CECILIAN CONCERTPHONE

Plays all records more clearly. The Cecilian is a sweeter and fuller-toned phonograph than any you have ever heard.

Beautiful in design and finish, and has many exclusive features.

Write for Catalogue.

The Cecilian Co. Ltd.
247 Yonge St.
TORONTO

A Charming Coiffure

Have you difficulty in arranging your hair in the prevailing modes? This difficulty can be easily overcome with the aid of Dorenwend's fine quality switches, which will exactly match your hair. Dorenwend's Hair Goods are worn by the most discriminating people.

Hair suggestion booklet with prices sent on request. Special attention given to mail orders.

Dorenwend's
Limited

105 Yonge Street, Toronto

America's Pioneer
Dog Medicines

Book on
DOG DISEASES

And How to Feed

Mailed free to any address by author

H. Clay Glover Co., Inc.
118 West 31st St. New York City

AN IDEAL GIFT
Every Woman Will Appreciate One
PORTLAND METAL
HOT WATER BOTTLE
PRICE $3.
DELIVERED
Duty Prepaid

Money Back if Not Satisfied. Bright Nickel Finish. A handsome and useful article. Will not burst or leak. Sanitary. Keeps hot three times as long as a Rubber Bottle. Packed in attractive box. Flannel bag and wire handle free. Order Early.
PORTLAND SALES CO., Mrs.

At your dealers or sent on receipt of price.
570 Commercial Street
Boston, Mass.

One of the Season's Newest Models.

MONARCH KNIT SWEATER COATS

THERE'S something about a Monarch-Knit Sweater Coat that makes you proud to wear it. Something in its smart and graceful drape, its generous and comfortable cut; its tasteful and uncommon color combinations which stamps it at once as a garment of character and dependability.

The new Monarch-Knit styles for fall and winter wear are now on display at your dealer's. You are sure to find in them much to interest you.

THE MONARCH
KNITTING CO.
LIMITED
DUNNVILLE, ONTARIO
CANADA

Also Manufacturers of Monarch-Knit Hosiery for Men and Women and Monarch Hand Knitting Yarns.

These Frocks Make the Stout Woman Look Slender

Three Patterns Free with a Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home Journal.

DESCRIPTION ON PAGE 49.

Blouse 8887
Embroidery 12570

Blouse 8687
Embroidery 12559

Dress 9057
Embroidery 12558

Tunic Blouse
9001
Skirt 8831

8887—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Size 36 requires 2½ yards 40-inch black Georgette crêpe. Lest the black Georgette crêpe prove too somber, the vest is elaborately embroidered in heavy white floss in design 12570.

8687—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Size 36 requires 2 yards 36-inch silk voile. For all the world like splashes of rain are the embroidery motifs in design 12559 which finish the edge of the surplice shawl collar.

Blouse 8902
Beading 12320

Dress 9019
Embroidery 12594

Dress 8783
Embroidery 12531

Blouse 8881

Dress 8868
Embroidery 12593

Dress 8801
Beading 12505

9057—Ladies' One-piece Dress. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 36 requires 3¼ yards 54-inch tricotine—¾ yard 40-inch white Georgette crêpe for vest. Embroidery, which the Autumn mode favors above any other trimming, is applied in large, scroll-like motifs in design 12558. These motifs cover the entire skirt so that the effect is a plain fabric for the bodice and an embroidered one for the skirt. Particularly gracious to the full figure is this delightfully simple frock and the embroidery adds its quota of style. Metal threads work out charmingly in this type of embroidery.

9001—Ladies' Tunic Blouse. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. No. 8831—Ladies' Two-piece Gathered Skirt. Designed for 24 to 38 waist. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Costume in medium size requires 6¼ yards 36-inch dotted foulard—½ yard 44-inch organdy for vest and collar—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody. No wardrobe is really complete without at least one foulard frock, as it adapts itself to a wide variety of uses. Foulard is light, cool, sheds the dust and does not wrinkle. What more could one ask of a frock?

Smart Frocks Take Up Fashion for Eyelets

9051—Misses' Dress. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{3}{8}$  yard. Size 16 requires  $4\frac{1}{4}$  yards 40-inch Georgette crêpe— $1\frac{1}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody and back gore. The Autumn mode accords the new favor to embroidery of every type and eyelets are especially in vogue. On this frock of Georgette crêpe they form a square block effect and design 12597 is suitable. The sleeves are fashionably short and the blouse closes at left side-front over the front-closing underbody.

9049—Misses' Dress. Designed for 16 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{3}{8}$  yard. Size 16 requires 3 yards 40-inch Georgette— $2\frac{5}{8}$  yards 36-inch satin—3 yards ribbon for sash— $\frac{3}{4}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody. Eyelets also form the decorative effect for this frock but here they are worked out in circular scroll-like motifs in design 12595.

9056—Misses' One-piece Dress. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard. Size 16 requires  $3\frac{5}{8}$  yards 54-inch broadcloth— $\frac{7}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody. Novelty is given to this frock by the long panels rounded at the bottom which are extensions of the overblouse. They are embroidered in eyelet motifs in design 12594. These eyelets are now among the most fashionable forms of embroidery, and are used with much success on many of the best models.

Three Patterns Free with a Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home Journal.

Dress 8727
Embroidery 12593

Dress 9056
Embroidery 12594

Dress 9049
Embroidery 12595

Dress 9051
Embroidery 12597

9048—Misses' One-piece Dress. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{3}{8}$  yard. Size 16 requires 3 yards 54-inch tricotine— $\frac{1}{4}$  yard 36-inch taffeta for collar. Scarcely a frock but shows a touch of embroidery this season and eyelets seem to be the most favored form. In design 12591 they form a border on this frock and also trim the patch pockets.

8727

9048

9049

Dress 9048
Embroidery 12591

November Patterns and Prices

8902—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Size 36 requires 2 yards 40-inch black Georgette crêpe— $\frac{3}{8}$  yard 18-inch tucked organdy vesting. A sunplice vest of Georgette crossed over a vest of tucked organdy and for the embroidery design 12320 is suitable.

9019—Ladies' Long-waisted Dress. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{3}{8}$  yard. Size 36 requires 5 yards 40-inch black taffeta— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard 44-inch organdy for vest— $2\frac{1}{2}$  yards 36-inch lining. Long panels rounded at the bottom and embroidered in design 12594 are slipped under the rolling collar of this dainty frock and are held in at the waistline by an odd-looking belt of leather formed by oblong sections linked together with suède.

8881—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Size 36 requires  $2\frac{1}{2}$  yards 40-inch black Georgette crêpe— $\frac{1}{4}$  yard black lace for vest— $2\frac{1}{2}$  yards velvet ribbon— $\frac{7}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody. Loops of narrow velvet ribbon give a slight touch of coquetry to this simple blouse, making an attractive finish to the large collar ending at the waist.

8868—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. Size 36 requires 4 yards 54-inch broadcloth— $\frac{7}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody.

8801—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. Size 36 requires  $4\frac{7}{8}$  yards 40-inch Georgette crêpe— $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard velvet ribbon— $\frac{7}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining.

8783—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 36 to 48 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{3}{8}$  yard. Size 36 requires  $3\frac{5}{8}$  yards 54-inch serge— $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard chiffon frilling for trimming— $\frac{7}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining.

8727—Misses' One-Piece Dress. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. Size 16 requires  $3\frac{1}{2}$  yards 44-inch serge— $\frac{3}{4}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody.

9054—Misses' Dress. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. Size 16 requires  $4\frac{3}{4}$  yards 36-inch black satin— $\frac{3}{8}$  yard 36-inch white satin for collar and cuffs— $\frac{3}{4}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody.

Dress 8727, 25 cents.
Embroidery 12593, blue or yellow, 75 cents.

Dress 9056, 35 cents.
Embroidery 12594, blue or yellow, 40 cents.

Dress 9051, 35 cents.
Embroidery 12597, blue or yellow, 50 cents.

Dress 9049, 35 cents.
Embroidery 12595, blue or yellow, 75 cents.

Dress 9048, 35 cents.
Embroidery 12591, blue or yellow, 30 cents.

Dress 9054, 35 cents.
Blouse 8887, 20 cents.
Embroidery 12570, blue or yellow, 30 cents.

Blouse 8687, 25 cents.
Embroidery 12559, blue or yellow, 20 cents.

Dress 9057, 35 cents.
Embroidery 12558, blue or yellow, 50 cents.

Tunic Blouse 9001, 30 cents.
Skirt 8831, 25 cents.
Blouse 8902, 30 cents.

Beading 12320, blue or yellow, 25 cents.

Dress 9019, 35 cents.
Embroidery 12594, blue or yellow, 40 cents.

Blouse 8881, 30 cents.
Dress 8868, 35 cents.
Embroidery 12593, blue or yellow, 75 cents.

Dress 8801, 35 cents.
Beading 12505, blue or yellow, 25 cents.

Dress 8783, 35 cents.
Embroidery 12531, blue or yellow, 15 cents.

Coat 9042, 25 cents.
Coat 9029, 25 cents.
Dress 9045, 25 cents.

Dress 9030, 25 cents.
Braiding 11290, blue or yellow, 20 cents.

Coat 9009, 25 cents.
Coat 9028, 25 cents.
Cape Coat 9052, 25 cents.

Suit 6977, 20 cents.
Dress 7793, 25 cents.
Embroidery 12508, blue or yellow, 20 cents.

Coat 8607, 25 cents.
Dress 8945, 25 cents.
Embroidery 12372, blue or yellow, 20 cents.

----- 9054

The Mode Prepares Pocket Editions of Best Sellers

9042—Boys' Coat. Designed for 4 to 14 years. Size 10 requires 2 yards 54-inch cheviot—2½ yards 36-inch satin for lining. Raglan sleeves and large patch pockets are two very good reasons why this very masculine appearing coat should appeal to the small boy. It is suitable for any of the heavy winter fabrics, and is loose enough to be quite comfortable.

9021—Girls' Coat. Designed for 6 to 12 years. Size 10 requires 2½ yards 54-inch wool mixture—2½ yards 36-inch satin for lining. Exactly like brother's is this good-looking coat. Raglan sleeves, patch pockets, and a notched collar exactly like a masculine garment. The coat may close to the neck with collar rolled high or the fronts may be turned back in revers and the collar worn flat as preferred.

9045—Girls' One-piece Dress. Designed for 6 to 14 years. Size 8 requires 2½ yards 36-inch black velvet—½ yard 36-inch black satin for trimming. The simplicity of this frock adapts it not alone to velvet but to wool fabrics such as serge and tricotine with equally good effect. The closing is at the center-back and trimming-bands of satin outline the square neck ending in deep points in front. Satin also forms the cuffs and trims the pockets.

9030—Girls' Dress. Designed for 6 to 14 years. Size 10 requires 2½ yards 44-inch serge—¾ yard 36-inch white satin for collar—¾ yard 36-inch braid for binding. To give smartness to this practical frock the collar of white satin is braided in dark blue soutache in design 11290. The dress would be very attractive also in brown tricotine.

Child's Coat
9009Child's Coat
9028Child's Cape Coat
9052

Three Patterns Free with a Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home Journal.

DESCRIPTION ON PAGE 49.

Girls' Coat
9029Girls' Dress
9045Girls' Dress
9030
Braiding 11290Boys' Coat
9042Girls' and Juniors' Dress 7793
Embroidery 12508

Girls' and Juniors' Coat 8607

Girls' and Juniors' Dress 8945
Embroidery 12372

9009—Child's Coat. Designed for ½ to 4 years. Size 3 requires 1½ yards 54-inch serge—¾ yard squirrel for collar and cuffs—1¼ yard 36-inch printed silk for lining. Even at the very youthful age of three one may choose a squirrel collar to adorn the every day coat of serge. For comfort in cool weather there is a double-breasted closing.

6977—Boys' Suit. Designed for 8 to 16 years. Size 10 requires 2½ yards 54-inch serge. Quite sporty looking is this suit with its single-breasted Norfolk jacket box-plaited below the square yoke. The jacket is belted at the sides and back, the belt buttoning onto the jacket each side of center-front. Of course with such a suit the neck finish must be a notched collar and the knickerbucker trousers have just the right fulness and close in front. There are ever so many fabrics adapted for making this suit such as serge, cheviot, and tweed.

9028—Child's Coat. Designed for 1 to 4 years. Size 3 requires 1½ yards 54-inch tricotine—1½ yards 36-inch satin for lining. The grown-ups need not think they have any monopoly of that smartest of Winter fabrics tricotine, for its use is even extended to the little folks' wardrobe and it is very effective for the small maid's coat on tailored lines. On fine days the little wearer may have the fronts of her coat rolled back but when chilly winds blow it may be fastened to the neck.

9052—Child's Cape Coat. Designed for 2 to 6 years. Size 4 requires 2½ yards 36-inch velvet—2½ yards 36-inch satin for lining. Could anything be more fascinating for the small girl than this cunning coat with its jaunty cape swinging from the shoulders! So much style this cape gives to the coat that it seems almost like painting a lily to all trimming sections to the front. These are slashed to simulate pockets and the edges are bound with satin and finished at the front with a row's foot of embroidery. A cunning feature of this little coat is the fact that the sleeves may be worn short if preferred. Of course Autumn is a little chilly for abbreviated sleeves, but the coat would be charming for Summerwear in pongee, and the short sleeves would be ideal.

7793—Girls' and Juniors' Dress. Designed for 6 to 17 years. Size 12 requires 2½ yards 54-inch tricotine—¾ yard 36-inch white linen for vest and rolling collar—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underwaist. At the mature age of 12 one wends one's way schoolward in a frock like this with its very sophisticated belted blouse and plaited skirt. The skirt is attached to an underwaist which may be of lining and this is faced with a linen vest embroidered at the top in design 12508.

8607—Girls' and Juniors' Coat. Designed for 13 to 17 years. Size 15 requires 3¼ yards 54-inch plush—¾ yards 36-inch taffeta for lining. The heavy Winter plush is eminently suitable, tho if the wearer prefers woolen fabrics she has an infinite variety to choose from. Such old favorites for example as tweed, Bolivia cloth, English and Scotch mixtures. The broad panel gives straight lines to the back and the front. Fastened to the neck and finished with a large collar.

8945—Girls' and Juniors' One-piece Dress. Designed for 6 to 17 years. Size 12 requires 2½ yards 44-inch serge—¾ yard 36-inch white satin for collar and cuffs. Quite neat and trim the school girl looks in a frock like this with its tiny round collar and turn-back cuffs of white satin or organdy. Added smartness is given by the double row of embroidery on the skirt in design 12372.

Mahomet said: "Had I but two pennies, I would give one of them to buy white hyacinths." If so great a prophet taught that beauty—even the quickly perishing beauty of a flower—is worth half one's fortune, how much more is it worth while to find that beauty which nature, wise in her artistry, has placed within the grasp of every woman, who by self-study will find the true expression of her personality.

THE SECRET OF PERSONAL ATTRACTIVENESS

Your Confidence

We deem your confidence the most valuable asset of our business and every Gossard Corset is produced with the simple idea of making the best corset in the world—a garment that in every detail will deserve your confidence.

This clearly defined policy assures you that every Gossard represents a value well beyond that offered by the ordinary corset. This is of especial interest at the present time when uncertain buying conditions emphasize to the thoughtful purchaser that the true value of a corset is not in the number of dollars you pay for it, but in the number of days it will wear beyond the life of the average corset and continue to give you the joy of possession it gave the first day you put it on.

Gossard supremacy is only what millions of satisfied wearers of Gossard Corsets have made it. Great as it is, we take pride not so much in our leadership as in the public confidence that made it possible and that we hold a sacred trust.

A creator of clothes for America's most beautiful women has said that the woman who realizes the almost limitless possibilities of modern corsetry has largely solved the problem of personal attractiveness. Good taste in dress finds expression in simple, beautiful lines and right proportions; and the finding of a corset that expresses the correct line of the individual figure must precede every other step in the making of successful clothes. The woman who wisely accents her natural beauty is invariably better dressed than the superficial devotee of fashion whose exaggerated clothes follow the vagaries of the passing modes.

So it is with corsets; good taste is reflected in naturalness and simplicity—in a harmony of graceful lines and proper body proportions gained by a healthful support so pliable, so comfortable as to permit that grace of motion that is the birthright of every woman. Every is conceived in accordance with the unchanging principles of beauty and good taste and in them women of every figure type may find the proper expression of their individuality.

G O S S A R D

Front Lacing

C O R S E T

In value, fit, style, wear—every Gossard you buy must be entirely satisfactory to you. If it is not—return it. Gossards are sold only at those stores where high principles of merchandising assure you a service that makes every sale conditional upon your complete satisfaction. You will find these original front lacing corsets at the store you patronize most, where experienced corsetiers will take a personal pride in helping you select the model best suited to your needs.

*The Canadian H. W. Gossard Co., Limited
366-378 West Adelaide Street, Toronto.*

Ideal Figure
Tall Slender

Ideal Figure
Short Slender

Ideal Figure
Tall Heavy

Ideal Figure
Short Heavy

Ideal Average
Figure

Ideal Figure
Large Below
Waist

Ideal Figure
Large Above
Waist

Ideal Figure
Curved Back

Ideal Figure
Short Waisted

Originality Expresses Itself in Simple Linens

Transfer pattern 12529, blue, 20 cents, supplies one centerpiece 24 inches in diameter, which includes a scallop. It is exceedingly simple and quickly worked. The inner design should be carried out in running, eyelet, and raised satin stitches. A narrow half-inch Cluny or crochet edged the set. Plate and bread-and-butter doilies 12530 complete the set.

Transfer pattern 12530, blue, 20 cents, supplies 6 doilies  $5\frac{1}{4}$  and  $10\frac{1}{2}$  inches in diameter with scallop edge. This design is worked in outline, eyelet and raised satin stitches.

Transfer pattern 12527, blue, 20 cents, supplies one centerpiece 23 inches in diameter including a scallop edge. The entire design is worked in raised satin stitch. Delft blue crochet finished the edges.

12525—Luncheon Set in Basket and Flower Design

Transfer pattern 12525, blue, 30 cents, supplies a luncheon cloth 45 inches across, and 4 doilies  $8\frac{1}{2}$  by 12 inches. This basket and flower design is one of the prettiest motifs for a luncheon set if worked out in color. The baskets are worked in golden brown in raised satin stitch, the flowers in light blue and dark red, pink, yellow, and violet in French knots, and the leaves in one shade of green. Cluny lace edges the set.

12529—Centerpiece 24 inches in diameter

12530—Plate and Bread-and-Butter Doilies to Match

Transfer pattern 12526, blue, 25 cents, supplies enough design for a buffet and serving table scarf. Like luncheon cloth 12525 which matches it in a scarf, the work should be carried out in the same stitches and colored cottons.

12527—Centerpiece 23 inches in diameter

12528—Tumbler and Plate Doilies to Match

Transfer pattern 12528, blue, 15 cents, supplies 6 tumbler doilies,  $4\frac{1}{4}$  inches in diameter, and 6 plate doilies,  $8\frac{1}{2}$  inches in diameter with scalloped edge. These doilies form part of a luncheon set, centerpiece 12527 completing it.

12526—Buffet or Serving Table Scarf Matching Luncheon Set 12525 Above

Christmas Is Coming and You Cannot Please the Housewife Better Than By Giving Her "Something Nice in Linen" to Add to the Precious Store

Three Patterns Free with a Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home Journal.

These are Pictorial Review Patterns. If your dealer cannot supply them, send direct to Pictorial Review Co., 263-267 Adelaide St. W., Toronto.

Gladsome Gowns for Those Who Frivol

By C. M. STOREY

ALL work and no play makes Jane a dull girl, so Jane must frivol now and then, be she widow, wife or maid. And if she frivol, why of course Jane must have some frivolling frocks. So let me try to reveal some of the mistiness, the glitter and allure of the gladsome gowns one finds in atelier and salon, some of them just arrived from Paris, some from elsewhere and some by our own clever Canadian designers.

It is to be a season of rich blacks, sparkling with jets and sequins; of delicate colors radiating brilliancy from myriads of crystals, and iridescent paillettes; petticoats and bodices of drap d'or veiled with gold embroidered net or chiffon; shimmering satins draped with silver laces and net tunics a-glitter with bugle beads and opalescent sequins—a veritable riot of color and brilliancy.

Anent the décolletage, the real discriminating woman, so comes the word from Paris, has discarded the extremely low cut gown for one of more modest intent, and so we find the bodice of the evening gowns more substantial, and while there may be but shoulder straps—a glittering band of jet or sequins—very often net floats over the shoulders and veils their nudity, and for girlish dance frocks, there are the quaintest little short puffs or capes sometimes of net or lace.

Daintily pretty was a young girl's evening dress, which one saw in the making, with a foundation of apricot chiffon with overdress of black Chantilly lace, the larger motifs in the design edged with a fine chenille cord. Lace and chiffon continued over the shoulder and serving the purpose of a sleeve was a chiffon band covered with the lace which would come in handy in case of a vaccination mark, leaving an open space between the lace on the shoulder and the band. In other models the same idea was carried out with a lace puff that seemed to have slipped from its moorings at the shoulder seam.

This frock was girdled with black silk net which formed itself into a large butterfly bow at the waist in the back, a single end trailing behind, a filmy train terminating in a silk tassel. Not a few of the evening gowns have spiral flounces, usually of gold or silver embroidered net or lace, or sequin flouncing, and for the sake of diversion, some have side draperies of some filmy material, and to further accentuate the attention paid to the side of the gown, ribbon sashes are tied on the side, with the ends falling almost to the ground or even trailing on the ground. Such a sash is usually of some strongly contrasting shade, such as jade or rose on a black dress. Then, there's the indispensable corsage bouquet or sequence of blossoms arranged on the sash or girdle, or perhaps a single motif of flowers on the drapery. Thus a pale lemon colored taffeta, with the approved side drapery of silver lace, had a deep girdle of self-material festooned with nasturtium vine and blossoms.

Gorgeous almost beyond expression are the black dinner and evening gowns, so heavy with jets and sequins that one wonders how the filmy foundation bears their weight. Whole fronts are studded with jets and sequins like the armour of the Middle Ages while flying buttresses of net float airily from the sides, and long besequined train adorns the back, all of which is sustained by a cloud of net or a simple strap of jet over the shoulder. And quite as gorgeous, though perhaps less showy, are the black Chantilly evening gowns, which have recently recovered their old time prestige in festive halls. They are trimmed with glittering bands and flounces or draped over cloth of gold or silver. And not alone, black lace. White and colored laces will be in the spotlight of fashion the coming season.

Chiffon velvets in black and all the pale colors are to be found in the show rooms, and pheasant red is a fashionable color in Paris for evening wear. For less formal wear, there are equally pretty frocks to be had. One of them is a Sinbad crepe, the interpretation of which is a silk and satin check of beautiful fine silk weave, of a pale fawn color with overdrapery of Georgette crepe exactly matching, trimmed with real filet net, a wide girdle of bright blue Georgette crepe tied at the side, three-quarter flowing sleeves with filet motifs inserted and a V neck that was simply slashed down the front, the corners turning back. Now, the really interesting feature of this very dainty confection, was that the white filet net lace insertion was set in with small wooden beads about the size of French peas, in their natural color. A simple little afternoon frock for Miss Sixteen was of maize colored taffeta with the short skirt slashed on either side and the narrow pleating of the taffeta which edged it following the slashes up the sides, curling itself up into large, flat rosettes at the top of the slash, and around the shorter-than-elbow length sleeves.

WORTHY of the gowns are the accessories that complete it, even to the Spanish combs that glitter in the coiffure. It is fashionable once again to dress the hair on top of the head, or at least rather high and to wear combs and hair ornaments, such as one sees displayed in the windows of the hairdressing establishments, and incidentally, one hears that the superfashionable hairdressers in New York are placing the combs backwards, so that the setting of brilliants may show from the front instead of the back. Spanish combs are worn more than the less pretentious ones.

The filmy scarf that is almost indispensable for the evening toilette may be as simple or as magnificent as circumstances dictate. The young girl adheres to the utmost simplicity, of which the interpretation is a cloud of silk net or chiffon the shade of her frock. Something more substantial and wrappy that may be worn with different the gown calls for silver or white or even black, there's nothing to hinder. Usually the hose match the slippers, particularly if they are silver or gold, and we have heard that some very discriminating ladies are having their slippers dyed to match the gown, and of course everyone knows that when the desired shade of hosiery cannot be found, any reliable merchant can have white ones dyed the exact tint if given a few days' notice.

There has been quite a fad for fancy hosiery of late, such as drop stitch, and one learns that for this winter's evening toilette, there will be quite a run on lace inserts over the instep. Metallic stockings, once so fashionable are seldom asked for now, as they were so expensive to keep clean, having to be dry cleaned instead of laundered.

The plainer the slipper, the more modish it is considered, but if one cares for them, gold, silver, steel or jet bead buckles may be tacked on the instep.

WITH the rejuvenation of the fan, comes the bracelet, modern or antique. It makes no difference. The jewelled wrist watch and bracelet is not sufficient. One of the most unusual bracelets one has seen is made of ostrich feathers and worn high up on the arm, and incidentally, there is a bag for one's "hanky" and powder puff to correspond, also made of ostrich feathers.

The really new and exclusive bracelet is flexible with a row of sapphires down the centre bordered on either side by diamonds. Perhaps the most popular bracelet of the hour is that known as a bangle which slips over the hand. An exceedingly pretty version of this is composed of green gold with filigree work. They are narrow and exceedingly dainty.

One looked in vain for something more voguish than the ostrich feather fan, and what one found was ostrich, ostrich and ostrich again, but with much variability. Five long plumes mounted on mother of pearl sticks are pretty enough for anyone and the range of colors takes in every shade one could possibly want. The Prince of Wales fan has been awarded to the debutante for her own exclusive use. Needless to say it has but three plumes. Another has three or four long uncurled plumes laid together and dyed in variegated colors. One hasn't seen them here yet, but doubtless we shall see them among the Christmas offerings—tiny fans from Paris which one stows away in the hand bag, each one with the head of a cat or a dog, the animal's head covering the entire fan, sticks and all.

JUST to vary the programme slightly, may I quote from a letter received from a friend in Paris who writes glibly and knowingly of clothes that are fashioned there by couturiers of fame. She says:

"Many of the costumes have jaunty little capes of the gendarme effect that hang below the waist, and are often entirely without other collars, being simply folded in at the neck. Like a diminutive cape is the circular collar, that ripples just below the shoulders. These capes are usually outlined with braiding, darning, embroidery or fur, and the vest or bodice worn underneath is apt to be bright-colored in keeping.

"Jenny's evening wraps and coats are also inclined to develop into capes, mere capes, for there is nothing startling about them whatever unless it be the little touches of braid or points of embroidery dotted regularly all over them in close observance of the styles of the Moyen Age. With these capes, and often with the more negligee costumes, the collar is simply a scarf that is twisted around the throat and thrown over the shoulder.

"The trimming resolves itself into three factors, fur, black military braid and embroidery. Taking fur as the most important, it is interesting to note that Jenny, in protest against the prices that reign among furs, has used almost entirely imitation effects. Instead of lining her choker collars with beaver she has used dyed shaved rabbit, and where fox is supposed to be bordering a jacket we find nothing more romantic than Mongolie. Goat in various shades of grey is used in imitation of otter, while plushes are devised to look like anything from beaver to mole. With a daring akin to impudence, Jenny sends two mannikins forth at the same time, one wearing a little dolman wrap of real moleskin and the second an imitation in silk plush. The models are identical and very smart, the lines of the skins being worked horizontally and very close together like narrow stripes. When the price was considered there was much to be said in favor of the plush.

"The fur trimmings in this house differed from others in one great essential, they are not heavy. Far removed from the ponderous border of grey fox that one so often finds on a velvet wrap, is the trimming of thin strips of fur that run down the front and about the hem of a skirt, the strips an inch or more apart. Throughout her fur trimmings Jenny keeps consistently to this idea of using only strips. We find the same method applied to Mongolie, caracul, skunk, plush, squirrel and kolinsky, while monkey fits into the scheme of things as if designed for the purpose."

A CHARMING EVENING GOWN

Indestructible voile in pale, harmonious shades, draped and trained, and lo! one has a gown for gay and festive scenes.

toilettes is a length of Georgette crepe in some delicate shade, such as silver grey or maize, draped up so as to form dolman sleeves and trimmed with some kind of light weight fur such as squirrel, or feather trimming like ostrich, marabou or even swansdown, and in between these two extremes are the printed chiffon scarves obtainable in any smart shop.

Long white kid gloves, which have been somewhat eclipsed for the past few years while we were practising thrift, are once again regarded as indispensable to the correct evening toilette. This is straight from the man from Paris, and we all know that no matter how good the quality of silk gloves, there is not that sense of being well dressed which kid gloves impart. We begin to realize this now that we are not as intimate with kid gloves as we used to be when a dollar and a quarter was probably our utmost expenditure for a pair of every-day gloves and two-fifty or three for sixteen-button lengths. We value our kid gloves now by the price we pay for them, and anyone who has a supply on hand may call herself fortunate.

The style of slipper one frivols in is largely a matter of individual choice in color and material, but at the moment the fashion barometer indicates that gold ones are ultra fashionable, but if

That Preposterous Affair

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 12.)

seemed to assume greater proportions as her indignation gathered force. "Nice goin's on," she continued, "for a respectable woman like me to find in her home. What do you say, Bemis?"

"I say 'yes,'" said the blacksmith. Then he appeared to relent. "Maybe it's his wild oats comin' up," he added. Then he produced a plug of black tobacco from which he bit a large piece.

I perceived that I was hopelessly ruined, that the dignity of character and impeccability of virtue which I had revered as a hereditary gift had become fleeing phantoms before the wrath of my housekeeper.

Appreciating my incoherence my companion attempted an explanation.

"Don't want to hear!" snapped Mrs. Rimmills. Then her eyes softened as they fell on the child. "Poor lamb!" she murmured enigmatically. She turned on me. "I'm goin' to pack my trunk, and I'm goin'—tonight! Mr. Bemis will help me. As for you, I'll make it my business to see your Aunt Phyllis!" she concluded.

I gasped for air like a fish out of water. "Wait—wait—" I essayed. But Mrs. Rimmills had turned her back.

My cup of misery was full; it lacked but a drop of overflowing. Then suddenly, it brimmed right over. Someone knocked sharply, familiarly, on the outer door. It was Jack Evans! He came right in. I collapsed into a convenient chair, turned away my head. Rather would I have seen anyone at that moment than Jack Evans, yes, even Aunt Phyllis.

"Hullo, Arnold," I heard him cry. Then "What's this?" He drew up short. "What in the world—?" Again he stopped as he caught sight of my mysterious guest. "Violet!" he exclaimed.

"Jack!" cried the girl gladly.

"You! Here! How—what—" For once in his life Jack Evans was speechless.

I cannot remember clearly what followed. I seem to recall seeing Jack clasp the young lady in his arms after Mrs. Rimmills had relieved her of the child. Then followed a confused jumble of explanations. Jack had got the train time mixed. Violet had thought Jack's suite was 506 instead of 605. She had left the infant in my suite thinking it was Jack's, while she went out to telephone to Jack's office, knowing he was in the habit of working late, and thinking he had not received her telegram. I seem to remember offering Mr. Bemis my cigar case and that he took two putting both into his waistcoat pocket. Beyond this I can recall nothing.

A FALLEN arch had prevented me from taking a part in the war for democracy. As Violet's husband had died in France two years previously it occurred to me several months later that it would be a patriotic as well as a pleasurable task to undertake the care of Violet and her child. To my intense gratification my proposal was accepted. Aunt Phyllis, Mrs. Rimmills, (who has since become Mrs. Bemis) and Mr. Bemis were at the wedding, which, notwithstanding its embarrassing nature, was very successful.

I have never quite understood, though, why Rhoda did not accept our invitation.

The Land of P'raps

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 30.)

and beside him was the nobbly stone against which he had stubbed his toe just before his journeying began.

In the distance he could see the broad road of the long year. A little tinkle sounded near, and there beside him stood the little If. Then Diddy knew, though Old Father Time had brought him back again, that when he wished, the little If would take him into the Province of the Unexpected. Would he go? He thought of Old Dedder Naherrin, o the Pink Star, and the letter-men, and then he said:

"P'raps."

THE END.

Elgin Watches

The Motorist

One justification in your purchase of a car was that it would speed up your entire working schedule,—help you to keep your business appointments to the minute.

Hitherto uncertainty of transport often made this impossible.

To achieve the utmost in Time-Saving efficiency, drive your car to the tick of the Elgin.

Accurate, dependable,—the Elgin gets you there "On Time".

Rely on the Elgin and men will rely on you.

With the Elgin as your ally, you thus open the accelerator and hasten real Achievement.

There is a Jeweler in your vicinity who carries a pleasing selection of Elgin watches—faithful guardians of Time.

CANADIAN ELGIN WATCH CO., LTD.
TORONTO

44A

OXO CUBES

Tins of 4 and 10 Cubes

CONCENTRATED BEEF

A cup of OXO before going into the cold or damp is a splendid safeguard in a cold catching weather.

"A CUBE TO A CUP"

A Home-Made Gray Hair Remedy

You can prepare a simple mixture at home that will gradually darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Orlex Compound and 1/4 ounce of glycerine.

These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at little cost, or the druggist will put it up for you. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look many years younger. It is easy to use, does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

Bishop Bethune College

OSHAWA ONTARIO
Visitor: The Lord Bishop of Toronto.
A residential school for girls.
Young children also received.
Preparation for the University. Art Department. Healthful situation. Outdoor Games. For terms and particulars apply to the Sister-in-Charge, or to the Sisters of St. John the Divine, Major Street, Toronto.

STAMMERING

or stuttering overcome positively. Our natural methods permanently restore natural speech. Graduate pupils everywhere. Free advice and literature.

THE ARNOTT INSTITUTE
KITCHENER, CANADA

Hang that pretty Calendar

Small Picture, Photo, Print, Notice, Pennant, Map, Chart or Drawing and innumerable other small articles on those dainty little

Moore Push-Pins

Glass Heads—Steel Points

Their needle points do not mar wood, work or paper; the glass heads harmonize with any color decoration. Simply push them in with your fingers.

Suggest a use and we'll send you free samples.

Sold everywhere by Hardware, Stationery, Drug, Photo Supply and Department Stores.

Moore Push-Pin Co.

6-11 Berkeley St.

Phila. Pa.

Story Writing FOR PROFIT

Story Writing is a wonderful profession—wonderful because of its fascination and because of the financial returns it makes possible.

If you have the slightest literary inclination you should investigate our course.

LET US MAKE YOU A SUCCESSFUL WRITER

Our graduates are contributors to leading Canadian and American publications and many are earning handsome incomes from their work.

Fill in name and address, cut out and mail coupon NOW.

Name _____

Address _____

THE SHAW CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL

Toronto, Dept. H.J., 393 Yonge St. Canada

Modes & Fabrics

THE coat-frock will be more fashionable than last year, and although this seems incredible, it is a fact. Women have taken more to the habit of dressing to go out in a special frock, which is taken off immediately on the return home to be replaced by a tea-gown or a frock more suitable for indoor wear. In fact, coat-frocks, though quite elegant without a hat, very seldom look nice and chic when deprived of this addition; they give the appearance of being ready to go out, which prevents one feeling quite comfortable and cosy at home in them. This sensation will certainly be accentuated this winter on account of the vogue of high collars, which seem to be really established, and not only will high collars be seen, but the true mentonnière hiding the chin completely. This fashion, which Mme. Sarah Bernhardt made characteristic to herself years used, especially in plissé bijou, as underskirts to panels or aprons, which hide part of the plissé. If there is no pleated, printed, or embroidered material noticeable under these panels or aprons when the wearer walks—a new idea is to line them with printed or embroidered tissues to match the trimming of the dress.

THE first models ordered on returning from the country are the tailor-made and two-piece costumes—worn for the morning promenade. The colors to choose are, preferably, brown, rust color, beige, and all tones of reds and russet-browns of autumn. One will notice that even if the new line is long and slim, often beltless and high-collared, there are little jackets, too, with cape effects; short loose coats, and the real cape blousing behind and straight in

A FETCHING WRAP FOR EVENING WEAR

This delightful cape has been created in Chinese blue velvet and colored metal brocade. It is gracefully draped from a wide yoke which buttons to the cape proper and forms a hood effect at the back. The long sleeves with fringe panel at the lower edge are an interesting feature.

ago, is seen in practically all the new winter collections at the grand couturiers, says an English authority in "The Queen." Some of the coat-frocks look more like an entire dress, and some like a tailor-made or tailleur couturier; but what defines it as a coat-frock is the jacket—which is part of the whole effect—being irremovable; others are made somewhat in the style of a mantle, and to be worn without a dress underneath. One, again, sees another combination in a long mantle with the appearance of a robe-manteau which can be removed; it is generally worn over a dress to match, which is entirely hidden from view until the mantle is opened and taken off; sometimes being a lighter material, these dresses can be worn indoors. The general line to be observed in the majority of the houses is the long and narrow silhouette, and the long jacket. Panels, already so much worn during the summer, are again a feature of the next season's creations, as well as the apron effect at the front or at the back. It is very rare to see pleated skirts, one has really seen rather too many of them lately, but they are still front. The low waist line is really one of the decided notes for winter fashions, and even the gowns and coats which have no belts at all give the impression of a long waisted silhouette by the method of draping, or by the disposition of the trimming. Fur will be used more and more as a trimming: collars, cuffs, bands of fur surrounding the hem of the skirt—often covering the bottom of the skirt, and bordering the fastening of a coat to convey the idea of an entire fur lining. The same effect is obtained by printed colored lining covering the long revers, though a particular one noticed in one of the shops is an embroidery ensemble which is also used for the belt. A number of coats are fastened on the cross, when the bottom is adjusted by a decorative button, which can be varied by a tassel or braid motif, when the coat is not entirely buttoned from neck to hem. The tailleur is often made in two kinds of material which might also contrast in color—black and red, plain beige and black striped beige. Braiding effects are still used in geometrical designs and for separate trimming motifs.

NAINSOOKS CAMBRICS, MADAPOLAMS AND INDIA LONGCLOTHS

For Baby's Dresses, Children's and Mother's Whitewear.

NOW—more than ever before—is it important that you buy goods of known quality.

The name "HORROCKSES" on the selvedge means the world's standard of excellence in cotton fabrics.

It is convenient to get "HORROCKSES," for all the leading stores carry these reliable fabrics.

For name of the nearest store where procurable, write

JOHN E. RITCHIE, Canadian Agent
591 St. Catherine Street West • Montreal
Branches:—Toronto and Vancouver

Made by
HORROCKSES, CREWDSON & CO., Limited
Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers
MANCHESTER, England

LOOK FOR THE NAME Horrockses ON THE SELVEDGE

Every Girl Wants a Smart Plaid Skirt

They are so new, so warm, and so beautiful. But not every girl can afford to buy a pleated skirt ready-made. Let us show you how.

The Making Will Cost You
Just $2.00

Purchase 2 yards of 36" material. Cut this into 2 lengths, one yard each. Join the selvedge edges on one side, leaving open on the other. Hem the skirt at the bottom. Send this to us by registered parcel post for pleating.

Pleating Prices—Skirt length, less than 35 inches, $1.50; skirt length more than 35 inches, $2.00.

Skirts returned 48 hours after receipt. Add to remittance 20c for return postage. State whether Box Pleating, Knife Pleating or Accordion Pleating is desired.

Skirts of silk or serge are equally beautiful when pleated.

Send for catalogue.

Toronto Pleating Company
12 Bredalbane St., Toronto

A Feast of Fiction

For the Christmas season, be sure to read our stories, which range from "A Christmas Burglary," by "Q," to "The Lost Baby," by Elizabeth Gotto.

TAKING HER HERO HUSBAND'S PLACE.

Mrs. Gallagher is one of the Soldier Settlement Board's settlers in British Columbia. Her husband who served with the 29th Battalion was killed at the front, and Mrs. Gallagher has been a tenant on the Matsqui Farm taken over by the Soldier Settlement Board, and known as the Amiens Training Centre. Through the Board she purchased a forty-acre farm adjoining this property, and is going in for dairying. She is seen here among a crop of carrots at the Matsqui Station.

CHARTS and pictures showing the various stitches and methods of holding the work are necessary as illustrations in a sewing class; but these should be quite clear and distinct, else they are apt to mislead the children and so do more harm than good. They should be of such a size as to be able to be seen by all the children in the class, and, if of the correct kind, may so help the teacher in her explanations, that a great amount of time is saved.

When children are learning to do different stitches the teacher has entirely individual work to do, and large, bold illustrations, which the children on explanation can understand, save the teacher's constant repetition of the same instructions.

An Examination of the Charts issued by the Department of Education for use in Toronto Public Schools.

Illustration I.

Chart I. (showing basting). (a). This chart seems rather confusing. Why should an empty space on the right side of the work be called a stitch in basting when in all other cases, such as hemming, overhauling, etc., the thread showing on the right side indicates a stitch?

(b). This is called a space but can hardly be a space when filled in by a stitch. A chart should be a perfect illustration of the stitches used and some of these on this chart are not even straight. Children are required to work straight stitches so this illustration is not a good pattern.

Basting is usually used to fix hems and seams—this chart only shows the stitch itself and does not denote the purpose for which basting is required.

Chart II., (showing running—back-

Basting

Sewing in the Schools

By EVAN ETTA

stitching, etc.) This chart would appear very much clearer if the illustrations had been horizontal instead of vertical. Children are only too ready to turn their work around and methods of working are more easily seen when the illustrations are drawn horizontally.

Chart III.—(showing overcasting.) This chart is really unnecessary in an ordinary Public School sewing class for overcasting is really only used in finishing off material and can be quite easily taught by the teacher individually to whoever may need it. If these charts are so placed as to be in the order in which the children should be taught, it is rather confusing to put overcasting next to overhanding since the latter stitch should be taught first and as the putting of the needle in an upright position is a difficult problem for children, this is harmful placed where it is in the series.

Overcasting

Chart IV.—(showing overhanding.) Overhanding is used to join two pieces of material together, usually two selvage edges. In English Schools the junior children are taught what is known as a sew and fell seam, and overhanding is the stitch used to join the edges of the material together before the seam is felled. This does not denote any joining process at all.

The thread in the needle shown, is twisted and forms a loop. This makes the picture difficult for children to see. In the second picture the stitches are not regular which is the object one aims at in this work.

Chart V.—(showing hemming—hemstitching). Here again the illustrations are vertical but would be plainer were they horizontal. For children, it would be better if a double stitch were used in place of a knot as shown in the basting, as so frequently a huge knot is put in the way of machine stitching.

Hemstitching. This does not convey the idea of the hem being stitched as it is shown on a straight piece of material, thus it does not show the use of the stitch. It would be an advantage here to have two charts as for hemming.

Chart VI.—(showing plain seam.) This illustrates a type of seam chiefly used by dressmakers and need not be taught to children as their first lesson in seaming. Run and fell is the most useful type of seam for the junior grades.

Overhanding

Chart VII.—(showing felled seam). It is not clear either from this chart whether the stitch to be used is running or backstitching. In the run and fell seam shown, the stitches are not in the same straight line and therefore this is not a good example for children to copy.

Chart VIII.—(Buttonholes). The buttonhole shown on canvas is a very clear illustration, but the chart would prove much more valuable if a perfect copy of a buttonhole worked on cotton goods had been shown too, for such buttonholes are usually worked by children.

The specimen showing the three methods of sewing on a button does not include linen buttons without holes and children would certainly need instruction in the various methods of putting on this kind of button.

Chart IX.—(indicating how to find true bias, etc.) This chart is quite clear, but some of its value is lost because the running stitches in the joining of the bias strips, are not even or straight, and children are only too ready to exaggerate slight errors—hence the necessity for perfect illustrations.

Chart X.—(showing blanket stitch, buttonhole stitch). In the chart showing how to work blanket-stitch, everything is clear and graphic and any child once shown the stitch could easily continue to work by constantly looking at this chart. The method of working the corner, too, is quite clear enough for children to be able to understand and do by themselves.

Buttonhole stitch. It will be noted that the buttonhole is worked from right to left. The method of working from the left towards the right (as in blanket stitch) will be found equally effective, if the children be told to put double thread under the needle from the left (making letter L).

There is the additional advantage that the part of the buttonhole already worked can be better seen and can be held firmly between the thumb and finger of the left hand, while the thread is drawn up tightly into position. Buttonhole stitching in this series of charts is a little out of place on chart X, when a finished buttonhole is shown on chart VIII. Are children supposed to be able to complete a buttonhole before actually learning the stitch?

Running etc

Furniture Making in the Days of Queen Elizabeth.

The Elizabethan Cabinet Adapted by Mr. Edison

Out of the golden age of furniture

THE search led back across the Atlantic, into the manor-houses of England, the chateaux of France, and the castles of Italy. Here there came to light the true originals of the period-furniture styles. And Mr. Edison's designers adapted seventeen of these masterpieces for the home of to-day.

Period furniture is a heritage of the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries. The Georges reigned in England and the Louis ruled in France.

Fine living was the ideal of the day. Architects conjured up monumental palaces. Unparalleled designers and craftsmen furnished their interiors.

This era of luxury produced Chippendale, Sheraton and other masters of the English, French and Italian schools. It brought the cabinet maker's art to its most exquisite development. It was aptly named "The Golden Age of Furniture."

TWO centuries later came a momentous development in music.

Edison the thinker, conceived the vision of a world, whose every home would be blessed with great music—through a phonograph of Supreme Realism. Edison, the Inventor, gave three millions of his money and seven years of his time to an exhaustive research—out of which the New Edison was finally evolved. Then commenced those startling tests, given before four million people, by which he proved, through direct comparison, that the New Edison Re-Creates an Artist's performance exactly as the Artist himself gives it. No one was able to tell the living performance from its Re-Creation by the New Edison.

Jacobean

THE family that has an ear for the finer things in music is the family that has an eye for the finer things in furniture. Mr. Edison decided that Edison Cabinets should be patterned after the most exquisite furniture known. And so his designers have made every Edison Cabinet a period Cabinet out of the Golden Age of Furniture.

Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Orange, N.J.

Chippendale

Sheraton

The NEW EDISON the phonograph with a soul

HIGH

PATENT

Back Again

AFTER five years of Government regulation, we are permitted to manufacture, once more, our famous old high patent

PURITY FLOUR

Once more we are able to offer in this famous brand the best product of the world's best wheat; the popular flour for delicious bread, and light, flaky pastry.

Old friends of Purity Flour will share our satisfaction, and all friends, old or new, will appreciate the improvement in their baking with our high patent flour.

Your grocer will supply it.

Western Canada Flour Mills Co., Limited

Health and the Home

Be sure to read what our Family Physician has to say about the care of each member of the household and all matters pertaining to keeping fit and therefore happy. The best of advice in the brightest way is given in our Health and the Home department. Let our Family Physician feel your pulse.

They remain black to the end

You may subject Hawley Dyed Stockings and Socks to the roughest laundry treatment, but they will still retain their inimitable deep, dense, black lustre.

Hawley's Hygienic Black British Dye

For Cotton & Thread Hose & Socks

is guaranteed fast and actually improves the quality of the hosiery upon which it is dyed.

Hawley-Dyed Stockings and Socks are made in two distinct finishes—"Cashmere" and "Silk" Finish. Every pair bears the Hawley mark which guarantees the dye to be stainless, perspiration proof, and absolutely fast.

Look for this mark  when buying Stockings and Socks.

Enquiries from the Trade invited.

Sole Dyers (to the Trade only)

A. E. HAWLEY & CO., LTD.
Sketchley Dye Works
ENGLAND

The Hands of Esau

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 8.)

eyes and in the dim moonlit room she could just see the back of Rodney's neck as he bent over her. The impression gained upon her, sweeping away the last vestige of her self control. With a cry she struggled from him, pushing him aside with her hands, tearing herself loose from his arms, her head down, fear and horror choking her.

In the centre of the room she stopped, her breath came quickly, and she stared at him, darkly outlined against the open window.

"So . . . you hate me," he said quietly.

The illusion vanished with his words and her mind cleared, her heart opened and tears rushed to her eyes as a great surge of love swept through her, of love for Rodney Tennant.

"No . . . no," she said, her voice low and tense. Her arms reached out to him across the space which separated them, but he turned aside. Her arms dropped.

"I love you, Rodney," she whispered, but he laughed as he exclaimed mockingly:

"Love me . . . you? It looks like it."

"Yes, I love you," Mavis repeated, her head high, trying to pierce the shadows and see his face.

She hated the laugh with which he responded. It was cruel and hard.

"Why aren't you honest?" he asked briefly, "why do you lie? Are you lying to yourself as well as to me? You hate me, Mavis. Why don't you say so? You hate me just as before you hated Wyndham Andrews."

"No . . . no! Oh, I will tell you . . . I will explain," Mavis cried, eager now to tell him, eager to make him understand if she could. She must try to do so. She must make every effort. "I will tell you," she said desperately, and then her voice fell to a half choked sob. "Oh, Rodney dear I love you . . . Rodney listen . . . I love you . . . you must understand what I tell you . . . you must try to understand."

But he went to the door and opening it said coldly:

"There is nothing to understand. You are going to invent some reason for your physical aversion to me. I don't think I want to hear it."

THE door closed quietly behind him while Mavis stood for a moment looking into the darkness surrounding her, despair in her heart, an awful despair which she could not combat. It was fighting against shadows, nothing tangible to lay her hands upon, nothing solid to thrust aside. It was all shadows surrounding her, shadows and darkness on all sides. With sobs choking her Mavis turned back to the empty window.

The following morning when Mavis came down Rodney had already left the house. She had lain awake all night battling with the complex forces of her mind which she could not subdue nor conquer. It was impossible for things to continue as they were after last night. Matters had reached a crisis between them. Yet Rodney had said that he would not listen to her explanations. She knew that he would immediately dismiss any effort on her part to make him understand. And would an explanation help matters? She could not actually think so. It would not eradicate the impression which was growing each day more firmly fixed in her mind.

She wandered restlessly through the rooms during the entire day, seeking for some assuagement of this thing, some way in which she could kill this obsession which was ruining her happiness. If she could only persuade Rodney to sell the house, to give up everything which had belonged to Wyndham, in that way she felt that she might escape from it. But he would not do so. Already she had offered the suggestion that they should sell the house, this time perhaps being successful in finding a purchaser, but he had definitely refused.

"It suits us, doesn't it?" he had responded in the cold tone he now inevitably used when speaking to her, "I can't see any purpose in selling it."

Oh, if only he would be satisfied to do as she wished. There were so many spots on the earth's surface where they could be happy in conditions of their own making. Here the very air seemed tainted, seemed permeated with memories of the dead man. It would require something radical, some explicit change in the mode of her life to uproot it all, to wipe away her impressions. She could never obliterate them as long as she lived here.

She paused finally in her restless pacing about the rooms to pick up a book. Such thoughts as these did not advance her any further. It were better to seek distraction, to seek to occupy her mind with other things. As she turned the pages listlessly, looking for some sentence which might gain and hold her attention, a paper slipped from between the leaves and fluttered to the floor. She stooped mechanically to pick it up and instantly recoiled as the writing flashed before her eyes. Wyndham's writing! These constant reminders! There was never any escape from them. She glanced at the few lines, carelessly scrawled across the page, and then suddenly grew rigid with amazement, her eyes riveted to the sheet of paper. It was apparently a last will of Wyndham's, written the very day he died, and it left everything of which he died possessed, to charity, should she marry again.

She held it tightly in her hand while thoughts flashed in a swift current through her mind. Here was the response to her need. This was what she would have expected Wyndham to have done. It seemed like a direct answer to her problem . . . and then like a horrid flash out of a clearing sky the thought . . . if Rodney had really become as Wyndham he would tell her to destroy it.

Her hand clenched upon the paper and she got up out of her chair and commenced walking up and down the long room, while her mind groped with this new complexity. She stepped into great golden spaces of sunlight, crossed the soft rugs which were as yellow moss beneath her feet, into the shadow and back again, the paper held fast in her hand. Her eyes narrowed as she contemplated the possible outcome.

Suppose she were to take it directly to a lawyer? That way she would insure against its being destroyed. She started quickly across the room, spurred by that thought into instant action, and then stopped half way. If she were to do this, she were indeed treating Rodney as though he were as Wyndham. She was giving him no benefit of the doubt. If instead she were to show it to Rodney and he himself should suggest taking it to a lawyer, would not that kill forever the idea of any similarity between the two men? For that would be the one thing which Wyndham never would have done. He would have destroyed instantly anything which stood in the way of his own comfort.

Her fears set her to walking up and down the length of the room. The light gradually faded from the rugs as the sun left the sky, and gray shadows effaced the corners of the room. A log fell occasionally on the hearth, where the fire was burning low, with a sputter of sparks which for an instant illuminated Mavis's face with its set expression. And still she walked up and down, nervously, her feet soundless except when her heels struck between the rugs on the polished floor. Her face became more determined in its expression as the dusk deepened. She had made up her mind. She must put Rodney to the test . . . she must show him the paper when he came in.

IT was almost completely dark before she heard his step in the hall. Her heart beat suffocatingly as she paused, staring towards the curtained doorway, while the paper crackled in her nervous fingers. She was trembling as she stood waiting for him to come in, but his step went past the door on his way upstairs. She recalled that there was no light in the room, and she switched on a small table lamp and called to him. She recognized her own great agitation by the tremor in her voice.

He turned back and stood outlined between the curtains, the light from the hall shining at his back. She felt a swift clutch at her heart, a moment's terror. He looked so like that other as he stood there looking into the room.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 59.)

The Hands of Esau

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 58.)

"Did you call me, Mavis?" he asked perfunctorily.

"Yes, I have something to show you, something I have just found."

He came forward into the room and Mavis extended the sheet of paper without a word. And then she turned away. She could not bear to see his face, she was too terribly afraid.

The silence in the room seemed to endure while centuries rolled past. She listened to the ticking of the clock, the sound of far off noises, of a door slamming downstairs, a log falling in the grate, and still he did not speak. She clasped her hands together till the nails bit into her flesh. If only he would speak and put an end to her suspense. She turned slowly about unable longer to endure the weight of silence and met his eyes, level and keen, regarding her fixedly.

"I'm afraid you've made a bad bargain, Mavis," he said, and his voice was surprisingly matter-of-fact. "I'm terribly sorry about this for I see how you feel. For myself it is rather a relief . . . it's not altogether to one's liking to step into a dead man's shoes. But I wasn't worth the price, Mavis . . . you had found that out . . . even before this happened."

The voice was the voice of Rodney Tennant. Swiftly Mavis came towards him, and this time, held by the transfiguration of her face, he did not elude her. He listened to her gravely as she told him, hesitatingly at first, and gradually conveying to him the full horror of what she had suffered mentally through her strange obsession.

"It's been all my fault," he said, "I should never have allowed you to live here . . . I should have known that here you could never forget. Every room must hold for you some reminder, some imprint of the past. But you will forget. Mavis . . ." his voice rang through the room with a firm energy and defiance, while Mavis crept closer into his arms with a great and strong belief in his words. . . . "This time," Wyndham Andrews is dead . . . is dead forever."

Good Cheer for November

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20.)

teaspoonful each of chopped parsley and sweet herbs, one-fourth teaspoonful each of salt, pepper and paprika, one beaten egg, one tablespoonful of chopped suet, one tablespoonful of chopped ham or tongue and one-fourth teaspoonful of lemon juice. Mix and form into small balls, then fry them a light brown color in hot fat. Drop these into the jar with the hare thirty minutes before it is finished; when ready lift out the balls, and arrange around the edge of a hot dish. Pile the hare in the centre, and strain over the gravy. Serve hot. Red currant jelly should accompany this dish.

Corn Bread.—Three-quarters of a pint of corn meal scalded with water to make a thin mush. Allow this to cool. To two cupfuls of sour milk, add one teaspoonful each of salt and sugar and one teaspoonful of baking soda. Beat two eggs and pour this into the mush. Pour into a hot buttered baking dish and bake for twenty-five minutes. Serve with maple syrup.

Layer Cake.—Beat two tablespoonfuls of butter with one and one-fourth cupfuls of sugar until creamy, add three-fourths of a cupful of milk, a pinch of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of powdered nutmeg, one and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour sifted with one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder and beat for two minutes, then add the beaten yolks of two eggs, beat the batter again for two minutes, then stir in gently the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs, and divide the mixtures into two large, or three small round or square layer cake pans, which have been greased and dusted over with flour. Bake in a hot oven for fifteen to twenty minutes. Allow the cakes to cool before removing from the pans and they will not break. Put together with the following fig filling:—Wash and dry one-half pound of figs then put them through a food chopper. Cook them in a double boiler with three tablespoonfuls of water, two tablespoonfuls of maple syrup, one tablespoonful of lemon juice and one tablespoonful of fruit juice and cook until reduced to a smooth paste, stirring often. When cool, spread between the layers of cake.

Cheese Omelette.—Mix one teacupful of grated cheese, one teacupful of scalded milk, and two tablespoonfuls of butter, cool and add one beaten egg, one-fourth teaspoonful each of salt and paprika. Pour into a greased fireproof dish, and bake in a hot oven. Serve at once.

Apple Butter.—Boil one gallon of fresh sweet cider down to one-half its original quantity, then fill the saucepan with sliced sweet apples and let them simmer gently all day, until reduced to about one-half their bulk. Stir frequently with a wooden spoon or paddle to prevent their scorching. If not boiled down sufficiently the first day, allow to cook longer on the second day and pack away in sterilized stone jars. If desired, use one-half sour apples. In this case, sweeten to taste when the apples begin to break. The butter is better, however, if left with the natural sweetness of the apples.

Frozen Cranberries.—These frozen cranberries make a delicious change from the usual cranberry jelly or sauce. Pick over and wash four cupfuls of cranberries. Dissolve one pound of sugar in two cupfuls of cold water, and heat slowly to boiling point, then add the cranberries and cook gently until soft, cool, and add one-half cupful of strained lemon juice. Rub through a sieve, turn into a wet mould, and bury in crushed ice and rock salt for four hours. Turn out and serve on a pretty dish.

Curled Celery.—Use only the tender stalks of celery for eating raw. The hard outside pieces can be utilized with distinct advantage in soups—as a vegetable or for seasoning. Be sure and save the enlarged root in separating the stalks, cutting right down through it and leaving it attached in slender pieces to the stalks. Wash well, then crisp by folding in a damp cloth and laying on ice until ready to serve. To curl celery, cut the stalks into three or four inch lengths and split each piece nearly to the end. Cover with cold water for eight or ten hours, when the celery stalks will curl up in feathery shapes very pretty to look at. Celery is no longer served in a high glass, as was formerly the custom, but is laid flat on a cut glass celery dish or pretty plate.

Bread Stuffing for Turkey or Chicken.—Ten cupfuls of bread crumbs, two teaspoonfuls of salt, one-half teaspoonful of powdered thyme, one-fourth teaspoonful each of nutmeg and cloves, one cupful of butter or butter substitute, one-half teaspoonful of powdered sage, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper and one and one-half cupfuls of water.

To prepare the crumbs, cut loaves of stale bread in quarters lengthwise and grate the crumbs on a large grater or put them through the food chopper, discard the crusts for other purposes. Mix the crumbs with the seasonings, butter and water and stuff the turkey with this. Half quantity will be sufficient for a large chicken.

Superior Toaster No. 122

Although the "Superior" Toaster sells at a moderate price, it has features that make it preferable. The "Superior" is adjusted to exactly the right heating capacity. It toasts as fast as is possible without burning and it produces perfect toast that is crisp and nicely "browned" all over. The beautiful finish of the "Superior" Toaster makes it an ornament to any table. Its moderate price is possible because from first to last it is made in Canada,—the purchaser gets fullest value. Ask your dealer for "Superior" Electric Appliances. He has them, or can get them from his wholesaler.

"SUPERIOR"—All that the name implies.

MANUFACTURED BY

Superior Electrics, Limited

PEMBROKE, ONT.

40,000 feet of glass flood our factory with light, where we make—

MCCORMICK'S
Jersey Cream BISCUITS
SODA

—and Seal Brand Coffee—

Nothing else will do

No other can compare with Seal Brand. Made only from the finest mountain-grown beans, which have developed slowly, absorbing goodness from the air, the sun and the luxurious soil of the cool wonderful Tropic Uplands.

Perfectly Blended and Roasted, the rich aroma and rare flavour sealed into the Tins.

In ½, 1 and 2-lb. sizes. Whole, ground, and fine-ground. At all good grocers. Write for "Perfect Coffee—Perfectly Made", Mailed free on request.

CHASE & SANBORN, MONTREAL.

Earn Money at Home

We will pay $15 to $50 weekly for your spare time, writing show cards; no canvassing; we instruct you and supply you with work. Write or call Brennan Show Card System, Limited, 38 Currie Bldg., 269 College St., Toronto. Open evenings (except Wednesday).

DEAFNESS IS MISERY

I know because I was Deaf and had Head Noises for over 30 years. My invisible Antiseptic Ear Drums restored my hearing and stopped Head Noises, and will do it for you. They are Tiny Megaphones. Cannot be seen when worn. Effective when Deafness is caused by Catarrh or by Perforated, Partially or Wholly Destroyed Natural Drums. Easy to put in, easy to take out. Are "Unseen Comforts." Inexpensive. Write for Booklet and my sworn statement of how I recovered my hearing.

A. O. LEONARD
Suite 70 5th Avenue New York City

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 44.)

Coming back to the question of citizenship, while it is the duty of the Federal Government to bring new settlers into this country, it is equally the duty of the Provincial Governments to co-operate with the reception and assimilation of such of these as become their citizens. I would therefore urge the early approach of the Provincial Governments by members of the Provincial Women's Institutes with the request to inaugurate a policy of citizenship among our new settlers.

REPORT ON HEALTH AND CHILD WELFARE.

IN discussing the report on Child Welfare, submitted by the convenor, of Dr. Margaret Patterson, the Board of Directors recommended that the Women's Institutes co-operate with the Provincial Health Department in the various provinces.

Dr. Patterson congratulated the Women's Institutes of the various provinces on what they had done in getting the hot lunch installed in the schools.

She also gave the following suggestions:

(a) Why not aim at having every school a health centre?

(b) Could the Institutes not start an order of Nation Builders, whose membership should be children pledged to observe the simple laws of health in person, home and school? The membership pledge should consist of a list of health rules like the following:

1. I will respect my body and keep it clean.
2. I will strive to be clean in mind.
3. I will rinse my mouth after every meal and use my tooth brush every night.
4. I will keep my face, hands and finger nails clean.
5. I will bathe often and try to keep my clothing clean.
6. I will drink a glass of water every morning before breakfast.
7. I will eat wholesome food and chew it well.
8. I will live in the open air as much as possible.
9. I will go to bed early and sleep with my windows open.
10. I will try to protect the health of others and will not cough or sneeze without protecting my face.

Advancement in the Order to be given for keeping these rules. The cards should be signed by parent, teacher or school nurse testifying that the rules have been kept. When children learn and practice the rules of health they carry them into the home and the parents are educated by the children. A set of rules could be adapted to the community, but the essentials are the same; thus:

The American Commission for combating tuberculosis in France is circulating among children an excellent set of rules for health of which the following is a translation:

1. Breathe fresh air at all times. Fresh air and sunshine destroy the germs of contagious disease.
2. Wear light, loose and porous clothing.
3. Live as much as possible out of doors.
4. Sleep in a well ventilated room.
5. Practice deep, slow respiration.
6. Avoid eating too much, especially of meat and eggs.
7. Eat a variety of food and masticate thoroughly.
8. Evacuate the bowels regularly.
9. Maintain an erect posture in sitting and walking.
10. Avoid drugs. They contain poisons.
11. Keep the body strong and clean. This will increase resistance to disease.
12. Work with energy, but take proper rest and recreation.
13. Keep a contented mind.

(c) Tooth brush drills, calisthenics, folk dancing, organized play grounds and morning "stand to" for inspection at the opening of school could also be a part of the Order and merit marks be given. This stimulates competition and keeps the interest keen.

(d) Women are the guardians of the health of the Nation, but have been too modest over their frust. When we have our school fairs with prizes for best calf, best vegetables, and fruit, why not a prize for the school having the best health record whose pupils are in the best condition, whose buildings and grounds are kept in the most sanitary condition?

(e) Why not also judge the home on "points" as we now do "the standing crops"? Supposing the homes were inspected by a duly qualified inspector and marked on such points as the following, might it not stimulate an interest in "Better Health and Child Welfare"?

1. General Location—Cheerfulness of outlook, material beauty.
2. Outlook—amount of sunshine possible.
3. Ventilation.
4. Heating.
5. General Convenience.
6. Cellar—dry and airy.
7. Water supply—purity and convenience.
8. Disposal of waste and sewage.
9. General Health of Occupants.
10. Sanitary condition of house and grounds.

A ROYAL RANCH.

This shows the ranch near Alberta belonging to the Prince of Wales.

There is one very simple piece of work the importance of which no one can gauge that I would like to ask the Institutes to undertake this coming year. We all view with sorrow and alarm the great prevalence of goitre, especially among our young folk. It has been estimated that fully one-fifth of all our people under thirty years of age have goitre to some extent. Goitre rendered a man unfit for military service; so it is a serious physical detriment and in many cases most unsightly. While the cure of

The matter of gambling devices, games of chance and exhibitions of objectionable freaks was brought to the attention of the Board of Directors and a resolution, urging that provincial governments and fairs associations, do all in their power to eliminate these evils as features of fairs was passed.

Attending the meeting were official delegates from every province in Canada but Manitoba, these including, Mrs. Arthur Murphy, president, Edmonton, Alberta; Mrs. William Todd, first vice-president, Orillia, Ontario; Recording secretary, Mrs. W. F. Cameron, Davidson, Saskatchewan; Corresponding secretary, Miss Emily Guest, Toronto; treasurer, Miss Eliza Campbell, Fredericton; Superintendents, Alberta, Miss Mary MacIsaac; Saskatchewan, Miss Abbie De Lury; Ontario, Mr. George Putnam; Quebec, Miss May Chute; New Brunswick, Miss Hazel McCain; Nova Scotia, Miss Helen MacDougall, Prince Edward Island, Miss Della Saunders; Directors, Mrs. Alfred Watt, B. C.; Mrs. George M. Beach, Miss A. S. Pritchard, Quebec; Miss Annie Stuart, Grand Pre, N.S.; Mrs. John Lawlor, St. John, N.

This is a photograph of G. Korose, Lorette, Manitoba, returned soldier, ploughing with tractor. He is on the tractor.

goitre is difficult, its prevention is so simple that it is a crime to allow any child to develop it. Through the research work of Professor Stewart, it has been proved that the fumes of tincture of iodine in the air will prevent goitre. The mere presence of iodine is quite sufficient. Professor Stewart found that in localities where ninety per cent. of the children between ten and eighteen years develop goitre it might have been absolutely prevented by simply keeping a bottle of tincture of iodine in the schoolroom. We cannot reach every child's bedroom, but we can reach every school. It would be a very easy matter for the Women's Institutes to place a small bottle of tincture of iodine in every school, to have it left there uncorked and replenished as it evaporates; for, of course, there must always be liquid iodine kept in the bottle so that it may by evaporating, give off its fumes. This could not have any injurious effect, and what a national service we could render in preventing this common and serious disease.

B.; and Conveners of Standing Committees, Agriculture, Mrs. Laura Rose Stephen, Huntingdon, Immigration, Mrs. Jean Robson, Ottawa, Publicity, Mrs. J. F. Price, Calgary, Alta.

A very pleasant outing was held at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, when the Board of Directors were the guests of the principal of Macdonald College, and Miss Bessie Philip took the visitors around the beautiful grounds and through the school itself. Mrs. Murphy and Mrs. Watt gave brief addresses to the students.

NOVA SCOTIA WOMEN'S INSTITUTES.

THERE have been no reports of the work of our Women's Institutes published during the summer months, although most of the Institutes have been active, and most interesting reports have been received.

Our June Convention was a wonderful success, and the delegates who were privileged to be present found new interest and enthusiasm in the two busy days spent in Truro. The reports which were brought in to the Convention were splendid, and our Institute members may well be proud of our organization in Nova Scotia and its accomplishments.

During the summer, many enjoyable Institute picnics were held. In several instances all the Institutes in a County met, renewing old acquaintances, as well as forming new ones.

Almost every Institute was visited during the summer by a demonstrator sent out by the department. The favorite topic for demonstrator was Canning by the Cold Pack Method. Many very successful meetings were held, which were largely attended.

Some of the Institutes held no meetings during the months of July and August, and are now taking up the work for the autumn and winter with freshened interest. The majority of the Institutes, however, continued holding their regular meetings. It is impossible to describe fully the work undertaken by each Institute or to estimate its great value, but a brief account of their activities is outlined herewith.

Arcadia has been active in Community improvement, the Institute purchased a lawn-mower to be used in caring for the tennis court which they made for the young people of the village. An appeal from the Salvation Army resulted in collecting the sum of $38.00 for their use.

Bear River had a most interesting entertainment, an old-fashioned play with genuine antique setting and furnishing. This proved most successful. They have appointed a Committee to visit the School Board re the sanitary condition of the water supply for the school. They have also extended invitations of welcome to the wives of soldier settlers in the vicinity.

Bible Hill.—"The New Housekeeping," by Christine Fredericks, stimulated practical discussion in Household Methods, at several of the meetings of this Institute. They have been actively interested in improving the school grounds. Their interest and support at the time of the Convention was invaluable. The appeal from the Salvation Army resulted in a substantial sum being raised by subscription.

Barss Corner.—This Institute has been active in working for the School Exhibition as in former years. Funds are raised by making an autograph quilt. Their meetings are always bright and lively with interesting stories and readings contributed by the members.

Berwick.—"Physical Culture" was the subject of a most interesting address given by Miss Flora Chute. This Institute is working to place a woman on their School Board. The subject of Community Singing was taken up at a meeting of the Institute and plans are made to organize a Choral Society in the autumn.

Bridgetown continues to sew and provide for needy children in their town. They purchased new equipment for the Supervised play ground which the Institute has established and maintained for two years.

Cambridge.—A talk on Home Nursing given by Miss Meldrum of New York, followed by a Round Table discussion, was of great interest at a recent meeting. Subjects of interest at other meetings were "Care of the Eyes and Teeth," by Dr. David Webster, New York, "Child Welfare," "The Prohibition Referendum."

Caledonia and S. Brookfield has a Committee which visits the school. "Recreation, its value" was an important subject taken up at one of their meetings recently. This Institute is interested in building sidewalks in their community. Their meetings are bright and interesting with readings from the Standard Authors as well as modern publications.

Carleton had a most enjoyable visit from the Kemptville Institute this summer. A collection has been made for the Hospital Aid Society in Yarmouth. The Institute has been very active in securing land and erecting a Memorial in the village, and the interest of the whole community has been aroused.

East Leicester.—A beautiful lamp has been placed by the Institute in the hall as a memorial to their fallen soldiers. Cemetery improvement has been undertaken. A demonstration in sewing given by one of the members proved most interesting and helpful.

Gaspereaux is interested in the sanitary conditions of the school and plans to improve conditions. A committee for visiting the sick has been appointed. The case of a needy family has also been undertaken by this Institute.

Kempt.—The remodelling of their hall, as well as other community work has been undertaken by this Institute. They purpose giving a play to raise funds for the prize for the School Exhibition and School Gardens. Material help has been given by them to the Dawson Memorial Hospital in Bridgewater.

Kemptville.—This Institute is interested in erecting a Soldiers' Memorial, also in cleaning and beautifying the cemetery.

Lakeville is sewing for needy children in their locality.

Lawrencetown.—The members of this Institute formed committees to give the school children instruction in sewing and cooking to assist them in their School Exhibition. A Supervised Play Ground was established this summer. They are also sewing for the Provincial Infants' Home.

Lunenburg is interested in improving the sanitary conditions of their academy. The Dramatic Club gave the Institute sixty dollars to be used by their Charitable Committee, which is very active in its good work.

Maplewood and Parkdale has been raising funds to procure water coolers to place in the two schools. The reports said that the members had planned to spend one afternoon each week to help any in need of such assistance as quilting, mending, etc. In doing this they "help each other and have a good time in the bargain."

Bedford.—One of the new Institutes, has been studying the handbook. Miss Stuart of Grand Pre, has given them a talk on "The Possibilities of Institute Work."

Martock and Windsor Forks is interested in working for the Children's Aid. The sum of fifty dollars has been collected and forwarded by them.

Mahone is planning to erect a community hall as a memorial for its soldier boys. A July 1st celebration netted the sum of $1,032.

Paradise.—It is interesting to hear that the boys and girls of the school cleared up their school grounds and planted flowers, which were handed over to the care of the Women's Institute during the vacation. The flowers to be used by them for church decoration. The members have been studying Home Economics, and Public Health.

Fort Maitland is interested in the study of Home Economics.

Point Edward is interested in school improvement.

Fort Williams has been favored in having a travel talk by a visitor in their community. A petition has been circulated to ask the D.A.R. to place an automatic bell near the railway crossing.

St. Andrews contributed canned goods to St. Marchas' Hospital in Antigonish.

Sheffield Mills has been successful in painting and improving the Primary room in their school. Through their efforts the Minister of Highways has ordered the removal of piles of logs from the roadside and forbidden the placing of others there.

Scotch Village plans to repair the outside of their hall.

Tatamagouche.—The committee appointed to take charge of Clean-up day were so successful that they have been made a permanent committee to look after the community improvements. A committee has also been appointed to look after some children in the vicinity, who have never attended school, the Institute offering to be of assistance in supplying clothing and school necessities.

Wallace Bay has given ten dollars to the Children's Home in Amherst. A sanitary water cooler has been placed in the school. The establishing of a school library, and repairs to their hall are matters of interest to them at present.

Weymouth is working to obtain a gramophone for the use of the inmates of the County Poor Farm.

West Gore.—A round table discussion of the use of Home vs. Commercial goods was an interesting feature of one of their meetings. Other subjects of interest which they have taken up are, "Future Home Making," "Home-Making Education," "Address to Girls," "Labor-Saving Methods."

Four new Institutes have been organized during the summer and are looking forward to a profitable winter. These Institutes are Onslow, Colchester County, Mabou, Cape Breton, Hantant, King's County, New Germany, Lunenburg County.

HELEN J. MACDOUGALL,
Superintendent of Women's Institutes.

'the razor that sharpens itself'

"A PERFECT shave in 3 minutes" is AutoStrop Razor service. Stropping and cleaning without taking anything apart, without even removing the blade from the frame is an exclusive AutoStrop Razor feature.

And the quality of the shave is the kind you are craving for!

Your dealer will gladly demonstrate the AutoStrop Razor to you. He will guarantee to refund your money, if the razor does not prove to your entire satisfaction.

Only $5.00—complete with strop and twelve blades in an attractive assortment of cases.

AutoStrop Safety Razor Co., Limited
AutoStrop Building.
Toronto, Canada

203

AutoStrop Safety Razor

MADE IN CANADA

On razors, strops, blades, etc., hereafter manufactured by us, we shall apply the trade mark, "Valel" in addition to the trade mark "AutoStrop" as an additional indication that they are the genuine products of the AutoStrop Safety Razor Co., Limited, Toronto, Canada.

Your dealer will gladly demonstrate it to you

To Institute Members

Our friends in the Women's Institutes are urged to send us special photographs of unusual scenes or gatherings—not the ordinary group, but the out-of-the-way undertaking which means variety in the work of the Institute. These organizations have so much in their work that is inspiring that we wish pictures of any scene or feature of interest.

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6.)

The Most Satisfactory
Shaving
Equipment
Ever Produced

Gillette

Safety Razor

The Shaving Service for Everyman
—Everywhere

There has never been a time when the trend towards quality and economy has been so universal. The demand is sweeping over the country for better—more serviceable—more economical merchandise.

It is these very ideals which have created a world market for the Gillette Safety Razor. The personal shaving service idea has gone around the globe and changed the shaving habits of thinking men everywhere.

To-day, Gillette shaving is vouched for and acknowledged by twenty million men as one of the cleanest, safest, most economical, and most valuable habits they ever formed.

Men are enthusiastic about the NO STROPPING—NO HONING feature of the Gillette, and the easy adjustability of the razor to suit their particular types of skins and beards. They appreciate the super-keen edge for every shave, with its incentive to daily shaving and smart appearance.

You will find Gillette dealers everywhere anxious to put you in touch with this vital, personal service.

she stuffed with feathers when the ducks announced the opening of the shooting season by their appearance on Crystal Lake.

Behind the stove there is a generous pile of wood. Mollie had demurred at this arrangement at first, protesting that the wood made the house look like a basement, and that she preferred keeping it outside and bringing in the fuel a stick at a time. Though amazed at the quantity of wood the stove could consume, Mollie had stubbornly persisted in this arrangement for over a week, much to her husband's amusement. And then it rained for three days at a stretch, and utilitarianism triumphed over aesthetics.

The breakfast bill of fare this morning was porridge, bread and fried bacon, and boiled apple sauce. It was the invariable order, but every other day they had tea instead of coffee. There was no stint of quantity. To Mollie, who for years had lived in boarding houses, such lavish use of butter and real cream had at first seemed sinful, but she had quickly welcomed the change, and now sometimes idly wondered how she could have mistaken the anaemic blue liquid of the city for milk, or lived on the wafers of bakers' bread when she now required so many generous slices of her own baking to satisfy her northern appetite.

As breakfast progressed, Mr. and Mrs. Hazelton discussed affairs of world-wide importance: Would Billie haul firewood that day?—or would he keep on cutting rails for the pasture fence? He would soon have to break a trail to the south haystack; this one would no more than last out the week. Mollie had better ride out for the mail to-day, or perhaps it would be better to wait until to-morrow; the mail was only due at Bill Laflamme's last Thursday, so it might be too soon. But it was our turn to go for it, and bring back the Harrigans' papers, and that parcel that should have arrived two weeks ago. Well, we'd wait until the day warmed up, if it was going to, before we decided what to do. There was no hurry about it, anyway.

That was it! "There was no hurry about it." Things didn't necessarily have to run on schedule at the ranch, except the feeding of the cattle, and even that schedule was not held by time to strict accountability. Once a day they were fed if the weather was fairly mild, twice a day if it got really cold, say forty-eight or fifty below zero. All other tasks could wait a more convenient season.

Breakfast over, Billie emptied one of the water pails into the kettle, and went to the barn to milk the two cows. Their yield was not heavy—cows living on hay in always-below-zero weather are not in the record-breaking class—but the milk supply was ample for the needs of the house, and even allowed enough cream for Mollie to conduct wasteful experiments in cheese-making, in which, by carefully following printed directions, she was certain of failure every time. But she had the satisfaction of being successful at churning butter three times out of five. On the disappointing occasions, she blamed the weather, quite properly. Her dairy would never have been passed by any health inspector, who would have learnedly discovered millions of bacteria to the cubic inch and protested that her system of keeping milk in wide-open pans had long since been discarded in all hygienic establishments. But for all his learned talk he would probably have been unable to answer the argument which Mollie herself could not controvert when she was initiated into the mysteries of butter-making and had made a feeble protest.

"But we're healthy for all that!"

By the time Billie had returned with the milk, Mollie had decided the mail could wait for another day, but she would go down the meadow later and help feed the cattle. Meanwhile, an hour's work on the woodpile might be in order; the pile wasn't any too big if a really cold snap came along and we had to put in most of the time throwing hay to the cattle.

Try as he might, Billie could never get ahead of that woodpile. Each day he religiously saved a certain quantity, and each day saw Mollie diminish the supply by that same quantity, plus a few sticks, so that every once in a while an extra spurt had to be made and extra time put in so that the pile might return to standard size.

MOLLIE had not been used to seeing fuel poked into a stove with lavish hand. To her, wood and coal had represented an outlay of real money, and not merely of energy, so that it was some time before she could reconcile herself to the prodigious demands of the kitchen range. One day she had mentioned to Billie that they seemed to be burning a vast quantity of wood. He had replied that that could give him no cause to worry; there was enough wood on his ranch to last them well over a thousand years. Mollie had been properly impressed at this revelation of nature's bounty to them, and had later amused herself by giving it a monetary value, fictitious and probably exaggerated, but based on certain principles, or lack of principles, she had learned when working in Vancouver real estate offices. Her argument was that if all this standing timber could be cut down and cut into suitable lengths, split into kindling and tied into small bundles, these could be sold in the east end of London for a ha'penny apiece, and would realize a fraction over a billion dollars. This fraction she allowed for

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 65.)

The Jade Elephant

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 47.)

Then good-byes were said, but not until the Maharaja and his mother had requested them to come soon to see them in their far away country.

Larry carried the little girl down to the waiting car, and they rolled homeward. She held the green elephant fast.

"Larry!" she said. "Do you remember that bit of verse Stevenson wrote, 'The world is so full of a number of things'?"

"I think we should all be as happy as kings," finished Larry.

"It's true, Princess, and there are more people in it than just you and me."

"You mean," observed the child quaintly, "that often I do not seem to think so."

Larry nodded. "If you'd jolly well look around, Princess, you know. Get interested in some of them; not that I'm preaching, I'm just telling you, lovely one."

"Yes!" she said.

"And as I did find the green elephant for you," he went on, "and you can see that he has a charm that works, why I look to you to fulfil your end of the bargain. To go down to the sea, live in the fresh air, get strong, and what not. It's the only way to get that iron band affair off, Nadine."

She drew a fluttering breath. "Yes," she answered "even if people stare I will go. A bargain is a bargain, Larry. My part is to try to get strong. Isn't it?"

The boy's eyes that had looked on life and death in Flanders, smiled into the child's face. "The world is so full of a number of things," he quoted again. "I am sure we should all be as happy as kings." We will be, too, Princess, if we just keep on helping those things on a bit you know."

"Yes," she said, thinking of his strength and patience, and of the way he had with him. "Yes, Larry, I know."

Pompeian

NIGHT CREAM

Brings Beauty while You Sleep

Confidently you face the searching light of the morning sun, knowing that the tired lines of the previous day have been softened and subdued by Pompeian NIGHT Cream.

This improved cold cream brings, while you sleep, the beauty of a soft, youthful skin. Pompeian NIGHT Cream is for sale at all druggists at 50c and $1.00 a jar.

Other popular Pompeian toilet preparations are the 60c Pompeian DAY Cream (vanishing), which removes face shine; Pompeian BEAUTY Powder (60c), a powder that stays on; Pompeian BLOOM (60c), a rouge that won't crumble; Pompeian MASSAGE Cream (60c), and Pompeian FRAGRANCE (30c), a talcum with an exquisite new odor. Clip the coupon now.

Marguerite Clark Art Panel and Samples

Miss Marguerite Clark posed especially for this 1921 Pompeian Beauty Art Panel, entitled "Absence Cannot Hearts Divide." The rare beauty and charm of Miss Clark are faithfully reproduced in dainty colors in this Art Panel. Size, 28 x 7¼ inches. Price, 10c. Samples of the three Instant Beauty preparations, Pompeian Beauty Powder, Pompeian Day Cream, and Pompeian Bloom, sent with the Art Panel. Also samples of Pompeian Night Cream and Pompeian Fragrance, a talcum. All for a dime (in coin). Please clip coupon now.

Guarantee

The name Pompeian on any package is your guarantee of quality and safety. Should you not be completely satisfied, the purchase price will be gladly refunded by The Pompeian Company, at Cleveland, Ohio.

THE POMPEIAN COMPANY

3 Wyandotte Ave.

Walkerville, Ontario, Canada

"Don't Envy Beauty—
Use Pompeian"

"Absence Cannot Hearts Divide"

THE POMPEIAN COMPANY

3 Wyandotte Ave., Walkerville, Ontario, Canada

Gentlemen: I enclose a dime for 1921 Marguerite Clark Art Panel, entitled, "Absence Cannot Hearts Divide." Also send Instant Beauty samples and samples of Night Cream and Fragrance (a talcum)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

Prov _____

Please specify shade of Beauty Powder, unless another shade requested.

My Mother says -

COWAN'S
MAPLE BUDS
 are very good for children

DON'T BE IMPOSED UPON ! For Your Protection Every MAPLE BUD is stamped with the Name "COWAN"—
 Scorn Substitutes !

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 62.)

expenses and transportation, the proportion being good real-estate logic. Thereafter the Hazeltons occasionally spoke of their Billion Dollar ranch, and in time the property became so designated throughout the Quesnel country.

The cutting of fence rails occupied Billie for a couple of hours that morning. By that time a healthy appetite had been worked up, Mollie hallooed that dinner was ready. Billie drove his axe into a standing tree, high up to be out of reach of any wandering beast, and headed for home and beans and rice pudding. Tomorrow there would be meat—fresh meat which would be thawed overnight after being chopped off the frozen quarter hanging outside the shack. Sometimes they had fish, caught through holes in the ice on Quesnel Lake, and brought home by the sackful, but Mollie complained of the lack of taste of these fish, and they were eaten only so that the meat and the beans could be enjoyed the more. They had had venison, but deer were scarce that winter, and there was no more in sight. Bear meat, which had been plentiful, and which Billie really liked, once in a while, had been declared taboo by the lady of the house for no better reason than that she had once seen a bear on roller skates at the Orpheum Theatre, and it made one feel like a cannibal. There could be no answer to such an argument. So the dogs fattened on Bruin.

After dinner Billie hitched his work team to the bobsleigh and started out to feed the cattle on the meadow. Mollie went with him to build the load and drive the horses while he tossed out the hay. She had by this time reached the point where her assistance was of a real value, though by no means indispensable, and the hay could be scattered quicker when she formed half of the feeding crew. But she could not feel a liking for the cattle. To her they were wild beasts, just domesticated enough to stay in a place because hay was thrown out on the snow for them day after day. Mollie was not far wrong in this estimate of the range stock; even Billie never took chances among them, for all that they might seem weak and helpless.

Hazelton was a careful feeder, which is a ranchman's expression of approval of anyone who succeeds in determining just how little hay will keep an animal alive through a winter, in addition to what rustling the cattle could get in the uncut portions of the meadow, where the ground had been too wet and soft to allow the mower and rake to be used the previous fall. Though on slim rations, because Billie deemed it wise to end the winter with hay on hand and so have a reserve for the inevitable bad year, the cattle were looking in fair shape. They were nearly all young stock, and Mollie was proud of their condition, particularly after she had ridden through the Harrigan herd and gazed in amazement at some of the old cows, rickety frameworks of bone over which mangy hides were loosely stretched, like an oversize tent on a swaying ridgepole. In her innocence, Mollie had inquired why the poor beasts were not killed and put out of their misery, a question which had brought from Harrigan the information that those critters had pretty nearly an even chance of pulling through, but it was their last year; they'd be beefed in the fall. And Mollie, taking another and longer look at the forlorn animals, at last understood why roast beef in restaurants was so very tough. It was because the cattle had such a tough life.

Three times was the hay sleigh loaded and feed scattered to the cattle on the meadow, Mollie driving the team along the well-packed road while Billie scattered out the feed with a sparing fork. The feed train stretched out for well over a mile, so that all the cattle would have room to eat without fighting, which would invariably be the case if their hay was thrown out in a limited space, when the weaker ones would be horned aside and forced to chew the cud of bitter reflection while the stronger munched the cured swamp grass. On a long road there are no favorites, and each animal gets its fair share.

Feeding over, the Hazeltons returned to their shack, where Mollie proceeded to prepare supper, while Billie attended to the barn work. By the time he had unharnessed his team, fed the horses and milk cows, carried two pails of water to the house, brought in a few armfuls of wood and attended to a few odd chores, it was quite dark, and the evening meal was ready. They had beans for supper that day, because they had had beans for dinner. A repetition of dishes simplifies cooking, and they would even up on the morrow by having meat twice. And they had cold apple pie, with a composition on the side which Mollie called cheese, but of which Billie had grave doubts. Still, being a healthy male animal, he ate it with apparent relish; he was quite willing to "break-in" Mollie, but he didn't want to break her heart by telling her the whole truth about some of her dishes.

After supper Billie went to the barn to milk his cows in their chilly stalls. The unreliable thermometer by this time registered thirty-six degrees below zero, and it could not have been far wrong, for when Billie returned to the house, there was a crust of milk ice inside the pail, where the milk froze in layers as it swished against the sides. But this did not matter; Mollie would thaw it off with boiling water. In the first cold days of the winter Mollie had said that she had never expected to see so much natural ice cream, or want so little of it. The opinion still held good.

After disposing of the milk, Hazelton enjoyed a thorough wash, removed his rubbers and two pairs of heavy socks, stripped off his overalls, and announced his willingness to call it a day. It was then a quarter to eight, and he proposed taking life easy for a couple of hours before retiring. These evenings, when no work was done, were the pleasantest part of the day. On these occasions when they received their mail, they indulged in an orgy of reading, for in addition to such letters and catalogues as might come unsolicited, they also subscribed to an Eastern "family paper." They had to, or be hopelessly out of touch with world events and masterpieces of fiction as known to their neighbors. For every Canadian rancher and every homesteader takes a weekly, or borrows it from a neighbor. To be without it would be like having one's name in "Burke's Peerage," and not subscribe to "The Times."

But a weekly newspaper, even though it be of thirty-two pages and treat of every subject under the sun, is eventually exhausted by an intelligent reader. So, for many successive evenings, husband and wife merely talked to each other during the restful period of the day. Much of the time Hazelton would instruct Mollie in the mysteries of the ranch; the superiority of one breed of cattle over another, the advantage of light horses over heavy animals in a land where feed is an important item, the fattening qualities of pea-vine and vetches, and such important matters. Mollie would listen and learn a little, but she gravely doubted if she would ever become an expert rancher like Mrs. Harrigan, ex-Frushing. Then Billie would remind her that he had learned all he knew in the few years since she had last seen him grinding out publicity matter for the North Coast Steamship Company. And so the talk would drift back to years ago, when life for them both was so different. There was much that they missed, theatres, concerts, moving pictures (but only Mollie really missed these, for this attraction had been in but a crude state of development when Billie Hazelton had staggered into the north to lose identity and emerge as Frank Hayes), excursions, automobile rides, sea bathing, churches (again only Mollie missed this) and many, many other delights of city life. But principally Mollie missed shopping. She had never looked upon herself as a shopper, as distinct from a buyer, until she found herself making all necessary purchases from a mail-order catalogue, where she could either buy the article described as X4793b2, or do without. She had two choices, take it or leave it. It was on these occasions, when she filled the order form that she realized how very difficult she must have been to please in the past, when ten thousand sales people stood ready to do her slightest bidding, on the chance that she might spend a dollar and a quarter in the store. . . .

Another Royal Suggestion

Biscuits, Buns and Rolls

From The New Royal
Cook Book

BISCUIT! What delight this word suggests. So tender they fairly melt in the mouth, and of such glorious flavor that the appetite is never satisfied. These are the kind of biscuits anyone can make with Royal Baking Powder and these unusual recipes.

Biscuits

2 cups flour
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
½ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons shortening
¾ cup milk or half milk and half water

Sift together flour, baking powder and salt, add shortening and rub in very lightly; add liquid slowly; roll or pat on floured board to about one inch in thickness (handle as little as possible); cut with biscuit cutter. Bake in hot oven 15 to 20 minutes.

Royal Cinnamon Buns

2¼ cups flour
1 teaspoon salt
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
2 tablespoons shortening
1 egg
½ cup water
½ cup sugar
2 teaspoons cinnamon
4 tablespoons seeded raisins

Sift 2 tablespoons of measured sugar with flour, salt and baking powder; rub shortening in lightly; add beaten egg to water and add slowly. Roll out ¼ inch thick on floured board; brush with melted butter, sprinkle with sugar, cinnamon and raisins. Roll as for jelly roll; cut into 1½ inch pieces; place with cut edges up on well-greased pan; sprinkle with a little sugar and cinnamon. Bake in moderate oven 30 to 35 minutes; remove from pan at once.

Parker House Rolls

4 cups flour
1 teaspoon salt
6 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
2 tablespoons shortening
1½ cups milk

Sift flour, salt and baking powder together. Add melted shortening to milk and add slowly to dry ingredients stirring until smooth. Knead lightly on floured board and roll out ½ inch thick. Cut with biscuit cutter. Crease each circle with back of knife one side of center. Butter the small section and fold larger part well over the small. Place one inch apart in greased pan. Allow to stand 15 minutes in warm place. Brush each with melted butter and bake in moderate oven 15 to 20 minutes.

ROYAL Baking Powder

Absolutely Pure

Made from Cream of Tartar, derived from Grapes
Contains no Alum—Leaves No Bitter Taste

MADE IN CANADA

FREE

Write TODAY for the New Royal Cook Book; contains 400 other recipes just as delightful as these. Will show you how to add interest and variety to your meals. Address

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., St. Lawrence Blvd., Montreal

"Bake with Royal and be Sure"

Forty—the Dangerous Age for Men

IT is then that the dread Pyorrhea is most likely to get established in the mouth. It is then that long-continued dental neglect tells.

Pyorrhea—which afflicts four out of five people over forty—begins with nothing more alarming than tender and bleeding gums. But as this insidious disease progresses, the gums recede, the teeth decay, loosen and fall out, or must be extracted to free the system of the poisonous Pyorrhea germs that lodge in little pockets around them.

It is to the infection of these deadly germs that medical science has traced many of the ills of middle age—weakened vital organs, nervous disorders, rheumatism, anaemia, and other serious ailments.

End your Pyorrhea troubles before they begin. See your dentist often for tooth and gum inspection, and start using Forhan's For the Gums today.

Forhan's For the Gums will prevent Pyorrhea—or check its progress, if used in time and used consistently. Ordinary dentifrices will not do this. Forhan's keeps the gums firm and healthy, the teeth white and clean.

How to Use Forhan's

Use it twice daily, year in and year out. Wet your brush in cold water, place a half-inch of the refreshing, healing paste on it, then brush your teeth up and down. Use a rolling motion to clean the crevices. Brush the grinding and back surfaces of the teeth. Massage your gums with your Forhan-coated brush—gently at first until the gums harden, then more vigorously. If the gums are very tender, massage with the finger, instead of the brush. If gum-shrinkage has already set in, use Forhan's according to directions and consult a dentist immediately for special treatment.

35c and 60c tubes in Canada and U. S. If your druggist cannot supply you, send to us direct and we will mail tube postpaid.

Forhan's, Limited, Montreal

So they would talk, of the future, the present, and the past, but chiefly of the past. For they had the present, were young and felt sure of the future, but the past was gone, and had left only pleasant memories behind.

At ten o'clock they would stick two big chunks of green wood into the stove, shut off all the drafts, throw out the cat and tell it to go and sleep in the haystack, take a last look at the unreliable thermometer, then retire for the night.

To-morrow would be another day.

CHAPTER NINETEEN.

BILL LAFLAMME WRITES TO OTTAWA FOR MORE PAY.

THE sun was shining brightly at nine o'clock in the morning when Mollie left the Billion Dollar ranch for the Khakala post office, nine miles away. She would not return till dark, for the return trip would be made via Harrigans', which would lengthen the journey by six miles. Possibly she might stay at Harrigans' overnight, if the weather took a cold turn during the day, or her cayuse happened to go lame on the journey. For Mollie was riding an Indian horse that was not noted for its staying powers, but had been picked out for its docility by Hazelton, who had a fine contempt for any animal that didn't buck at irregular intervals, and always when feeling good. Mollie had come to the ranch a few years too late in life even to expect to become a first rate horse-woman, but she had hopes that by summer she would be able to ride an animal with a little more life than the aged Plod.

Mollie was riding astride, as a matter of course. But it had not been a matter of course when this had first been suggested. She had expostulated at great length against this mannish method, and had been inclined to resent her husband's refusal to take her objections seriously. He had not even answered her arguments, contenting himself with observing impartially to the patient horse that "We first abhor, then endure, then enjoy." And when, at last she had consented to waive her old-fashioned ideas and adopt the northern method, she had naively expressed the hope that no one would happen by and see her, quite unconscious that no rancher would give more than a passing look at a woman astride a horse, while a side-saddle rider would have convulsed the district and provided material for gossip for months.

Plod was an easy-going horse, a fat and lazy animal that would consider three miles an hour through the snow fairly good going, though he would do four when sufficiently spurred. The trail from the Billion Dollar ranch to Bill Laflamme's was well broken for the last four miles, but for the first part of the journey Plod had to shuffle along and break the road, for no one had gone over it since the last snowfall. Further on other trails converged towards the common centre—the rural post-office. The path was only a few feet wide, and wound about in so crooked a fashion that Mollie felt certain it must box the compass at least for every mile. But she had no fear of getting lost, the trees were blazed, the trail quite apparent under the fresh snow, and, best of all, Plod knew every inch of the way. Sometimes horse and rider scaled steep cliffs and travelled on the brow of a hill for a distance, then descended into a canyon and crossed a frozen strip that would be a raging torrent in the spring. Up the opposite hill old Plod would wind his way, slow but sure-footed, threading through the thick patches of jackpine and firs that so generously showered blessings of crystal snow on horse and rider from overhanging branches.

Scampering rabbits, white as the surrounding landscape, were the only signs of life, and they were seen only as they disappeared, startled and nervous. Sitting on their haunches munching frozen grass under the willow bushes, they were "visible, but unseen." Even their arch-enemy, the coyote, would have to startle them before his keen eye could locate his prey. Had a rabbit brains enough to remain quiet when danger threatens, he might live to a ripe old age in the land of ice and snow. Instead, he runs a race and becomes a dinner.

Mollie saw no human being in her nine-mile journey, and but for a thin wisp of smoke, the post-office might have been a deserted cabin as she approached it. The silence was only broken as she came within twenty yards of the house, when Peep, Bill Laflamme's Airedale, barked a staccato welcome. Peep was one of those dogs who unconsciously absorb their master's traits, and by this means he had become everybody's friend. He barked joyfully at everyone who approached, and barked joyfully when they went away. But visitors could have helped themselves with impunity to any article around the place, barring Peep's dinner. To that he claimed absolute title.

Peep's noisy welcome brought Mrs Laflamme to the door of the cabin.

"Well, well, Mrs. Hazelton," exclaimed the postmistress. "I'm glad to see you. Do you know, I felt sure you would be coming to-day, or to-morrow at the latest. And I was pretty sure it would be to-day."

Mrs. Laflamme's pleasure at seeing Mollie was quite genuine, even though she did use the same phrase of welcome for every person who dropped in for mail. Possibly it gave her confidence in her ability to foresee coming events in thus ascribing the arrival of a guest to her prediction that the event would happen. True, she did not always particularize who would happen along, but daily she forecasted the coming of somebody, and by a subtle process of reasoning backward she could later convince herself that by somebody she could only have meant the one person who did come. After all, it was a perfect syllogism: Somebody will come; So-and-so is somebody; So-and-so comes. Accuracy itself!

Bill was away, it appeared, busy on his trap line, but was expected back that afternoon.

The postmaster's trap line, so Mollie learned, was about thirty-five miles long, "and was a triangle shaped like an egg, with Bill's trapping cabin at the big end, and the post-office at the apex," so Mrs. Laflamme explained, describing a geometrical figure with her finger which would have puzzled a mathematician to interpret, but which Mollie understood perfectly, because she explained it to herself as a combination egg-shaped triangle without any angles or curves.

When making the rounds of his trap line, Bill would be away from home for the best part of two days, spending the night at his trapping cabin, where he stored the pelts picked up on the first leg of his journey so that he might make better time on the morrow. Towards the end of the season he would make a trip to the cabin with a pack-horse and bring down his spoils. Some years Bill would make five or six hundred dollars by his trapping; once his earnings had gone as high as fifteen hundred dollars, but that was exceptional. On an average his five months' work brought him a little less than a thousand dollars, which was considerably more than his earnings as mail stage driver and his salary of thirteen-and-a-half cents a day as postmaster of Khakala.

MRS. LAFLAMME was inordinately proud of her Bill, and she extolled his virtues while the two women enjoyed the dinner she had prepared on Mollie's arrival. With a child's naivete, she congratulated herself on having become Mrs. Laflamme, instead of that honor having fallen to her sister, h'Emma, as her father had intended, until after the great fight with her persistent suitor. The two men, so she informed her guest, had ever since been the best of friends; in fact, Mr. Floyd had recently borrowed one hundred dollars from his son-in-law. Friendship, so Mrs. Laflamme allowed it to be understood, could soar no higher, for her father had always been very particular in his borrowings. Which was true, but largely because other persons had been very particular in their loanings, though this phase had never occurred to his daughter.

As post-mistress of Khakala, Mrs. Laflamme knew all the gossip of the district, gossip which would have seemed infinitively trivial to Mollie Aiken a short year ago, but which now assumed proportions of due importance. For news, after all, is largely a matter of geography. The abdication of Queen Liliuokalani failed to interest the peasants of Irkutsk who were just then much exercised over an increase in the price of vodka. And neither of these two events stirred the fisherfolk of St. Malo, because a recent scandal in the Douane occupied their minds to the exclusion of everything else.

So Mollie found herself listening with real interest to the news that old Marchefson, of Soda Creek, had broken out after having stayed sober for seven years, and was trying his hardest to make up for lost time; that Leeds, forty-seven miles north, would certainly be short of hay; that Jessie Furlong was having a one-and-thirty-dollar saddle built to order in Spokane; that there would be a dance at Old Man Fraser's next week, and that Mrs. Laflamme was most emphatically not going, after what Pete Fraser had done with Jack.

Whatever Pete Fraser had done with Jack, it certainly was something which had been, and still was, highly displeasing to the post-mistress, for a brief spell she forgot that she was a lady. She said so herself, and after listening to her outburst, Mollie had not the courage to contradict her. But Mollie's curiosity was aroused, for though the utter depravity of the unspeakable Pete Fraser had been laid bare, it had not been made clear in what way he had sinned. So Mollie inquired.

"You mean to say you haven't heard what Pete Fraser did to Jack?" asked Mrs. Laflamme in amazement.

"And who is Jack?" persisted Mrs. Hazelton, making her question a confession of ignorance.

"Was, not is," answered the post-mistress, setting her visitor right on the question of tense as if that explained the whole story.

Instinctively Mollie divined a tragedy, though whether to man or beast or bird was still shrouded in mystery. So she diplomatically hinted that perhaps if Mrs. Laflamme first explained who Jack was, then the connection between Jack and Pete Fraser, and finally what had happened to Jack, she would most certainly sympathize with her hostess.

The postmistress needed no encouragement; only guidance. She was only too willing to relate the tale of Pete Fraser's perfidy, which has since passed into the history of the northern country.

"You remember my dog, Jack? No? Didn't you ever see him—a big Newfoundland dog, with long, thick curly hair? When we got married I brought him along here because Paw had another dog, and I hadn't much else to bring, and a bride's always got to bring her husband a trousseau. You know what that French word means just as well as I do. Well, Jack was my trousseau, but he had too much appetite, and he didn't seem able to get used to so many people coming here. Hardly anybody came to Paw's place, you know, as we lived quite a piece off the road. So after a while Jack got to be kind of a nuisance, and I could see that after we'd been married a little longer Bill would make a fuss and we'd have to get rid of him.

"One day, about a month ago, Pete Fraser comes along for their mail, and for a wonder Jack is quite friendly towards him. He's seen Pete quite a few times before, which is maybe why—he's got no more sense than that. I noticed Pete's patting and fondling Jack, kind of running his fingers through his long hair and bunching it in his fist, and it strikes me he's taken quite a fancy to the dog. And I'm right too, for pretty soon Pete says, just like that: 'I reckon you find two dogs—one too many sometimes, eh, Alice?' and I said he certainly had a hankering for food several times a day. And then Pete says he figures out he could find some use for Jack, if I felt like giving him away, and I said I guessed it would be all right, so long as he had a good home because I'd had him from the time he was a puppy, and Pete said 'Sure,' and would I lend him a piece of rope to lead him by. And Jack went along with Pete, as quiet as you like, and seeming not a bit sorry to leave me. And yet they'll tell you dogs have in-tell-i-gence!"

Mrs. Laflamme paused as if the tale were ended. So Mollie prompted her gently.

"Yes, Pete Fraser took the dog away, and then?"

"And then," said Mrs. Laflamme with a dramatic gesture, "the next time I see Pete he's wearing Jack!" "He's what?" inquired Mollie in amazement.

"He's wearing Jack, the cheap four-flushing sneak! He just took Jack home, shot him, stripped off the hide, and made a pair of woolly chaps out of his long black curly coat. I went mad clean through when I saw those chaps, and what I didn't tell Pete Fraser wasn't worth while."

Why is this sheep crying? Because he feels cold without his "CEETEE" underclothing.

"CEETEE"
UNDERCLOTHING
ALL PURE WOOL - GUARANTEED UNSHRINKABLE
MEANS ECONOMY PLUS COMFORT

made from only the very finest Australian Merino sheep's wool, combed and scoured to absolute purity and cleanliness, and "knit-to-fit" the form and give lasting comfort.

It Pays to Buy the Best

"CEETEE," the pure wool underclothing that will not shrink, may cost more than other makes, but it wears, looks, feels and satisfies beyond the powers of other makes.

"CEETEE" underclothing is knit on special machines, and knit full-fashioned to fit the body.

"CEETEE" has no seams, all joins being knitted together, not sewn as in ordinary underwear.

"CEETEE" will give you more genuine comfort than anything you have ever worn. There is nothing to equal it for warmth, comfort and long life.

"CEETEE" wears wonderfully well and is soft as down.

"CEETEE" will save money for you as an underwear investment.

UNSHRINKABLE
Turnbull's
NATURAL WOOL

Turnbull's

the best moderately-priced underwear for ladies, men and children in ribbed and plain styles. It is made under the same skilled supervision as the famous "CEETEE" underclothing. The raw materials used are of the best and the finished garments as perfect as it is possible to make them.

REMEMBER—If you can't buy "CEETEE" be sure to buy "TURNBULL'S"

For sixty years, the C. Turnbull Company of Galt, Limited, has been making superior underclothing for men, women and children. The Turnbull Trade Marks are known and looked for by thrifty people who consider quality and long wear, rather than the initial purchase price.

Sold by the best dealers. Worn by the best people.

MANUFACTURED ONLY BY

Turnbull's of Galt

PERFECT
Turnbull's
FITTING

For the Mother—

The best food to keep a mother in physical condition to properly nurse her baby, is

Robinson's "Patent" Groats

—the reliable milk producing food.

A mother should also drink barley water made from which acts on the kidneys and regulates the system, promoting health and vitality.

Robinson's "Patent" Barley

These foods have been in use for over a hundred years, and have always given perfect satisfaction.

Write for MY BOOK which gives special advice to mothers

MAGOR, SON & CO., LIMITED
Canadian Agents Montreal, Toronto

Bill, completing his thirty-five mile trap line jaunt, was plainly tired. And he had every reason to be, for his shoulders bent under the weight of a forty-pound beaver, frozen stiff and unwieldy to pack. The beaver had been dead in the trap two days before Bill got to it, and the carcass would have to thaw out before the pelt could be removed, a delicate task on the success of which the future value of the skin would largely depend.

Over the beaver Bill had slung three coyote hides, the lower ends tied to his belt to prevent flapping as he walked. Two of these animals Bill had found alive in his traps, and the third he had brought down with a lucky long distance shot, for the wild dog is one of the most difficult animals to stop with a bullet. Almost before the life was out of the animals, Bill had them skinned and was on his way.

From the trapper's belt dangled half a dozen musk rats, big water fellows, worth this year, twenty-five cents a piece! Sometimes Bill would only get rats on his trap line, and the financial returns for the two days' arduous work would be light. On other occasions he would be luckier. Sometimes a bear or a lynx would fall to his lot, but in the main it was rats and coyotes and beavers. This day's harvest would bring him nearly twenty-five dollars, for the beaver was worth six or seven dollars while the coyote pelts would sell for two to three dollars, and in addition a benevolent government would hand the trapper a bounty of three dollars for each coyote killed. Towards the end of the trapping season Bill would have Old Man Fraser bring his punch and seal of office, when calling for his mail, and the Justice of the Peace would methodically count up the pelts, punch a small hole in each ear to guard against any attempt to collect the bounty twice or more on each skin, and finally give Bill an official declaration that he was entitled to the government bounty as duly set forth in the statutes. After which, Bill would religiously ask the Justice of the Peace how much he owed him, and the Justice of the Peace would just as religiously answer that he didn't owe him anything at all. It was the etiquette of the country that Bill should suggest payment of the prescribed fee of fifty cents, and it was etiquette for Old Man Fraser to waive this trifle. Only strangers ever fee a Justice of the Peace in the northern country. Among friends the matter of payment is just hinted at, and just as carelessly dismissed.

Bill hung his catch high up against the wall of the cabin, well out of the reach of Peep or other hungry dogs who would consider frozen beaver a dainty morsel and would naturally worry through the hide to reach the meat. Later in the day Bill would skin the animal but just now he was intent on dinner. He had not eaten since early morning.

Mrs. Laframboise, with the wisdom that comes with experience had busied herself preparing her man's meal; the moment she saw him approach, and by the time Bill opened the door, the savory smell of fried omelette greeted his nostrils. To Bill, omelets now boiled or fried represented the sum and substance of things good to eat. It was an intellectual feat, though, from time to time his feelings, the burning seats and carefully situated by each successive generation of Quebec habitants ancestors.

Bill greeted Mollie with genuine pleasure. Though he saw her but seldom, he had a great sympathy for the city girl who had so courageously defied to throw in her lot with these other pioneers on the frontier of civilization. Having tramped over considerable territory before settling down at Khakala, Laflamme realized, as well as Hazdler and Mrs. Harris, just how badly dull life must seem at times for the former Vancouver stenographer.

"It wears longer"

Made in Combinations and Two-piece suits, in full length, knee and elbow length, and sleeveless. Stanfield's Adjustable Combinations and Sleepers for growing children. (Patented).

For sample book showing weights and textures, write

Stanfield's Limited
Truro, N. S. 35

"Stands Strenuous Wear"

"Vaseline" Carbolated Petroleum Jelly put on a cut, burn or insect bite will prevent infection and stop the hurt right away.

Vaseline
Trade Mark
CARBOLATED
PETROLEUM JELLY

For sale at all drug and department stores.

Release substitutes.

CHESEBROUGH MFG. COMPANY
Consolidated
1880 Chabot Avenue Montreal

For Cuts and Burns

Vaseline
CARBOLATED

LUX

for Voiles, Linens, Batistes, Cottons

Do not think of LUX as a cleanser for only georgettes, chiffons, tricolettes, crepe-de-chines. The bubbly LUX lather means double life to anything you can wash — anything that pure water will not harm. Chiffon or linen, it's all the same — use LUX.

LUX free booklet, "The Care of Dainty Clothes" sent on request.

Lever
Brothers
Limited,
Toronto

209

Mend Your Pots and Pans

VOL-PEEK Mends Cooking utensils.
Graniteware, Aluminum, Enamel-ware, Tin, Copper, Brass, Iron, etc.
Easy to use, no tools required. Ready for use in 2 minutes. Saves a pot for ½¢ a cent. 25 cents at your Dealer, or postpaid by Vol-Peek Co., Box 2024,
Montreal, Can. Agents Wanted.

The first effusive greetings over, Bill settled down to enjoy his dinner while Mollie looked on and marvelled at the quantity of food he could consume, used though she was by this time to the appetites that a cold climate engenders. For Bill could eat! He had his preferences, first among which came onions, but he was far from being an epicure. No man who has lived for years mostly on beans and sourdough bread, with fried bacon for a change once in a while, is really particular as to what he eats.

"So long's it's food 's all right wid me," Mr. Laflamme had once explained to a host who was regretting the lack of variety in his larder.

Quantity, not quality, was what the little postmaster demanded, and quantity he got. Mollie, who best understood relative values when translated in terms of dollars and cents, estimated that, bought in a Cordova Street restaurant in Vancouver—the place Bill would have patronized had he happened to be in the city just then,—the food and drink Laflamme was consuming would have cost at least one dollar. In such a place, where standard meals were thirty-five cents, Bill would have been considered a profitable customer indeed.

Before the first keen edge had been taken off his appetite, Bill had consumed five rashers of bacon, three large helpings of baked beans, five potatoes, ten ounces of bread, seven fried onions and four cups of coffee. Then, and only then, he felt that he could devote part of his attention to carrying on a conversation with his visitor, but not to the exclusion of the more important business of eating.

"You t'ink I got purty good appetite, eh?" queried Bill, conscious that his valor as a trencherman was making an impression on Mrs. Hazelton. "Well, you try it, walkin' a trap line forty-five mile long trou' de snow and bring back a pack lak' I got dere, and see if you don' eat lak' a coyote too!"

Mollie, never having seen a coyote gorge itself after starving for weeks, did not seize the full importance of the allusion, but she knew that Bill did not mean his remarks to be uncomplimentary, so she merely said that no doubt she also would be ravenously hungry after such a jaunt.

"You got no idea how moothch it cost to feed me well, Mrs. Hazelton," commented Bill, "and more too now since I got Alice an' dere's two of us. When a postmaster's got a wife he's got to have more, an' dat's what I tell de postmaster-general at Ottawa las' week."

Mollie did not quite grasp what the postmaster-general had been told. On the surface it would appear that he had been informed that his subordinate at Khakala must have either more wives or more food, which, in either case, was an absurdity. The P.M.G. does not concern himself with such trifles.

"I guess he got de letter by now," continued Bill, "an' I bet he's losing sleep over it, too, because I mak' it pretty strong dat I'm en-title to more money now dat I'm married and got a wife to support me. Do you suppose he call a meetin' of de cabinet right away to discuss de demands of Guillaume Laflamme, postmaster at Khakala, B.C., eh?"

Bill asked the question in all seriousness. Mollie did not smile, though she did conjure up a mental picture of a departmental clerk reading, filing and forgetting Bill's application for an increase in salary, after having ascertained from the records that last year's revenue from Khakala did not warrant consideration of the demand. Red tape never considered the culmination of romance as justification for more pay. Facts, records, statistics—these things count with officialdom, not wives, or children, or appetite.

"I write heem, heemself," resumed Mr. Laflamme as he liberally sprinkled his ninth onion with pepper and caught a thick slice of bread absorb the gravy from his plate. "I don' write jus' to de department on an important business lak' dat. An' I write heem too lak' a first class man." Bill nodded his head vigorously to intimate that there was no question about that at any rate.

"Yes, like a first class man, of course?" commented Mollie, somehow managing to introduce a note of interrogation in a tone of approbation.

Bill answered the unspoken query. "I write heem," he explained, "jus' lak' all de official notices I nail on de barn, after de beeg cottonwood tree is full up, in French and English. An' I use all de beeg words in it too, so he can see I'm firs' class postmaster, all right. An' I mak' it read lak' a proclamation too, jus' for mak' it soun' real beeg, lak' dis:

"I, Guillaume Laflamme, homesteader, trapper, mail contractor, and by the grace of God, postmaster at Khakala— Why, w'at's de mattaire, Mis' Hazelton?"

For Mollie, seized with a sudden and violent fit of coughing, was forced to rush outside for relief.

CHAPTER TWENTY. THE GLORY OF THE HEAVENS.

MOLLIE left the Khakala post office in good time to "make" the Frushing ranch for supper, intending to stay there a couple of hours and then travel home by moonlight. She was ambling along the trail at Plod's favorite gait when that intelligent animal called her attention to a black object on the edge of a lake about a quarter of a mile away. Mollie could not make out what it was, but Plod's stiffened ears and distended nostrils convinced her that it was some animal that had fallen through the ice.

The lake formed the saucer of a straggling swamp meadow which the trail skirted. Tracks in the snow showed that some creature had been feeding on the long dry grass that was partly uncovered in places. Evidently the animal had been there for a few days, probably lured away from some feeding bunch by the deceptive promise of spring held out by two days' bright sunshine and a warm Chinook wind. Unable to any longer satisfy its thirst by eating snow, it had evidently ventured to an air-hole in the lake for a drink, and fallen through.

Mollie made a careful reconnaissance, and discovered that the creature was a cow and alive though so weak that it had given up struggling to get out, which meant that it would be dead in a few hours.

In the parlance of the country, it was decidedly "up to" Mollie to rescue the freezing bovine. There was no time to seek help. Every minute counted.

Mollie had occasionally amused herself by throwing a lariat at the tame animals in the corral, and could easily get the rope around a cow's head—after many attempts. She had watched her husband rescue two mired steers on one occasion and knew exactly what she should do in this case. But knowledge is not always power, and theory frequently does not work out in practice. Mollie was not at all sure she could save the helpless creature, and she fully realized the risk involved but she did not hesitate. She forced Plod over the frozen lake, until the cayuse snorted his resentment and intimated that he considered the ice unsafe. Deterred to his superior judgment, Mollie dismounted, uncoiled her rope, carried for just such emergencies, and advanced to the rescue, only to be routed by a ferocious bellow from the imprisoned victim. Ingloriously Mollie fled to Plod for protection, but dared to return a moment later when she was convinced that the cow could not possibly extricate itself. She advanced to within ten feet of the gaping hole in the ice and, trembling and much afraid, whirled the lariat above her head and threw it. By a miracle, the noose fell neatly over the cow's head. Mollie drew it tight as she ran swiftly back to her horse. Jumping into the saddle, she wound the end of her rope around the horn and then spurred Plod to his best efforts, at the same time shouting and whooping to arouse the cow and bestir it to action. Plod tugged valiantly, the cow moaned—Mollie shuddered—there was a sound of crashing ice as the animal was hauled pulled and a flood poured out of the hole, then Plod went linsky forward, easily dragging the heavy body on the smooth surface and, it reached the top snow and the long grass well out of danger. The easiest part of the rescue was over.

Mollie had now to release the animal from the rope, always a hazardous and often a dangerous business, but it had to be done, otherwise the creature would wander into the woods trailing the lariat, only to be entangled in the brush and die of starvation and cold. Bored of all sense of gratitude, remembering only that a human being is responsible for the sufferings necessarily incurred in its rescue, a cow will nearly always try to attack and gore its rescuer. It would be almost certain

Save Your Back

If your Ford starts only after prolonged cranking these cool mornings, don't blame the car. Nine times out of ten it's the ignition. The annoyance is easy to remedy with the Columbia Hot Shot Dry Battery No. 1461.

A Single Dry Battery of Many Cellpower

built especially to provide quick-starting ignition current for Fords. With a Hot Shot she usually starts on the first compression of gas. Fits under the seat. Easy to attach. High power, long life, low cost.

There's a Hot Shot for every battery need at electrical, hardware, auto and general stores—garages—hardware, auto and electrical departments.

Canadian Made for Canadian Trade

CANADIAN NATIONAL CARBON CO., LIMITED, TORONTO
Fahnestock Spring Clip Binding Posts on Columbia Cell No. 6
No Extra Charge

Columbia Dry and Storage Batteries

Vinolia Lypsysl for the lips

Lypsysl is the most delightful, healing and soothing of emollients for parched, rough, cracked or pallid lips. "A touch gives relief."

There is nothing to compare with Lypsysl as an exquisite Toilet Preparation for keeping and preserving the lips in a healthy, rose-like condition.

Lypsysl is prepared in both Rose Red and White, in dainty little tins.

Lypsysl is the registered Trade Mark of the Vinolia Company, and when you ask for Lypsysl, by all means see that you get it.

VINOLIA COMPANY
LIMITED.
London, (Eng.)
Toronto

Tomorrow's Silverplate

WHEN plans are made for new homes, for gift giving and for additions to the family's silverplate service, all consider silverplate of finest quality—for nothing but the best in silver-plated ware is a good investment these days.

This suggestion of the best in silverplate is not new to those who own 1847 Rogers Bros. Silverplate. The idea is more than seventy years old, to be exact, for it is more than seventy years ago that this brand of silverplate first gained the public preference which it still holds.

If you would have silverplate that lasts long, that merits admiration, that is always a good investment, then choose the best known kind. But ask for it by full name—"1847 Rogers Bros." Then you can be sure you will get exactly what you want.

Louisa Pattern

MERIDEN BRITANNIA COMPANY, Ltd., Hamilton, Ont.

Made in Canada by Canadian Manufacturers under license of the Meriden Britannia Company.

1847 ROGERS BROS.

SILVERWARE

The Family Plate for Seventy Years

death to approach it on foot; safety is to be found on a horse's back, for a cow is always afraid of a horse, and will only attack it when goaded to frenzy.

Mollie knew all this, knew also the absolute necessity of swift action, before the cow recovered from its rough treatment. Leaving the cow securely "anchored" to Plod's saddle-horn, Mollie stumbled through the deep snow to the brush at the edge of the meadow, where she broke off a cotton-wood sapling, about eight feet long, and over half an inch thick at the foot. Breaking off the small branches at the top, she struggled back to Plod and again mounted. Then, coiling up her rope as she advanced, she guided the horse to the side of the prostrate cow and proceeded to remove the lariat.

Fortunately, the honda ("eye") of the lariat was on the upper side of the animal's neck, and Mollie was able to dig her stick underneath this at the second attempt and loosen the noose. The cow, irritated, tossed her head and glared ferociously at her tormenter. Mollie, almost forgetting to be frightened in the excitement, took advantage of the tossing to pay out rope enough to enable her to raise the honda within reach of her hand. Then she wheeled Plod to one side, and from a safe distance drew the rope away from the animal, coiled it up, and tied it on her saddle.

The problem now was to make the cow get up and walk or run, for to leave her lying down was certain death. Hazelton would have used a length of rope with vigor, but Mollie was not an adept with this inducement. She could not swing a rope so as to make it sting, so she fell back on her sapling.

Normally, Mollie Hazelton was a tender-hearted young woman, but she allowed no false notions of mercy to interfere with the serious business on hand. This was a case where sentiment meant death, where brutality gave the only chance for life. So, curiously enough, without thought of pity, Mollie, from her safe perch on Plod, belabored the prostrate cow mercilessly with her stick, whooping and shouting at the same time to frighten the creature into action. And eventually it succeeded. After a couple of abortive attempts, the cow finally got on her feet and made a sudden feint at Plod. Mollie screamed with terror, but Plod, remembering past cow fights, merely curled back his upper lip, bared his yellowed teeth, and snorted defiance. The cow retreated, and Mollie, her fright over, herded her on to the trail towards the Frushing ranch, and with the help of her stick and lusty voice, kept her going at a rapid gait. For speed meant warmth, and warmth meant safety from evil after-effects of immersion in icy waters—such as rheumatism, paralysis, or lumbago: Mollie was a little hazy on bovine ailments, but she had the correct theory regarding treatment and a strong right arm.

MOLLIE had lost nearly an hour in getting the cow out of the air hole, but she made good time for the rest of the journey to the Frushing ranch. The cow, naturally, kept on the trail—the going was easier than in the deep snow—and Mollie encouraged her with the stick. What with the cow trying to keep ahead of the stick, and Mollie trying to keep the stick within reach of the cow, a miniature drive was staged in real earnest.

Hallooing for assistance when she came within a short distance of the ranch buildings, Mollie saw Harrigan himself come out, throw open the corral gate, and stand on one side, armed with a pitchfork, to cajole the animal into going in the right direction. But the cow, scenting hay, needed no urging, and willingly entered the stockade to satisfy her hunger. Dismounting, Mollie untied the Harrigan mail bag from the back of her saddle, turned her horse over to Harrigan with an admonition not to unsaddle, as she would only stay for supper and not for the night, and then made her way to the house for a gossip with her old friend, Jo.

Though, for that part of the world, they were close neighbors, their houses being only fourteen miles apart, Mrs. Harrigan and Mrs. Hazelton frequently passed several weeks without seeing each other. There is always so much to be done on a stock ranch that mere visiting is postponed to a more convenient season—which seldom comes. It is only when there is some definite reason, such as a dance, that the settlers come together. "Calls," as understood in the more artificial environment of congested civilization, are unknown.

The two women had much to tell each other while Mrs. Harrigan busied herself in getting supper ready. Mollie, having just come fresh from that fount of all rural intelligence, the post office, naturally supplied most of the news for the conversation; the other lady supplied the comment that made things clear to Mollie. Out of that infinite wisdom which comes to a woman who has lived several years in a quasi-wilderness, where the settlers are few and far between, Mrs. Harrigan could reason from cause to effect, or from effect to cause, with a facility that always amazed those who had not her store of local lore. That the coming dance would be held at Old Man Fraser's, for instance, could only mean that the floor had not yet been put in in that new house on Moore's pre-emption; the non-existence of the floor itself, in some peculiar way, was made to bear convincing testimony that Ollie Olsen, the Swede, had gone out for the winter and that the half-breed Samson must be doing poorly on his trap line.

"But how," exclaimed Mollie, "can you tell that this half-breed is not doing well on his trap line, just by knowing that they're going to hold a dance at Old Man Fraser's?"

"I'll put it in reverse gear for you," answered Mrs. Harrigan, "and you'll see how easy it is to be an amateur Sherlock Holmes. The half-breed isn't doing well with his trap line because he covers the same part of the country as Ollie Olsen, and the Swede has been having such poor luck that he's gone out. If he hadn't, he was to have put in the floor in Moore's cabin, because Moore is a punk axeman, and Olsen owes him several days work. Had the floor been in the cabin, the dance would have been held there, because there's lots more room than at Old Man Fraser's, and the supper could be served in Moore's old shack only half a mile away. An empty house is ever so much better for a dance so that we never miss a chance to rub the floorwax into the newly hewn logs. . . . Give Harrigan a shout, will you, my dear."

So Mollie opened the kitchen door and lifted her voice in a long drawn out "O-o-o-h Har-r-r-r-r-rigan. . . . Supper."

Harrigan, "Slats," and the other hired man leisurely made their appearance at the house from the barns, where they had been feeding the horses after their day's work. The two hired men were boisterously glad to see Mrs. Hazelton, and almost overwhelmed her with questions while making lavish use of soap and water at the famous running tap, in a hopeless effort to remove most of the grime from their hands. "Slats" playfully reproached the visitor for not coming oftener, and accused her of being afraid of a jealous husband, which Mollie laughingly denied.

So, with chaff and banter, the two women and the three men sat down, and enjoyed an excellent meal, a large roast of beef, with potatoes and parsnips as vegetables.

Harrigan, who was just as uncurious as ever, did not ask Mollie any questions about the cow she had driven into his corral. He did not consider that she had done anything unusual in rescuing the animal and flogging it to safety. But "Slats" was cast in a different mould.

"Where'd you pick up our old cow, Mrs. Hayes?" he wanted to know.

"Oh, is it one of yours? I didn't know. I got her out of a hole in the lake about five miles back from here."

"Did you drug her out yourself, alone?" inquired "Slats."

"Drug?" puzzled Mollie. "Oh, dragged! Oh, yes, certainly."

"Believe me, Jo, we'll make a rancher of your little city friend yet. I bet she never had such fun all the time she was writing letters for real estate. This is the life, all right, all right, eh, Mollie. . . . Mrs. Hayes?"

Mrs. Hazelton agreed. But it came upon her as somewhat of a surprise that she had wandered so far from city life that a hired man who was almost a stranger had been on the verge of calling her by her Christian name. . . . and that this would not have been noticed by anyone at the supper table. She called him "Slats," but that was partly because she did not know any other name.

After supper, the two women washed the dishes while the men went out to attend to their chores.

"Put the plates in that corner, my dear," counselled Mrs. Harrigan. "And now I'm going to tell you a big piece

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 72.)

For the Table

Period Designs in Sterling Silver and "Prince's Plate" —Beautiful China and Rich Cut Glass

THE dining room is the heart of the home. It is the meeting place of the family and those whom there is pleasure in entertaining. To the hospitality of the host and the charm of the hostess, there should be the added attractiveness of beautiful Silver, exquisite China and rich Cut Glass.

Mappin & Webb Silver to-day carries the prestige of one hundred and twenty-three years of craftsmanship. It includes the choicest examples of the silversmiths' art in "period" designs in Sterling Silver embracing Silver Services in cabinets, complete to the smallest detail—as well as sets which may be acquired dozen by dozen and piece by piece.

Then, there is "Prince's Plate," the silverware second only to Mappin & Webb Sterling Silver. For purity of design, beauty of finish, durability and lasting pleasure, "Prince's Plate" has proved its quality for more than a century—as you would expect of silver plate coming from the greatest manufacturing silversmiths in the British Empire.

There is China, too, from such world-famous potteries as Cauldon, Crown Derby and Royal Doulton, and, of course, the rare and exquisite patterns from Limoges in France.

Cut Glass is another table appointment seen at its best in the glittering assortment assembled at Mappin & Webb's.

Every article in our catalogue carries the Mappin & Webb guarantee of quality and you have the privilege of returning any purchase that does not meet with your approval. Buying by mail is thoroughly safe and satisfactory at Mappin & Webb's.

If you have not received a copy of the Mappin & Webb catalogue, send us your name and address at once. It will come postpaid.

Mappin & Webb

(CANADA) LIMITED

353 St. Catherine Street West, Montreal

LONDON PARIS ROME LAUSANNE SAO PAULO RIO DE JANEIRO BUENOS AIRES JOHANNESBURG

50

Corns

Lift Right Off!
No Pain at All

Apply a few drops of "Freezone" upon that bothersome corn, instantly it stops hurting; then shortly you lift that sore, touchy corn right off, root and all, without the slightest pain or soreness.

End Any Corn—Anywhere!

Tiny bottles of "FREEZONE" cost but few cents—drug stores

The Comfort and Privacy of a Sanitary Indoor Toilet

FOR

$130

BRING to your home the same standard of toilet comfort, sanitation, privacy and refinement as the city home enjoys.

Install a Kaustine Toilet and end discomfort, disagreeableness and disease danger.

This modern, convenient, sanitary indoor toilet system needs no water—no sewer connections. Simply chemical sterilization combined with scientific ventilation.

Easily installed by yourself—wherever you want it. No expert help is needed. Requires little attention in use.

Nothing will mean more to the health and comfort of your family than the Kaustine Toilet. Measured by the risk in health and doctor's bill you now run, the cost is amazingly small.

KAUSTINE CO., LIMITED

24 Eastern Avenue, Toronto

Also Makers of Kaustine Septic Tanks

KAUSTINE WATERLESS TOILET

Write NOW for literature on the Kaustine system and particulars of our long-term guarantee.

BIAS FILLED CORSETS

*The Extreme of Comfort
The Perfection of Style*

ONCE you have known the true comfort of a BIAS FILLED CORSET, you will never revert to the binding, suffocating kind.

You cannot discard your corset altogether, without endangering your health and ruining your figure.

But you can adopt a corset that will preserve your health and improve your figure without causing the slightest discomfort.

BIAS FILLED CORSETS afford real relief from the pressure and "digging" of the ordinary corset.

Illustration shows Style 1129 for full figures.

Write us NOW for the name and address of our representative in your vicinity. Useful hints on fitting and self-measurement Free upon request.

BIAS CORSETS
LIMITED
41 ERITTAIN ST
TORONTO

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 70.)

of news that I think you won't like overmuch. It's just about decided that the Harrigan-Frushing outfit is going to pull out of here and go into the Chilcotin country."

"Pull out of here?" ejaculated Mollie in amazement.

"That's what we're figuring on," assented her hostess.

"And go into the Chilcotin?" continued Mollie, as if going into another section of the cattle country was an even greater surprise than "pulling out" of the Quesnel Lake district.

"Yes," explained Mrs. Harrigan, "Cory wants to get into the business in a bigger way, and as we're in shape to buy out the Crescent and Cross ranch, it's almost certain we'll do it. The price is right enough, and Harrigan is going out in a few days to look over the cattle. If they stack up as the Crescent and Cross people say they do, and they can run in fourteen hundred head, we'll move in the spring. . . . It's too bad, my dear, but in this world it seems we no sooner get decently acquainted than something happens to put distance between the parties, and from then on friendship is slowly strangled by correspondence."

As Mollie made a gesture of protest at this heresy, Mrs. Harrigan continued:

"Yes, I know what you're going to say. The sentiments, at least, if not the words. But if you stop and think for a moment, you will realize that the majority of friendships fail to survive more than a couple of letters. And I'm honest enough to admit that we won't be any different from most people. But I'll ride over and see you occasionally from the Crescent and Cross. I don't think it's much over ninety miles from here. And you can ride back with me and stay a month or so."

The prospect of a ninety-mile ride did not make much of an appeal to Mollie, but she showed no trace of this in her eager declaration that such a ride would be "just jolly." But this practical young woman did not allow her mind to dwell unduly on future visits; she wanted to know what was to become of the present Harrigan-Frushing ranch and stock.

"I guess we'll sell or rent the place," explained Mrs. Harrigan, "and we'll shoot everything we can into the beef drive next fall. As we have it mapped out now, we'd sell the young stock—it's no use taking Aberdeen-Angus cattle into the Crescent and Cross bunch. They're all white faces—Herefords, you know, and Harrigan always believed in sticking to one breed."

"It's possible," remarked Mollie, thoughtfully, "that you'll find it easier to sell the stock than the ranch."

"You've said something, girl," agreed Mrs. Harrigan. "A ranch is the easiest thing in the world to buy, and the hardest thing to sell."

"It's next to impossible to sell at all except on long terms, these days," continued Mollie, almost enthusiastically. "The buyer would need his ready cash to put into cattle, but of course the land would always be good security for itself. It isn't like speculative property that is sold at inflated prices, when the owner counts half the first payment profit, and all the rest velvet. A ranch is only worth what it will produce, but speculative property is worth what it will sell for. As a realizable asset, an improved farm or ranch is about the poorest going, because it deteriorates so rapidly. I've heard the real estate agents say so hundreds of times in Vancouver."

"Your boys didn't handle many farms, then?" questioned Mrs. Harrigan.

"No," answered Mollie. "We never had any satisfaction selling farms. If the buyer happened to lose on his first crop, he came back and raised a fuss, and if he happened to be pleased, we never had a chance to sell that property again. But speculative property is always changing hands, and even that doesn't amount to much on. . . . And as for the land, to sell the farm, it's a real estate agent's job."

"You're a good little lady," continued Mrs. Harrigan, who has an extra thing on her mind. "I must say," commented Mrs. Harrigan. "I suppose you know Harrigan well enough to understand that all the reasonable folk in the world would not make him an honest one, but from the price he decides is fair. If all men were

Ever Make Banana Whip?

1 envelope COX'S GELATINE, 1/2 cup (1 gill) cold water, 2 cups (1 pint) hot milk, 3 ripe bananas sieved, 1 lemon, 1 cup (1/2 lb.) sugar, 1/2 teaspoonful red or yellow color.

Mix Gelatine and water together, add milk, and when dissolved add bananas, strained lemon juice, sugar, and color. Beat until the mixture begins to stiffen, pour it into a serving dish, set in a cool place for a few hours and serve with milk or cream.

This is just one of the delicious rich desserts that can be made with Cox's Gelatine. Pure, unsweetened, and unflavored, Cox's Gelatine is the secret of many creamy puddings, appetizing savories, and dainty salads.

Keep a box or two always on the pantry shelf. You will find it convenient in making delicious desserts and different salads.

Our new book is brimful of recipes for making dainty and tempting desserts, salads, soups, etc. We shall be very glad to send you a free copy.

Write for Cox's Gelatine Recipes.

COX'S
Instant Powdered
GELATINE

J. & G. COX, Limited
Dept. G P. O. Box 3009
MONTREAL

PALL MALL Famous Cigarettes

Cork Tips and Plain Ends
1/3 "London 30¢ here

at the Tea Hour

Give Cuticura the Care Of Your Skin

And watch that troublesome eruption disappear. Bathe with Cuticura Soap, dry and apply Cuticura Ointment. For eczemas, rashes, itchings, etc., they are wonderful. Nothing so insures a clear skin and good hair as making Cuticura your every-day toilet preparations.

Soap 25c, Ointment 25 and 50c. Sold throughout the Dominion, Canadian Depot: Lyman, Limited, St. Paul St., Montreal. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

like him, all your real estate sharks would starve to death in three months. . . . Now we'll go into the parlor and have a little music for an hour or so before you go. The moon will be up about half-past eight, and you won't start till then."

How well Mollie remembered that parlor, where she and Bessie had spent their first evening in the Quesnel Lake country. The cosy little room looked just the same; nothing was changed. There was the same air of refinement and taste that betokened the cultured mistress. Magazines and books and sheets of music were scattered around in orderly disorder. There was the violin in its open case, the same pictures and photographs on the wall.

ON that first night, Mollie had thought this little parlor a very ordinary room, and had mentally compared it with other and more luxurious rooms in which she had been an occasional guest. Only a few short months ago, Mollie had taken everything in that room as a matter of course; since then she had learned that this was a veritable royal chamber in that vast country. There was no other piano nearer than Soda Creek, and what few pictures she had seen had been torn from American magazines and fastened to bare log walls with horse-shoe nails. Her own home, though cozy, lacked the little luxuries that make all the difference in a woman's life. She would get these, and many others, in the fall, after the beef drive, when they would have a plentiful supply of cash on hand.

Mollie had not been in the cattle country long enough to know that there are many prior claims on the beef drive money, and that luxuries must of necessity give place to such prosaic things as rock salt, mower sickles, coal oil, beans, fencing wire, sleigh runners, harness, and a miscellany of articles which, however useful they may be, would in no way add to the appearance or atmosphere of a parlor. Later on, when Mollie would discover these things, she would be philosophical enough to console herself with the reflection that she didn't really want the luxuries because she had no parlor in her two-room shack. She would wait for the better days to come, when the "new house" that is the desideratum of all ranch women, would be built and occupied.

While Mrs. Harrigan played the piano, Mrs. Hazelton sang old familiar songs. The entertainment might not have satisfied a musical critic, but the two women derived as much enjoyment from their playing and singing as if the pianist and singer were always in perfect harmony, for pleasure is in no way dependent on technique, otherwise this would be a most miserable world to live and die in.

Harrigan and the two hired men had not returned to the house after finishing their chores, rightly divining that the women would feel quite at home without their company. Master and men had repaired to the bunk-house and were enjoying a quiet smoke when a powerful shout from Mrs. Harrigan advised them that their guest was about to leave, and that it was time to cinch the saddle on Plod and bring him round to the door.

Harrigan himself undertook this, not because of any recognition of his duty as host, but for the more primitive reason that he was the only one of the three men who had not removed his shoes for the sake of greater comfort.

"I've enjoyed this evening so much, I do hope you won't go to Chilcotin," exclaimed Mollie, as she said goodbye to Mrs. Harrigan.

"I'll certainly hate to go away from here," replied that lady.

"It all depends on the cattle," commented Harrigan, in his leisurely way. "If they're there, and they're right, there we go."

There was no sentiment in his make-up. Many years ago the then Frank Hayes had told him that he must have been born under the sign of Taurus, a joke which had been absolutely wasted on the phlegmatic rancher.

Shouting a cheery good-night to the two men standing in the bunk-house door, Mollie started on her fourteen-mile journey over the trail to the Billion Dollar ranch, Plod travelling at his greatest speed now that his head was turned toward his own barn, with the end of the day's journey in sight.

Though the mercury had dropped to below zero with the coming of night, Mollie did not mind the cold. The air was remarkably still in that northern latitude, there was scarcely a rustling among the pine boughs, and the silence was unbroken. It seemed to Mollie as if a great and solemn peace had descended on the earth.

Overhead, the moon was at its full. Its subdued light reflected in the crystalline snow, made night almost as clear as day. A few white clouds scudded across the heavens, suggestive of still more intense cold.

Plod needed no guidance on this trail. He had travelled it many times, and as he ambled along Mollie occupied herself with pondering over the information Mrs. Harrigan had given her. Because of her observations while a stenographer in various land agencies, Mollie understood the modern way of dealing with Dame Fortune when she knocked at one's door. She had never seen any one wax rich by closely following Poor Richard's cheese-paring maxims, but she had seen many a bold speculator rapidly force his way to the front because he did not permit caution to interfere with opportunity.

Mollie was so intent on a serious problem that for a time she failed to notice anything unusual in the heavens. It was only after the electric flashes in the vast clear space of which the moon was the centre had been darting hither and thither for a couple of minutes that she noticed anything unusual. Mollie had seen the Northern Lights on two or three occasions, but this was a different phenomenon—one rarely seen south of the Arctic circle.

Even as Mollie looked up, a spectacular change came with startling suddenness. Almost in a flash the queen of the heavens was surrounded by circles of color, the innermost possibly six times the circumference of the moon, and the largest ring perhaps a hundred times.

The color zones were six in number, the smallest being a sea-green that occasionally slowly dulled into a greenish-slate, only to flash back to the brighter hue in a moment. The second ring was purple, a rich dark purple that suggested a warmth strangely out of keeping with the atmosphere. Purple it remained throughout the display, at times fainter, sometimes bolder, but always true to the one glorious color. The third circle was bright orange, and sometimes blood-red, the colors standing out boldly between the rings of purple and green, for the three larger circles were the same colors as the smaller, and alternated in the same manner. The outer sweep, however, differed from its smaller fellow in that it was blood-red when the other was orange, and orange when the other became blood-red.

Unconsciously, Mollie had reined on her horse when the coronal colorization first burst into view, and she sat there, her gaze fixed on the marvellous spectacle, for fully fifteen minutes before she realized that it had become bitterly cold. Answering the touch of her heels, Plod ambled on. But his rider scarcely removed her eyes from the marvellous spectacle until the colors slowly commenced to dim fully half an hour after their first burst of glory. And when, half an hour later, the ethereal display again broke out in sublime beauty, Mollie once more stayed her horse and reverently contemplated the melting waves of color until they gradually faded, as if retreating to realms far beyond human ken, and became merged into the invisible glories of the heavens.

Hazelton was waiting at the corral gate when Mollie rode up.

"Did you see that beautiful picture, Billie?" she asked, indicating the heavens with a sweep of her hand. "Oh, it was wonderful. Did you ever see anything like it before, up here?"

"Never," answered Hazelton, "and I would not have missed it for anything. You know, Mollie, I haven't been in a church for years and years, but that has given me a religious thrill far transcending any effect that could be produced on me by the most powerful sermon. It was sublime."

"Do you know, Billie," smiled Mollie, "back there on the trail, under that flood of purple and gold, I felt just like a very little girl in an old, old church? Not frightened, you know, but just awe-struck."

"I know," agreed her husband, "when I looked up into the sky a little while back, I bared my head, and I thought of those ancient cathedrals I have visited in the old lands. But mostly I thought of the Sainte Chapelle, in Paris. This might have been its wonderful roof, magnified millions of times."

It Greet's Millions Every Morning—Bubbled Wheat

Do you realize how children now revel in Puffed Grains, which a few years ago were unknown?

Millions now enjoy them, morning, noon and night. And think what a change they've wrought.

Now they eat whole wheat as never before, because it comes as bubbles, airy, crisp and toasted, eight times normal size.

They mix Puffed Rice with their fruits. They use it in candy making or as garnish on ice cream. They douse it with melted butter for any hungry-hour delight.

But they are foods—not tidbits

The flimsy texture and the nut-like taste make Puffed Grains seem confections. Let them seem so, for foods should be enticing.

But Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice, remember, are simply whole grains exploded. They are made by Prof. Anderson's process. Every food cell is blasted for easy, complete digestion.

They supply whole-grain nutrition in the best forms known. Let them supplant the lesser grain foods in every way you can.

Puffed Wheat

Puffed Rice

Whole grains

Steam exploded

Puffed to 8 times normal size

Add Cream and Sugar

and you have the premier breakfast dainty. Never were cereals made so delightful in texture or in taste.

The supper way

For luncheon, supper or at bedtime float in bowls of milk. Then you have a supreme food fitted to easily digest.

The airy morsels, flaky, flavory and crisp, seem almost too good to eat. But think what an ideal dish you get from steam exploded whole wheat in a bowl of milk.

The Quaker Oats Company

Sole Makers

Peterborough, Canada

Saskatoon, Canada

W

The New Edison Phonograph

Violins

Guitars      Ukuleles

Mandolins

Brass & Reed Instruments

Phonograph Records & Player Piano Rolls

The R. S. WILLIAMS
S' SONS COMPANY LIMITED

145 Yonge Street Toronto.
"Canada's Home of Music"

Established 1849.

Hair Seems Twice as Abundant

After a "Danderine" massage, your hair takes on new life, lustre and wondrous beauty, appearing twice as heavy and plentiful. Each hair seems to fluff and thicken at once.

Danderine is a "Beauty-Tonic"

Don't let your hair stay colorless, plain, scraggly, neglected. You, too, want lots of long, strong hair, radiant with life, and glistening with beauty.

A 35-cent bottle of delightful "Danderine" freshens your scalp, checks dandruff and falling hair. This stimulating "beauty-tonic" gives to thin, dull, fading hair that youthful brightness and abundant thickness—All Drug Counters!

Dye it Right!

Don't Risk Your Material in a Poor Dye

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can diamond-dye a new, rich, fadeless color into worn, shabby dresses, blouses, stockings, sweaters, draperies, coverings, everything, whether wool, silk, linen, cotton or mixed goods.

Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect results are guaranteed even if you have never dyed before. Druggist has "Diamond Dyes" Color Card.

Diamond Dyes

16 Rich, Fadeless Colors.

Mollie sighed.

"And to think, Billie, to-night millions and millions of people looked up and saw only electric lights and advertising billboards. How little they know how much they lose!"

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE.

LOVE AND A BIG MORTGAGE.

INCLUDED in the mail which Mollie had brought back from the Khakala post office was a letter from her friend, Bessie Ingraham, of the Soda Creek Palace of Sweets. Bessie had much to say concerning Soda Creek, more concerning herself, and most of all concerning Tony.

This breezy young man, as Mrs. Hazelton had been informed in many previous letters, had been making himself "conspicuous" around the Palace of Sweets and at the house where Miss Ingraham lived. Indeed, Tony had been so decidedly in the foreground that the other Soda Creek young men had kept a respectful—in some cases a resentful—distance, even when Tony happened to be carrying fares up or down the Caribou road and was certain to be absent from Soda Creek for a couple of days.

There were gossips in the town and Tony was known to be handy with his fists, in spite of his good-humor and breeziness.

Recent letters had prepared Mollie for the good news that came in this last communication from her friend. Tony had proposed marriage, and had been reasonably dejected when told that the young lady was not quite sure in her own mind whether he was the right young man. Apparently, there was no question in Tony's mind as to whether Bessie was the right young lady, for he had gone so far as to make tentative arrangements to dispose of his cars, retire from the Caribou road run, and settle down definitely in one spot. His inclination rather ran to the hotel business, but in his day he had been so many things that he was quite ready to take up any line of activity that promised good returns for his investment and work.

Tony was a real hustler, never overlooked the main chance, and Bessie had no doubt that he would succeed in anything he undertook. She had not definitely accepted Tony, she told Mollie, and until she said "Yes," Tony refused to sell his cars and invest the proceeds in some business that did not take him a couple of hundred miles from home every day. As Bessie positively declined to say "Yes" until Tony settled down, the young couple seemed to be travelling in circles, but Mollie knew quite well how it would end. So did Bessie. So did Tony, except when he had a run of poor luck at cards, and was feeling pessimistic as a result.

Just now the breezy young chauffeur was driving the mail stage. The heavy winter snow made motoring on the Caribou an impossibility, so Tony had jacked up his Cadillacs and taken his seat behind six sharp-shod horses, handling the heavy lines with the same ease that he guided his steering wheel in summer. The old-fashioned coach that Tony drove glided swiftly on its broad runners, but there were times when the going was rough and the weather bitterly cold. Tony had had his hands frozen twice, and more than once he had had to administer first aid to a suffering passenger. The driver carried this first aid in a bottle, and administered it sparingly, partly because of the high cost and partly because of the certain reaction. Being amply protected from the extreme cold by adequate clothing, Tony never touched liquor when he was "up." Heavy underwear, woollen coat and pants, three pairs of socks, felt boots, leather chaps, a fur overcoat and fur cap, wolverine mukluk to protect the face, and three pairs of gloves, left little exposed to the cold. It was only when he had to remove his gloves to fix a recalcitrant strap or undo a tight knot that he was in danger of frostbites. And if he could do the job quick enough—say in less than a minute—he was almost certain to escape suffering.

All these things Mollie had learned from Bessie, not exactly in their proper sequence, but in the fragmentary way in which one acquires or imparts information through the medium of friendly letters. Bessie's letters were always long, and always more or less rambling, with odd facts about Tony cropping up in unexpected places. Mollie had sympathetic ability developed to an unusual degree, and in addition was a born match-maker. She

CLEAN—yes and disinfected too!

Everyone likes bed-linen blankets, etc., to be super clean—immaculately fresh. The best of all soaps to use is Lifebuoy—it actually disinfects as it cleanses

LIFEBUOY
HEALTH SOAP

The carbolie odour in Lifebuoy is a sign of its protective qualities—quickly vanishing after use

MADE IN CANADA

LIQUID VENEER

REGISTERED U. S. PATENT OFFICE

MAKES OLD THINGS NEW

WOODWORK PIANOS
FURNITURE

CARRIAGES AUTOMOBILES BOATCLER

APPLIED WITH A CLOTH

NOT A VARNISH
BUT A SURFACE FOOD

WONDERFUL FOR DUSTING

Jaeger

Conserve Your Strength

Every ounce of extra weight carried diminishes your power of endurance. Jaeger Goods, in proportion to their weight, are the warmest and most comfortable of all known garments.

A fully illustrated catalogue free on application.

For Sale at Jaeger Stores and Agencies throughout Canada.

DR. JAEGER Sanitary Woollen CO. LIMITED
Toronto Montreal Winnipeg
British "founded 1883".

Only $17. Ford Car

De Luxe Streamline Hood. Covers the Brass Radiator, places your old style car in the $1,000 class. Write for circular.

BURROWES MFG. CO.
611 King St. West, Toronto.

had conducted a matrimonial agency for profit, but she would willingly do the same thing again for pleasure. Though she had failed to accomplish her original purpose of making Bessie Ingraham the bride of Cornelius Harrigan, she nevertheless took all the credit for making Mrs. Frushing Mrs. Harrigan, for uniting Bill Laflamme and his l'il girl, for herself becoming Mrs. Billie Hazelton, and finally for bringing Bessie and Tony together.

"And not a single one has paid the regulation fee to the Cupid Exchange," Mollie would murmur ruefully. Though, in all seriousness, she no longer thought in the modest terms of dollar introduction fees. Just now she had far more ambitious financial schemes on her mind, all details of which were quite clear, except the rather important one of financing.

A knock at the door interrupted her musings.

Before she had time to cross her kitchen Cornelius Harrigan walked in and greeted the lady of the house in his usual methodical manner.

Evidently Harrigan had come prepared to stay for supper, for Mollie noticed he had taken off his chaps and spurs. In some respects marriage had changed Harrigan, in others it had left not the slightest impress on that lethargic personage. He now dressed after the manner of other men, and wore footwear of recent manufacture, not because of any conscious alteration in his mode of living, but for the more primitive reason that his wife had gathered all his old wearing apparel and reduced it to ashes as soon as the eastern mail order house could fill her order and forward a complete outfit for her spouse. Mrs. Harrigan did not hurry matters, she saw that everything was on hand before she disposed of the old truck that had for so many years adorned the person of the bachelor rancher. Cornelius made no protest. One morning he woke up to find a brand new outfit on the hook where he had left his old clothes the evening before, and without a word he donned his new raiment. He never referred to the substitution, and at times his wife was inclined to doubt whether he had even noticed it. The clothes were of good quality, they were warm, they fitted—that was sufficient for Harrigan.

One article, however, Mrs. Harrigan had saved from the pyre. The good lady, somewhere in the depths of her practical nature, had a trace of poetry. Possibly she had the cult of the ancient, perhaps it was merely a sense of the eternal fitness of things, but in any event she spared Harrigan's pants and, making a special journey for the purpose, one month after her marriage, she nailed the venerable garments to the wall of the old Harrigan shack, underneath the head, wings and claws of the big eagle Frank Hayes had shot a few years ago. She nailed the pants so securely to the logs that many years of rains and winds and sunshine would pass before the wonderful fabric that had made the name of Harrigan famous from the Arctic to Ashcroft would break up, thread by thread and shred by shred. But this disintegration was a possibility of the so-distant future that Mrs. Harrigan hardly considered it as she stepped back and surveyed her work. She looked upon that elaborate bifurcated garment so solidly affixed to the wall very much as the wife of a reformed toper looks upon the last bottle her man emptied—a symbol of a past for ever dead.

MOLLIE thought of these things as Harrigan stood before her in his mail-order suit, and she smiled ever so slightly as she noticed that in one particular at least, Mrs. Harrigan had failed to work any change. Harrigan looked as if he had shaved a few days ago. In this he would not change, and his wife had long ago given up suggesting that he use the razor often, or grow a beard. Cornelius had never argued the point—he would merely run his hand over the stubble and murmur that it was all right; he had shaved a few days ago.

"Frank around, Mrs. Hayes?" inquired the visitor, after the preliminary greetings.

"He'll be in any minute," answered Mollie, "he's back there in the swamp looking for a fire-killed spruce to make a tongue for the sleigh. If he hasn't found just what he wants he's got to come back soon, anyway, because it's getting dark . . . We'll have supper just as soon as he comes."

"Sure," agreed Harrigan.

Mollie busied herself around the stove, waiting for her guest to volunteer some information as to the reason for his visit. She waited in vain.

"You wanted to see Billie about something particular, Mr. Harrigan," she finally hazarded, "or were you just passing by?"

"Sure I want to see Frank, Mrs. Hayes. . . . You'll burn them beans for sure if you don't shove them back."

Mollie blinked and swallowed hard. "I guess you're a pretty good cook yourself, Mr. Harrigan," she remarked, not being quite sure whether Cornelius had deliberately switched the conversation, or whether he was merely concerned with saving his favorite dish from acquiring a burnt flavor.

"Me and Frank never cooked anything we couldn't eat," remarked Harrigan, in a matter-of-fact tone. He was not boasting, for, though both the men were pretty fair cooks, they were also pretty fair knights of the trencher, and it would have been a tough meal indeed that would have forced those two to rise from the table hungry during the days of their bachelorhood.

"You had sour beans and heavy bread sometimes, I believe," said Mollie so sweetly that any other man would have seen at once the reference to the possibility of beans burning had been unfortunate, to say the least.

"More than many times, Mrs. Hayes," answered Harrigan. "But we never spoiled good food a-purpose. . . . I can smell them beans about to burn. I'll fix them, seeing you're busy."

Harrigan suited the action to the words, and arranged the cooking pots to suit himself. Mollie sighed, and retired from the contest. She was not overly sensitive, but no housewife likes to have a strange man come into the house and take charge of the cooking. For a moment she was tempted to resort to sarcasm, but she realized the futility of this. Harrigan, who had never in his life considered any one but himself, would not be influenced by any remarks she might make. His reasoning was very simple: He was there for supper, the supper was to consist of beans, the beans were in danger of burning, he did not like burnt beans. Mollie's taste in the matter did not concern him in the least. So Mollie gave up, as did everyone who came in contact with Harrigan. On this occasion, as, indeed, on most others, Harrigan did not know that there had been a conflict of opinion. Not that it would have made any difference; he had no more regard for other people's opinions than a wild bull has for a fence that bars his way.

A cheery "Hoo-hoo" announced the arrival of Hazelton, balancing on his shoulder the light spruce tree that was to become a sleigh tongue. A minute later he entered the cabin, greeted his old friend and ex-employer.

"Beans, Mr. Harrigan?" questioned Mollie, in her best hostess manner, when the three were seated at the table.

"Sure," answered Mr. Harrigan, almost showing a suspicion of surprise, "there ain't anything else, is there?"

"Not to-day," confessed Mollie with a laugh, "it's always beans on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Frozen fish on Sunday, and salt pork on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. That's the unvarying menu on the Billion Dollar ranch."

Of course Mollie was exaggerating, but not by a very wide margin.

"Mollie tells me you're figuring on buying the Crescent and Cross," remarked Hazelton, as he passed the plate to the guest.

"Yes," answered Harrigan, reaching for the bread, "I've been studying on it for some time. I'm going over to the Chilcotin day after tomorrow to see their bunch of cattle, and if they're right we'll close the deal right away."

"What are you going to do with your place, if you do move?" Hazelton almost succeeded in making this a casual question, as if he had no particular interest in the answer. Husband and wife did not look at each other, but they waited anxiously for Harrigan's reply. The rancher, busy seasoning his beans, seemed to delay. Then:

"You're going to buy it, of course," answered Harrigan. "Who else? That's why I came over this afternoon, to get it fixed up before I go to the Crescent and Cross."

"We're going to buy it!" echoed Mr. and Mrs. Hazelton in unison, almost as if they had rehearsed for effect. And then, separately, Mollie said "The idea!" while Billie lapsed into slang: "Where do you get that stuff, Cory?"

You Pay 60c

For water in each $1 spent for meat
Quaker Oats saves you 85%

Meats average about 60 per cent. water, plus considerable waste. The water and waste in hen's eggs is nearly 77 per cent.—in fresh fish 85 per cent. In Quaker Oats the water and waste are less than 8 per cent.

Thus Quaker Oats yield 1,810 calories per pound, in the energy unit of food value. Round steak yields 890 and eggs 635.

COST OF WATER

|                 |     |
|-----------------|-----|
| In Quaker Oats  | 7%  |
| In round steak  | 60% |
| In veal cutlets | 68% |
| In fish         | 60% |
| In hen's eggs   | 65% |
| In tomatoes     | 94% |
| In potatoes     | 62% |
| In oysters      | 88% |

COST PER SERVING

|                     |     |
|---------------------|-----|
| Dish of Quaker Oats | 1c  |
| Serving of meat     | 8c  |
| Serving of fish     | 8c  |
| Lamb chop           | 12c |
| Two eggs            | 10c |

COST PER 1,000 CALORIES

|               |            |
|---------------|------------|
| Quaker Oats   | 6 1/2c     |
| Average meats | 45c        |
| Average fish  | 50c        |
| Hen's eggs    | 70c        |
| Vegetables    | 11c to 75c |

12 people fed at cost of a chop

Quaker Oats costs one cent per large dish. A single chop costs 12 cents.

Quaker Oats, compared with other necessary foods, saves some 85 per cent. See the tables, based on prices at this writing.

Quaker Oats breakfasts, on this basis, mean a saving of $125 per year.

And the oat, remember, is the supreme food. It is almost the ideal food in balance and completeness.

It is the advised food for young folks and the vim-food for the older. To insure proper feeding, one meal a day should be oats.

Start the day on Quaker Oats—the matchless one-cent dish. Spend the saving on your costlier meals and you'll cut the cost of living.

Quaker Oats

All the little grains discarded

Quaker Oats is flaked from queen grains only—just the rich, plump, flavorful oats. We get but ten pounds from a bushel.

This selection gives this dish a flavor you should get. It costs no extra price. It is so delightful that millions of the world over send here for Quaker Oats.

Quaker Oats
One cent per dish.

One Chop
Costs you 12 cents.

Packed in sealed round packages with removable cover

Mack Waists

Reasonable Prices

have added to the popularity of MACK WAISTS; but it is the intrinsic value of every waist bearing the "Mack" Trademark which has made hundreds and hundreds of women buy these Waists exclusively.

Chic styles—faultless tailoring—full sizes—generously cut—daintiness, attractiveness, dependable materials—these are the qualities which make MACK WAISTS such splendid values for the money.

Ask your favorite store to show you the latest styles in MACK WAISTS. You'll know them by the Trademark.

Fashioned by
McCUTCHEON WAIST CO., LIMITED
323 St. James St., Montreal.

10

Sani-Flush

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

Cleans Closet Bowls Without Scouring

A Shining White Closet Bowl

Sani-Flush keeps your closet bowl clean and white without the unpleasant labor of scrubbing and scouring. All the distasteful work is unnecessary if you use Sani-Flush. Just sprinkle a little of it into the bowl, according to the directions on the can, and flush. The bowl and hidden trap are thoroughly cleaned—all markings and incrustations are gone and the whole toilet is clean—as shining white and odorless as new.

Sani-Flush is sold at grocery, drug, hardware, plumbing and housefurnishing stores.

Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd.
10-12-14 McCaul Street, Toronto, Ontario

Harrigan addressed himself to Mrs. Hazelton.

"Of course you're going to buy it," he went on. "Didn't you tell Jo the other night you were dead keen to get the first refusal of the ranch if I did decide to move?"

Hazelton looked hard at his wife as he remarked: "You said nothing about that, Mollie."

"I didn't say anything of the kind to Mrs. Harrigan, either," retorted Mollie. "What I said was..."

Harrigan broke in in his usual casual manner.

"What you said was that a ranch is the hardest thing in the world to sell, and a poor investment, and a lot more along the same line. Jo's too old a bird not to know what all that cackle meant. She told me you were just trying to 'bear' the proposition, but she didn't explain what that meant; so it must be a real estate term. . . . Sure, you're going to buy."

"Well, Cory," remarked Hazelton, "I'll tell you the truth. Mollie has been at me night and day since she came back to go over and see you and make some kind of a deal for the place, but I can't see it. It's too big an undertaking. I can't handle Jo's place, and yours, and this one, even if I had the money. It sure would make one swell ranch, but it's no use thinking about it, Cory. The way I'm fixed, if ranches were selling for one cent an acre, I couldn't buy enough land to make a mud pie."

"All it will cost you for the land, and the horses, and the machinery, and the rest of the 'fixtus' I'll leave behind will be forty-five thousand dollars," remarked Harrigan, reaching for another piece of bread and passing his cup for more tea at the same time.

"Why not make it half-a-million, Cory?" asked Hazelton, sarcastically. "It would be just as easy for me to raise one as the other."

"No," said Harrigan, firmly, "Forty-five thousand is the right price and that's all you'll have to pay for it. What's the matter with you, Frank?" as Hazelton shook his head vigorously. "all you got to do is to pay eight thousand dollars cash in the fall, and we'll let the balance ride on mortgages. And we'll leave you a big bunch of cattle to run on shares, fifty-fifty, because I don't want to take them into the Chilcotin and mix them with the Crescent and Cross herd."

"What's this fifty-fifty thing?" inquired Mollie. "How does that work out in practice?"

Hazelton explained one of the customs of the cattle country, which was that one man could buy a herd of cattle, and another look after them for a term of years, at the end of which the two would share evenly in the natural increase, the original number of the herd being first returned to the financial backer. Many of the big men, he told his wife, had had their start in the business in this way.

"Well," remarked Mollie, when everything had been made clear, "doesn't that simplify matters a great deal, Billie? What more do you want?"

"Eight thousand dollars cash, and nerve enough to shoulder a debt of thirty-seven thousand dollars. A mere trifle, I assure you, my dear child."

"You've got the nerve, Frank," broke in Harrigan, "and all you've got to do now is to raise the cash. And get busy as quick as you like, because the sooner you can pay it the better it will suit me."

"Sorry, Cory," answered Hazelton, "but it can't be done. There are plenty of rocks on this place, but I haven't found the philosopher's stone among them. And neither am I like what was the name of that old boy who turned everything he touched to gold, Mollie?"

"Midas," smiled Mrs. Hazelton. "I don't see how you could forget old Midas, Billie, after all the advertising stuff you wrote about that old steamer when we were with the North Coast Steamship Company. You remember..."

Suddenly she fixed her gaze intently on Hazelton, holding her breath in suspense as if almost staggered by the immensity of the idea which had just struck her.

"Billie," she went on, in a queer, strained voice, "Billie, you remember that spring when the North Coast was over one hundred thousand dollars in debt to the bank, and the book-keeper told you confidentially that things were looking very bad and the banks might close down at any time. You remember what the old man did with down to Seattle and bought the 'Midnight Glow' and the 'Midnight Maid,' and got so much deeper into the bank that they just had to carry him until the end of the season, and by the early fall he had interested new capital and things went along swimmingly ever after. Why, that's all you have to do, don't you see?"

THE thread of this argument, while clear enough to Hazelton, would probably have mystified Harrigan had he chosen to try to follow it. But instead he had devoted his attention to the more serious business of finishing his supper, content that in some peculiar way Mrs. Hazelton was trying to influence her husband to close the deal. So long as the decision was reached, the rancher did not care what induced the ex-Frank Hayes to agree to his plans.

Hazelton devined that his wife had some definite plan in mind, but before asking a direct question which she might have to parry, because of the presence of a third party, he did contrive, by his facial expression, to intimate that he could not even then see where the money would come from; for his standing at the banks at Ashcroft did not warrant the assumption that almost unlimited credit would be extended to him.

And then, he noticed that Mollie was gazing at the letter rack on the wall. "In full view, he saw the last missive received from Miss Ingraham, and, as Mollie had already acquainted him with the contents, all at once he saw a great light.

Mollie had figured out that the deal could be swung by marrying Bessie to Tony, inducing the latter to realize on his cars and other assets, and then taking him in as a partner on the Harrigan-Frushing deal!

Inasmuch as Tony had been quite frank with Miss Ingraham as regards his realizable and liquid assets, and as Miss Ingraham made Mrs. Hazelton her confidante in all things, and as Mollie had no secrets from her husband, Hazelton knew that the cash payment difficulty had vanished, always provided Tony and Miss Ingraham raised no serious objections. It seemed quite likely that they would not, for they were looking for a business proposition that would keep Tony at home, and would be certain to yield good returns. It would be hard to find anything more attractive than the Harrigan-Frushing proposition in the whole Cariboo, and Hazelton found it easy to convince himself that the shrewd young chauffeur would not let the opportunity slip. Tony and Hazelton had met only twice, but the impression created had been mutually favorable. The chauffeur might have a lot to learn about cattle ranching, but it would not take him very long to learn it.

As he slowly cut tobacco from his plug and crumbled it into his hands before filling his pipe, watching Harrigan perform the same operation with engrossing attention, Hazelton decided that Mollie's unexpressed plan was good. Finally he pushed back his chair, scratched a match leisurely against his leg, lit his pipe and puffed away in silence for a couple of minutes.

"Come down to the barn while I milk, Cory," he said at last, "and we can discuss some more details of this deal. I guess Mollie wants to write a letter for you to take to Soda Creek on your way to Chilcotin. Did you ever hear of the applied science of salesmanship, Cory?"

"Never," answered Harrigan. "When I've got anything to sell I sell it. I don't need any applied science. I just put the beef on the scales and the other fellow pays the price. There's no science in that."

"Cory," remarked Hazelton, "there are a lot of things you'll never forget, because you will never learn them. You have the finesse of a pachyderm, the light touch of a rhinoceros, the soft and gentle —"

"This shack would be a lot warmer with that door closed," Mollie interrupted sweetly.

The two men laughingly took the hint and made their way to the barn.

As for Mollie, she sat down and wrote an incredibly long letter to Miss Bessie Ingraham, Palace of Sweets, Soda Creek, B.C.

TWO weeks later Mr. and Mrs. Hazelton left home fairly early in the morning and went out to break a road to a fresh haystack at the far end of the ranch. It was a bright, warm day, and they did not return until late in the afternoon, a lunch having been taken along. Hazelton

30x3½ All-Weather Tread Tire and Heavy Tourist Tube

Price Sept 1914 $30.45

Price Sept 1920 $31.05

Increase 1 10/100%

ONE of the chief sources of the additional value offered in Goodyear Tires is the savings effected through Goodyear's system of distribution.

It is a system made possible by the enormous sale of Goodyear Tires.

To several thousand selected Canadian dealers Goodyear sells tires direct, and the money that would go as profit to jobber is largely saved.

Shipments to distributing points are so large that we make the saving of carload freight rates. Orders from dealers are large enough to reduce clerical expense to a small factor.

Such efficiency in practice and the resulting increased business has reduced expense-per-tire to a minimum.

The saving-per-tire between factory and dealer is approximately $2.00.

In total this saving represents hundreds of thousands of dollars turned back into the product to heighten quality and keep prices down.

So a 30 x 3½ Goodyear All-weather Tread Tire with Goodyear Heavy Tourist Tube costs you to-day only $31.05. Six years ago it cost you $30.45. An increase of only 1.9 per cent., while most commodities and labor increased over 100 per cent.

And Goodyear Service Station Dealers help you get all the mileage that is built into the tires.

The resulting low cost-per-mile of Goodyear Tires has built the largest tire sales in the world.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. of Canada Limited

GOODYEAR
MADE IN CANADA

A Mail Order Bride

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 76.)

Never Sleep

With a film-coat on your teeth

Millions of people on retiring now combat the film on teeth. They fight it day by day. And those glistening teeth seen everywhere now form one of the results.

You owe yourself a trial of this new teeth-cleaning method. Dentists everywhere advise it. The results it brings are all-important, and they do not come without it.

What film does

Your teeth are coated with a viscous film. Feel it with your tongue. It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays. And dentists now trace most tooth troubles to it.

The ordinary tooth paste does not end film. So, despite all brushing, much film remains, to cause stain, tartar, germ troubles and decay.

Watch the teeth whiten

You will see and feel results from Pepsodent which brushing never brought you heretofore. A week's use, we think, will amaze you.

One ingredient is pepsin. One multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva, to digest all starch deposits that cling. One multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva to neutralize mouth acids.

Two factors directly attack the film.

It is the film-coat that discolours, not the teeth. Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Ways to combat it

Dental science, after years of research, has found effective ways to fight film. Able authorities have proved their efficiency. Together they bring, in modern opinion, a new era in teeth cleaning.

These five methods are combined in a dentifrice called Pepsodent—a tooth paste which complies with all the new requirements. And a ten-day tube is now sent free to everyone who asks.

One of them keeps the teeth so highly polished that film cannot easily cling.

Watch these effects. Send the coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. Note how teeth whiten as the film-coat disappears.

The book we send explains all these results. Judge what they mean to you and yours. Cut out the coupon so you won't forget.

brought back a big load of hay for the barn after he had scattered feed for the stock along the new road, meaning to drive the cattle there from the other meadow late in the afternoon. But on nearing home they noticed fresh cutter tracks, —tracks, Hazelton said, that looked strange to him. To Mollie all cutter tracks looked alike, but her husband was insistent that there were strangers about. In this he was further confirmed when, on putting his horses in the barn, he found there a team of buckskins which did not belong to the Quesnel Lake district.

"I guess, Mollie," he remarked, "there's some government official of some sort up at the shack. He must intend to stay all night, or he wouldn't have unharnessed. You run up and see, and I'll be there in a couple of minutes."

Mollie had by this time got sufficiently used to the ways of the north not to be surprised at the freedom with which a stranger had apparently taken possession of her home. It had happened a couple of times that winter, though in the other cases the visitors had been old friends of her husband's. She idly wondered why the government official had selected their house as a stopping place, instead of the old Frushing house, which was much more central.

Mollie approached the shack humming a little tune, just to give due notice of her approach to the guest within.

The door flew open and a trim figure rushed out and flung itself into Mrs. Hazelton's arms.

"Mollie!"

"Bessie!"

The two cries burst out at the same moment, and then there followed such a hugging and kissing, such a breaking away and embracing again, such an intoxication of undisguised joy, that it seemed as if it would never cease. In a hysteria of delight, one moment the two women would be bubbling with laughter, and the next shedding tears, or trying to ask and answer questions at one and the same time, with a queer little catch in their voices. . . . It felt good to see each other again, after so many months, and such a surprise. Then each would tell the other how well she looked, and what a wonderful color she was getting in the bracing air of the north, and how wonderfully well that dress became her, but of course only Mollie made this last remark, for Bessie was tactful as well as truthful, and could not in sincerity have complimented her old friend on her sartorial appearance, for Mollie had that day dressed to fork hay, not to receive callers.

But even the most enthusiastic greetings must come to an end, particularly in the nipping atmosphere of almost-zero weather, and so finally Mollie made a move towards the cabin.

"I want you to come in and see our home, Bessie darling," she said, "I think you'll agree that it's every bit as cozy as I wrote you it was."

"You goose," laughed Bessie, "what do you suppose we've been doing this last hour and a half, if not admiring your charming little nest. You didn't expect us to sit down outside in the frozen snow until it should please your ladyship to return and bid us welcome, did you?"

Just then, as if in confirmation of the correct use of the personal pronoun, plural, big smiling Tony Dalzell revealed himself in the doorway of the shack.

"Welcome home, Mrs. Hazelton," grinned that gentleman.

"Welcome a thousand times, Mr. Dalzell," was her greeting, adding, with a twinkle in her eye, as they entered the house. "And how's Tony?"

"Fine. Fine as silk, Mollie. You know," remarked that gentleman, almost confidentially, "I was almost afraid you were going to be prim and proper, now that you've been and got married and everything. I guess you've had all that frozen out of you by this time, eh?"

"We may as well start right," assented Mollie. "We'd come to it soon, any way, if . . ."

"No 'if' as far as we're concerned, that I can see from this distance," volunteered Tony, as Mollie hesitated to complete the sentence.

Mollie flew to the door in her eagerness to summon her husband from the barn, and all but collided with that gentleman as he stepped across the threshold, still ignorant of the identity of the guests.

"What's the idea of the big surprise?" inquired Hazelton, after a few general observations. "And surely you didn't arrive all the way from Soda Creek to-day."

"We came over yesterday, drawn to this land of promise and promissory notes by the longest and most exhaustive letter I've ever read—and I didn't read all of it at that," laughed Tony. "For Bessie insisted much of it was private, so you needn't frown, Mrs. Hazelton. We spent last night at Jo's place, and this morning I rode around it, had a hurried look at part of the ranch, saw the cattle on the feed ground, and then drove Bessie over here so she could have a real gossipfest with your good lady, though how she can have any conversation left in her after the way she and Mrs. Harrigan gabbled ever since they got together is more than a mere man can fathom."

"How do you like what you've seen of the place, so far, Tony?" asked Hazelton.

"Well, as far as that goes, I haven't seen anything. All land looks alike under two feet of snow. But I've seen the cattle, and I've seen what hay is left. There's a lot I don't know about cattle ranching, but I know what the Harrigan and the Frushing ranches have been turning out in beef in past years, so I don't think it necessary to have the soil analyzed or the place surveyed by metes and bounds before going ahead. I'm willing to go shares in this with you, subject to mutual arrangements and to agreement on a lot of minor details."

"I guess you've got pretty well tired of chasing up and down the Cariboo road and want to get into some steady business, eh? That's your real reason for coming into the deal?" But Hazelton smiled a wicked smile as he put the question.

Tony was not in the least disconcerted. He stepped over to Bessie's side, put his hand lightly on her shoulder and answered in a singularly quiet voice:

"Here's my real reason. I'm going to endow Bessie with half my debts on the fifteenth of July."

And then, of course, the handshaking and kissing had to be done all over again.

It was late that night when the lights in the Hazelton cabin were finally extinguished. The two men had a shakedown in the kitchen, near the stove. Mollie and Bessie were in the bedroom, and long after midnight they still talked of the future, when their dreams would have come true and their great expectations be realized and very happy.

"Just think, Mollie," whispered Bessie, "I'm really getting the Harrigan cattle, and the Harrigan lands, and the Harrigan leases, and the Harrigan paraphernalia, and everything, just as you promised I would. Only instead of getting Harrigan and his bank account, I get Tony and a big mortgage. Things didn't work just the way we figured at first, and I'm very glad they didn't. And so is Tony. And so is Mrs. Frushing and Harrigan. And you too, Honey. . . ."

But Mollie had fallen asleep, at peace with herself, her deeds, and the world.

THE END.

10-Day Tube Free

467

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY,
Dept. 48; 1104 S. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

Mail 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to

Only one tube to a family

REG. IN Pepsodent CANADA

The New-Day Dentifrice

A scientific film combatant combined with two other modern requisites. Now advised by leading dentists everywhere and supplied by all druggists in large tubes.

System in the Kitchen

Your husband has it at the shop or office. It saves him time and money. A Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet will systematize your kitchen and save you time and worry.

Our Booklet "C" tells in detail what the Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet is and does. It is recommended by dealers in hundreds of cities and towns.

The Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet Co.
Limited
Hanover, Canada

Fiction and Fabrics

IN the columns of an English magazine there appeared some time ago a paragraph entitled "A Hat in its Dotage," which brings sadness to the heart of the conservative reader. The article which is described as having reached the Osler stage (if there be a decline and fall of headgear) is the top-hat, dear to the illustrators of the Early Victorian era. Can we think of an old-fashioned David Copperfield or Vanity Fair without quaint cuts of the tall hat? Can we picture "the fine old English gentleman" unadorned by the towering splendor of the top-hat, which is commonly called, on this side of the Atlantic, the silk hat? However, we refuse to believe that the top-hat is doomed. Whatever be its fate, so far as the week day is concerned, that respectable covering will make its appearance on Sunday, for we could not recognize the deacon, the elder, or the vestryman should he descend to the secular vulgarity of the "bowler."

But when we consider the part that the top-hat has played in the fiction of the last century we are led to remark further on the use that novelists have made of dress as an ornament to their loose or periodic sentences. In modern days the writer of an up-to-date romance is severely circumscribed, especially if he selects an athletic heroine whose golf equipment or tailor-made suit gives scant opportunity for picturesque description. But the novelist of the male sex is unavoidably awkward when he comes to the details of the heroine's attire and usually takes refuge in such unsatisfying generalities as "flowing draperies" or "the severe lines of her gown." The riding habit was an old favorite and the reader was invariably assured that Lady Hermoine or the lovely Arabella looked her best in the seductive plainness of her dark-green habit. Miss Corelli, in one effort of her inspired pen, revives the charms of this costume and sends forth her heroine for a ride in a costume of violet velvet embroidered with gold and adorned with gold tassels. One might know that things would happen to a heroine in such array, and, sure enough, the Arab steed objects to the gold trimmings and there is flight, flurry and almost sudden death.

Gone, too, are the days when the novelist could become eloquent over my lady's slipper. The common-sense shoe has changed all that and it is the advertisement of the "Samantha Sodd" or the "Princess Patricia" footwear that approaches the poetry of boots and shoes. It is only when the writer turns in hope to the past and with the aid of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, a map and an old history, constructs an historical novel crammed with anachronisms that we have picturesque slippers of black velvet and cream brocade again appearing on the old polished floors. But the pretty slippers belong properly to the poets, and right musically has Sir Edwin Arnold sung the beauty of the Egyptian slippers found in the mummy-chest near the Nile:

"Tiny slippers of green and gold,
Tied with a mouldering golden cord,
What dainty feet they must have been When Caesar Augustus was Egypt's lord!"

It has been said by certain critics that the sex of the novelist is invariably betrayed by the manner in which woman's dress is described. Assuredly no woman would have given us Kipling's wholesale summing-up of Mrs. Cusack-Bremmill's gown in "Three and an Extra"—"It was one of those gowns that hit you straight between the eyes and make you gasp." We are not surprised that the erring husband is won back to his allegiance and forsakes Mrs. Hawksbee for his wife in the wonderful gown. It is Kipling, also, who sends Charlie Hawley's pretty sweetheart to a ball in a dress of "steel-grey illusion." No woman writer would have been guilty of the horrible blunder of sending a girl to a dance in such sad-colored raiment, but then no woman writer could have told the story of Charlie's overhearing the voices of the flowers and the trees and "the little blind Devil of Chance." So we forgive Kipling for the steel-grey gown.

The unfailing refuge of the man who wishes to have a heroine of the good old-fashioned sort is the white muslin gown. It flows and ripples and falls in filmy draperies until the room is filled with the fragrance of sweet lavender. The novelist provides an old homestead in Maryland or a piazza in St. Louis "befo' de wah" and Dorothy Manners or Virginia Carvel straightway floats about in white muslin. No practical considerations regarding the extreme susceptibility of such a fabric to common dust, no thoughts of the exorbitant laundry disturb the flowing of the novelist's fountain pen. If he can adorn the fair creature of his fancy with blue ribbons he is all the happier and thinks that he has gone far in the simple life, while every woman reader knows that he is basely deceived by those gowns of seeming innocence. Amelia Sedley appeared in them, as a matter of course, and so did Miss Rebecca Sharp, although wicked little Becky should have worn gowns of gleaming scarlet or blazing yellow.

But we have to go back to romantic old Sir Walter to catch the real stateliness of the gowns of long ago. Elizabeth at Kenilworth was a gorgeous sight in her brocade and jewels, but infinitely fairer was poor beautiful Amy when she waited in her robes of brown and amber for the handsome earl whose ambition was her tragedy. How the Scotch "teller of tales" revels in their ruffles, whether it be the treacherous Varney or Raleigh whose velvet cloak makes a soft path to the royal favor. What can the modern novelist do with an everyday hero whose business suit of grey tweed and waiter-like evening attire defy the picturesque? He turns, perforce, to the football field or the wild West, and we have Strongheart on the stage and that prince of cowboys, the Virginian, in a costume which sets ugly convention at defiance.

But sometimes the old and worn suddenly assumes a value which nothing but romance could bestow. Not the richest robe of Arthur's court is remembered as the "gown of faded silk" which comes down to us from the old chronicles and in which Enid first won the love of Geraint. Sometimes it is only a phrase or a chance reference which fixes a memory in the world's capricious fancy. "My Lady Greensleeves" has lived through four long centuries. We may forget that Esmond's Beatrix was selfish and heartless, but we remember that she was a "brown beauty" and that her shoes were small and red with wicked rosettes. Beauty and bravery may go unadorned, but they are all the better for rich garments, and so we have the gowns that are "confections" and the scarlet coat of the hero. We are becoming dreadfully practical and discuss the utility of everything that blows and grows, but, even yet, it is not safe for the writer of fiction to become supremely indifferent to wherewithal his characters shall be clothed.

Carhartt Overalls

There is offered real economy, regardless of the high cost of labor and materials, in Carhartt Overalls. Consider, for example, these advantages:

- 1—Seams double stitched.
- 2—Every button riveted.
- 3—Points where hardest strain comes doubly reinforced.
- 4—Angular rule pocket.
- 5—Pockets roomy and convenient.
- 6—Give-and-take suspenders.
- 7—Tough, durable denim cloth that wears like leather, and ignores washing and rubbing.

You can be sure of getting my overalls by looking for the car-heart button.

Hamilton Carhartt
President

HAMILTON CARHARTT
COTTON MILLS, Limited
Toronto Montreal
Winnipeg Vancouver
Manufacturers of Men's Overalls and Work Gloves and Carhartt Allovers for Men and Boys

TRADE MARK

COLONIAL "A"

Thin, without sacrifice of accuracy. At all good jewelers. Priced from $250.00 upwards. Other Waltham models from $25.00 upwards.

A good watch is always an asset

ON the contrary an inferior watch is always a liability.

The repair bills that will accumulate in a few years, trying to make such a watch keep good time, will equal the cost of a Waltham.

It's much more economical to buy a Waltham in the first place.

Every Waltham is flawlessly constructed—built for complete, enduring accuracy in time-measurement. It is the product of more than sixty-five years of specialized experience in watch-making. Its quality is due to the perfection with which each of the many tiny screws, jewels, plates, wheels and springs are made, assembled and tested. If you want long dependable service, ask your jeweler for a Waltham.

Waltham Grandfather
Hall Clocks, Mantel and
Leather (all colors) Desk
Clocks for homes of refinement. Ask your jeweler.

WALTHAM
THE WORLD'S WATCH OVER TIME

WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY, LIMITED

MONTREAL

Makers and Distributors of Waltham Products
in Canada

Factories: Montreal, Canada; Waltham, U.S.A.

Little rules that help you look your best

OCCASIONALLY you meet girls who are beautiful without effort; but most lovely people are lovely because they know the rules. To make the powder stay on, to prevent roughness, dullness, lines—requires intelligent care. Here are a few simple rules, approved by skin specialists, which every woman would do well to follow.

Never permit your face to look shiny

Powder—Yes. Just enough powder to have that soft, natural look. And when you powder do it to last. Powdering in public is an admission that you are uneasy about your appearance.

The only way to make powder stay on is—not to put on an excessive amount—but to begin with the right powder base. Then you can carefully powder your face, and never have a moment's concern about its losing its soft, fresh appearance.

For this you need a cream which will not reappear in an unpleasant shine. Pond's Vanishing Cream does not contain a bit of oil. It disappears at once, never to reappear. Before you powder take just a little Pond's Vanishing Cream—a tiny bit—on your finger tips. Rub it lightly into your face. Notice the instant smoothness it gives your skin. Now powder as usual. See how smoothly the powder goes on—how natural it looks. You will find that it will stay on two or three times as long as ever before. You need never again fear a shiny face.

A rough skin a sign of carelessness

To go out even in the milder weather of winter without protecting your skin is simply reckless; for wind and cold whip the moisture out of your skin and cause roughness.

Skin specialists say you can protect your skin from this injury by applying, before you go out, a cream which makes up for the moisture that the wind whips out. For protection, as for a powder base, you need a cream without oil. The same pure, greaseless Pond's Vanishing Cream which you use as a base for powder, contains an ingredient famous for years for its softening, protective properties. Always before going out, smooth a little Pond's Vanishing Cream into your face and hands. It is a good idea to carry a tube of it right in your handbag, so that immediately before and after motoring you can soften your hands and face with it. In this way the delicate texture of the skin will not suffer from exposure.

Never let your skin look tired

When you are tired, yet must look your best, you can bring your skin new freshness by applying a cream that is instantly absorbed by the weary skin. The instantly disappearing qualities of Pond's Vanishing Cream give it a remarkable effectiveness in bringing immediate freshness to your skin. Just a bit of it rubbed into the skin relieves in a moment the strained look around mouth and eyes and brings new transparency to your complexion.

The bedtime cleansing that brings a clear skin. Never retire without it

One of the chief reasons for a "muddy" look in the skin is the dust that gets lodged deep within the pores.

The only means of keeping the skin clear is to remove deep-seated dust. For this cleansing you need an entirely different cream from the one you use for a powder base, and protection. The right cream for cleansing is one prepared with an oil base. The formula for Pond's Cold Cream was especially worked out to supply just the amount of oil to give it the highest cleansing power. At night rub Pond's Cold Cream into the pores of the face, neck and hands, and wipe it off with a soft cloth. Give your skin this cleansing with Pond's Cold Cream regularly and you can keep your skin clear.

Catch the little lines before they grow deep

By starting in time you can keep your face free of the wretched little lines that will keep starting. For this too you need a cream with an oil base, a cream that will work into the skin gradually. Pond's Cold Cream has just the smoothness and body required to make a perfect massage cream.

Every normal skin needs both of these creams. Neither cream will foster the growth of hair.

Get a jar or tube of each at any drug or department store, at 50c a jar or tube of either. See how quickly they make you look your best.

Made in Canada

POND'S
Cold Cream &
Vanishing Cream

One with an oil base and one without any oil

Mail this coupon to-day
Free sample tubes

Pond's Extract Co., 159 C Brock
Avenue, Toronto, Canada

Please send me, free, the items checked:

( ) A free sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream.
( ) A free sample of Pond's Cold Cream.

Instead of the free samples, I desire the larger samples checked below, for which I enclose the required amount:

( ) A 5c sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream.
( ) A 5c sample of Pond's Cold Cream.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... Prov. ....

MAZOLA

THE PURE OIL
FROM GOLDEN CORN

Nothing Better for Deep Frying

Mazola is just the thing thrifty housewives have been looking for. Because it is not an animal fat, foods fried with it are more wholesome and delicious; they crisp at once—the fat does not soak in. Mazola can be used over and over again, as it does not absorb odors or flavors from food.

For Shortening: Richer than Butter at Half the Cost

At almost half the price of butter, Mazola is richer than butter for shortening cakes and pastries. In cake-making, it eliminates the tiresome "Creaming-in" process and saves time. Pastry shortened with Mazola is much more digestible than that shortened with expensive animal fats, and Mazola, unlike butter or lard, keeps indefinitely.

Delicious for Salads

Chefs famous for their cuisine prefer Mazola to olive oil, not because it is so much cheaper, but because it is delightful and wholesome. French dressings, Mayonnaise dressings and cooked dressings are perfect in flavor, and, due to the wonderful economy of Mazola, again allow the free use of green salads.

IN 1, 2 AND 8 POUND TINS

AT ALL GROCERS

FREE

Send for the Mazola book of recipes, with full directions on the use of Mazola for cooking, shortening and salads.

The Canada Starch Co., Limited
MONTREAL

HAS THE GREATEST SALE OF ANY BRAND OF SALAD and COOKING OIL

After Cooking

Old Dutch Cleanser quickly and easily cuts the burnt-in crusts and spattered grease from oven, drip-pan, porcelain sides, cooking and baking utensils.

Trimnings and every part of the stove kept clean and bright with very little labor.

For ALL general housework, Old Dutch goes further and does better work.

Economical - Thorough - Hygienic

MADE IN CANADA

VOL 17
Nº 8

DECEMBER
1920

CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL

DECEMBER 1920

PRICE 20 CENTS

Mother Canuck recommends MAGIC BAKING POWDER
because she knows from experience (1st) That it is an efficient, healthful and economical leavener. (2nd) That it contains no alum or other injurious substitutes. (3rd) That it is the best and purest baking powder possible to produce. (4th) That foods containing it have an increased nutritious value, and women generally are coming more and more to realize that it is Canada's perfect baking powder.

E. W. GILLETT CO. LTD.
TORONTO, CANADA

WINNIPEG

MONTREAL

Copy of "The Magic Way" will be mailed free upon request.

The Canadian Home Journal

NEW YORK
505 FIFTH AVE.

CHICAGO
608 OTIS BUILDING

OFFICE of PUBLICATION:
RICHMOND and SHEPPARD STREETS
TORONTO, CANADA

MONTREAL
171 ST. JAMES ST.

WINNIPEG
435 QU'APPÉLLE AVE.

Copyright, December, 1920, in Canada.

Volume Seventeen

DECEMBER, 1920

Number Eight

THE season of Christmas is just as welcome as ever—perhaps all the more shining with comfort because the war clouds hung so heavily over us for four weary years that “peace and good-will” seemed but a mocking dream. To-day the world does not yet know the meaning of the Christmas message, but the outlook is brighter than it was in those years of crises, and we realize with thankfulness the prosperity and hope in our own land—which shared in the sacrifices of the war, but, in its youth and vigor, looks forward, not with despondency, to the tasks of reconstruction.

There are prophets of evil who would have us believe that civilization has been hurt beyond repair—but THAT we cannot believe, so long as there are so many sincerely anxious to help in the work of putting the world together again. It is usually the idlers who are the despondent citizens—those who are the helpers are also the hopefuls. So, as we look abroad or look at home in this year of nineteen hundred and twenty, we repeat once more the centuries-old greeting which is a prayer as well as a salutation. Peace is what the world longs for—and may Christmas cheer and good-will be the atmosphere of every home!

IT will be admitted that the illustration on this page hardly suggests Christmas or a Yuletide blaze. Mr. Hulbert Footner, one of Canada's popular novelists, is here photographed on a happy summer day enjoying the bracing air of the seashore. Mr. Footner “belongs” to Hamilton, Ontario, although he has lived for some years in the United States. Of course, he spends some of his days in New York, for nearly all Canadians who would write a best-selling novel or have a story in the movies find their way to the largest city on the continent and there acquire a studio or a sky parlor from which they send forth tales of thrill and pictures of rare color. Mr. Footner has already mounted several rungs on the ladder of success, and is making his way as a playwright as well as a writer of fiction. “Country Love,” which ran as a serial in “Munsey's Magazine” this year, is one of his recent productions in story-telling.

In our January issue will be found the opening chapters of “Two on the Trail,” a novel by Mr. Footner which has been published in book form and for which we hold the Canadian serial rights. It is a story dealing with the adventures of an extremely daring hero and a lovely heroine, whose wanderings through Northern Alberta are thrilling as a “real movie.” In spite of its frankly modern melodrama, there is a villain whose super-wickedness seems mediaeval. He is, really, one of the most thorough scamps you could find, and outdoes the Wicked Uncle of the old fairy tales. So, there is an old-fashioned touch, after all, in this tale of modern Canada, and you will follow the varying fortunes of the persecuted heroine with sincere interest.

THE WRITER OF OUR NEXT SERIAL

Mr. Hulbert Footner is of that goodly fellowship of Canadians rapidly winning fame and fortune in New York. We are beginning publication in our January issue of a story by Mr. Footner, entitled “Two on the Trail,” which is an exciting narrative of hair-breadth adventures in Northern Alberta.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Yearly subscription price for Canada and Great Britain is $2.00; United States, $2.50; Foreign, $2.60. Remit by Express or P.O. Order. Add collection charges to cheques.

Subscriptions must be paid in advance.

To change address we must know former and new address. No address changed later than 15th.

We have discontinued the sending of receipts for money paid by subscribers. The first figures on the wrapper of your journal show to what date your subscription is paid.

How to banish the needless flaws that ruin your appearance

It is so easy to let your skin acquire bad traits

A little roughness, a little shine, a little cloudiness of skin, and one's looks are gone! It is so easy, too, to let your skin acquire these bad little traits unless you know just how to avoid them.

WIND and cold, you know, are ruinous to the texture of your skin. They whip the moisture out of it—leave it dry and tense. Then follow roughening and chapping.

Skin specialists say that one can protect the skin by applying a softening and soothing cream always before venturing out. Never omit this. One little slip, and your skin has had its first dangerous lesson on how to grow rough!

Regardless of the weather it will become more and more exquisite in texture.

Does the powder keep coming off your face, leaving you all shiny and embarrassed?

Perhaps you are expecting too much of it. Really, it is entirely your own fault if you put the powder directly on the skin and expect it to stay on of its own accord. The finest of powders needs a base to hold it, and to keep it smooth.

For this use, as for protection from the weather, you need a cream without oil. Before you powder, take a bit of Pond's Vanishing Cream and rub it lightly into the skin. At once it disappears, leaving your skin softened. Now powder as usual and don't think of it again. The powder will stay on two or three times as long as ever before.

When your face is, tense from a long, hard day, yet you want to "look beautiful," remember that the cool, fragrant touch of Pond's Vanishing Cream smoothed over the face and neck will instantly bring it new freshness. Do this before you go to a dance. All the tell-tale weariness around eyes and mouth will vanish. Your skin will gain a new transparency. You need never let it get into the way of staying tired.

Beware of allowing your skin to cloud up and lose its clearness. When this happens, it is because minute particles of dust

Whenever you want to look especially lovely, even though you are tired, you can give your complexion new freshness at a moment's notice. Pond's Vanishing Cream is famous for the eleventh hour freshening it brings your skin have worked their way too deep into the pores to be removed by ordinary bathing. Really, it means that you have been allowing your skin to go only half cleansed! To remove this deeply lodged dust you need an entirely different cream, a cream with an oil base. Pond's Cold Cream has just the amount of oil to work deep into the pores and cleanse them.

Before you go to bed and whenever you have been especially exposed to dust, rub Pond's Cold Cream into the pores of the skin. Then wipe it off with a soft cloth. You will say, "How could so much dust have gotten into my pores!" Do this regularly and you will be rewarded by a clear, fresh skin.

Every normal skin needs both these creams. Neither will foster the growth of hair.

Get a jar or tube of each today at any drug or department store at 50 cents a jar or tube of either. You will realize for the first time how lovely your skin can be.

To make the powder stay on all evening apply a powder base of Pond's Vanishing Cream

Of course you need for this protection a cream which will not make your face look oily before going out. Pond's Vanishing Cream is made without any oil precisely for this daytime and evening use. It cannot reappear in a shine. Lightly touch your face with Pond's Vanishing Cream. This leaves your face smooth and protects it from the weather. Do this every time you go out and your skin will not chap or get the least bit roughened all winter long. Re-

One little bedtime duty that you must not forget if you care about a clear complexion is the cleansing with Pond's Cold Cream

POND'S

Cold Cream & Vanishing Cream

One with an oil base and one without any oil

MADE IN CANADA

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY

POND'S EXTRACT CO., 150D Brock Ave., Toronto, Can.

Please send me, free, the items checked:

A free sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream

A free sample of Pond's Cold Cream

Instead of the free samples, I desire the larger samples checked below, for which I enclose the required amount:

A 5c sample of Pond's Vanishing Cream

A 5c sample of Pond's Cold Cream

Name .....

Street .....

Province .....

A man stood on the threshold

MY CHRISTMAS BURGLARY

By "Q"

(Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch.)

ILLUSTRATED BY W. S. BROADHEAD

I HAD come, with high expectations; for Mr. Felix, a bachelor of sixty-five, was reputed to have made for thirty years this particular cabinet his idol.

Any nabob or millionaire can collect. Mr. Felix, being moderately well-to-do, had selected. He would have none but the best; and the best lay stored delicately on cotton-wool, ticketed with the tiniest handwriting, in a nest of drawers I could have unlocked with a hair-pin.

The topmost drawer contained scarabs (of which I am no connoisseur); the second some two dozen intaglios, and of these by the light of my bull's eye lantern, I examined five or six, before sweeping the lot into my bag—Europe and the Bull, Ganymede in the eagle's claw. Agare carrying the head of Pentheus, Icarus with relaxed wing dropping headlong to a sea represented by one wavy line; each and all priceless. In the third drawer lay an unset emerald, worth a king's ransom, a clasp of two amethysts, and a necklace of black pearls graduated to a hair's breadth; these only, and (as I guessed) because they disdained the company of inferior gems. By this time I could see—I read it even in the exquisite parsimony of the collection—that I had to deal with an artist, and sighed that in this world artists should prey upon one another. The fourth drawer was reserved for miniatures, the most of them circleted with diamonds; the fifth for snuff-boxes, gold snuff-boxes bearing royal cyphers, snuff-boxes of tortoise-shell and gold, snuff-boxes of blue enamel set with diamonds. A couple of these chinked together as they dropped into the bag. The sound startled me, and I paused for a moment to look over my shoulder.

The window stood open as I left it. Outside, in the windless frosty night, the snow on the house-roofs sparkled under a wintering moon now near the close of her first quarter. But, though the night was windless, a current of air poured into the room, and had set a flame dancing in the fireplace where, three minutes ago, the sea-coals had held but a feeble glow, half sullen. Down stairs, in some distant apartment, fiddles were busy with a waltz tune, and a violoncello kept the beat with a low thudding pizzicato. For Mr. Felix was giving a Christmas party.

I turned from this hasty glance to pick up another snuff-box. As my fingers closed on it the music suddenly grew louder, and I looked up as the door opened, and a man stood on the threshold—a short, square-set man, dressed in black.

"Eh?" He gave a little start of surprise. "No, no, excuse me, my friend, but you are seeking in the wrong cabinet."

Before I could pull myself together, he had stepped to the window and closed it. "You had best keep still," he said; "and then we can talk. There are servants on the stairs below and should you attempt the way you came, there are three constables just around the corner. I hired them to regulate the carriage traffic; but now that the last guest has arrived, they will be cooling their heels for a spell, and I have a whistle. I have also a pistol." With a turn of his hand he flung open a door in a dark armoire beside the window, dived a hand into its recesses, and produced the weapon. "And it is loaded," he added, still in the same business-like voice, in which, after his first brief exclamation, my ear detected no tremor.

"By all means let us talk," I said.

He was crossing to the fireplace, but wheeled about sharply at the sound of my voice. "Eh? An educated man, apparently!" Laying the pistol on the mantelshelf, he plucked a twisted spill of paper from a vase hard by, stooped, ignited it from the flame dancing in the sea-coals, and proceeded to light the candles in an old-fashioned girandole that overhung the fireplace. There were five candles, and he lit them all.

They revealed him a clean-shaven, white-haired man, meticulously dressed in black—black swallow-tail coat, open waistcoat, and frilled shirt-front, on which his laundress must have spent hours of labor; closely fitting black knee-breeches, black silk stockings, black polished shoes. They silhouetted, too, in the moment before he swung round on me, an enormous nose, like a punchinello's, and the outline of a shapely head, sufficiently massive to counterbalance and save it from caricature. The size of the head again would have suggested deformity, but for the broad shoulders that carried it. As he faced me, squarely with his back to the hearth, his chest and shoulders narrowing to the hips of a runner, and still narrowing (though he stood astraddle) to ankles and feet that would not have disgraced a lady, he put me in mind of a matador I had

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 5.)

Ford Motor Company
OF CANADA, LIMITED.
Ford, Ontario.

"I fell to distributing the largesse."

MY CHRISTMAS BURGLARY

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 3.)

seen years before, facing his bull in a ring at Seville. The firelight behind them emphasized the neat outline of his legs. He carried a black coat on his left arm, and in his left hand an opera hat, pressed flat against his left side. In closing the window, in finding and producing the pistol, and again in lighting the candles, he had used his right hand only.

"A gentleman?" he asked, contracting his brows and eyeing me.

"Well," said I, with an uncomfortable, nervous laugh, that itself accused my breeding, so inferior it was to the situation, "possibly you are one of those who mix up the name with moral conduct—"

"To some extent," he answered, without seeming to interrupt. "Everyone does, I fancy."

"At any rate I won't challenge it," said I. "But you may, if you will, call me a man of some education. I was at Magdalen once, but left Oxford without taking my degree."

"Ah!" He inclined his head a little to one side. "Cards?"

"Certainly not," I answered with heat. "I own that appearances are against me, but I was never that kind of man. As a matter of fact, it happened over a horse."

He nodded. "So you, too, though you won't challenge the name, have to mix up moral conduct with your disposition. We draw the line variously, but everyone draws it somewhere. . . . Magdalen, hey? If I mistake not, the foundationers of Magdalen—including, perhaps, some who were undergraduates with you—were assembled in the college hall at this moment to celebrate Christmas, and hear the choir sing Pergolesi's Gloria."

"The reminder hurts me," said I, "—if that be any gratification to you."

"A sentimentalist?" Mr. Felix's eyes twinkled. "Better and better! I have the very job for you—but we will discuss that by and by. Only let me say that you must have dropped on me, just now, from heaven—you really must. But please don't make a practice of it! I have invested too much in my curios; and others have invested more. . . . That snuff-box, for instance, which you were handling a moment ago . . . at one time in its history it cost—aye, and fetched—close on two hundred millions of money."

I began to have hopes that I was dealing with a madman.

"Or rather," he corrected himself, "the money was paid for a pinch of the snuff it contains. Open it, carefully, if you please!—and you will behold the genuine rappee, the very particles over which France fought with Austria. What says Virgil? 'Hi motus animorum' atque hec certamina tanta Pulveris exigui jactu'—yes but in this instance, you see, the pinch of dust was the exciting cause. Sir, the Austrian ambassador, one fatal afternoon, refused to take from the box in your hand that which, three weeks later, and all too late, he would gladly have purchased with many millions. Observe the imperial crown on the lid, with the bees around it, as if to illustrate Virgil's warning. I bought the thing myself, sir, for six napoleons, off a dealer in the Rue de Fouaire; but the price will rise again. Yes, certainly, I count on its fetching three hundred pounds at least when I have departed this life, and three hundred pounds will go some little way towards my monument."

"Your monument?" I echoed.

He nodded again. "In good time, my friend, you shall hear about it; for you make, I perceive, a good listener. You have gifts, though you do less than justice to them. Suffice it to say that I am a sentimentalist, like yourself. I never married nor begat children; and I have but a shaky belief in the future state; but my sentimentality hankers after—you may even say it postulates—some kind of continuity. I cannot discuss this here and now, for by the sound of the violins, the dance is coming to an end, and my guests will be growing impatient. But you remember Samson's riddle? Well, out of my corpse (I trust) shall come forth honey: whereas out of yours, unless you employ your talents better—" He broke off, and stepped up close to me. "Ah, but excuse me," he said, and reaching out a hand, caught me suddenly by the collar.

The arrest—I made sure it was an arrest—took me unprepared, and threw me off my balance. I broke away a pace, drawing back my fist to strike; and in that moment I felt his hand relax with a curious fluttering movement as though his fingers drummed on the back of my neck. I heard him laugh, too; and before I could hit out he sprang back, holding in his hand a white rabbit!

"An old trick—eh?—and a simple one." He pressed out the spring of his opera hat, dropped the rabbit inside, dived his hand after it, and drew out two white rabbits by the ears. "But it will amuse my young friends downstairs, and I practise this kind of thing at odd whiles."

He set the rabbits on the floor, where they gave themselves a shake, and hopped off toward the shelter of the window curtains.

"Now you are the very man I wanted," said he, "and I am going to make you sing for your supper." He stepped to the armoire, and drew out a long cloak of scarlet, furred with ermine. "I had meant to wear this myself," he went on; but stopped all of a sudden at sight of my face, and began to laugh quietly, in a way that made me long to take him by the throat. "Dear me, dear me! I understand! Association of ideas—Court of Assize, eh? But this is no judicial robe, my friend; it belongs to Father Christmas. Here's his wig now—quite another sort of wig, you perceive—with a holly wreath around it. And here's his beard, beautifully frosted with silver." He held wig and beard towards the window, and let the moonlight play over them. "On with them, quick! . . . And the boots." Again he dived into the armoire, and produced a pair of Bluchers, the long ankle leathers gummed over with cotton-wool, to represent snow. "It's lucky they reach a good way up the leg, seeing the cloak is a trifle short for a man of your inches." He stepped back a pace and surveyed me as I fitted on the beard.

Herrings—red herrings—lled to the brim!

"There are punishments and punishments," said I. "And I hope, whatever your game may be, you will remember that there's punishment in dressing up like a tom-fool."

"Ah, but you'll catch the spirit of it!" he assured me; and then, rubbing his hands, he appeared to muse for a moment. "I ought," said he, with a glance towards the fireplace. "I really ought to send Father Christmas down by way of the chimney. The flue opens just above here, and I believe it would accommodate you; but I am not very sure if my housekeeper had it swept last spring. No," he decided, "the music has ceased, and we must lose no time. I will spare you the chimney."

He called to his rabbits, picked them up as they came hopping from behind the curtains, popped them into his hat, shut it with a snap, and lo! they had vanished.

"You'll excuse me," I ventured, as he stepped to the door; "but—but the—the few articles here in the bag—"

"Oh, bring them along with you; bring them along by all means! We may have a present or two to make, down below."

From the head of the staircase we looked down into a hall gaily lit with paper lanterns. Holly and ivy wreathed the broad balustrade and the old pictures around the walls. A bunch of mistletoe hung from a great chandelier that sparkled with hundreds of glass prisms, and under it a couple of footmen in gilt liveries and powder crossed at that moment with trays of jellies and syllabubs. They were well-trained

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 54.)

A Story of Three Women and the Prairies

"UNLIT DECEMBERS"

By KATHERINE HALE

ILLUSTRATED BY J. F. WHITE

It was when the glow of Christmas time drew near that Selina felt the numbed uncanniness of her situation most keenly—Selina, whom a fanciful mother had named moon-fashion, because she looked "so white and kind of peaked-like."

At thirty-five she was still white and peaked-like, despite an open air ranch life, with what the clergy call "the man of your choice," in that persistent prairie wind—blowing health-wise and from the most approved quarter of sunny Alberta.

Selina and her husband came from Ontario. They came at the beginning of the war. Strode, his unchristian name Abel, was physically unfit for service, likewise Selina, so they bought a corner of the Grayson ranch and started a tiny truck farm, which for some time seemed to be a right profitable enterprise. It was only as this Ranch, almost deserted while its owner fought in France, awoke, on his return, into new strength and larger proportions, that the truck farm faded, that the Strodes' plans seemed to wither, that the great Tyrant, the overwhelming prairie, began to menace them, not only in their dreams but as an actual undercurrent of their lives.

Reams have been written about the ocean and its effect upon the destinies of individuals and peoples, but little has been said of the prairie—greater, vaster, more magnetic in its earth currents, more maddening in its allure.

Selina Strode had heard its voice long ago, when a wonderful, unthought-of occurrence happened, and she was taken by a benevolent uncle on a Press excursion to Banff. She was working at the time as a stenographer in this uncle's newspaper office in a small Ontario town. She was twenty-five years old and nothing had ever seemed to happen to her in all her life. That quick whirl through the West, the first sight of mountains, the incomparable brown hugeness of Banff was the awakening of her mind. But on the return trip somewhere between Calgary and Edmonton, when a break-down occurred after most people were asleep in their berths, and, the screen-shielded window open, Selina lay alone with the prairie for two brief hours of a mid-summer night, then the miracle, which usually descends once in every human life, transpired and the soul of white, "peaked" Selina woke up and listened.

Perhaps it was not a very high or mighty happening. She remembered afterwards, indeed, that it was punctuated by many snores from a fat man overhead. But it was her baptismal glimpse of immensity. At first the ceasing of grating wheels and the delight of swaying creakily into the darkness brought only a sense of unusual quiet. Gradually there awoke a long, low murmur of insect life, penetrating the stuffy sleeper. Then the wretched rumble of the fat man's snore. Silence again. Then, as the mid-summer chorus grew upon her consciousness, she raised herself on her elbow and peering into the darkness, suddenly beheld the moon rise out of a cloud and send a spear of light out over a limitless sea of grass. And yet not grass. Not the July green Ontario carpet that she knew. Not that, but something—a great undulating, naked but hairy line of the very body of the Earth itself, the Earth all alive and full of hidden possibilities murmuring in its sleep. The murmur seemed to her rhythmic—almost like the sound of a great unconscious cat. And occasionally, across the murmur, a sigh—a long sigh, like a wind—but no wind she had ever heard before—and in the sigh which heaved that great living grassy line there was a call—an invitation, as though Immensity had deigned to unveil itself for one moment to a weak little mortal and say, "Come and forget yourself—be lost, my child."

And, just when the mystery of the thing was pressing into her very being, lanterns were twinkled along the side of the sleeper, there were hoarse shouts and orders, and the great Express slowly gathering energy unto itself, shot away Eastward.

But Selina never forgot those hours, and when, five years later, after another arid interval of typing, Abel Strode informed her in a burst of confidence that he thought he'd go West and settle somewhere near Edmonton, her sudden flush and palpitant interest were so unexpectedly alluring to him that he thoughtlessly proposed to her on the spot, and she exultantly accepted—recalling that long sighing grassy length of the wonderful side of the Earth, and all the half-remembered, half forgotten dreams of a mid-summer night. While Abel thought "It's awfully lonesome to go out there with a bunch of fellows and their stories. Me for a place of my own, and a family."

THAT was five years ago. A place was obtained for rent through Phil Grayson's manager. Returned men did not trouble them. But there was no family.

Selina enjoyed watching their shack grow up, and novelty satisfied her for the first years. Then over the plains the rim of a purple foothill beckoned her perpetually.

The prairie, sometimes compared with the ocean, is animated by different ends. The ocean is masculine and the prairie is feminine. It makes so many promises, throws so many flowers, fulfills richly and has demoniac ways. The first wind-storm nearly paralyzed the Strodes. It seemed to them the epitome of everything cattishly violent.

"It wouldn't have mattered so much about the cow shed," moaned Selina, "but to take my one little cherry tree and uproot it as if it were a geranium,—that's what I call unkind."

As time went on, the isolation of the great snow-wrapped plains filled them, not so much with wonder, as with ennui, and with an insane desire for the things that were now impossible. They felt a sudden interest in music, the theatre, the visits of friends—all sorts of thing that, quite at their hand in kind populous Ontario had been unconsidered, for neither of them were of the social order of beings. They were both indeed of that material so universal, yet so seldom depicted, whose desires are as weak as thin grasses, easily swayed by a prairie wind.

Yet the little truck farm had yielded a living. Then the Graysons returned from abroad, and it was as Christmas drew near, the work that kept them busy all summer completed, life withdrawn to the interior of a commonplace clapboard house, faint winds baying far over the rim of the prairie, blue-white snow drifting down, the long stretch of winter desolation upon them, that Selina felt the numbed uncanniness of the situation most keenly.

They were facing an uncertain future. Already in the late fall the markets that had eagerly seized their produce during the lean years of the war were discussing with enthusiasm the prospects of the Grayson Ranch.

"Yes, Sir," said Robson of Midway's General Store, "Phil will make things jump next season! Guess what he's been doing since he was demobbed! That kid has been hobnobbing with engineers, visiting show ranches everywhere, and he's got what he calls a new staff coming on in March. Big doings then. You'll have to fight for your little market, Mr. Strode."

And Selina had an encounter. She had driven into the store with the butter which, usually quite passable, was "off color" in Mr. Robson's opinion. And while they were agreeing on this point there was the rapid entrance of Mrs. Grayson, dexterously managing her small car, perfectly dressed in exactly the kind of superior coon-skin coat that ought to, and does, fit prairie life, a tinge of sunburn and a look of youth about her, and that irritating, perfectly-poised composure and strict economy of word that is the hallmark of the prosperous.

Then the jocular Robson said to the newcomer as the women exchanged greeting:

"I guess Mrs. Grayson can give this lady a line on the butter question. She's in trouble, and you're an expert on these things."

Selina, instantly on the defensive, met a smile from her neighbor and the admission that she found butter-making rather fun. "I'm not an expert though," she added, "I'm just experimenting."

"Mighty good experiments so far," said the urbane tradesman.

"Oh well—I try everything," then, to Selina: "I'm sure you love your farm! Aren't you coming to see us some day? We've a lot of things from France to show you."

She turned to her purchasing, stowed the things in her motor and was quickly out of sight. "There's a woman!" said Mr. Robson with a sigh of respect. "When her Country calls her she volunteers. That same has driven an ambulance over Flanders Fields, in the midst of danger. And when I asked her—I couldn't hear it—Mrs. Strode, the idea took hold of me so—when I asked her if she had seen the Crosses row on row," she says to me, "if you mention a poppy, I'll die just like as though she was trying to make a joke. But I don't keep this Post Office for nothing. Why, that woman gets dozens of letters from France about every week, and she was in the papers all right, the things she done when times were the very hardest. Her picture was in an English paper, Mrs. Strode, and the Edmonton 'Times' copied it—but you seen that—I re-

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 10.)

A Sense of Humor

A CHRISTMAS STORY BY ARTHUR STRINGER

ILLUSTRATED BY C. W. JEFFERYS

BENJAMIN SPINDEL had a Good Fairy. He was never quite sure what this Good Fairy should have been called. Sometimes she seemed best described as A-Sense-of-Humor. More often, however, he preferred to know her as Fame.

For fame, to Spindel, was something which came to you overnight, like a cold in the head, or a milk-bottle at the door. You simply woke up and found it there. The mere thought of it, waiting like a gnome on your doorstep, was something to send a tingle of romance through the small hours of the chilliest night, if you only made it a point to remember.

Not that Spindel ever quite forgot. For there were two things about Spindel that always surprised his friends. One was his industry. The other was his optimism.

Unlike so many others whose blood had been fevered by the virus of stage-life, this doggedly industrious disciple of Romance never let the day be sufficient unto itself. Idleness, in fact, was a luxury he could not afford. He was at least a plodder. And he believed, as he used to put it, in taking the bull by the horns.

So his immediate object in life was not so much to discover the fairy on the threshold as to keep the wolf from the door itself. Yet he nursed the entirely romantic delusion that Fame was something on which one might stub one's toe in the dark. Success was a sort of accident, the same as finding a dime on the street curb; you went to bed a plodding juggler of a dozen or two wooden puppets, and you woke up the Greatest Dramatist of the Age.

For Spindel's ambition, even when he came a raw youth from the Middle West, was not merely to be an actor. He nursed, in fact, an abhorrence for grease-paint and call-boards and dressing-rooms and hydrogenated coiffures. He made no secret of the fact that his work on the stage was only a means to an end. Like an illustrious Elizabethan prototype to whom he often referred, he merely played parts that in the end he might learn to write them. For Spindel, like Shakespeare, wanted to be a playwright.

Like his prototype already referred to, Spindel was not essentially a man of letters. He prided himself on being one of the people. This claim was advanced, perhaps in extenuation of certain oddities of orthography, for to the end, Spindel was always a little weak in his spelling. But he was both adaptive and courageous, and no one could accuse him of not keeping his ears cocked and his eyes open. He nosed through life like a beagle nosing through bracken, he backed over street quarrels like a parent over a cradle, he blinked at park lovers like a hawk at a young rabbit, always hoping to scare up a new "situation" or a new "situation." So while the weekly pay envelope of the actor was keeping the pot boiling, his experiences behind the spotlights were initiating him into the tricks of the theatrical trade. He was devouring knowledge as silently and as persistently as an army worm devours herbage.

Yet, after three years of playing small parts, and playing them none too well, he concluded that the back of the curtain had little more to teach him. He wanted to get out and see life in the raw, yet nowhere, ironically enough, could he ever see its rawness less veiled than under the mask of the mummer. Here again, however, a sort of blithe practicality on his part kept interposing. He continued to mark time as a play-actor, bending his neck to the yoke for the sake of a small but ever assured weekly envelope. It could be called nothing more than marking time, for all his ardor, all his energy, was now being poured into his own secret pursuits. He was now giving his time and thought to the writing of plays, magnificently planned dramas which, by some odd mischance, never saw the light of day, laboriously conceived comedies which, unfortunately, no one ever heard of. His vocational hours, in fact, became a sort of somnambulism; he went through them with all the impersonal detachment of a sleep-walker. He was, by this time, living only in his writing. As his parts grew smaller and smaller his pay envelope, in turn, grew thinner and thinner. But despair was unknown to Spindel. He still believed in the Fairy outside the door. He still passed, vaguely elated and optimistic, among his old-time friends of the stage, wearing the veiled smile of an adventurer who has learned the secret of some lost treasure.

"There's a guy they'll never grind down!" said Gunderman's stage manager as he watched Spindel one day pocket his rejected script and trudge smiling undaunted down to Broadway.

"They won't grind him down—he'll just wear down!" retorted the apathetic Gunderman, to whom the years had brought wisdom and a weak digestion. And so fixed was Gunderman's mind as to this fact, that he appropriated without hesitation a page or two of Spindel's third-act dialogue. It was nothing more, he argued with himself, than taking a plank or two from a passing derelict.

As Spindel climbed the stairs to that Twenty-second street back room which he dignified as his "studio," his bearing took on an added touch of insouciance. He even whistled, and affected a bit of a swagger.

And he had his reasons for this. For Spindel had been heaven-born optimist enough to bring a wife to New York with him out of the terra incognita of the Middle West. And that wife was young, and perhaps not always appreciative of the humorous turns of over-ambiguous human destinies. She saw the script under her husband's arm, and she went to the window and looked out.

"My dear, those managers are positively funny!" blithely avowed Spindel, as he put his play in its pigeon-hole with the air of a victor putting his sword in its scabbard. "And all I say is, I'm thankful I can keep my sense of humor and see what a queer lot they are!"

"I wish they'd taken the play," said his wife, with the unimaginative immediacy of her sex, as she went back to her work of turning a last winter's skirt.

"But I'm getting closer to 'em, all the time," chirped the indomitable Spindel. "I'm getting wise to their curves. I'm getting so I can humor 'em!"

And Spindel set to work writing a new play. He had to skimp and economize a good deal, by this time, for he could now get nothing more than an occasional "super" part to keep the pot boiling. But he accepted the dingy back-room studio and the meagre meals cooked on a one-hole gas stove as calmly as an exiled prince accepts the exigencies of a banishment recognized as only a matter of time. He became oblivious to them. He went back to his play like an opium-smoker back to his drug. He revised and re-arranged and revamped. He closed his eyes, valiantly, and cut away whole act-ends, at one grim stroke, like a surgeon operating on his own flesh and blood. From the older and time-worn scripts he drew off the blood of life that was to sustain the ever-growing new-comer. Upon this newer child of hope he even transplanted a whole organ from some maturer offspring who had not lived up to its expectations. He worked blindly, but he worked determinedly. The secret of dramatic life or death was something beyond him. It was, he claimed, mostly a matter of luck, of accident. And every dog had his day. And some people had Fairies. And Spindel still believed in his Fairy.

So he watched over his new-born play, and nursed it into plethoric robustiousness, and redressed it in epigram, and decorated it with a newer ribbon or two of fancy. Then he carried it off to the agencies and the managers' offices with the blind pride of a mother carrying her first-born to a baby show.

That none of them could see any beauty in it struck him as ridiculous, as laughable. It almost took his breath away. But once more he came to realize, as he had so often tried to explain, that all managers were a queer lot.

"If you can only keep your sense of humor, at this game!" he persisted, with a wag of the head, as he read Gunderman's curt note of refusal.

So Spindel kept his sense of humor. He set to work again, as optimistic as ever. He once more became the prestidigitator; once more he laid out his worn and shoddy children of fancy, like a juggler laying out his "props."

Then he lost himself in his work. He once more ruthlessly disembowelled and rearranged and rearticulated. He once more shifted and sorted and pieced together. The result was something more wonderful, more Gothically embellished, than ever before. He once more buttressed it up and furbished and polished it, looking it over with contented and commendatory shakes of the head.

"I'm learning the trick, my dear!" he jubilantly declared to his hollow-eyed wife as she stirred the veal-stew on its hot-plate next to the window. "I can see it coming closer, now, every day!"

And again Spindel began the rounds of the agencies and the managers' offices. And again the script came back to Spindel's dingy studio, and again it went out, and again it came back. Once more it moved the playwright to a mild and humorous wonder.

"Aren't they a funny lot—a rum lot?" he demanded. "Can't you see it, once you get a line on them and their ways?"

"No, it's not funny," said his wife, limp and listless in her chair by the window. "It's not funny any more."

He laughed as he put a hand on her thin shoulder.

"Just keep your sense of humor, my dear, and you'll see they are funny! Look how they contradict each other, even in their excuses! Look how one says 'Cut down! Cut down!' and the other says 'Build up! Build up!'"

It was Spindel's blind theory that if you kept at a thing you won out, you simply had to win out, in the end. And such being his theory, he once more set to work. And the following autumn, in vindication of his attitude, he actually went about showing a contract with a Western producing agent who had attached a "phony" curtain to one of Spindel's earlier first-acts and converted it into a vaudeville sketch for a Chicago comedian.

This sketch seemed to bring new life to Spindel. He not only appeased an expostulatory landlord and a long-threatening gas company, but he also indulged in the extravagance of two Hartz Mountain canaries, "to liven up the studio a bit," as he blithely explained to his wife, and planned out intricate and extended shopping expeditions before the cold weather set in.

But the vaudeville sketch, after a run of three weeks, came to an abrupt and untimely end. Just why this was, the dazed author could never quite understand. And it saddened him a little to think that it had lived and died without once having come under the eye of its creator. Yet these one-act things, he cheerily added, were never worth worrying over. In fact, there was something humorous about it all, he still maintained. He thanked his lucky stars he could still see the funny side of it.

He refused to give it much thought, however, for already he had a new play to work on. This new play, like the others, became a sort of pot au feu into which went every fragment that could be shaved from the bones of his past efforts, every shred of an idea that could be caught up from the passing moment. He wrote on and on, still believing in the Fairy outside the door. He sent out his script, still nursing the delusion that he was going to find Fame hanging by one hand to his mail-box down in the dingy front hall. And as he shuffled down in his tattered slippers, ten times a day, he thanked Heaven that he could still see the humor of it all, and went up to chirrup and whistle somewhat pensively into the swinging canary cage and then turn once more back to his writing.

It was one rainy morning when even the canaries refused to sing that the Ultimate Idea came to him. Times, he had to confess, were getting a bit tight. Things were no longer as rosy as they ought to be. It was too late for shillyshallying; conditions seemed to call for a coup de main. And here he was with seven fine plays all about him, seven plays of his own. None of them could be all bad; even those human sheep known as managers confessed that one had a good scene here, and another had a good curtain there, and a third had a good idea somewhere else. But none had quite floated him out to the sea of prosperity. Then, demanded Spindel of himself, why not lash the lot together? Why not tie them up in one raft, cut away what was not needed, and let that one final venture swing out to sink or swim?

This amalgamative idea became first an intoxication and then an obsession. The work-worn playwright threw himself into the task with a fury that disturbed even his wife, who absented herself more and more from that unkempt and paper-littered back room where Spindel strode up and down in his tattered slippers enacting the roles he was reorganizing. She even upbraided him for scandalizing their neighbors with his enigmatically passionate utterances, with his frenzied self-altercations, with his climacteric shouts of scorn and triumph. He even forgot his wife and her existence. He uttered no protest as she took her departure for the day. He merely looked at her in his vacant and unseeing way when she somewhat defiantly told him that she was off to look for work of her own. He only nodded diffident assent when she somewhat challengingly informed him that her cousin, Jim Ecklin, was taking her to the Hippodrome.

For Spindel, in truth, was engaged in one of the most extraordinary juggling feats of all his feverish-fingered juggler's career. Into that one and final play he was crushing and crowding everything that was worth carrying off from everything he had ever written, much like a shipwrecked traveller packing into one portmanteau the cream of all his belongings. He was moulding his whole life into one forlorn amalgam. He was making that last play a sort of headcheese of all his lost hopes, an Irish stew of all his dead issues. He scraped the bones of each desiccating skeleton for its last enriching tatter of meat. He journeyed back through each abandoned structure for some last sustaining beam of action. He crawled over each devastated scene for some chance sparkle of epigram embedded in its ruins.

He made it a sort of mausoleum of the perished labors of youth. Then he once more polished it and furbished it, and so pretentious and flashing did that new facade stand to him that for the first time in his life he indited a peremptory letter in which he put forth certain peremptory demands, and sent both letter and play-script off to Gunderman, knowing only too well that this time it was all or nothing.

Then he carried it off to the agencies and the managers' offices.

In the meantime winter had advanced and the cold had set its teeth in the flank of the attenuated Spindel abode. The rigors of mid-December reminded the playwright that both the body and its habitation were in keener need of fuel. So Spindel took advantage of the holiday season and earned a few dollars as an extra ticket-taker in a Fourteenth street moving picture house. The pay was not lordly. But his gas bills and his arrears of rent he could for the time ignore. Those more exigent claims which rose from the pit of the human stomach, however, could not be ignored. He also remembered that he had his wife and his two canaries to feed. He hated moving pictures; they were the darkest enemy of the dramatic artist. But he could live it down, once he had got started, once he had made his hit. And as he trudged homeward with his half-pound of Hamburger steak he looked once more anxiously into the mail-box. But it always seemed to be empty.

Spindel saw Christmas week approach and wondered if even a sense of humor could not lose its elasticity in time. So the next morning he took the bull by the horns, as it were. He made his toilet, such as it was, with the minutest care, and invaded Broadway and the Gunderman stronghold.

Gunderman, he was told, had been called to Chicago. He had either taken the script with him or mislaid it. But no word had come to the office as to its fate. And during Christmas week nothing was likely to be done.

Spindel, that night, spent a long time over his task of feeding the canaries. His own hunger he appeased in a much briefer period. It was after nine o'clock when his wife came home, silent and self-contained. She told him, casually, that she had already eaten supper. But later in the evening, as she stood peering into the canary cage, she broke into tears, for no appreciable reason. It was the next day that Spindel began pawing things surreptitiously taken from that dingy back room.

For two days he wandered about the city, looking for work, as destitute of direction as a lost child looking for home. Late in the afternoon of the fourth day he trudged back to his "studio," a little dizzy in the head and a little weak in the knees. But he wanted to make sure the canaries were fed.

He found it hard to climb the steps. In the mail-box, at the side of the shabby old hall, he found two letters waiting for him. He climbed the stairs, step by step, and as he let himself into his room he saw a square of paper tacked on his door. He swung back the door and peered up at it.

He realized as he studied it, that it was a dispossess notice. He slowly pulled it from the soiled panel, stepped into the room, and closed the door after him.

"Allie!" he called, for the light was not strong.

He looked about and saw with a deep breath of relief that his wife was not there. Then he slowly crossed the room and sat down by the window, under the canary cage. Then he put the letters on the ledge in front of him. He was very leisurely about it, yet he could feel his heart in his throat, pounding like an automatic riveter.

The first letter was in his wife's handwriting. He opened the envelope and slowly unfolded the single sheet it held. On it he read:

"I've tried hard to stay with you, Benny. But a woman's got to have clothes and things. And I couldn't stand the sort of Christmas tomorrow would have to be. I've thought it all over. I'm going to New Orleans with Jim this afternoon. Jim says he'll see I never want for anything. It's the only thing left for me. I hate to go this way, but I can't help it, and I can't stand it any longer.

ALLIE."

Spindel read the penciled sheet for the second time. Then he slowly folded it up and put it on the window-ledge in front of him. He sat there for several minutes, without moving. Then he turned the second letter over in his hand.

He found it hard to open, for his eyes were not clear. A yellow mist, like street fog, seemed to float between him and the paper. The first thing that struck him was the blue tint of the oblong enclosure. He looked at it, vacantly, for several seconds. Then he held it up to the light and saw it was a cheque. Then he slowly unfolded the letter and read it.

It neither startled nor elated him. He dimly remembered that it was from Gunderman's office. He was vaguely conscious that Gunderman himself was writing and saying that the four-act play entitled "Fool's Gold," by Benjamin Spindel, would be put in rehearsal the following Monday, for a New York production. It also, as far as he could make out, requested a receipt for the one thousand dollars in advance royalties duly enclosed, the additional five hundred to cover advance on the London production, on the definite understanding that the author surrender to the said Gunderman all English rights and— But Spindel was no longer interested.

He slowly unfolded the first letter and slowly read it through.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 12.)

His wife came home silent and self-contained.

"UNLIT DECEMBERS"

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 7.)

member I showed it to you. Well, now, guess what she's been doing since she went up to those mountains in Switzerland all alone of a story she heard about a new butter process. Instead of a rest she went up there and she worked some more! She says we've got to go back to the ranch business, just as if it was all in her own hands, the workings of that big place, queer, isn't it, with Phil so precious."

Selina thought it over all night, with the wind tapping outside, and the snow coming drifting in the crevices of the house.

Over the edge of the fields was the great low-roofed Ranch House, its fire heated, hung with soft Turkish rugs that covered the walls as well as the floor, with designs more suggestive and enchanting than any pictures. A grand piano stood where the fire light fell upon it in a great living-room lined with books. More books and papers came to them by every mail, for these people had conquered the prairie years ago. Out of the West they had beckoned the East and it had obeyed. But they, the Strodes, they had only been beckoned, had followed a call that they did not understand, had struggled with an invitation too strong for them. Five years had passed in which passion had died, ambition was failing and life meant a getting along somehow.

At home, this week before Christmas, the little Ontario town would be all aglow, holly wreaths would hang in the shop windows, and the friendly people of the place would be choosing Christmas cards and gifts. That strange almost forgotten spirit, Expectation, would be in the air.

Expectation! That was the keynote to this Christmas time, this far off glow, this brightness that was composed of remembered things more than of the present. Selina recalled her commonplace youth, yet even into it the magic of some unforeseen event used to spread its wings in those early winter days. Back to her consciousness came two lines that she had read long ago:

"How brightly gleams in Life's unlit Decembers, What love remembers!"

"Unlit!" that was the secret of her life and Abel's. To have probed the why of it would lead a long, long train of thought back to that mid-summer of years ago. They had desired to escape monotony, yet had neglected even to light a friendly lamp.

"I told you about Mrs. Grayson, at the store. She asked me when we were going to see them."

"Why don't they come to see us?" returned Abel, "they've got cars enough, and they don't mind running them over the snow ruts either."

"Of course they did come, before they went overseas," she reminded him. "We've never gone there, except that one time they asked us to tea. I mean we never called."

"Called!"—It had a strange sound, harking back to pre-prairie days.

"Don't know that I care to," said Abel.

"Why not?" she insisted.

"Oh, I don't know. Their kind make me tired. They know it all, they've done it all, they've got it all, too. Easy enough to buy land here when they did and get things going on a grand scale, when you've made your start—"

But he never finished his sentence, because the honk of a motor horn sounded just outside the window, and the door was loudly, peremptorily rapped.

"Say," shouted Phil Grayson, as he burst into the sitting room, "can you drive a car, Strobe? Can you drive like the devil through the snow?"

"I can't drive any way—never had a car."

"Good heavens!" he was interrupted, "then I'll have to go after the doctor, wherever he is, and there isn't a man to leave on the place in case of emergency. I'll have to take you with me, and send you back with medicines if the doctor isn't there—and I'll press on and find him. There's an awful storm coming up." Turning to Selina, "Could you go to the house with me and help my wife? Mrs. Davids, the cook, you know, she's fallen on the ice and broken her leg and—she's in mortal agony. I had sent Davids to the City yesterday. My wife's alone," he repeated, "can you folks come right away?"

They hurried into wraps, they piled into the waiting roadster, and in five minutes Selina was deposited at the Ranch House and the men were away.

It was a strangely brilliant place to her lamp-accustomed eyes, a big echoing empty house as she ran from one room to another following her instructions: "right through to the back."

Off the kitchen was a large, half bedroom, half sitting-room, and on the bed a woman who swayed to and fro in pain and fear.

It seemed to Selina, who did not take in the entire situation at first glance, that the rancher's wife was living up to her reputation of sheer efficiency coupled with her (Selina's) own conception of tyranny, for she spoke to the woman in a series of short orders, very much like those that a superior officer might have used towards a negligent and helpless private. "Don't move... when you stir it's harder... yes, I know... It's bad but it might be worse. See, here's Mrs. Strobe." To Selina, "I thought you'd come. Can you keep the fires on and the water boiling? There's wood in the kitchen and in the living-room." To her patient again: "Don't cry Kate... Yes, I know. But he'll soon be here. Oh, you mustn't move... No, no, it's just the leg... keep still."

And on and on she spoke in a peremptory round of admonition, into which no strain of tenderness was allowed to enter. She was full of resource, this Mrs. Grayson. "She knows lots of things to do," thought Selina, as through the hours she fetched and carried with a despatch that was the result of orders given in few words. Selina worked, but Alice Grayson sat immovable, holding her patient in a certain position so that the broken leg should not be disturbed. But the patient's cries continued.

The December night wore on. It was wind-circled, snow plumed, tempestuous. The house, blazing with lights, seemed like a solitary futile torch rearing its little flame in a vast wilderness.

"It seemed so queer to hear her cry," Alice Grayson would exclaim, "she's such a jolly soul. Always laughing. And she never thinks of the future. I made all her arrangements to go to the hospital next month. She said it would be 'like a holiday.' She is of the kind that don't know what pain means. Well, we've got to manage somehow, you and I, if our men are snow-bound all night."

And Selina, trembling with fright, tried not to show it in her acquiescence. The whole thing was so unreal. She, who had never been present at birth or death, might presently be called upon to meet both these austere friends. She suddenly awakened to a feeling of intense excitement. The house was visited by insistent voices, the rising tempest without, and the cries of the woman within. She was alone with another woman to meet the greatest of emergencies. And yet there came a sudden flooding warmth, a lightness of heart, an emotion that she had thought forever lost—a return of the great gift, Expectation. As she moved to and fro, heating water in the nearby kitchen and throwing fuel on the great open fireplace of the living room, she was intensely aware also of the quiet young figure who sat so motionless holding the tortured woman in just the right position for her ease.

A clock somewhere struck eleven. The telephone, silent all evening, rang suddenly. Selina rushed to it and heard Grayson's voice at the other end. "Our car is snow-bound. We got the doctor. We're on our way, driving. Tell my wife to look in the medicine supplies and get a powder marked '24.' It will give her relief. This is by the doctor's orders. We ought to be there in an hour."

"A GODSEND!" they sighed, as the magic of the powder took effect and the woman became relaxed and drowsy. "I think I'm frozen," Alice Grayson added.

They huddled in shawls and rugs, afraid to leave the room for the greater warmth of the fireplace. Once Mrs. Grayson rose to fill hot water bottles and, embracing these, they felt a slow warmth return. Selina looked towards the half-conscious woman.

"It's hard to realize how many women go through this, as a matter of course. It would kill me."

"And to break one's leg suddenly is rather a complication," replied Alice.

"Yes, but Mrs. Grayson, such pain, even if you're as strong as she is, seems so horribly cruel, in a way so unnecessary. You must have felt that, with all you saw of misery in France."

"You forget the danger!"

"No, I'm thinking of it."

"Are you?" This, rather wonderingly. "I didn't suppose you knew what it meant."

"I don't understand."

"No, that's it. You don't understand. You can't, at all, if you've never touched it, or never even wanted to. Lots of people are like that I know."

"Like what, Mrs. Grayson?"

"Why—strangers in a way—people who go with the rest, but don't really belong to these terrible things of life—don't care to belong. . . I mean because it is dangerous to care. It gets you into trouble. That's what I kept seeing and feeling over there, and queerest of all, how everybody, even the strangers to life and death and pain and shock were willing, after the first plunge, to endure everything because they began to realize how fine a thing danger is. It wakes you up. It lights you. . . see, she's stirring. . . Perhaps we ought not to talk."

"I'm a rather old stranger in this life," said Selina, "I'm thirty-five, older than you, a good deal."

"Oh, my dear, I was quite old at twenty. That's when I got my first glimpse of danger. They actually told me I had incipient tuberculosis and that I mustn't sing for my living—didn't know how long or how soon it might take me to die, as a matter of fact. And here I am, nearly thirty, and having a beautiful time. After the first queer feeling you wouldn't be without that queer sense of uncertainty for anything. You have to hurry so with your life to get things done before a something that may happen, and you live on tiptoe, and you're reckless. And when you're reckless, every splendid thing happens. I've had, and done, more in my life, so far, a good deal more than a healthy person ever could. You see it's all a hazard—a sort of wonder—and if you've never met wonder, I'm sorry for you."

"I did once," said Selina. She thought of the prairie at midnight. But when her companion looked inquiringly, she shook her head.

"I suppose you mean a wonder like this," motioning towards the stirring patient. "If you ever touch that, then I do envy you. That is the best danger, the brightest one, from which I am barred. Fancy losing that. . . Do you know what the soldiers liked better than anything on earth? It was songs, stories, odd recollections of children. In the hospitals at the recreation

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 55.)

From the doorway, Alice Grayson called Selina sharply: "Come at once, will you? I need you."

A Story of Montreal's Ghetto Which Shows Again the Little Child Leading Them

THE LOST BABY

By ELIZABETH GOTTO

ILLUSTRATIONS BY CAMPBELL-DUNCAN

LITTLE Rachel Tamolensky, "coming ten by Passover," hurried along to her teacher's house. It was nearly eight o'clock on a fair evening in October. She was dressed in her very best. She wore a navy blue silk dress, with accordion pleated skirt, a tan coat trimmed with pale blue velvet collar and cuffs, white silk stockings and black satin pumps. Her curly dark hair was tied with wide plaid ribbon. A heavy china bracelet was on each thin brown arm and a chain of pink beads hung around her neck.

Through the park she went and along to Durocher Street, turned up and stopped before each house, peering at the unfamiliar numbers. At last she found the one she was seeking, 327, and "clapped on" the bell.

"Oh, I do hope she'll be in, my ticher," she breathed. "I vant she should come by de door herself."

As if in answer to the child's wish, Miss Cameron appeared.

"Why, Rachel Tamolensky!" she began. "Little Rachel!"

"Please, ticher, I vant you should come by our te-ayter to-night, please. . . ."

"Your theatre? Do you own a theatre, Rachel?"

"Please, yes, my fat'er, he got von—De Moonlight—by St. Lawrence Boulvard, and please, so he acts and my mot'er, she acts, and ve all act, and sometimes I act, but to-night I don't act. Ve have von grand show dis time, so I told my fat'er you should come and he said, 'Sure, bring de ticher' . . . so . . . please. . . ."

Miss Cameron looked at the pleading upturned little face, then, thought of the pile of uncorrected compositions on The Body. But what were thirty-seven compositions on The Body to this one pair of dark, eager eyes? She would go with Rachel to the theatre. The work could wait.

"Why, yes, Rachel. I'll be glad to go. Come in and sit down. I'll get my coat and hat."

In a minute or two she returned and they went out together. Down Durocher Street they walked to Prince Arthur, thence along to St. Lawrence Boulevard and turned down the hill. Miss Cameron had sometimes been on this boulevard in the daytime, never before at night.

It was the heart of the Ghetto of Montreal, the Jewish quarter. Old men with long beards—the stamp of Abraham on their faces—were seated on old chairs in front of their houses, either right on the street or on little upper verandahs, reading the "Jewish Eagle," and smoking. Some were talking excitedly in groups before their shop doors. The street was aglare with gay lights and bright signs.

Women, hatless, with shawls over head and shoulders, were also conversing together and exchanging confidences. Often they called frantically to a Sammy and a Jakey who, all unheeding of danger, were rushing into the road and almost under the wheels of passing cars and waggons.

Miss Cameron was unaccustomed to the sights and clamor and foreign tongues. She caught at Rachel's hand. The little girl looked up, smiled and clasped her teacher's hand protectingly. The warm clasp reassured her. What a dear little pilot the child was! And how friendly! She seemed to know everybody.

DOWN the boulevard they walked, past fish shop, hat shop, Kosher meat shop, boot shop and junk shop. Just then Rachel pulled Miss Cameron across the street.

"Come," she said, "dere's Mr. Cohen sitting by his door. Dey last veek took away his baby in de hospital cart."

The man was sitting on his doorstep, the picture of dejection, his elbows resting on his knees, his head in his hands.

"Hello! Mr. Cohen!" cried Rachel, drawing the teacher along with her. "Vos your leetle Abie better?"

The man raised his head. Miss Cameron had never seen a sadder or a more hopeless face.

"Yes, Ray, yes. De baby, he's back. He brought him home dis aft', de good doctor."

"Den for vy you sit here so sad ven you got de baby?"

Slowly the man answered.

"'Cause . . . de baby . . . he's got now no mot'er."

"No mot'er!" exclaimed the little girl. "Is Mrs. Cohen dead? Vere did she go?"

"I don't know," answered the man. His voice was as dreary as his look. "She didn't die. She dis morning vent. She got a big mad on me 'cause I screamed on her."

"And for vy you screamed on her?" demanded Rachel, womanlike, instantly taking the woman's part. "She vos von good mot'er."

"Sure," said the man, stroking his thick black beard, "sure, but I see her making for herself a new hat and I screamed on her 'Vere's my dinner?' Den she screamed on me I could by myself make it, and she vent up so mad, oh! so mad like she could stick to de ceiling, and she ran out and say she would never come back, never—but I vant she should come back. . . ."

Miss Cameron listened to the Hebrew tragedy.

"You shouldn't never have screamed on her, so you! dinner vos failing! Never!" cried Rachel. "You ev'ry morning go out vit de men by your work and you do von easy t'ing! Your vife she stands by de house and she vorks and she vorks all de time at twenty t'ings, at t'irty t'ings, so she gets hot, so she gets tired, so she gets mad, den you scream so much on her . . . oh! . . . here Rachel's excitement reached its highest point. Her English stopped and a voluble stream of Yiddish poured forth.

The man sat, looking at her and listening in great surprise. Presently when she paused for breath, he answered in their common tongue, and though Miss Cameron understood not a word of the dialogue, she knew by the tones that the man was making his defence.

The child's anger stopped. Her voice changed. Now she seemed to be arguing with the man, arguing and finally winning her point.

She turned to her teacher and spoke in English. "Ticher, I tell him he should come by De Moonlight. Vot for, for vy, should he sit here by himself so sad ven he could come by us and laugh for not-ing?"

"But the baby," said Miss Cameron. "Is there any one to mind the baby?"

"I tell him he should take de baby by his auntie. She lives next street, t'ree four nine," explained Rachel, "but he says he wouldn't vant so she should know dat Mrs. Cohen to-day ran away. He is shamed all over her."

"Could we take the baby with us, Rachel? Maybe he would sleep."

The child touched the man's arm. His head dropped again. He looked at the little girl.

"De ticher, she says ve can take de baby also by de te-ayter."

The man got up slowly.

"All right, so I kin take him, so I vill go. Come in," he said, hospitably, stepping aside.

RACHEL led the way. Miss Cameron followed her through the open doorway, along a dark narrow hall and into a small room at the back of the house. A smoky lamp on a central table exposed a great confusion. An empty bottle of milk beside a small bowl and a half a loaf, showed that the baby had supped on bread and milk. A couple of egg shells were on the table. An unwashed frying pan was on the stove. On a bed in the far corner of the room was a sleeping baby. The little girl threw herself beside him.

"Such a good baby," she cooed softly, "Abie is sure such a good baby, so nice and clean dey make him by de hospital. He's like my baby, like my leetle Sollie. Sollie's going to act to-night," she added in a louder tone turning to the teacher with this information. "Dat's for vy I bring you dis time, 'cause he acts so cute, my Sollie."

"We must put something warmer on Abie. Where is his coat, Rachel?" asked Miss Cameron.

The man took a worn shawl from a chair near the door and handed it to the teacher. She spread it on the bed, raised the baby, placed him on it, wrapped the shawl about him and lifted up the still sleeping little form. He stirred uneasily.

"I'll carry him," she announced.

The man looked at her.

"He's heavy, ticher. Abie, he's coming soon von year six mont'. He vill make you much tired."

The teacher looked from the man to the baby, then back at the man.

"It's not often I get tired this way," she said.

He seemed to understand. "All right. I kin take him ven you vant to give him."

"And I'll take you!" declared Rachel joyously, turning to the man and putting her little hand in his big hard one. He picked up his cap from the table and they passed out.

Miss Cameron held the precious bundle tightly in her arms. She laid her cheek against his soft little one and wondered what would become of this motherless little Israelite? Would she have the privilege of teaching him ten years from now? Would she still be at Collingwood School, "learning them good"?

The quartette reached the busy noisy street. Its glare of light dazzled after the semi-darkness of the little room. Down the street they walked.

"It's not much fart'er," said Rachel. "De Moonlight's just by de corner."

In another minute they had reached the "Tamolensky Te-ayter."

"He takes de tickets, my big brudder," said Rachel, piloting her guests through the crowded entrance.

"Hello, Reuben," she called to the busy ticket-taker. "I got t'ree."

He waved to her and she passed in with Mr. Cohen, the teacher following closely with the baby.

"Ve are going to have a box," Rachel said, with a proud air. "De best box."

"Oh, no, Rachel," put in Miss Cameron. "We can sit anywhere."

"My fat'er he said 'put de ticher in de box,'" said the little girl. "'De best box.' My fat'er he would not like it so you should sit anywere."

She led the way down the aisle and ushered her party up the three steps leading to the best box.

THERE they sat down. The comfortable chairs were upholstered in scarlet plush. Mr. Cohen and Rachel gazed at the growing audience. Miss Cameron undid the shawl from the baby, then she too looked around, with interest, at the motley gathering. Men, women and children were there. Some were dressed in their tawdry best with bright ribbons, cheap jewellery and fantastic ornaments. Some were just as they had been in workshop, factory or home, men in overalls, women in big kitchen aprons. The heavy smell was a curious blend of onions and fish, garlic and coal-oil.

The teacher glanced at the stage. She noticed a slight movement of the curtain at one side and drew the little girl's attention to it.

"It's my fat'er," Rachel said. "He's looking at us. He's calling me. I must go."

Out of the box she hurried, along the edge of the platform and disappeared through a small door on the side.

In five minutes she was back, consternation written all over her dark little face.

"My Sollie, he's sick," she began, "and my mot'er has to stay by him, and my fat'er he says can dis baby act just for to-night?"

Little Abie at that moment opened his eyes and whimpered a refusal. Miss Cameron cuddled him close. He sat up and looked at her in amazement, then he turned around to view his strange surroundings, and spied his father. With a glad cry of recognition, he held out his arms and the man lifted him to his lap.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 14.)

A SENSE OF HUMOR

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 9.)

"I'm going to New Orleans with Jim this afternoon." He read it aloud, as though the words were written in a foreign tongue, as though it were a text he could not comprehend. Then he looked at the blue oblong of the cheque. He looked at it for several minutes, without moving. Then he laughed, quietly, softly, without mirth and without emotion. He had lost his belief in the Fairy just outside the door.

He sat in deep thought, for several moments. Then, he pinned the two letters together, and taking a clean sheet of paper, wrote on it nine short words. Then he laughed again, quietly, but still without emotion. The words he wrote were:

back to where the green tubing connecting the hot-plate with the gas pipe ran along the wall. He padded about until he found the stop-cock. Then he turned it on, full.

He re-crossed the room to the sagging spring-couch, remembering to cover himself with the worn comforter as he lay down on the soiled bedding. He closed his eyes. He only knew that he was tired, very tired, and that to-morrow should have been Christmas. Then he fell asleep.

* * * * *

Spindel, who so often dreamed that Fame was going to be left at his door, like a bottle of milk, woke up to

He sat in deep thought for several moments.

"This is too much for my sense of humor!" He looked meditatively about and finally put the three slips of paper on the table in the centre of the room. Then he carefully lifted the canary cage from its hook and placed it on the floor of the dusky hallway, outside his door. He locked the door, as he stepped inside, and again looked meditatively about the twilight room. Then he took a number of newspapers and slowly tore them into strips. With these he carefully battened the cracks about the door, and the joints of the loose window sashes. He did not even overlook the keyhole. Then, as he crossed the room, he read aloud the words he had written:

"This is too much for my sense of humor!"

He calmly drew the blinds. Then he groped his way find his wife there at midnight, crying like a frightened child.

"Oh, I couldn't do it, Benny; I couldn't do it!" she wailed, bathed in her tears of contrition, as he stumbled to the door and swung it open. She clung to his dazed and silent figure. She clung to him in a self-immuring ecstasy of despair.

"Oh, Benny, what'll we do? What'll we do?" she wailed.

"Do? How?" asked the still dazed Spindel.

"They've ordered us out!" she wept. "And we've no money. And they came and turned the gas off on us this morning!"

And Spindel, groping for her shaking body in the darkness, locked his arms about her and laughed.

IVORY Soap should be in your bathroom because it offers you and your guests the seven qualities that people of refinement want in a soap for personal use.

It is white

It rinses easily

It is fragrant

It is mild

It lathers quickly

It is pure

It floats

Has the soap you now use all these essentials for a completely satisfactory bath and toilet?

IVORY SOAP . . . . .  . . . . . 99<sup>44</sup>/<sub>100</sub> % PURE

IT FLOATS

MADE IN CANADA

The Manufacturers of Ivory Soap also make in Canada the following general household soaps: P and G The White Naphtha Soap, Gold Soap, Pearline and Sopade, thus enabling the housekeeper to use a Procter & Gamble high quality soap for every purpose.

The Lost Baby

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11.)

"Can Abie act to-night, Mr. Cohen?" repeated the theatre-owner's little daughter. "He doesn't say no'ting. He just stands on the platform and gets lost. And so he cries, it vos good. It's only for von leetle minute at de end. I could carry him up. . . ."

The man looked at the little girl. He wanted to help her if he could. "Your Sollie, he does it?" he asked. "You t'ink my Abie could do it?"

"Sure, he kin do it. He looks so cute." Then she turned to the teacher. "And vill you be de mot'er and find him?"

"Oh, Rachel, I couldn't!" exclaimed Miss Cameron. "I've never done anything like that before."

The child considered the situation. "I t'ink you could," she said. "My mot'er she last night

"Now," said Rachel, "it's coming de last. Dis is de baby part. Come, baby," she said, holding out her arms coaxingly to Abie. The gay bracelets attracted him. He wriggled and tried to slide from his father's knee.

"He vants he should valk, Ray," said the man, putting him down.

"All right. He kin valk. Come Abie, come for a valk vit Rachel," she said, taking the little fellow's hand.

Abie was quite willing to come. He walked beside her, clinging to her with one hand and holding to the railing with the other. Down the steps the pair slowly went, around the platform and through the little side door.

Father and teacher were left alone in the box. The man now watched the stage.

but before the eldest Tamolensky could spring to the rescue, a woman from the audience ran down the aisle, up the steps of the platform, crossed it with a bound, stooped down and gathered the weeping little boy in her arms.

"OH MY BABY!" she sobbed.

The next instant a big man, rough and unkempt, looking as lost as the little baby, rushed from the best box to the platform and kneeling down, he folded them both to him.

"Oh, mine vife, mine vife! You find de baby and I find you!"

Tears were streaming down all three faces. The audience cheered. They stamped. They encored. The curtain dropped but still the applause did not cease. Up went the curtain—and down and up again—many times. It seemed as if the on-"Such a good baby, Abie is. Sure such a good baby, so clean dey make him by de hospital."

did it. You just run up and catch the baby and scream 'OH, MY BABY!' and de people clap so much times. But you must scream it like you mean it for de people dey know if you don't, and den dey don't never clap such a lot. But you love the baby so you could mean it."

Miss Cameron looked at the now packed seats and trembled. "Oh, I couldn't Rachel. I couldn't. You must get somebody else."

"All right, ticher," said the child. "Perhaps von of my big sisters vill scream it. Dere's lots of people in de dress-room, but dere's no baby."

The orchestra stopped. The vaudeville performance began. The tired faces in the audience lost their tired looks as the players on the stage worked hard and fast at making fun. Abie clapped his hands in glee, but the father didn't even look at the performers. He sat, head down, lost in thought. A couple of hours passed.

In a minute Mr. Tamolensky appeared and announced "Closing tableau! De Lost Baby! De Youngest Actor in de City of Montreal!"

Mr. Cohen sat rigid, gripping the arm of his chair. Miss Cameron was as intent as he. The curtain parted in the centre of the stage. They could see little Rachel bending down to speak to the toddler beside her, urging him to go forward to do his part.

"Go, Abie," she whispered. "Go to dat nice pretty chair. Go find your mot'er." She gave him a little push and stepped back while he started forward somewhat unsteadily on his thin little legs.

In the centre of the platform, the youngest actor stopped, looked in bewilderment at the footlights before him and suddenly realized he was alone. His baby face puckered up and a wail of anguish burst forth. The curtains parted lookers could never be satisfied. A baby had been really lost and found. Moses in the bulrushes! Mr. and Mrs. Cohen rejoiced over being together once more with their little Abie.

Miss Cameron watched the scene with filling eyes. At last the curtain stayed down. Reluctantly the crowd dispersed.

Rachel soon appeared, grabbed the baby's shawl and darted off. Presently she returned with a solemn face.

"He's taking her home," she said, "and dey're bot' laughing and dey're bot' crying, but my fat'er he's got an awful mad on. . . ."

Miss Cameron stared. "Why?"

"Cause," cried Rachel, bursting into a small mad of her own, "'cause dose ungrateful sheenies von't promise to come back ev'ry night and lose dere baby! Not for t'ree a night! Vot do you t'ink about such loafers?"

Questions about Health, Sanitary Subjects and the prevention of disease will be answered in this column from time to time, subject to reasonable limitations.

If requested, replies will be sent direct to the correspondent if a stamped addressed envelope is enclosed, but no diagnosis or prescription can be given. This coupon should be enclosed with inquiry.

Information About Nerves.

"PLEASE give me information about nerves," writes one of our correspondents this month. Yes. That is just what I should like to do. What are nerves and what are we to do with them?—or without them? "My nerves are bad." Of course they are. How could they be anything else? If we prepare the soil and sow the seed, we cannot very well complain if the harvest follows.

A baby girl, eight months old, was in a parlor car the other day somewhere in Canada. The mother informed the lady in the next seat that she was just returning from a visit to her uncle who was a doctor in the city of Blank. She had taken the baby to her uncle to get medical advice because the baby was ill. (The baby looked well). "And what did he say?" "Oh, he said that she was just fussy and nervous and he gave me some medicine for her."

Is it possible that the young mother might have been mistaken about what the doctor said? Surely she was. Doctors make mistakes just like everyone else, but patients also make mistakes in hearing what the doctor says. People have an incurable habit ways on the rush," always breathlessly running after something or somebody, street cars included, if there is no other game in sight; always on the verge of a Complete Nervous Collapse; always pursued by the phantom of nervous prostration and nervous exhaustion, in a word the fashionable patient, who supports the fashionable doctor. Or are you going to remember that life is a great trust and a great responsibility, that the resources of life and health are not to be squandered and thrown away in foolish days and silly nights, that health depends more on the nervous and mental condition than even upon the digestive and muscular condition and that we must sit on the box and drive the chariot of life and not let the horses—or the forces—of life and work and society run away with us and hurry us into one catastrophe after another, concluding with that Complete Nervous Collapse which seems to be the goal of some people's hopes? That's the first "Information About Nerves." Make up your mind what kind of nerves you want to live with and take measures accordingly. Until the next number of this magazine of listening to what you say and going away and repeating, not what you say, but what they think. Haven't you often noticed that? And then they quote you as supporting their opinions. That saves them the trouble of doing what Sarah Gamp did, namely, inventing Mrs. Harris. You are their Mrs. Harris. At least that is the only way we can account for such facts as the prevalent explanations that mothers give as to why they did not nurse the baby. "The doctor said that my milk was not good for the baby." "The doctor said that I hadn't enough milk for the baby," etc., etc. If the doctor said so he made a terrible mistake, in nine-hundred-and-ninety-nine cases out of a thousand, and he does not understand his business.

Picture shows children at Morimura Kindergarten at Takanawa, Tokyo, playing doctor. Baby is ill; mother is troubled. This is on the "Girls' Own Holiday," Japan.

To return to our little Canadian girl, eight months old, in the parlor car, returning from the visit to her great-uncle-doctor. Is it reasonable to suppose that any doctor with any sense would accuse a poor, innocent infant eight months old of being nervous? If he did he must have been nervous himself.

In other words, the first and principal "Information About Nerves," that the family physician has to give you is this: This question of nerves, like many other important questions, is a question of ideals. What is your ideal? To be a "fussy," "busy" person: "al-comes out just try to think of the great characters that you have known yourself, or that have lived in history, or been portrayed in literature and out of these choose the ideal for your own life.

I mean Dad, too. Never shall I forget the sight of a "Prominent Business Man," as the newspapers put it, who had not taken—and would not take—a holiday for ten years. He could dress himself and eat his breakfast, but he sat down and cried when 8.30 a.m. came, his regular hour for going to his office. He had used all his nervous energy up in what he called Business, and he had a Complete Nervous Bankruptcy.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Re the Advisability of Bran in Ordinary Diet."

It is not specially advisable, and probably not very useful, but at the same time not likely to be harmful.

"What is the best time of morning for giving orange juice to a child of four, when milk figures in both meals?"

If you are sure that orange juice agrees with him, give it soon after he rises, being careful to sweeten it to taste and add a little water. Any other fruit juice will do almost as well. A piece of apple is as good, or better.

Food Prices

Study Costs

Many breakfasts cost you ten times Quaker Oats

Quaker Oats costs one cent per large dish.

You can serve 12 dishes of Quaker Oats for the cost of a single chop. Or 5 dishes for the cost of an egg.

Quaker Oats yields 1,810 calories per pound—the energy measure of food value. Round steak yields 890—eggs 635.

Quaker Oats is only 7% water. In fish the waste and water are 85%. In eggs they are 77%.

Meat, eggs and fish will average nine times Quaker Oats in cost, for equal calories of nutriment. That means 35 cts. on a breakfast for five, or $125 per year.

Oats—the supreme food

Yet the oat is the greatest food that grows. It is almost a complete food—nearly the ideal food. As a body-builder and a vim-food it has age-old fame. It is the best food you can serve to start the day.

Calories per pound

|              |      |
|--------------|------|
| Quaker Oats  | 1810 |
| Round Steak  | 890  |
| Average Fish | 350  |
| Potatoes     | 295  |
| Canned Peas  | 235  |

Millions of people nowadays make Quaker Oats their basic breakfast. They save immensely on their food cost. They guard against under-feeding. The breakfasts are delicious. Then they use the saving to buy costlier foods for dinner.

Quaker Oats

The finest oat dish created

Oat lovers the world over get Quaker Oats for flavor. This brand is flaked from queen grains only—just the rich, plump, flavory oats. We get but ten pounds from a bushel. Yet this extra flavor costs no extra price. Ask for Quaker and you get it.

Packed in sealed round packages with removable cover

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This story, "The Worker in Sandal Wood," was originally published by the Atlantic Monthly Company, Boston, holders of the copyright in the United States. It is now republished by request of many readers. Miss Pickthall is English by birth, but has spent many years in Canada, and is now a resident of that "bit of England in the West," Victoria, B.C.

I LIKE to think of this as a true story, but you who read may please yourselves, siding either with the cure who says Hyacinthe dreamed it all, and did the carving himself in his sleep, or with Madame. I am sure that Hyacinthe thinks it true, and so does Madame, but then she has the cabinet, with the little birds and the lilies carved at the corners. Monsieur le cure shrugs his patient shoulders; but then he is tainted with the infidelities of cities, good man, having been three times to Montreal, and once in an electric car to Sainte Anne. He and Madame still talk it over whenever they meet, though it happened so many years ago, and each leaves the other forever unconvinced. Meanwhile the dust gathers in the infinite fine lines of the little birds' feathers, and softens the lily stamens where Madame's duster may not go; and the wood, ageing, takes on a golden gleam as of immemorial sunsets; that pale red wood, heavy with the scent of the ancient East, the wood that Hyacinthe loved.

It was the only wood of that kind which had ever been seen in Terminaison. Pierre L'Oreillard brought it into the workshop one morning, a small heavy bundle wrapped in sacking, and then in burlap, and then in fine soft cloths. He laid it on a pile of shavings, and unwrapped it carefully; and a dim sweetness filled the dark shed and hung heavily in the thin winter sunbeams.

Pierre L'Oreillard rubbed the wood respectfully with his knobby fingers. "It is sandal-wood," he explained to Hyacinthe, pride of knowledge making him expansive, "a most precious wood that grows in warm countries, thou great goblin. Smell it, imbecile. It is sweeter than cedar. It is to make a cabinet for the old Madame at the big house. Thy great hands shall smooth the wood, nigaud, and I—I, Pierre the cabinet-maker shall render it beautiful." Then he went out, locking the door behind him.

When he was gone Hyacinthe laid down his plane, blew on his stiff fingers, and shambled slowly over to the wood. He was a great clumsy boy of fourteen, dark-faced, very slow of speech, dull-eyed, and uncared for. He was clumsy because it is impossible to move gracefully when you are growing very big and fast on quite insufficient food; he was dull-eyed because all eyes met his unlovingly; uncared for, because none knew the beauty of his soul. But his heavy young hands could carve simple things like flowers and birds and beasts, to perfection, as the cure pointed out. Simon has a tobacco-jar, carved with pine-cones and squirrels, and the cure has a pipe whose bowl is the bloom of a moccasin-flower, that I have seen. But it is all very long ago. And facts, in those lonely villages, easily become transfigured, touched upon their gray with a golden gleam.

"Thy hands shall smooth the wood, nigaud, and I shall render it beautiful," said Pierre L'Oreillard, and went off to drink brandy at the Cinq Chateaux.

Hyacinthe knew that the making of the cabinet would fall to him, as most of the other work did. He also touched the strange sweet wood, and at last laid his cheek against it, while the fragrance caught his breath. "How it is beautiful!" said Hyacinthe, and for a moment his eyes glowed and he was happy. Then the light passed, and with bent head he shuffled back to his bench through a foam of white shavings curling almost to his knees.

"Madame perhaps will want the cabinet next week, for that is Christmas," said Hyacinthe, and fell to work harder than ever, though it was so cold in the shed that his breath hung like a little silver cloud and the steel stung his hands. There was a tiny window to the right, through which, when it was clear of frost, one looked on Terminaison; and that was cheerful and made one whistle. But to the left, through the chink of the ill-fitting door, there was nothing but the forest, and the road dying away in it and the trees moving heavily under the snow. Yet from there came all Hyacinthe's dumb dreams and slow reluctant fancies, which he sometimes found himself able to tell, in wood, not in words.

Brandy was good at the Cinq Chateaux, and Pierre L'Oreillard gave Hyacinthe plenty of directions, but no further help with the cabinet.

"That is to be finished for Madame on the festival, gros escargot," said he, ending Hyacinthe's ears furiously; "finished, and with a prettiness about the corners, hearest thou, escargot? I suffer from a debility of the constitution and a little feebleness in the legs on these days, so that I cannot handle the tools. I must leave this work to thee, gachein. See it is done properly. And stand up and touch a hand to thy cap when I address thee, orvet, great slow-worm."

"Yes, monsieur," said Hyacinthe wearily.

IT is hard, when you do all the work, to be cuffed into the bargain; and fourteen is not very old. He went to work on the cabinet with slow, exquisite skill; but on the eve of Noel he was still at work, and the cabinet unfinished. It meant a thrashing from Pierre if the morrow came and found it still unfinished, and Pierre's thrashings were cruel. But it was growing into a thing of perfection under his slow hands, and Hyacinthe would not hurry over it.

"Then work on it all night, and show it to me all completed in the morning, or thy bones shall mourn thine idleness," said Pierre with a flicker of his little eyes. And he shut Hyacinthe into the workshop with a smoky lamp, his tools, and the sandal-wood cabinet.

It was nothing unusual. The boy had often been left before to finish a piece of work overnight while Pierre went off to his brandies. But this was Christmas Eve, and he was very tired. The cold crept into the shed, until even the scent of the sandal-wood could not make him dream himself warm, and the roof cracked sullenly in the frost. There came upon Hyacinthe one of those awful, hopeless despairs that children know.

I cannot endure to think of Hyacinthe, poor lad, shut up despairing in the work-shop with his loneliness, his cold, and his hunger, on the eve of Christmas. He was but an overgrown, unhappy child. And for unhappy children no aid, at this season, seems too divine for faith. So Madame says, and she is very old and very wise. Hyacinthe even looked at the chisel in his hand, and thought that by a touch of that he might lose it all, all, and be at peace, somewhere not far from God; only it was forbidden. Then came the tears, and great sobs that sickened and deafened him, so that he scarcely heard the gentle rattling of the latch.

At least, I suppose it came then, but it may have been later. The story is all so vague here, so confused with fancies that have spoiled the first simplicity. I think that Hyacinthe must have gone to the door, opening it upon the still woods and the frosty stars. And that the lad who stood outside in the snow must have said, "I see you are working late, comrade. May I come in?" or something like it.

Hyacinthe brushed his ragged sleeve across his eyes, and opened the door wider with a little nod to the other to enter. Those little lonely villages strung along the great river see strange wayfarers adrift inland from the sea. Hyacinthe said to himself that surely here was such a one.

AFTERWARDS he told the cure that for a moment he had been bewildered. Dully blinking into the stranger's eyes, he lost for a flash the first impression of youth, and received one of some incredible age or sadness. But this also passed, and he knew that the wanderer's eyes were only quiet, like the little pools in the wood where the wild does went to drink. As he turned within the door, smiling at Hyacinthe and shaking some snow from his fur cap, he did not seem more than sixteen or so.

"It is very cold outside," he said; "there is a big oak tree on the edge of the fields that has split in the frost and frightened all the little squirrels asleep there. Next year it will make an even better home for them. And see what I found close by!" He opened his fingers, and showed Hyacinthe a little sparrow lying unruffled in the palm.

"Pauvre!" said the dull Hyacinthe. "Pauvre! Is it then dead?" He touched it with a gentle forefinger.

"No," answered the strange boy, "it is not dead. We will put it here among the shavings, not far from the lamp, and it will be well by morning."

He smiled at Hyacinthe again, and the shambling lad felt dimly as if the scent of the sandal-wood had deepened, and the lamp flame burned clearer. But the stranger's eyes were only quiet, quiet.

"Have you come far?" asked Hyacinthe. "It is a bad season for travelling, and the wolves are out in the woods."

"A long way," said the other; "a long, long way. I heard a child cry—"

"There is no child here," answered Hyacinthe, shaking his head. "Monsieur L'Oreillard is not fond of children, he says they cost too much money. But if you have come far, you must be cold and hungry, and I have no food nor fire. At the Cinq Chateaux you will find both."

The stranger looked at him again with those quiet eyes, and Hyacinthe fancied his face was familiar. "I will stay here," he said. "You are very late at work and you are unhappy."

"Why, as to that," answered Hyacinthe, rubbing again at his cheeks and ashamed of his tears, "most of us are sad at one time or another, the good God knows. Stay here and welcome if it pleases you; and you may take a share of my bed, though it is no more than a pile of balsam boughs and an old blanket in the loft. But I must work at this cabinet, for the drawer must be finished and the handles put on and these corners carved, all by the holy morning; or my wages will be paid with a stick."

"You have a hard master," put in the other boy, "if he would pay you with blows upon the feast of Noel."

"He is hard enough," said Hyacinthe; "but once he gave me a dinner of sausages and white wine, and once in the summer, melons. If my eyes will stay open, I will finish this by morning, but indeed I am sleepy. Stay with me an hour or so, comrade, and talk to me of your wanderings, so that the time may pass more quickly."

"I will tell you of the country where I was a child," answered the stranger.

AND while Hyacinthe worked, he told—of sunshine and dust, of the shadow of vine-leaves on the flat white walls of a house; of rosy doves on the flat roof; of the flowers that come out in the spring, crimson and blue, and the white cyclamen in the shadow of the rocks, of the olive, the myrtle and almond, until Hyacinthe's slow fingers ceased working, and his sleepy eyes blinked wonderingly.

"See what you have done, comrade," he said at last; "you have told of such pretty things that I have done no work for an hour. And now the cabinet will never be finished, and I shall be beaten."

"Let me help you," smiled the other; "I also was bred a carpenter."

At first Hyacinthe would not, fearing to trust the sweet wood out of his own hands. But at length he allowed the stranger to fit in one of the little drawers. And so deftly was the work done that Hyacinthe pounded his fists on the bench in admiration. "You have a pretty knack," he cried; "it seemed as if you did but hold the drawer in your hands a moment, and hey! ho! it jumped into its place!"

"Let me fit in the other little drawers, while you go and rest a while," said the wanderer. So Hyacinthe curled up among the shavings, and the stranger fell to work upon the little cabinet of sandal-wood.

Here begins what the cure will have it is a dream within a dream. Sweetest of dreams that was ever dreamed, if that is so. Sometimes I am forced to think with him, but again I see as clearly as with old Madame's eyes that have not seen the earthly light for twenty years, and with her and Hyacinthe I say, "Credo."

Hyacinthe said that he lay among the shavings in the sweetness of the sandal-wood, and was very tired. He thought of the country where the stranger had been a boy, of the flowers on the hills, of the laughing leaves of aspen and poplar, of the golden flowering anise, and the golden sun upon the dusty roads, until he was warm. All the time through these pictures, as through a painted veil, he was aware of that other boy with the quiet eyes, at work upon the cabinet, smoothing, fitting, polishing. "He does better work than I," thought Hyacinthe; but he was not jealous. And again he thought, "It is growing towards morning. In a little while I will get up and help him." But he did not for the dream of warmth and the smell of the sandal-wood held him in a sweet drowse. Also he said that he thought the stranger was singing as he worked, for there seemed to be a sense of some music in the shed, though he could not tell whether it came from the other boy's lips, or from the shabby old tools as he used them, or from the stars.

He lay without moving, and behind the forest there shone a pale glow of some indescribable color that was neither green nor blue, while in Terminaison the church bells began to ring. "Day will soon be here," thought Hyacinthe, immovable in that deep dream of his, "and with that day will come Monsieur L'Oreillard and his stick. I must get up and help, for even yet the corners are not carved."

But he did not get up. Instead, he saw the stranger look at him again, smiling as if he loved him, and lay his brown finger lightly upon the four empty corners of the cabinet. And Hyacinthe saw the little squares of reddish wood ripple and heave and break, as little clouds when the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 55.)

The ultimate choice of the prudent housewife

For the Bride to be or even for the House Mother, whose bridal days are only a Memory.

There is probably no gift that would be more welcome from the family, or more lastingly useful, than a new stock of White Sheeting and Pillow Casing for the household Cotton Chest.

The Best are Prue Cottons.

DOMINION TEXTILE CO., LIMITED
MONTREAL TORONTO WINNIPEG

A new model of the Master Six!
No motor car announcement could mean more to Canadian motorists. For among the better cars McLaughlin is overwhelmingly preferred.

And the character of the new design—strikingly impressive as it appears—has the quality that will give lasting pleasure through years of ownership. Just as the solid merit of the car has held through years of constancy and given to McLaughlin the title “Canada’s Standard Car.”

McLAUGHLIN MOTOR CAR CO., LIMITED
Oshawa, Canada

Branches in Leading Cities.

Dealers Everywhere

The
McLAUGHLIN
MASTER SIX

The Story of How Miss Olivia Acquired Christmas Cousins

THE NEXT OF KIN

By CHRISTINA R. FRAME

ILLUSTRATED BY E. J. DINSMORE

"Of course I'll help."

Miss Olivia Norton fumbled in the till of the top drawer and drew out a fifty cent piece—they were woefully scarce with her these days. "I'll give and spend what I can; the Nortons have always helped with Christmas sales, and now that I'm the only one left, why—"

Miss Olivia stopped abruptly, "There I am, talking to myself again. I've got to stop it. I just must."

Bayville spoke of Miss Olivia as a "has-been" and regretted that an "open-handed, big-feeling family like the Nortons, should 'peter out' in a little, lame old maid, tight-fisted at that"; while poor Olivia, struggling with poverty and loneliness, breathed a prayer of thankfulness that no one in Bayville had an inkling of how pitifully poor she really was.

The Christmas pantry sale was an innovation in Bayville money-getting projects, introduced by Mrs. Lane the Red Cross President, as less work than a pie social or a tea-meeting.

"You make and take your own cooked things for sale, and buy what someone else has made, and that's the end of it," asserted Mrs. Lane. "Everything sells and the Red Cross gets the benefit."

Olivia had donated a pan of rolls, but had made up for the smallness of her food gift by supplying the big damask table cloths, that other members with a thought of Christmas only two days off, had demurred about lending.

She shut the drawer hastily upon the two remaining fifty cent pieces. "I'll make them do until my January dividend comes in," she declared, "and I don't believe that the Blank Insurance Co. is going to pass its dividends, even if there is a moratorium in Canada."

She slipped the fifty-cent piece into an old-fashioned purse and stuffed it into her mitten palm. As she picked her way down the slippery street, misgivings as to how she would make ends meet, began to assail her, and the fifty-cent piece in her mitten palm rapidly increased in size and weight.

"Maybe, I oughtn't to have been so extravagant! Maybe I oughtn't to have taken it! But, I have, and—I don't care!" finished Miss Olivia defiantly.

The afternoon was gloriously fine, and the committee looked with pride upon the long tables laden with holiday cookery. It was a sight to make hungry persons ravenous, and to make those who were replete, sigh for the stomach arrangement of the camel.

It was to be a ladies' affair entirely, and old Captain Clark, flattening his nose against the post-office window to watch the hurrying procession of ladies, intent upon being on the spot when the doors opened, voiced the thoughts of more than one Bayville husband.

"No men allowed, hey? No men wanted, hey? Them pantry sales mean the gettin' in of the thin edge of the wedge for the weemen to run things in this village! Phew-w-w," he roared, bending over to slap his knees, "this is rich! No men wanted, hey? Look comin'!"

The others crowded to the window and loudly echoed the Captain's laughter. Half a hundred or more lumbermen were stampeding down the street in the direction of the pantry sale.

"That's a bunch from the Cobequid Company going into Workton to recruit for overseas," observed a newcomer, "their train is stalled at the station, and they think that they are going to a pie social."

"I'd give something to hear the weemen talk when they see them comin'," chuckled the Captain, "Their 'Mercy on us! Goodness me! Did you ever?' will stog the market."

The lumbermen, thoroughly enjoying the consternation created by their arrival, ranged themselves beside the crowd of ladies banked on the steps waiting for the doors to open.

MR. BAYNE, the junior partner of the Cobequid Company, kept a marking eye upon his gay young lads, and with little lame Miss Olivia close beside him, was caught in the rush when the doors swung wide. She had the crocheted purse wedged into her palm, adding to her helplessness, and was getting desperately frightened, when the junior partner's strong arm encircled her, and drew her up the remaining steps into the hall.

"Excuse me, Madam, but it was the easiest way. That was a jostling crowd all right, and it wasn't the lumbermen who were doing the heaviest pushing. I'll keep this space for you beside the table while you do your purchasing. You wish a small loaf of nut bread and a dozen doughnuts?"

"You can have the bread," said Mrs. Lane with an appraising glance at Miss Olivia's proxy, "but the doughnuts are all gone, everyone wants Mrs. Martin's doughnuts."

He handed the package to Miss Olivia with the question, "What is your second choice, Madam? Here's a big frosted cake that looks like Christmas, and a jar of chow-chow and a roast chicken and—"

"Oh, please, please," gasped Miss Olivia, and letting subterfuge go to the winds, she blurted out, "I can't take those! I've only fifty cents!"

"Never mind, I've given the order. It will be all right, it's for the Red Cross."

He was searching his memory for the hauntingly familiar likeness in this little woman's clear cut features and blue eyes. Why it was Hester, his own sister, that she was so strikingly like. Hester matronly, rosy, the mother of four sons, and this pinched little lady looked enough alike to be sisters.

He picked up the parcels, squared his elbows, and with the order, "Keep close to me, Madam," worked his way out of the crowd.

"Of course, I'm not going to keep those things," Miss Olivia decided to herself. "Of course I'm not. He knows that I had only fifty cents. I wouldn't think of such a thing as taking them, and I'll tell him so when we get outside. Why it would be just the same as charity!" Miss Olivia shivered, partly from the appropriateness of the thought, and partly from the gust of chill air from the door. A locomotive was whistling insistent warnings in the frosty twilight, and parcel-laden men were racing by dozens to the station. With a hasty "Good-bye," the young man plumped the packages into Miss Olivia's arms, and before she could voice her carefully prepared protest, he was sprinting after the retreating crowd.

"Well, this beats all the pantry sales that I ever heard of," asserted the President, her red toque hanging rakishly over one ear, "half those men wouldn't wait for change, and they bought everything in sight. The tables were cleared in twenty minutes. This will set us away ahead of Lower Bayville in our Red Cross contributions, but it also means that we have only one day in which to make our own Christmas preparations, and—"

Mrs. Lane broke off her remarks to rush to the phone.

It was her cousin, Mrs. Lamont, in high-pitched, quavering voice calling frantically for Mrs. Lane. "I'm here! What is the matter?"

"That big cake I sent to the sale is poisoned! For mercy's sake, Milly, get it back from whoever bought it!"

"Poisoned?" Mrs. Lane usually kept her head in an emergency, but for one awful minute, she could not remember who had bought that cake. "Who was it? Who was it? Oh, yes, that Mr. Bayne, of the Cobequid Company—he would be at the station if the train was still there!"

"Hold your tongue, Emily, and ring off! I want central!"

Within two minutes Mrs. Lane had caught the station agent and had emphatically repeated the message.

It seemed a frightfully long five minutes before she received the Agent's cheerful answer:

"I got Mr. Bayne. Told him what you said. He'll leave it alone. That's all right, Mrs. Lane, no bother at all."

"Emily is always getting up some hunt," grumbled Mrs. Lane to herself, "and now I've got to trudge down there and find out about this cake-poisoning business, as if I wasn't tired enough already!"

Her cousin was walking the floor in nervous panic when Mrs. Lane arrived, while Ida, a girl of fourteen, sobbed in the rocking chair.

"He won't eat it," announced Mrs. Lane laconically. "Now what?"

"Ida poisoned that cake. Her head was full of a trashy novel that she had hidden in the cupboard, and goodness knows what she put in for flavoring, or where she got it."

"I got it out of a vanilla bottle in the kitchen cupboard. I'm telling the truth, cousin, I did, I did," wailed Ida.

"I left Ida to put in the flavoring, and Bridget to do the baking, while I just had to go to bed with a sick headache, and that's what has come of it. Just smell that!"

Mrs. Lamont thrust a slice of fruit cake into her cousin's hand. "This is the same as the one I sent, and it's a fortunate thing that I cut it this afternoon."

"It smells like strong spruce."

"More like prussic or carbolic," objected Mrs. Lamont.

Mrs. Lane took a long, convincing sniff. "It's essence of spruce," she declared.

"That is for beer-making, and there was never such a thing inside my doors. Never!"

"Ask Jim about that," suggested Mrs. Lane, as Ida's mischievous twin brother opened the door.

"So that's what became of my essence of spruce," chuckled Jim. "Ida used it for flavoring, eh? ay, that must have been a mighty alluring novel to keep her from noticing the smell. It was strong enough to grow cones."

"Huh," sniffed Mrs. Lane, angry at being needlessly frightened. "a nice laugh Bayville will have over this. It is lucky that an outsider bought that cake or it would be on exhibition. He must be halfway to the Junction by this time, and anyway, it wouldn't have poisoned him if he had eaten it."

But the man, who had purchased the cake, was not halfway to the Junction. That compelling message had caught him at the train steps. There was nothing for him to do but go back and warn that woman, to whom he had presented the poisoned cake.

"Don't even know her name," he grumbled, "but as she is little and lame, I shouldn't have much difficulty in locating her."

A boy dragging a handsled out of the station yard was interviewed and suggested that the lady was "Miss Leevy" and willingly piloted him to her gate.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 22.)

With trembling eagerness she began picking up the loose ends of family history.

Quality—Comfort— Perfect Fit

When you go for rubbers, be sure to find the dealer who carries Dominion Rubber System rubbers. Then you are sure of getting the style and shape to exactly fit your shoes.

Dealers know by experience that they serve your best interests by giving you these long-wearing, perfect-fitting rubbers, which are made for every style of shoe worn by men, women, boys or girls.

DOMINION RUBBER SYSTEM RUBBERS

are worthy products of Canada's largest rubber organization, and are the best that sturdy materials and wide experience can produce.

Wear Dominion Rubber System rubbers in bad weather to keep your feet dry and to prevent you from catching a cold. They help to save your good shoes. It is a sound economy to wear old shoes with rubbers on wet, stormy days.

What about the children? Don't neglect them. See that their shoes are fitted properly with Dominion Rubber System rubbers.

Dominion Rubber System rubbers are sold by the best dealers throughout Canada

Christmas Candies and Their Preparation at Home

By MARION HARRIS NEIL

AUTHOR OF "CANDIES AND BONBONS AND HOW TO MAKE THEM."

SWEET-MAKING, especially at Christmas time, when it is often impossible to be out of doors, is always a favorite pastime. And, though it is an art which requires a good deal of practice, yet a great deal can be done by a person gifted with a little common sense. If possible, it is best to use a gas stove, as it is so much easier to regulate the heat. There are a few general rules that all amateur candy makers will do well to heed. In the first place have everything in readiness before putting your confectionery on the stove to cook. Use only the best quality of sugar, very cheap sugar will not make good candy. When making fondant never allow the crystals of sugar to remain on the sides of the pan, but wipe them carefully away with a damp cloth or brush.

Honey Drops.—Pour four tablespoonfuls of strained honey into one cupful of boiling water, add two cupfuls of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Boil slowly until the syrup forms a soft ball when tried in cold water, or 240° F., on candy thermometer. Pour the boiling syrup over the whites of two eggs beaten to a stiff froth and add one-half teaspoonful each of almond and lemon extracts. Now beat until it is creamy and drop in spoonfuls on a buttered pan or on to a sheet of waxed paper. A nut meat pressed into the top of each drop makes the candy even daintier.

Ye Old Fashioned Bouquet.—Pour one cupful of cold water into a saucepan, add two cupfuls of granulated sugar, stir until thoroughly dissolved, add a few drops of yellow color, cover with the lid, bring to boiling point and cook for three minutes. Remove the cover, add one-eighth of a teaspoonful of cream of tartar and boil the syrup to 300° F., or until it just begins to change color. Flavor with ginger or orange extract and drop at once on to a tin sheet from the tip of a spoon in small portions. Wrap each one in waxed paper. These form the centres of the flowers or small bouquets.

Now melt four tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add four cupfuls of granulated sugar and one cupful of the best vinegar. Stir until the sugar is dissolved, wash down the crystals from the sides of the pan, with a brush dipped in cold water. Bring to boiling point and boil to 280° F., or until the mixture will become brittle when tested in cold water. Pour into a buttered dish and, when cool, add a few drops of green color and one teaspoonful of lemon extract, then pull and cut in small pieces with buttered scissors or a sharp knife. Wrap each piece in wax paper and place six of these around each of the centres, fastening them together with fine wire. Wrap each little bouquet in waxed paper and arrange six of these bouquets around the centre one. Tie these together with cord, place in a lace holder and tie with a dainty ribbon.

Dainty bouquets may be made with flowers formed of sugared almonds and sugared jellied drops in assorted sizes, mint wafers in different colors, flat raspberry and lemon drops in hard sweets and crystallized violets or rose leaves.

Lemon drops heated, then rolled in granulated sugar, make good centres. Artificial foliage may be purchased in flower stores and used in arranging candy flowers in bouquets.

A bouquet made of sweets makes a dainty favor at a luncheon or evening party. Purchase or make a quantity of jujubes of different colors such as pink, red, yellow, green or lavender. Form small pieces in cone shapes.

Fasten a small lace paper doily to a three-inch disc of cardboard. To the back of the cardboard attach fine wires wound with green tissue paper and silver foil to imitate the items. On the doily arrange leaves of green angelica or mint jelly, and flowers of other colored pastes, fastening them in place with sugar syrup.

Pineapple Rings.—Select a pineapple that has been canned whole and cut into rings one-fourth of an inch thick. Simmer in a thick syrup until it is firm and candied. Remove from the syrup and place them in a greased pan. When dry, dip some of the rings into melted sweet chocolate and roll each ring in sugar.

Maple and Nut Balls.—Melt one cupful of maple sugar and one cupful of granulated sugar in one-fourth cupful of milk, add four tablespoonfuls of butter and boil until it forms a soft ball when tested in cold water, or 240° F., on candy thermometer. Remove from the fire, add three-fourths cupful of chopped English walnut meats and one-fourth teaspoonful each of vanilla and lemon extracts. Beat until the mixture is creamy and then knead it with a spatula and finally with greased fingers. Shape into balls when it becomes firm, and press a walnut meat on to each ball.

Pulled Mint Candies.—Put two pounds of lump sugar and one cupful of water in a saucepan, and set in a warm place to dissolve. When thoroughly dissolved place on the fire, add one tablespoonful of glucose and a pinch of cream of tartar, boil as quickly as possible to 300° F., on candy thermometer, or until brittle when tested in cold water, and remove the pan from the fire. Dip the pan into cold water to stop the boiling and pour the syrup on a lightly oiled slab or platter, and as the edges cool, turn them on to the centre of the sugar, using a buttered knife to lift them. When the sugar is cool enough to handle, roll it into a ball and pull with the fingers from the two sides turning the end over from side to side and into the centre. Be careful that all parts are equally pulled, adding one teaspoonful of peppermint extract when pulling. Very soon the sugar will take on a white sheen and become whiter and whiter. Care should be taken that it does not become too cold. When shaping the pulled sugar into shape, it should be pulled near the heat of an oven, and it should not be overheated. It should not be worked too hot, otherwise it loses its glossy appearance. Keep in airtight tins.

Turkish Delight.—One package of gelatine, one-half cupful of lukewarm water, four cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of cold water, grated rind and strained juice of one orange, and grated rind and strained juice of one lemon. Soak the gelatine in the lukewarm water. Put the sugar and the cold water into a saucepan and stir until thoroughly dissolved, then boil for twenty minutes with cover on pan, so no grains of sugar will form. Pour the syrup on to the gelatine, add the rinds and the fruit juices and a few drops of red color. If other flavors are desired, omit the lemon and orange flavors, and flavor with rose extract or almond extract. The mixture can be divided and be colored differently.

Pour into buttered pans and allow to stand over night in a cool place. In the morning cut into small squares with a sharp wet knife and roll each square in sifted powdered sugar. Each square should be firm and yet have a spongy consistency.

This Turkish delight in different colors and flavors is a delicious confection for the Christmas vacation.

CHRISTMAS CANDIES AND THEIR PREPARATION

The woman of refinement

uses a Talcum Powder which harmonizes with her dainty personality.

She does not desire one with a perfume too pronounced and which attracts unwelcome attention.

For such dainty women the Mennen Company have produced a range of exquisite Talcum Powders, delicately perfumed—the ideal Talcums for women of taste.

All Mennen Talcums are compounded on the same basis and with the same care as the famous Mennen Borated Talcum Powder used so successfully for 40 years for babies' tender skin. That in itself guarantees the quality—silky and soft, delicate and fragrant.

Mennen Violet Talcum is quiet and refreshing, with an old-world perfume of dew-crystalized violets—a perfume which has been the favorite of many generations of well-bred people.

Mennen Sen Yang has a perfume new to this continent. It is an elusive Oriental Perfume, rapidly becoming a great favorite. The Mennen Company also, after long experiment, have produced two Talcum Powders which give perfect "complexion" satisfaction. One is Flesh Tint—the first Flesh Tint Talcum—and the other Cream Tint, for those who find a white Talcum unbecoming.

The Mennen Company
Factory: Montreal

Sales Office
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Limited
10 McCaul St., Toronto

MENNEN

TALCUM POWDERS

The Next of Kin

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 19.)

IT had seemed a bit like a prosperous Christmas of long ago for Miss Olivia to be going down the village street parcel-laden, and even the chill of her big, fireless house failed to daunt her happy spirit. She took off her wraps and began the joyous task of unrolling the big, beautiful cake. She was eating a bit of broken frosting when a fiercely imperative rat-tat-tat sounded from the hall knocker.

"Whoever can that be?" wondered Miss Olivia as she made haste to answer.

It was her cavalier of the afternoon, who without any preliminary word of greeting demanded, "Did you eat any of that cake?"

"A little bit of the frosting," began Miss Olivia.

"Then you're poisoned! How me where your doctor lives?"

Miss Olivia was gathering her scattered wits. He must be either crazy or intoxicated, she decided. The idea of a pantry-sale cake, especially one that Mrs. Lane had stood sponsor for, being poisoned, was utter nonsense. But the man was still stamping impatiently on her doorstep.

"I only ate a little bit of the frosting, and there is nothing the matter with the cake," she chirped with the air of a ruffled robin.

"Judging from the urgency of the message that I received, there would have been a good deal the matter with you if you had eaten it," and forthwith he related the story of the telephone call that had brought him back.

"You've missed your train, and have taken all this trouble on my account," cried Miss Olivia. As a rule, people didn't trouble themselves much about Miss Olivia.

He threw her habitual prudence in regard to strangers to the winds and opened wide the door into her chill parlor.

"Come in! I'll fetch that cake and we'll cut it!"

"Perhaps it is a fool practical joke," suggested the junior partner with a grim smile. "If so, they'll have me to deal with."

"Doesn't it look Christmassy?" said Miss Olivia slicing down with a firm hand.

"It smells like a spruce chopping," he demurred, "and though spruce is innocent enough, it isn't an orthodox flavoring, and it would be hard to say what dope might be in this. I think the message was genuine."

Miss Olivia cast a regretful glance at the big cake, such an inviting specimen of whited sepulchre. Its white icing brought back memories of happy Christmastide hospitalities.

It was that sudden prompting of the Christmas Spirit that made her say: "It is two hours until the next train goes. Won't you stay and have supper with me?"

John Bayne promptly accepted the invitation, and the next instant wondered why he had done such an unheard-of thing.

Miss Olivia set the logs blazing in the parlor Franklin, they had been drying there for months, and soon glowing waves of heat shamed the light from the slender, old, glass lamp. Her eyes fairly danced as she thought of the cold chicken and the contents of the other parcels. Hospitality was a pure delight to her poverty-pinched soul. She decided to lay their supper on the parlor centre table within the glow of the fire, instead of in the cold dining room.

He washed off the inland work box, books, and daguerreotypes, and piled them on the sofa beside her visitor's fur coat. The table was finally laid to her satisfaction and she was gloating for an instant over its array of appetizing eatables, when a sharp question from her visitor, sent her mind fluttering back to those first doubts of his mental condition.

"Where did you get my grandmother's picture?"

He held up the daguerreotype of a girl in a plaid frock clasping hands with a small boy in a jockey-coat.

"That is a picture of my father and his older half-sister," she replied with dignity, "and it has always stood on this table."

"Her name was Hester Gardner! We have the mate to this picture at home. Grandmother, and great uncle James Norton. Oh, I know all about the silly quarrel that cut her off from her Norton relations. She married away beneath her, according to their standard, but she never regretted it. Grandfather was the salt of the earth. Mother is their eldest daughter, and you and I are relations. That accounts for your likeness to Hester. I noticed it the instant I saw you. We are related I'm certain!"

"Oh-h-h," breathed Miss Olivia as she dropped into a chair. "I want it to be true, and I'm sure that it is."

WITH trembling eagerness she began picking up the loose ends of family history, unwittingly revealing in that halting, earnest, story her own brave struggle against ill-health, loneliness, and the stalking poverty hard on her track.

"It is wonderful," she finished, "Just wonderful to feel that one really has folks of one's own."

"You certainly have. You'll be cousin Olivia-ed by a dozen or more, all anxious to give you the glad hand. All things considered, it was natural that we shouldn't know much about Grandmother's folks, except that they lived down East somewhere; but I remember Hester saying that Grandmother's old home was somewhere near our new timber areas. Hester's husband is my senior partner, and they are coming to Bayville to live while I am overseas."

Tears of joy ran unchecked down Miss Olivia's pale face, she made no pretence of eating, but sat and beamed through misty eyes at the next of kin.

"I think I am the thankfullest woman in the world," she whispered to herself, as she stood, lamp in hand, to watch her visitor through the gate. Even the snow which had begun to fall thick and fast did not trouble her. Doing her own snow-shovelling was an indication, according to Bayville, of Miss Olivia's growing "nearness."

"I'll have money to pay for the snow-shovelling after this."

She bolted the door and went back to the unwonted luxury of a warm room. A roll of bills lay on the tea-table; the new cousin had rented all of the big house, excepting the west wing, for Hester and her husband, and had thoughtfully paid for the first month.

Again Miss Olivia pulled out the top drawer of the old escritoire. The shining fifty-cent pieces winked at her. "Suppose that I had decided to stay at home," she breathed, "suppose I had felt that I oughtn't to spend fifty cents? Suppose—"

Miss Olivia's eyes fell upon a clipping that she had put in the drawer the day before: "We are led on, like little children, by a way we know not."

"That is just what happened to me," whispered Miss Olivia.

Macey SECTIONAL BOOKCASES

ARE THE BEST

For sale by All Leading Furniture Dealers.

"MACEY STYLE BOOK," full of information, free for the asking.

CANADA FURNITURE MANUFACTURERS LIMITED
WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO.

Maxwell

"HOME 65" FOOD CUTTER

SAVES FOOD—SAVES TIME—SAVES MONEY!

A QUICK and wonderfully efficient little machine that is made in Canada yet is vastly better and costs less than any imported make. Its watertight cap preserves all the valuable food juices.

Four keen cutting-plates handle all kinds of foodstuffs "clean as a whistle." Open-end cylinder makes it easy to clean after use. Quickly earns its cost. Made in 2 sizes, No. 65 and No. 55. Ask your dealer.

MAXWELL'S, Ltd., Dept. 1, St. Mary's, Ont.

CLEAR YOUR COMPLEXION

WITH CUTICURA
SOAP

This fragrant super-creamy emollient for cleansing, purifying and beautifying the skin and complexion tends to promote and maintain skin purity, skin comfort and skin health if used for every-day toilet purposes. Largest selling complexion and skin soap in the world. Sold everywhere.

Cuticura Toilet Tric

Consisting of Cuticura Soap to cleanse and purify, Cuticura Ointment to soothe and heal, and Cuticura Talcum to powder and perfume. 25c each. Sold throughout the Dominion. Canadian Depot: Lyman's Limited, 344 St. Paul St., West, Montreal.

Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

CANADIAN WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

PROVINCIAL SUPERINTENDENTS

ALBERTA . . . . . Miss Mary MacIsaac . . . . . Edmonton, Alta.
 BRITISH COLUMBIA . . . . . Miss Olive E. Hayes . . . . . Victoria, B.C.
 MANITOBA . . . . . Mr. S. T. Newton . . . . . Winnipeg, Man.
 NEW BRUNSWICK . . . . . Miss Hazel McCain . . . . . Fredericton, N.B.
 NOVA SCOTIA . . . . . Miss Helen J. Macdougall . . . . . Truro, N.S.

PROVINCIAL SUPERINTENDENTS

ONTARIO . . . . . Mr. George A. Putnam . . . . . Toronto, Ont.
 PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND . . . . . Miss Della E. Saunders . . . . . Charlottetown, P.E.I.
 QUEBEC . . . . . Miss M. May Chute . . . . . Macdonald College, Que.
 SASKATCHEWAN . . . . . Mr. S. E. Greenway . . . . . Saskatoon, Sask.

Systematic Policy of Ontario

THE Ontario Women's Institutes have laid out a splendid systematic policy along the different departments of education. Every province in Canada would be wise in emulating in this way, this Province which is the parent of Women's Institute work.

The programme is as follows:

Agriculture.

Convener, Mrs. R. G. Leggett, Newboro.

(a) Education:

1. Ask the Branch Institutes to petition their school boards to provide a plot of ground suitable for school gardening.

2. Encourage teachers to qualify themselves to direct the pupils in planting and caring for the garden.

3. Work for the improvement of school grounds and establishment of recreation centres.

(b) Practical Work:

1. Encourage women to become gardeners, small fruit growers, poultry raisers, and bee keepers.

2. To create market centres for the collecting and disposing of these products.

3. Promote a general interest in the care and beautifying of Canadian homes by removing rubbish, levelling and mowing lawns, planting trees, shrubs and flowers.

This programme is being submitted for consideration at the district annual meetings throughout the Province, and we trust that Institute committees will be formed in many branches to carry on the work.

Home Economics.

Convener, Miss M. U. Watson, Guelph.

To advise the Department as to lines of work to be included in the Demonstration-Lecture Courses;

To advise as to lines which could be dealt with to advantage when the instructor is able to deliver only one lecture at each place visited;

To recommend list of books for study and reference by the Women's Institute members;

To suggest lines of investigation for the Dominion Federation Committee or for the Department of Health being established at Ottawa, which should include Home Economics, Labor-Saving Devices and Methods; Remodelling of Houses; Household Equipment.

Miss Watson has not yet completed her programme, and will no doubt have much to add to the above, and will submit more complete programme to the district officers at an early date.

Immigration.

Convener, Miss D. M. Sutherland, Toronto.

To secure as full information as possible of immigrant families settling in Ontario, or girls or women employed as Domestic, etc., in homes throughout the Province from:

1. The Colonization Department of the Ontario Government.

2. The Employment Labor Bureau.

3. The Soldiers' Settlement Board.

To secure as full information as possible re children being placed in Ontario homes from:

1. The Children's Aid Society.

2. The Barnardo Homes.

3. The Salvation Army, etc.

The branches will be notified from time to time as to the placing of the newcomers, with a view to having the Institute members give them a welcome and inviting them to take part in the work of the Institutes and other local activities.

To have Branch officers forward as full information as possible re the situation in their localities as to the number of newcomers, how they are placed, what is being done for the Children's Aid Society, etc., to the member of the Committee on Immigration for their respective sub-divisions.

To educate through articles written and through lectures, etc., the importance of getting in touch with the newcomers and leading them to realize that they have a part to play in advancing community interests.

To see that the children of Immigrant families or those placed in homes by the Children's Aid Society, or the Barnardo Homes attend school regularly.

To report all cases of cruelty, overwork, etc., on the part of those employing help to the proper authorities.

To report all cases of children or parents suffering from contagious or infectious diseases or who are mentally deficient to the proper authorities, and where necessary take any other action thought advisable.

To co-operate with the Children's Aid Society in securing good homes for the children for adoption, and to ### Publicity.

Miss Ethel Chapman.

4. To impress every Institute member with the publicity value of photographs of Institute gatherings, demonstration lecture classes, school clinics, or any Institute undertaking for the school. Editors are always glad to publish good photographs and the picture often makes an impression which an article would not make.

5. Lecturers might explain to the Institutes that if they have any very special thing which would make a good moving picture like a school clinic, a baby clinic, a school fete arranged by the Institute, they might let Mr. Putnam know, and possibly the government moving picture men could go and get the film. Moving pictures give the best possible kind of publicity.

the latter being built in the small town of Penhold. Penhold has raised the initial payment of $4,500 within the year and has two more years to pay off the balance. These community halls and rest rooms are of various types and serve various purposes—such as concert halls, reading rooms, hospital rooms, kitchens, etc., Munson is contemplating assisting in the building of one that will have a kitchenette, rest room, and bath room. Czar has built a rest room as an addition to the school and has fitted it up with domestic science equipment for the school.

Clean-up campaigns have been inaugurated—community efforts to beautify towns. Prizes have been offered the children for the planting campaigns. A number of Institutes have taken up the matter of beautifying the cemetery by having it cleaned and trees and flowers planted.

Socially Institute members have made it a point to call on the newcomers, especially war brides and English settlers, and have given receptions to the town and country people around. In one community the English women visit the French women and now each nationality is learning to speak the language of the other. Another Institute is bringing a series of good lecturers to the community while another one has built a skating rink. Several have bought pianos and stoves for the halls, while one Institute has given a donation to the "Home band." Another Institute has written "The Magnet," a series of twelve chapters, one member contributing a chapter a meeting. Others have introduced community singing by the providing of song books.

BETTER SCHOOLS.

The encouragement of better schools has played a large part in the work of the Alberta Women's Institutes, the Institutes in various localities offering prizes for oratory, medals for elocution, and have held penmanship contests, the prizes for the latter being two prints of old masters. Several Institutes have bought playground equipment for the school yards. Others have been instrumental in initiating the hot lunch idea in the rural school. Various Institutes have bought bubble fountains, Chauvin has installed a gramophone, another has purchased an organ, while other Institutes have an educational committee to meet the teacher and see that she has a suitable boarding place. Campaigns for woman school trustees have been instigated by the Institutes and have resulted in five woman school trustees on the school board throughout the Province. Another Institute has given particular attention to the cleaning of the school, the members themselves cleaning it up during the holidays.

Efforts have been made along the line of establishing libraries, Camrose W. I. paying half the salary of a librarian. Another branch started with three books and now has eighty, another has inaugurated a "Book circle" or "circulating library" while a concentrated effort is being made to study the books of Canadian authors. Crossfield has the best private small town library in the Province. The department of Women's Institutes under its able Superintendent, Miss Mary MacIsaac has been very helpful in supplying rural Alberta with good material to read and any Institute may have the benefit of a "Travelling Library" on application.

BETTER CHILDREN.

Mrs. D. McVoy at Cowley, is Convener for the province of the important work of child welfare and public health and she is willing at all times to help any community anxious to take up an organized effort along these lines. Last year ten child welfare Institutes were held and these meetings were addressed by Mr. C. Bishop, Child Welfare Secretary.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 26.)

AN EASTERN OFFICER

Miss Helen J. Macdougall, of Truro, is Superintendent of Women's Institutes for Nova Scotia.

take an active interest in supporting local Children's Shelters.

To co-operate with the Girls' Camps in their social activities and to see that no camp is started without a permit from the Government Employment Labor Bureau.

To familiarize all the Immigration Laws.

The members of the Committee should forward reports of the work done along immigration lines in their respective sub-divisions to the Convener, for publicity and other purposes.

Education and Better Schools.

Convener, Miss K. F. McIntosh, Brampton.

1. Co-operation through Institutes and schools by means of Home and School Clubs.

2. School Improvement—

1. Of buildings now in existence.

2. To see that schools being built conform to all requirements for health and education.

3. To give attention to consolidation.

3. Education—

1. For retarded children.

2. Illiterate.

3. Non-English speaking.

INSTITUTE WORK IN ALBERTA:

MANY, many times, Institute members are asked the question, "What does the Women's Institute do? What does the Institute mean to the community?" To answer these questions is the purpose of this article—to tell by facts and figures the great offensive work of the Alberta Women's Institutes along the line of child welfare, public health, community work, agriculture, better schools, home economics, patriotic and local relief work.

COMMUNITY CENTRES.

"Primarily, the Community Centre is an experiment in public ownership; something which tends to identify all classes with the town rather than against it; a place which teaches us to think in terms of common good."—"Janey Canuck" in the "Canadian Home Journal."

The aims of the Institute are so wide and varied that each branch can suit its work to community needs and the prominent community work in Alberta is that of establishing rest rooms and community halls. There are to-day, sixty of these places, the cost ranging from $3,500 to $6,000.

Schools & Colleges

The Canadian Academy of Music

With which is amalgamated The Toronto College of Music, Limited

PRESIDENT:

Lt.-Col. A. E. Gooderham.

MUSICAL DIRECTORATE:

Albert Ham, Mus. Doc.
W. O. Forsyth.

Frank S. Welsman.
Peter C. Kennedy.

MANAGING DIRECTOR:

Alfred Bruce.

The most artistic school in the Dominion, with a reputation earned by famous teachers and brilliant students.

ORCHESTRAL, ENSEMBLE, CHORAL AND THEORETICAL CLASSES.

Descriptive Year Book, Examination Syllabus or Students' Residence pamphlet, mailed on request.

12-14 SPADINA RD.

TORONTO

London Conservatory of Music

Pre-eminently an examining body of the very highest standard.

Next Examinations for Fellow, Licentiate and Associate, held in May and June, 1921.

For test pieces and requirements, address

Registrar, 356 Dundas St., London, Ont.

F. L. WILLGOOSE, Mus. Bac., A.R.C.O., Principal.

Bishop Strachan School

College Heights, Toronto

A Church, Residential and Day School for Girls.

Established over fifty years.

All Departments from Kindergarten to University Matriculation.

PRINCIPAL:

MISS WALSH, M.A., Dublin. Teacher's Certificate, University of Cambridge, England.

For Calendar apply to the Bursar.

ST. MARGARET'S COLLEGE

TORONTO

A RESIDENTIAL AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

CANADA

FULL ACADEMIC COURSE, FROM PREPARATORY TO HONOUR

MATRICULATION. FULL COMMERCIAL COURSE—MUSIC—ART—

HOUSEHOLD SCIENCE—PHYSICAL EDUCATION—GAMES—SWIMMING

Mrs. George Dickson, President

School Reopens Wednesday, Jan. 5th.

Miss Florence H. M. Nozawa, B.A., Principal

Calendar sent on application.

ALMA COLLEGE St. Thomas, Ont.

Residential School for young women with well organized courses, preparing for University Matriculation and Diplomas in Literature, Business, Expression, Art, Household Science.

Excellent music department prepares pupils for Conservatory of Toronto Examinations.

Improved equipment includes gymnasium, hospital and larger grounds.

Re-opens after Christmas, January 3. For calendar write to P. S. DOBSON, M.A., Principal.

ONTARIO LADIES' COLLEGE

WHITBY, ONT.

School Re-opens Jan. 5th, 1921.

Public school to Second Year University. Household Science, Music: Instrumental and Vocal, Commercial, Elocution, Art, Civic and Parliamentary Studies, Gymnasium Work and Swimming.

For Calendar apply to Rev. F. L. Farewell, B.A., Principal.

PORT HOPE
ONTARIO

FOUNDED
1865

Trinity College School

RESIDENTIAL CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Beautiful healthy situation, overlooking Lake Ontario. 20 acres of Playing Fields, Gymnasium, Magnificent Rink. Boys prepared for the Universities, Royal Military College and Business. Religious training. Beautiful Chapel. Also Junior School for Boys of 9 to 14.

For prospectus apply to the Headmaster, Rev. P. GRAHAM ORCHARD, M.A. (Camb.), D.D.

SUCCESSSES 1919: R.M.C. 2nd, 4th, 6th, 9th and 13th Places. R.N.C., 4 Passed. 1920:

R.M.C.—9 Passed. 2 Matric. Scholarships at the University. Next Term Com. Jan. 11.

St. Andrew's College

Toronto

A Residential and Day School FOR BOYS

Canada

UPPER SCHOOL, LOWER SCHOOL

Boys prepared for Universities. Royal Military College and Business.

Re-opens after Xmas vacation, January 11th, 1921.

Calendar Sent on Application

Headmaster

Toronto Bible College

Interdenominational — Biblical — Missionary

Twenty-seventh Session. Spring term begins Jan. 4, 1921.

Three years' course in English Bible, Systematic and Biblical Theology,

Church History, Pastoral Theology, Missions, with New Testament Greek, Psychology, Medical Studies, Sunday School and Young People's Work.

Apply for Calendar to Herbert L. Troyer, Registrar, 110 College St., Toronto.

How the Divine Story of the Nativity Was Brought Home to the Common People in the Middle Ages

Christmas Mystery Plays

By HECTOR CHARLESWORTH

IN past Christmastides the writer has told of Christmas music in its various phases and this year it seems appropriate to recall a part of the ancient celebrations of the Nativity with which music was undoubtedly allied, and which played an even more important function in recalling to the minds of the people the Christmas story. I ask the reader to project his mind back to a period when the printed page was unknown, when the vast majority of the people could not read, when the art of writing was confined to a small professional class, lay and clerical. (It is said that King John haughtily replied: "I am not a scrivener," when asked to sign the Magna Charta).

There remained the vehicle of the spoken word, as a means of diffusing the truths of religion, and from this

IT is supposed that these Christmas mystery plays were brought to England from Northern France by the Normans, although many other European countries used similar methods of bringing home to the multitude the mystery of the birth of Jesus. The practice undoubtedly originated in the churches, and the earlier actors in them were monks and clerics, but gradually the custom spread to the people at large who would present the plays in the open air, with burgesses and peasants as actors. A great deal of interesting historic lore on the subject will be found in Clement A. Miles' scholarly work, "Christmas in Ritual and Tradition." The plays were associated not only with the Christmas celebration but with the allied Feast of the Epiphany,

THE SHEPHERDS OF BETHLEHEM

From an old wood print published in 1529 at Troyes, France. It gives an idea of how the shepherds were represented in mystery plays at that time and in the immediately preceding centuries, with contemporary costumes.

necessity arose the miracle and mystery plays of the Middle Ages, of which the Christmas dramas are the most human in their appeal. So widely diffused was the Christmas drama that eight hundred years ago, nearly every town in France and England had its special dramatic version of the Bethlehem story, which was played not only at Christmas, but at milder seasons of the year, when such shows could be given in the open air. A considerable number of these manuscripts have been preserved, and constitute a distinctive form of literary creation, entirely different from the classic form of drama. It took color from its surroundings, and was exceedingly quaint and racy. Of recent years there have been attempts in several quarters to revive for modern audiences these plays. A year ago the University of Toronto Players presented at their beautiful theatre in Hart House, a version, adapted from the old English of "The Chester Mysteries," which revealed aesthetic possibilities undreamed of by the peasants who originally played it. So completely did it captivate the imagination and sympathies of those who saw it that it will probably be an annual event at that University.

which commemorates the visit of the Magi, the Wise Men of the East, to the cot of the infant Saviour. The factor in the New Testament narratives, which seems to have made the deepest appeal to the popular imagination was the visitation of angels to the shepherds, but the little dramas ran in cycles covering all phases of the Divine tale. The visit of the Wise Men was the subject of many dramas which took different forms in towns of Northern France like Rouen, Laon, Compiègne and Limoges; and were known by various names like "tella" (The "tar"); "Tres Reges," (The Three Kings), or "Magi." Other parts of the Christmas cycles dealt with Herod, whose horrible deeds were sometimes very realistically presented. In such pieces, Herod was presented as a ranting and blood-thirsty villain, and the association of the name of Herod with ranting actors continued in England, long after the custom of performing mystery plays had fallen into abeyance. Thus, when Shakespeare makes Hamlet say that a player "out-herods Herod," he signifies an actor who passes all bounds in ferocity of utterance.

In the England of the Middle Ages, many towns were celebrated for their

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 33.)

Schools & Colleges

DRAWING FOR MONEY

$50 to $100 per week is earned by expert artists. Are you fond of drawing? Then you have talent. Let us make you an artist. You can learn right at home in a few months by our special system. Our Students Highly Successful One recently placed after only five months' study. Write to-day for particulars to SHAW CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL (Dept. H.J.) TORONTO

Woodstock College

Founded 1857.
LOWER SCHOOL: Separate residence for junior boys.
UPPER SCHOOL: Preparation for Science and Arts, Matriculation, Normal Entrance, Commercial Diploma. First Canadian School to introduce Manual Training.

College Life

Comfortable residence, personal attention by efficient teachers, well-equipped gymnasium, swimming pool, commodious campus, good meals, moderate rates; the place for your boy to get a sterling education in a Christian environment. Re-opens January 4th, 1921. For Calendar write Principal WEARING, M.A., Ph.D., Woodstock, Ontario

Be Your Own Boss

Become a Professional Man or Woman; Learn to be a Chiropractor

We offer a complete course in the science, philosophy and art of chiropractic. Our college is the most modern in all respects. Fall term commencing. Enroll now. This is your opportunity to become identified with a noble calling. Literature on request.

Toronto College of Chiropractic
Dept. H-846 Broadview Ave.
Toronto, Canada.

STORY WRITING

Turn Your Ideas Into Dollars

We teach you at home in a few months under an expert. Our students are successful writers. They contribute to leading magazines. One earned $300 while studying. We will help you place your stories. Write to-day for particulars to SHAW CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL (Dept. H.J.) TORONTO

Bishop Berthene College

OSHAWA ONTARIO
Visitor: The Lord Bishop of Toronto.
A residential school for girls.
Young children also received.
Preparation for the University. Art Department. Healthful situation. Outdoor Games. For terms and particulars apply to the Sister-in-Charge, or to the Sisters of St. John the Divine, Major Street, Toronto.

STAMMERING

or stuttering overcome positively. Our natural methods permanently restore natural speech. Graduate pupils everywhere. Free advice and literature. THE ARNOTT INSTITUTE KITCHENER, CANADA

Moulton College For Girls

Residential and day school. Staff of qualified specialists in each department.

Matriculation, Music and English Courses. Senior and Junior Departments, Sewing, Art and Physical Culture.

Re-opens January 4th, 1921

Calendar sent on application

Ernestine R. Whiteside, B.A., Principal.

34 Bloor St. E., Toronto

21

WE TEACH

Shorthand, Bookkeeping, Mathematics, at day school, also by mail. Come to us or let us come to you. Our winter term begins January 3rd. Dominion Business College, Ltd. 357 College St., Toronto. V. MITCHELL, B.A., Principal.

Loretto Abbey

403 Wellington St. W.
Residential School for Girls

Earn Money at Home

We will pay $15 to $50 weekly for your spare time, writing show cards; no canvassing; we instruct you and supply you with work. Write or call Brennan Show Card System, Limited, 38 Currie Bldg., 269 College St., Toronto. Open evenings (except Wednesday).

OUR COOKERY CORNER

Our recipes are sent with the best photographs from one of the artists in the culinary art.

No duties neglected, no pleasures forfeited, because it's wash day. The

Connor Perfection Electric Washer

conserves your time, free from household cares, gives you the delight of more than enough linen, beautiful, fresh, and clean, and so easily and quickly accomplished.

May we mail you a copy of a most delightful story called: "MORE CLEAN LINEN."

J.H. CONNOR & SON LIMITED
OTTAWA, ONTARIO H.J.

THE National

A thoroughly modern train, comprising Compartment-Observation-Library Car, Standard and Tourist Sleeping and Dining cars and coaches,

LEAVES

TORONTO 11.00 p.m. Daily

FOR

WINNIPEG, EDMONTON, VANCOUVER, VICTORIA, PRINCE RUPERT AND INTERMEDIATE POINTS via.

G.T. North Bay, T. & N.O. Cochrane, thence C.N. Rys.

via Sudbury and Capreol

Leave Toronto 8.45 p.m. Daily

Connecting with Train No. 1 for Port Arthur, Fort William, Winnipeg and North Pacific Coast points.

For Fares, Reservations and full Information enquire of nearest Canadian National-Grand Trunk Agent, or write General Passenger Dept., Toronto

Canadian National-Grand Trunk

For Next Year

The CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL for 1921 will have the brightest of fiction from such writers as Hulbert Footner, Virna Sheard, Beatrice Redpath and others.

The Only Secret of a Beautiful Complexion

A CLEAR, radiant, youthful complexion, what else but health can produce it? Health is the originator of charm, the handmaid to beauty, the basis of personal attractiveness. The texture of your skin, the brightness of your eyes and the sheen and lustre of your hair, all depend upon your physical well-being. Truly, the fastidious woman watches her health. She is careful to see that her bodily organs function properly, particularly those organs that eliminate waste from the body. If these do not act regularly and thoroughly, poisons are formed, absorbed by the blood and carried to every body cell. These poisons are the most common cause of unattractiveness. Facial blemishes, muddy skin and sallowness are all traceable to them.

Nujol has been found by many women to be an invaluable aid to a clear, radiant complexion. It encourages the bowels to daily evacuations, thus keeping the body free of those toxins that mar the skin and endanger health.

Nujol relieves constipation without any of the unpleasant and weakening effects of castor oil, pills, salts, mineral waters, etc. It does not upset the stomach, cause nausea or griping, nor interfere with the day's work or play.

Works on a New Principle

Instead of forcing or irritating the system, Nujol simply softens the food waste. This enables the many tiny muscles, in the walls of the intestines, contracting and expanding in their normal way, to squeeze the food waste along so that it passes naturally out of the system.

Nujol thus prevents constipation because it helps Nature maintain easy, thorough bowel evacuation at regular intervals—the healthiest habit in the world, and the only secret of a beautiful complexion.

Nujol is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take. Try it.

Nujol is sold by all druggists in sealed bottles only bearing the Nujol trade mark.

How and why internal cleanliness will bring beauty and attractiveness is told in a plain, instructive and authoritative way in the booklet "A LOVELY SKIN COMES FROM WITHIN." Fill out and mail the attached coupon today.

Nujol, Room 701, 22 St. Francois Xavier St., Montreal, P. Q. Please send me copy of "A LOVELY SKIN COMES FROM WITHIN".

Name .....

Address .....

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23.)

"Save the babies" was a slogan adopted by the A. W. I. last year and the work was carried on in a most aggressive way. Literature on the care and feeding of children was distributed all over the province—food cards displaying menus for children from two to seven years were prepared by the Assistant Superintendent, Miss B. McDermid, who took up a special course in Columbia University on the matter. Child Welfare exhibits showing right and wrong kinds of foods were displayed at the annual convention and at both the Calgary and Edmonton fairs. Stettler, after a strenuous effort, has succeeded in establishing a child welfare clinic station and every Saturday a clinic fitted up by the town is opened. Delia has given prizes in a better baby contest. Cowley has sent a crippled child to Winnipeg for treatment and in order to do this the Institute had to raise a thousand dollars. Didsbury has raised the sum of $500 to send a crippled child away and Fleet has done the service and has made it possible for a child who walked on his hands and knees to have an operation and now the little chap—who otherwise was normal—is learning to walk on his artificial limbs.

EFFORTS IN PUBLIC HEALTH.

All over the Province, Institutes are helping hospitals and working indefatigably in the "Municipal Hospital" movement. Vermilion is completely furnishing a double ward in the new hospital. Altario has donated five hundred dollars to the new hospital—Strathmore is furnishing a ward. Airdrie succeeded in getting a board of health and medical health officer, other branches have secured medical inspection in the schools and Peace River has been able to get district nurses who have a special training in obstetrics and who go to the outlying districts where the services of doctors cannot be procured. Another Institute guaranteed a salary for a doctor, who went and is getting along splendidly. Short courses in home nursing are being sent out from the Department of Agriculture to any community that desires it and these are proving very successful.

AGRICULTURE AN AIM.

Another aim of the Institute is to stimulate agriculture and Alberta Institutes are living up in a very material way to this aim. The school has been one of the strongest mediums and the encouragement of the school fairs has been a big feature—this being done by the donation of prizes to the children. Magrath has an annual flower show for school children, they begin in the spring by the purchase of the seeds and last year this Institute spent $165.00 in financing the undertaking which was a splendid success in every way. Attempts have been made for tree planting campaign both at school and at home. Institute members have taken a keen interest in agricultural fairs and have done everything from providing rest tents, to giving special prizes and being members of the board to make them a success. One Institute has three members on the agricultural society board. The Ribstone W.I. ran the whole fall fair from getting out the programme to being responsible for the prize money. Dairying, poultry raising and gardening have been among the subjects studied.

PATRIOTIC WORK.

"Canada, the land where everything fares which is best. Even so, has she become our Lady of Perpetual Success."—"Janey Canuck."

The after-war work by the Institutes has been worthy of note. The military hospitals have been objects of showers of jams, "Easter eggs," preserves and all the good things that can come from the farm. Ogden and Frank have been particular objects of Institute efforts along this line. Many Institutes have given splendid receptions to the returned boys when the whole district turned out and there would be an attendance up in the hundreds. Provost has given each returned boy a ring, while another Institute has presented the next-of-kin with silk service flags. Donations have been made to St. Dunstan's Home for the Blind, the Belgian Relief, Red Cross Canadian War Hospital Association, Disabled Soldiers' Fund. Various Institutes have invested funds in Victory bonds and in War Savings funds. Cardston has appointed as standard bearer, a woman who had a number of sons at the front.

Other donations have been given to the Girls' Home in Edmonton, the Children's Shelter, the Y.W.C.A., The Associated Charities and the social service home.

It is difficult to give an adequate idea in terms of dollars and cents, of the immense amount of relief work carried on by the locals. Institutes have adopted whole families and clothed them and fed them. Unfortunate settlers have been burnt out and the Institute has come forward. Charity begins at home is an unwritten slogan of the Institutes and one of their first works is to look after the needy in the district. One feature of the work is the large number of layettes provided and if it were not for these, many a new citizen in Alberta would have found a very scanty wardrobe—if any at all—awaiting him. The relief to those in the drought stricken areas has been very great. Over six thousand dollars worth of new garments has been sent out and 2,300 persons clothed.

HOME ECONOMICS.

Home economics and home nursing have been developed mostly through the short course work, there being a total attendance of 21,000 women at these demonstration lecture courses given at ninety-one centres. The Institutes themselves, have furthered the Home Economics by compiling cook books containing true and tried recipes. One Institute tried successfully co-operative buying in fish and fruit from British Columbia.

Several Institutes are devoting their time to the study of the legal status of women in Alberta and to community civics. Delia has succeeded in getting a woman reeve, Mrs. W. Barss. Many co-operate with the town or municipal council in benefiting the neighborhood.

When one reads of the various efforts of the Alberta Women's Institutes it needs no particular insight to see just what they mean in the province to-day.

CONCERNING PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

ONE of the most discussed subjects at the annual conventions of the Alberta Women's Institutes, as at other similar conventions, is the public school curriculum. It is important that in discussing this subject, however, members of the Institutes should bear in mind the fact that the present course of studies prescribed for our schools has been thought out very thoroughly, and represents the results or consensus of opinions of all our leading educationists, not only in Alberta, but in North America. Nothing is much truer than the French phrase, "la critique est aisée, mais l'art est difficile," and nothing is more often the subject of criticism perhaps than our school curriculum. But the Department of Education is anxious for criticism, and asks for it. Critics, however, would do well to remember that opinions should be accompanied by material suggestions and evidence that these suggestions can be worked out for the betterment of education; further that copies of the school curriculum may be obtained and should be studied in order to be intelligently discussed.

Mr. E. G. McNally, Supervisor of Schools for Alberta, is particularly

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 27)

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26.)

anxious to secure from members of the Women's Institutes their opinions and ideas of how the school curriculum can be improved. He has prepared a questionnaire and would be pleased to obtain opinions on the following points.

- (1) Are the aims to be attained through the various subjects clearly and definitely stated?
- (2) Should the course contain (a) an irreducible minimum which should be required of everybody, this meaning, should there be a foundation of studies that all should study, and (b) should there be a supply of optional material, such as supplementary reading, which could be partially and variously retained by each individual; this material, especially intended for the more gifted pupils—those who find their work easier than the others and who can help themselves, and to be adapted in some measure for the individual tastes of the pupils.
- (3) Should there be any distinction between the course of study for rural and urban children? It has been suggested for rural children that greater emphasis should be laid on agriculture. Should the differentiation be confined to the first six grades or to grades seven to nine?

PRIZE CANNERS

This is the girl group of cannery which won the prize in Elva, Manitoba.

- (4) What is the time required by a child of (a) superior ability, (b) average ability, to complete the work of the present course in a good rural school?
- (5) People complain that the course is at present overloaded. Is this true? If so, what subjects should be eliminated or reduced? Is time wasted on relatively useless material in the subjects now included in the course?
- (6) Have subjects of greater value than those now included been overlooked?
- (7) Is the course flexible enough to be easily adjustable to varying conditions?
- (8) Is sufficient emphasis placed on the development of morality, character, and the spirit of co-operation demanded by our present social organization?
- (9) Does it give the greatest possible aid to the individual in establishing right attitudes toward the preservation of health, and the wise use of leisure, the duties of citizenship and the necessity for hard work if one should succeed?

Referring to the matter generally, Mr. McNally quotes from Dr. Snedden: "A course of study should be very analogous to the plans and specifications which an architect prepares for the guidance of builders. Supervision follows to see that the plans and specifications, however, are fundamentally the general and specific directions under which people are to work."

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 30.)

Improve Your Cooking With KLIM

TO get the best results from your favorite recipes, the milk you use must be of uniform quality and flavor.

You can always depend upon KLIM for an unfailing supply of pure separated milk. The original fresh natural flavor is retained by our exclusive "spray" process, which takes away the water from the separated milk and leaves the valuable food part powdered, just as you see it when you open a tin of KLIM in your kitchen.

To make liquid KLIM, simply pour water into a fruit jar, add the KLIM, and shake for a moment—read directions on the tin for proportions. Taste it. You will at once appreciate the flavor and goodness of KLIM. Make it fresh whenever you require a cupful, a pint, or a quart for cooking or for the table. The last pint will taste exactly like the first—good!

Thousands of homes depend upon KLIM almost entirely for their supply because of its convenience, economy, and purity. Three sizes—half-pound, one-pound, and ten-pound tins—at your grocer's.

CANADIAN MILK PRODUCTS LIMITED

81 Prince William St.
ST. JOHN

10-12 St. Patrick St., Toronto.
319 Craig St. W.,
MONTREAL

132 James Ave. E.,
WINNIPEG

B. C. Distributors: Kirkland & Rose, 132 Water St., Vancouver, B.C.

Send a Dollar for a Tin of Klim Brand Powdered Whole Milk

which contains all of the fat of the original rich whole milk from which it was made. Because of its richness in fat, the product is not sold by grocers, but is sold direct to the user. Clip out the order form and send to our nearest office. You will receive by return parcel post a trial pound and a quarter tin with price list.

Order your tin to-day and learn how convenient and good POWDERED WHOLE MILK is.

9-107

CANADIAN MILK PRODUCTS LIMITED 9-107
(Address our nearest office)

Please mail a pound and a quarter tin of KLIM Brand Powdered Whole Milk and price list. Enclosed is ONE DOLLAR. In British Columbia, $1.15.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

(Print name and address for clearness.)

Time and Money

We want and we will liberally pay one energetic lady in each community to represent the "Canadian Home Journal."

We already have scores of local representatives in our big Home Journal Club, and some are making as high as $100.00 per month.

There are still many towns and villages in Canada in which we have not a representative, and if you have any spare time that you desire to turn into money, write us to-day.

The remuneration of a "Canadian Home Journal" representative is according to the time and activity devoted to the work.

If you have plenty of time and energy there is practically no limit to your income or territory, for we make special provision for the live ones.

The women of Canada require more money to-day than at any time in the history of the nation. The "Home Journal" will supply that money in exchange for your time.

Write us to-day.

Canadian Home Journal

71 Richmond Street West, TORONTO.

This is the Tiny Leaf

that eventually arrives in your tea-pot under the familiar name of

"SALADA"

The little leaves are filled with the rich, essential oil that yields the delicious and unique flavor that has made "Salada" famous for 30 years. If you are not now using "Salada," send us a post-card and we will gladly mail you a sample—Salada, Toronto.

BRAESIDE LODGE SANATORIUM, LIMITED PRESTON, ONTARIO

A quiet home for tired people. Treatments in Massage, Hydrotherapy, Electricity. Trained nurses in attendance. Write for circulars. Miss Sophie L. J. Robb, Superintendent.

The Present of the Moment Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen

The "Ideal" Gift

For MEN, WOMEN and CHILDREN

—$2.50—
and up at the Best Dealers.

In the Christmas
Stocking of Today

The World's Standard for Quality, Efficiency and Durability.

Easy to Buy Easy to Send A Joy to Receive

L. E. Waterman Company Limited, 179 St. James St., Montreal.

It is really hard to define any quality, isn't it? If you have ever been in the company of one of those heart-searching, ultra-scientific persons who revel in definitions, you will know what I mean. I remember on one occasion several wise citizens were discussing beauty and wherein it consisted and were finally driven to the conclusion of the old poet that it "is in the eye of the beholder."

Then, in the matter of extravagance we are sometimes puzzled to decide on where the folly lies. The other day, I said to an "argufying" friend: "You know, I was very much tempted to buy a new pair of gloves yesterday; but I really don't need them, and they were eight dollars and a half."

"I don't see why you didn't get them," said the Lady who loves an Argument, "that is if you wanted them."

"But I shouldn't have been really happy in them. You see, they weren't useful or wool-lined or anything like

THE convention of the Women's Institutes of Ontario, which was held in Toronto on November 9th, 10th and 11th, was of more than usual interest. In fact, we are just beginning to recover from war times and war themes, and return to topics of construction and reconstruction. It was inevitable, during those war years, that we should deal with the necessary aid for the men who were bearing the brunt of the conflict—and Heaven forbid that we should ever forget their sacrifices and their sufferings! The best that any of us can do will be none too much as a memorial to those who gave their lives and their strength that our country might be free from Hun oppression.

This year's conventions of women's societies have shown everywhere a desire to do the best for the young citizens—to give wider opportunities to the Canadians who are just entering on a training for life. This intensified interest in the younger citizens is but a natural consequence of the realization of the immense loss

AT ONTARIO'S CONVENTION, WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

While visiting Toronto, Her Excellency found time to attend the annual session in the Technical School, where she is seen, third on the left, front row, with Miss Beardmore, Port Credit; Mrs. Meade, Blenheim; Mrs. Edwards, Miss Watson, Ayr; Mrs. C. F. Yates, Athens; Miss Craig, North Gower; Mrs. Patterson, Gadshill; Mrs. Gardner, Owen Sound; Mrs. Todd, North Perth (President); Mrs. Fowler, Perth; Mrs. Sexsmith, Mrs. Hunt, Algoma; Mrs. Allen, Fort William; Mrs. McCoun, Campbellford, and Mrs. Cronk.

that. They were just gloves I liked; two shades of brown, with gauntlets and slashed effect, you know."

"Well," said the Argument Lady, "even if you would have bought them for looks rather than warmth, I cannot see that the price was really extravagant, because you could have worn the gloves for ever so long. Why, that ring you are wearing cost more than eight dollars and a half."

"I should think it did," I replied loftily, for I am fond of that particular ring.

"Well, the ring is of no use whatever and yet no one seems to regard two or three rings as a bit of extravagance. Now, the gloves—"

"I'm beginning to hate the gloves. They cost too much to give just now—and I'm not going to buy them."

"I don't wish you to," replied the Argument Lady in tranquil tones. "I only wished to point out that it would not have been an extravagance to get them. If we considered all the unnecessary things we buy, everyone is extravagant."

"But we can't live on bread and water and dress in sack cloth. Manufacturers would starve if we didn't buy fur coats and cream puffs. Where would our civilization be?"

"Now that you mention it, I haven't seen any too much civilization lately," said the Argument Lady darkly.

Canada has suffered in the sacrifice of thousands of her citizens in the flower of young manhood.

At the conventions of the Ontario Institutes, it was noticeable, too, that the need for making the farm-house, itself, a more attractive scene for woman's work was dwelt upon by more than one speaker. It is all in vain to discuss the reason why farm life is not more attractive to girls and boys unless the elders realize that their own experience has too often been an object lesson, saying "don't" to the ambitions of Youth. Dr. Helen MacMurchy emphasized, in her address, the importance of having water in the farm house. There has been a pitiful waste of toil for the farmer's wife, in this item of work alone—and the monotony of effort that might well have been avoided by a little thoughtfulness for the woman's welfare, has often proved a crushing weight.

The observer has sometimes wondered that women themselves have been so slow to lighten their work by labor-saving devices. It has been woman's fault, frequently, that she has worked so hard—and sometimes so needlessly. The outlook for the future on the farms is less work and more production. Science has come along with her aids to effective toil—and, altogether, we have no need either to wear out or rust out.

Let your Christmas Phonograph Possess these exclusive features

Made in Canada

THE ULTONA
Playing a Brunswick Record

All-record, All-needle ULTONA

This is the Brunswick invention which solves the problem of playing all makes of records without attachments or extras. Nothing to take off or put on! The Ultona is instantly adjusted by a mere twist of the wrist to play each make of record with the correct diaphragm, the precise needle and the exact weight. And it actually does make your records last longer.

All-wood Oval Horn

This is the exclusive Brunswick feature which is so largely responsible for the wonderful tone of the Brunswick. The laws of acoustics prove that sound waves travel naturally in ovals or circles. So we build the Brunswick horn round—and entirely of wood, like a fine violin. It actually does eliminate the harshness and tinny timbre so closely associated with old-time talking machines.

What Shape IS a Horn
?

THE TONE AMPLIFIER
With Grill Removed

The Brunswick

ALL PHONOGRAPHS IN ONE

Hear—compare—then decide! Ask your nearest Brunswick dealer to play your favorite record — any make on the Brunswick. Note the pure tone qualities, freedom from metallic harshness and undue surface scratch it derives from the exclusive Brunswick method of reproduction.

The Booklet, "What to Look for in Buying a Phonograph," by Henry P. Eames, will interest you. Write for a copy to be sent you, free and postpaid.

The Musical Merchandise Sales Co.

Sole Canadian Distributors:

79 Wellington Street W., TORONTO

WINNIPEG.

MONTREAL.

143 Portage Ave. E.

719 Drummond Bldg.

The next best thing: If you haven't a Brunswick, is Brunswick Records on the phonograph you have?

Elgin Watches

TRADE MARK

The Mother

"Mother, what time is it?"

From dawn till bedtime, these words echo in Mother's ears.

In a well-regulated home, things happen "On Time." The Mother who directs her household by the Elgin enjoys the result.

She starts the family off to school and business "On Time" because the Elgin is dependable.

Bread rises, pies and cakes bake, meat roasts, meals are served—the whole family gets up and goes to bed by the tick of the Elgin.

Homes ordered on Elgin Time are an achievement in restfulness and contentment.

There is a Jeweler in your vicinity who carries a pleasing selection of Elgin Watches—faithful guardians of Time.

CANADIAN ELGIN WATCH CO. LTD.
TORONTO

45A

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 27.)

A NOTE FROM ELVA.

ELVA wishes the "Canadian Home Journal" members a very Happy Christmas and would like to let the members of the Institutes know what they are doing and how much the reports in the Journal have been enjoyed by our members. Last year, Elva had but twenty-three members in the Society. We are a very small town and there are few opportunities for work that we would like the Society to do.

Our membership is increasing rapidly. We have now on the Roll Call, fifty-one members and we are proud of them. We have indeed, been most fortunate in our choice of a president, Mrs. Armstrong. She is never absent and throws her whole energy into the work and so stimulates her workers. A special feature of our Monthly Meetings is the friendly spirit shown by all, we never have any discords.

Should a member not have her paper ready, someone else comes forward, and I should like to mention here, that when we draw a programme for the year, we do not always ask our members what they would like to do.

THE SEWING TEAM

Here is a group from Elva, Manitoba, showing the Institute activities.

but choose some subject most likely to suit their taste and talent, and very few have failed. We have had some clever papers on nursing, care of children, raising chickens, and many more.

The members, where possible, lend their homes, where we meet in some cosy room. We always finish up with a ten-cent tea, which we provide in turns. So it does not fall heavy on one more than another. We found it easier to take turns in alphabetical order; so no one is missed. The young people are very clever in giving both vocal and instrumental music, which greatly helps to make the afternoons pleasant and cheerful.

The Society sent a doll to one of the foreign-speaking schools, which is to be given as a prize to one of the pupils.

We also had two teams for the competition, Sewing and Canning. Our canning team was the sixth on the roll and won bronze medals. Mrs. A. Crawford is very highly to be praised, she worked so hard in the hot weather and she had a very short time to train them. The Society felt the least they could do was to offer her a trip to Winnipeg, with the girls, and everyone agreed. Score for canning, 217.

The Sewing Team was the only one in the Province and Mrs. Hutchings and Mrs. Horsley worked hard at it. The girls took 190 points in the score, which was higher than some, who went to Winnipeg; they were even with Oaklake, the tenth on the list, so we are proud of our Elva Boys' and Girls' Club.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 43.)

OXO CUBES

CONCENTRATED BEEF

DRINK OXO—and KEEP WARM!

No wonder OXO is a favorite winter beverage! It strengthens and sustains against cold and fatigue. Prepared in a minute—the minute you want it.

A CUBE TO A CUP

Tins of 4 and 10
Cubes

A NEW ROOM IN THE OLD HOUSE

Transform your old room by adding a few new pictures, draperies, etc., or change the places of older ones. Easily and quickly done with

MOORE PUSH-PINS
Glass Heads—Steel Points

They will not mar paper, wood or plaster walls. Easily inserted with a twist of the wrist. For heavy pictures, mirrors, etc., use the invisible Moore Push-Pin Hangers, brass finish; will hold up to 100 pounds. Suggest a use and we'll send you free samples.

Sold everywhere by Hardware, Stationery, Drug, Photo Supply and Department Stores.

Moore Push-Pin Co.

6-12 Berkley St.

15c per pkt.
Phila. Pa.

America's Pioneer
Dog
Medicines

Book on

DOG DISEASES And How to Feed

Mailed free to any address by author

H. Clay Glover Co., Inc.

118 West 31st St. New York City

DOMINION EXPRESS

MONEY ORDERS

There is no better way to pay your out-of-town accounts.

On sale in 5,000 offices in Canada

WHEN any stupid person says to me, "Christmas really isn't worth it!" meaning, of course, all the trouble we go to to make it a gay and joyous festival, I don't argue with him. I just go away and pity him, to think how little fun he has. And, you know, such persons are usually the very ones who have the means to make it such a ripping holiday for themselves and everyone else! No mental strain required—no necessity for them to figure out how they can provide six satisfactory and even handsome presents for as many dollars as gifts. All they have to do is gifts. Unselfish idea, isn't it? But what are you to expect from a Vain Jane? This is the way I present the matter to myself: "Here you are," I say, "getting things for other people which you would most dearly like to keep for yourself, and which, quite likely, will not be appreciated, and a number of people are probably searching for gifts for you which are not the sort of thing you care about at all, so why not buy yourself a present and be sure that one of your Christmas gifts, at least, is exactly what you want?" It really works out very well.

THE EVER-ATTRACTIVE PIERRETTE

At Christmas-time, Pierrette is more popular than ever—almost a rival to Columbine. The part is here taken by Miss Marion Davies.

to walk into the shops, use their intelligence a little bit about selection and spend their money. When these people tell you Christmas is a bore, it makes you wonder if the pleasure some of us experience isn't measured by the effort expended, and the sacrifices made. Personally, it would bring to me no happiness at all to give away something that I didn't want myself, and that it was no trouble to obtain. Certainly I would never get near to the Christmas spirit if I had a secretary who tied up my gifts in red tissue and holly ribbon, and enclosed my card with a stereotyped form of greeting.

Therefore, I say I love Christmas and the Christmas season. And let me tell you something confidentially; I always include myself in the list of those to whom I am going to make

But this year, for some reason, I simply cannot make up my mind what to give myself. You know, in a case like this, you may be as personal as you please and I have no feeling about making myself a very practical gift. I have thought of a number of things, mostly connected with the artifices of the toilet, where my vain heart really lies. For instance, there is a flat flacon of exquisite perfume, a gold cap covering its glass stopper, bearing the name of a famous firm of French perfumers, with which I would dearly love to present myself. But on the other hand, I really need an over-night case, something small and compact for carrying just those toilet accessories which are necessary to make a presentable appearance on a brief visit from home. I am torn between these two and the very

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 34.)

THROUGH-THE-LOOKING-GLASS COUPON

Should a reader desire to avail herself of any advice which might be given through this department, her inquiry, written on one side of the paper, should be accompanied by this coupon. In the case of desiring a private answer, a stamped and addressed envelope should be enclosed.

Pure and Soft As the Lily

"Her complexion is like a Lily"—the velvety softness of her skin and the pearly whiteness of her appearance always bring your thoughts to the flower of purity. If you had her confidence she would tell you that was her secret of Beauty. She is but one of thousands of women all over the world who depend upon it for their exceptional appearance—In use for 70 years. Purifying and healing—Non greasy—Quickly and easily applied and gives instant results keeps the skin pure, soft and white. It gives a splendid, rich lather that leaves the skin cleansed and refreshed. Use it before applying Gouraud's Oriental Cream.

Gouraud's Oriental Cream

Send 15c for Trial Size

Gouraud's Medicated Soap

Send 15c for Trial Size

Ferd. T. Hopkins & Son
344 W. St. Paul St. Montreal

Over the Wire

POLLY—"Yes! I heard it yesterday. Oh, Bess, can you tell me the name of that enchanting perfume Maude uses? She won't tell me—but I hear it is the rage in Paris."

BESS—"Isn't it exquisite? It's one of the Erasmic perfumes! Aw-w-w—let me see. Reve—Reve de Beaute—that's it."

POLLY—"That's the name, old dear—thanks awfully. Isn't it marvellous? I never smelled such a fascinating fragrance. Just like burying your nose in an old-fashioned bouquet."

BESS—"Yes, it is made from the essence of the rarest old-world flowers. Maude says one drop lasts for days—yet the fragrance is so unobtrusive. All the smart women are using it. Oh, here comes Jack—bye-bye."

Parfum Rêve de Beauté

Also Savon, Poudre de Riz, Creme de Beaute, Toilet Water.

"Erasmic"

At all Druggists
Imported by

Anglo American Agencies Limited
41-43 St. Francois Xavier Street

Do You Require More Hair?

An extra hair piece will wonderfully improve your appearance. Whatever may be your requirement, Dorenwend's have the particular style to fit your need.

May we send you a descriptive booklet of hair pieces and toilet requisites? Our mail order service is prompt and will give you perfect satisfaction.

DORENWEND'S, Limited
105 Yonge St., - Toronto

Maybelline Darkens Eyebrows and Lashes

Making them appear much longer, thicker and more luxuriant than they really are—easily applied, harmless, shades black, brown.

Lash-Brow-Ine

a pure, harmless cream, applied nightly aids Nature in a marvellous way in nourishing and promoting the growth of the eyebrows and lashes. Dark, luxuriant eyelashes and well-formed eyebrows, how wonderfully they bring out the deep, soulful expression of eyes, adding charm and beauty to any face. These famous Maybelline Beauty Aids are used and recommended by Stars of the stage and screen and beautiful women everywhere. Why not you?

MAYBELLINE, "LASH-BROW-INE" obtainable at your Dealer's. To avoid disappointment with imitations always look for "The Maybelline Girl," same as above, on every box of both preparations. We guarantee you will be delighted or return money.
MAYBELL LABORATORIES
Chicago, Ill.

Give Books This Year

Think how easy they are to select, and how—when carefully chosen—they are certain of appreciation.

The list below and ten minutes in your favorite book shop will provide for all your friends. See if the suggestions will not be helpful.

FOR MOTHER OR AUNT SUE

Returned Empty. By Florence L. Barclay.

Both of these good ladies have revelled in Mrs. Barclay's previous books. They will be anxious to have this one, in which the author has ventured into the realms of Spiritism and Reincarnation. Almost anyone would welcome it, and to grown-up ladies it should be an especially appreciated gift. $2.00.

FOR DAD OR UNCLE GEORGE

West Wind Drift. By George Barr McCutcheon.

This is a little more serious story than McCutcheon's "Graustark" was, dealing with the people from a ship-wrecked ocean liner, who, unknown to the rest of the world, find a place on a desert island, establish their own government and live their own lives for some time. It gives something to think about. $2.00.

FOR SISTER LUCY OR COUSIN JENNY

Poor Man's Rock. By Bertrand W. Sinclair.

Here's a hero at once they'll fall in love with. A returned soldier man, staunch and true, who fights against difficulties in the Canadian Salmon Industry, and eventually wins his sweetheart and overcomes his difficulties. This is without a doubt one of the finest Canadian novels of the year. $2.00.

FOR BROTHER BOB OR HIS KIND

Black Bartlemy's Treasure. By Jeffery Farnol.

Besides liking this himself, Bob will hand it over to his lady friends. This is one of those swashbuckling stories that Farnol tells so well, of smuggling, piracy, hidden treasure, and a wonderful love affair wrapped up in it all. Bob will likely read it all on Christmas night, or the night after. $2.00.

FOR THE GIRL AROUND THE CORNER

Potterism. By Rose McCauley.

If your friend likes to be the first to read the outstanding books, she will be delighted with this, a novel which you and she will hear more about in two or three months. $2.00.

FOR THE ADVENTURE-LOVING FRIEND

The Heart of Unaga. Ridgwell Cullum.

This will carry him to our own Northwest, where he will associate for about five hours with people of big souls and red blood, and where he will have a real mystery to solve, and meet a bunch of Indians for good measure. $2.00.

FOR ONE WHO LIKES "NIGGER" STUFF

Come Seven. Octavus Roy Cohen.

There is a chuckle in every paragraph of these stories of so-called "High Society" among the "Cullud" people of the South. Until he knows Florrie, Slappy and the others, he will not be getting everything out of life. $2.00.

FOR THE DETECTIVE-STORY LOVER

The Hand in the Dark. By Arthur J. Rees.

Here's a problem, the unravelling of which will keep your friend busy for three or four evenings. One of the best of the many current mystery novels. $2.00.

FOR THE MORE SERIOUS-MINDED

Re Social Problems: When Labour Rules.

By Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, M.P.

What would happen if a Labour Government were to come into control in England under present-day conditions? This and other current questions are discussed most entertainingly. $2.25.

FOR THE SCIENTIFICALLY-INCLINED

Relativity. A. Einstein, Ph.D.

Scientific journals have been full of references to the epoch-making Einstein theory for months. Here is the thing itself, treated comprehensively and analytically by its originator. $1.75.

FOR THE CANADA ENTHUSIAST

A Study in Canadian Immigration. By Prof. W. G. Smith.

What has become of our Canadian Immigrants? Have our Immigration policies been a success? What will the incoming people do for us in the future? Should we make any change in our treatment of them? These pertinent facts are comprehensively and authoritatively treated in this, the first serious attempt to handle the subject like this in Canada. $3.00.

If a book store is not convenient, any volume will be sent postpaid on receipt of quoted price.

The Ryerson Press
Publishers
TORONTO

"Bonnie Prince Fetlar," the story of a Pony and his Friends, by Marshall Saunders, author of "Beautiful Joe," "The Wandering Dog," etc. Published by McClelland and Stewart, Toronto. Price, $2.00.

THE author of this volume is one of Canada's best-loved writers, for thousands of our citizens, young and old, have enjoyed her stories of the dog, the squirrel and our other animal friends. This writer would be thoroughly in sympathy with the poem by Ralph Hodgson.

"'Twould ring the bells of Heaven,
The wildest peal for years,
If Parson lost his senses
And people came to theirs,
And he and they together
Knelt down with angry prayers
For tamed and shabby tigers,
And dancing dogs and bears,
And wretched, blind pit ponies,
And little hunted hares."

In "Bonnie Prince Fetlar," we have the story of a delightfully frolicsome and friendly pony on a Canadian farm in the Northland. Fetlar is of the black Shetland variety and proves his good blood by his courtesy to all his master's friends. The story is told in the first person and we are introduced to the lakes and wood of the North in the most satisfactory fashion, as Fetlar trots here and there;—and even the wolves fail to startle us. We are really sorry to say good-bye to the Deverings and the Duffs—to say nothing of Black Paws, the raccoon. This book will make a most acceptable Christmas gift for the young person who enjoys his four-footed friends.

"The Lady Latour," poems by William Inglis Morse, author of "Acadian Lays." Published by the Ryerson Press, Toronto.

THESE verses display a wide diversity in theme and style, and the writer thereof is evidently inspired with a love of the old lore of the Indian legends. This song of the New Year (originally published in the "Canadian Magazine") shows the more modern outlook of the writer in his consideration of the coming days:

"In mad processional the wind
Sweeps homeward from the sea
On this, the last night of the year—
Awakening memory.

"Of phantom days, shrined in brief song,
To fleeting music set,
And Time's crescendo stirs again
The surges of regret.

"The tolling of the midnight bell
I hear across the sky,
While o'er the magic threshold comes
The new year's glad reply.

"Aside like some loose-fitting cloak
The worn-out vesture lay,
And don with proud and joyous thrill
This garb of New Year's day."

"Acanthus and Wild Grape," poems by F. O. Call, author of "In a Belgian Garden." Published by McClelland and Stewart, Toronto. Price, $1.00.

THE author of these poems is a professor at Bishop's College, Lennoxville, Quebec, and he has made an authentic contribution to Canadian literature in these poems of old forms and new. Mr. Call is not one of those who decry rhyme and rhythm, and who consider that free verse means drab prose on a dreary subject. He is a true artist in his love for beauty, and whether he makes use of rhyme or writes in unrhymed lines, he is a singer to whom a tired world is glad to listen. Color is everywhere, in his dreams and fancies, as we find in "A River Sunset."

The second part of the volume, "Wild Grape," is written in modern and less conventional form, and is equally inspired by the love of setting "perfect music unto noble words." The reader puts down the volume with the sense of refreshment that an hour with the ideal always brings, for this poet of Quebec is not of the cynical order of bards who see nothing but the earthly and the ugly.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 40.)

A POPULAR NOVELIST

Miss Marshall Saunders is here seen with her pet dog, "Billy Sunday." Miss Saunders first won fame with "Beautiful Joe," and her "Bonnie Prince Fetlar," her latest production, is sure to please many readers.

Christmas Mystery Plays

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 24.)

performances of plays on sacred subjects and the Christmas dramas dovetailed into a cosmic cycle. As Mr. Miles puts it; "The Christmas and Epiphany episodes formed but links in an immense chain extending from the Creation to the Last Judgment." Remains of Christmas plays, as they were performed at Chester, York, Towneley and Coventry, still survive, and contain some passages, that after one has mastered the crabbed phraseology of old English, prove truly emotional and sometimes lovely. In studying them, one notes the same innocence of all archaeological considerations which characterizes the early Italian religious pictures, that show Scriptural characters wearing the Italian apparel of the time. In the Chester Mysteries, the Nativity is presented as an English event, with neighborhood allusions and considerable realism; and the same was true of kindred pieces of the period. The rude but sincere playwrights, did not hesitate to introduce comic episodes, which, however, leave no sense of irreverence.

To the modern mind the human touches with which these plays abound, are their most interesting characteristics. For instance there is in the Coventry Mysteries, a scene in which Joseph and the weary Mary come to Bethlehem and appeal to a citizen for shelter. He can only direct them to a stable—and the tender resignation of Mary, her willingness to accept any resting place,—are most touchingly expressed. The fact that Jesus was first of all an infant and a child of the poor seems to have been that on which the scriptural playwrights laid the deepest stress, and was undoubtedly that which most appealed to the sensibilities of the audiences. Innocent of all knowledge of where the Nativity had occurred, the idea that Christmas was a season of cold, and that the Virgin and her new born infant suffered thereby, is constantly the subject of allusion, for the purpose of rousing a sense of pity.

IN the Chester Mysteries, which one witnessed at Toronto University, the Shepherds, prior to the arrival of an angelic visitant, discuss the diseases of sheep and sit down to a meal of Halton ale, sour milk, onions, garlic, leeks, green cheese, and sheep's head soured in ale, all mentioned in the dialogue. Their hind or servant, a lusty lad named Trowle, quarrels with them because they have not paid his wages, and as originally played, wrestled with them, throwing them one by one, though this diversion was omitted in the Hart House version. It is this turbulent scene that the angel dramatically interrupts with his message of peace on earth. When they go to the stable to see their new born Lord, they bring Him a bell to play with, a flask, a spoon to eat potage with and a cape. Trowle is too poor to give anything but a pair of his wife's old hose. Shepherd boys who accompany their elders, also bring gifts, and one has nothing to offer but his shepherd's pipe.

In the York Mysteries, comedy is carried to the length of making the most uncouth of the Shepherds ludicrously try to imitate the angels' song, and utter rough jokes about it. In one of the Towneley plays there is argument and wrangling among the Shepherds; and the gifts they present after being summoned to Bethlehem by the angel, are a little spruce coffer, a ball and a gourd bottle. In yet another of the Towneley plays the Shepherds talk like workmen to-day, of the oppressions of the rich, complain of cold and their hard lot, and a sheep-stealing episode is introduced; but this same play attains singular devotional beauty after they visit the Divine Infant. Each sings a verse about the gift he brings, the first has a "bob of cherries" to delight His eye; the second, a bird to sing to Him; the third, a ball for Him to play tennis with. To the simple untutored and devout minds of the Middle Ages, there was nothing incongruous in such homely expressions of love and devotion.

Candy that is the very spirit of Yuletide

THE climax of joyousness is reached and toys and games are forgotten when mother opens a box of Moir's—delicious dainties that fairly melt in the mouth.

Mother knows that Moir's are always fresh and wholesome.

Moir's Chocolates

MOIR'S, LIMITED, HALIFAX

A Human Document

Which unfolds the joys and sorrows of a deep Mother-love. The beautifully written and genuine letters contained in

The Little Mother Who Sits At Home

By Countess Barcynsky

tell an absorbing story of a Mother's sacrifice for her Son and form ideal reading for Mother or Daughter.

A Delightful Christmas Gift.

If your bookseller has sold out, write direct to the publishers. Price, $1.25.

THOS. NELSON & SON
77 Wellington St. W., Toronto

FREE
For 5 Days Wear

We'll send you a genuine Gophir Gem, mounted in solid 14kt gold, so you can wear it free for five full days. IF YOU CAN TELL IT FROM A DIAMOND—SEND IT BACK. Gophir Gems are cut like diamonds, stand all diamond tests, and are guaranteed for a lifetime.

Simply send your name and address for our new Gophir Gem book. Select from it the goods desired. After five days free trial, if you want to keep them, pay on instalments as low as $1.50 monthly. No red tape, your credit is good.

Send today for booklet, and full details of our free trial, easy payment plan.

The Gophir Diamond Co., Limited
Dept. 53 140 Yonge St. Toronto

Use

PURITY FLOUR

For All Your Baking

and for Better
Porridge

Send 20 cents
for Purity Flour
Cook Book

Western Canada Flour Mills
Company, Limited

TORONTO—Head Office

Branches at Winnipeg, Brandon, Calgary, Edmonton,
Montreal, Ottawa, St. John, Goderich

76

PURITY OATS

Rosy Cheeks and Raisins

Go Together—Note the Reasons

According to Authorities

THERE are other reasons than luscious flavors for the serving of delicious raisin foods.

One is the raisin's natural iron content.

Raisins, in truth, may be called "a beauty food," for it is iron in the blood that brings the tint of roses to women's and children's pretty cheeks, and is necessary to ruddy health in men.

One needs but little iron daily in his food, but that need is vital.

Raisins are one of the richest of foods in assimilable iron.

Use raisins in plain foods like boiled rice, oatmeal, simple puddings, cakes, cookies, custards, ready-cooked cereals, et cetera.

Learn how much better everybody likes these foods with raisins. The luscious fruit-meats are like natural confections. They tempt the appetite. Increase nutrition, too, for raisins furnish 1560 calories of energizing nutriment per pound.

Delicious Raisin Roly Poly—Try It

- |                               |                          |
|-------------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1 cup Sun-Maid Seeded Raisins | 1 teaspoon baking powder |
| 1 cup flour                   | 2 teaspoons shortening   |
| 1 teaspoon salt               | ½ cup milk               |
| 1 teaspoon butter             | 2 tablespoons sugar      |

Sift flour, baking powder and salt into bowl, add shortening and rub in very lightly with tips of fingers, add milk enough to make dough to roll out ¼ inch thick. Cover with raisins, which have been stewed, thickened and sweetened with one tablespoon sugar, roll the same as jelly roll; place in bake pan which has been brushed with a little butter; sprinkle top with one tablespoon sugar and dot with the balance of butter. Bake in moderate oven 35 to 40 minutes. Serve warm with lemon sauce or milk.

SUN-MAID RAISINS

Use Sun-Maid Raisins, made from thin-skinned, juicy, tender, fragile California table grapes—kinds too delicate to ship fresh many miles.

You may never taste these grapes, but you can buy the raisins anywhere. Once know them and you'll always get this kind.

Three varieties: Sun-Maid Seeded (seeds removed); Sun-Maid Seedless (grown without seeds); Sun-Maid Clusters (on the stem).

CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATED RAISIN CO.
Membership 10,000 Growers
FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

California Associated Raisin Co.,
Dept. 15, Fresno, Calif.
Please send me, without charge, copy of "Sun-Maid Recipes."

Name _____
Street _____
City _____

Don't Miss This Book

Send coupon for free book, "Sun-Maid Recipes," describing scores of ways to serve.

Through the Looking Glass

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 31.)

duckiest lamp for my dressing-table—of antique porcelain with a shade of heavenly-blue brocade! It is quite the most expensive, and therefore I feel myself weakening toward it. But after all, why not, when I am trying to give myself a Merry Christmas, and it only comes once a year?

Of course there are plenty of more simple little remembrances which I could make myself without offense. Indeed, if my small store of savings for the holiday shopping dwindles before it comes to my own turn, I shall be obliged to select from these. I need some very excellent face powder, for example, and a few jars of cold cream for various purposes never go astray. I might even then go so far as to buy myself an electric vibrator, which, I understand from friends who have had experience with them, are excellent for home treatment. It could be attached beside my dressing-table ready for use, and instead of the somewhat tedious and not altogether antiseptic task of using my fingers for the daily cleansing-cream massage, the matter would be attended to in no time by the use of the little motor. There are two or three attachments, I am told, for the complexion, for the hair, and for the body, and common sense tells me that the stimulation obtained by their use is certain to be beneficial. I really think I shall decide on the vibrator; it is something no one else would ever think of giving me!

And since we have come to the season for saying it, Merry Christmas to you, dear ladies; especially to you who write me letters filled with little troubles about yourselves and kind words for me. And to you also who only read and do not write, and this I hope, because you have no troubles, at any rate none of the nature that I could help to remedy. All wrapped with red tissue and tied with holly ribbon and bearing my most hearty wishes, I send you Merry Christmas!

CORRESPONDENCE.

KATHERINE C.—The dust has a little way of working into the pores and resisting a casual washing, making it very difficult to overcome the grey look which is so unbecoming. An excellent cream of which I have recently heard will be a help, I think. Thorough cleansing is so very important before applying powder. It is encouraging to know that you find this column interesting. And why should you not be anxious to keep your best appearance just because the children are growing up? All the more reason to treasure your beauty, my dear, so that the big boy and girl may be proud of their youthful mother!

TROUBLED SEVENTEEN.—Do you think, dear girl, that the red hair is in any way to blame for your troubled state? Red-haired damsels are more intense than others, so they say, and while you enumerate several worries, they are not very serious ones and need not cause any permanent lines to carve themselves on your seventeen-year-old brow. In the private reply for which you have asked, I have told you of several tried remedies which I hope may clear away your troubles. But always remember that persistent care is the only kind which counts, and an application now and again of any remedy, no matter how excellent its reputation, will not be of much benefit.

MARIAN—This is a subject near to my heart. The mother who neglects herself, losing all interest in complexion, hair and figure, is also preparing to lose the respect of her children. A well-groomed, pretty mother gives them a pleasant sense of importance which a neglected creature with straggling hair and broken fingernails could never hope to confer. Your complexion only needs some care to help it back to its former state of health, and believe me, dear lady, you will never be sorry for having awakened in time to the knowledge that it does not pay to slip into a drab state of slavery! I am sending you some advice privately, regarding tonics and lotions, and here's hoping you may never slide back into a disinterested state again.

R.B.—You overwhelm me with an avalanche of questions, my friend, and then fail to comply with the regulation which requires a stamped and addressed envelope if a reply is desired. As no doubt you will see your answer here, I will give you the information you desire as far as possible. As for the conspicuous pores in the nose, I would suggest that after the face has been thoroughly cleansed with pure soap and warm water, the nose especially be bathed with very cold water or massaged with ice. A small piece wrapped in a bit of fine cotton or in your towel will do for this purpose. Afterwards, and this is preferably before retiring, bathe the nose with a good astringent. If the pores have become very conspicuous, it will take some time to correct the condition, but a persistent care not to leave them open after bathing will in time restore the skin to its normal fineness. As for the sagging cheeks, it seems to me they must be the result of late hours or too much work, as it is not natural that so young a girl should have cause to complain in this direction. However, I would advise massage with the very best skin food you can obtain. You know the movement—upward and outward from the point of the chin, with fingers kept firm. If you have been powdering and using rouge on an unprepared skin, that certainly has had something to do with ruining your complexion. Never use either of these before applying a foundation cream—then it has no opportunity of being absorbed by the pores and will wipe or wash off readily when the time comes. If you care to write again, R.B., and send the required stamped envelope I shall be glad to reply giving more detail.

■ A Christmas Love Song ■

By LOUISE MOREY BOWMAN

Illustration by E. J. Dinsmore.

The Christmas garden is abloom, Sweet Heart,
With candles, holly, stars, and sun-flushed snow.
The poets long have sung of rosy June;
Or May in misty, shimmering veils of green,
Or honey-sweet September, golden warm—
Calling them "lovers' months" in lyric lines.
I'll chant December—dark and mystical,
And silent till the carols float abroad—
December—kin to shepherds and to stars,
With gifts wise kings once made to baby hands.

About our home the crystal snow lies deep—
White magic showered upon us from the skies—
And, filtered through our pine trees, purest gold
That earth-folk know—the largesse of the sun.
Sweet Heart—Sweet Heart—the world grows kind and wise
For one small starry Night! Men stretch their hands
Out to each other. My glad heart to yours
Wings homing, as the midnight Christ bells ring.
"Believe!" the Christ bells call, and Christmas elves—
Sweet miracles from the child-heart of the world—
Will throng to-night through every open door.

The Christmas garden is abloom, Sweet Heart,
And Love—the Gardener—watches over all.

 DINSMORE

Better Babies' Contest

THE contest (closed on October 1st) of "Canadian Better Babies," had many interesting features, and we are pleased to publish the following awards:

In the list of prize-winners in the "primary class," (the babies whose ages range from nine to eighteen months) we announce:

First.—Graham Bachelder, son of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Bachelder, Revelstoke, B. C.—Fifty dollars.

Second.—Doris Elinor Chamberlain, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. H. C. Chamberlain, Wheatley, Ontario.—Forty dollars.

Third.—Robert Gordon States, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joy Morton States, Wayne, Alberta.—Thirty dollars.

Fourth.—Verna Mabel Burk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Homer W. Burk, Markham, R.R. 1, Ontario.—Twenty dollars.

Fifth.—Cloyse Varcoe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Delbert Varcoe, Roseneath, Ontario, R.R. 3.—Ten dollars.

Fifteen prizes of subscriptions to the CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL, are awarded to the parents of: Douglas George Osborn, 64 Ellen Ave., Niagara Falls, Ontario; Norma Alice Potts, R.R. 3, Simcoe, Ontario; Murray J. Sheldon, Leamington, Ontario; Harvey Alexander Leith, Varney, R.R. 1, Ontario; Arthur Kenneth Hardstaff, No. 1, Glacis Barracks, Halifax; George Bonner, R.R., Millbrook; Edward Gauthier, 111 Park Ave., Montreal; Leslie Thomas Michell, Elmwood, R.R. No. 1, Ontario; Albert William Nagorsen, R.R. 3, Maidstone, Ontario; Arlene Merle Lewis, 361 S. Mitton t., Arnica, Ontario; Richard Leroy Small, Arthur, Ontario; Clara Rose Sabbath, 1413, St. Urbain St., Montreal; Gerald Orval Jackson, R.R. 1, Harold, Ontario; Helen Elizabeth Young, Cheltenham, R.R. 1; Helen Shackford Cameron, Box 743, Truro, N. S.

In the list of prizes in the "advanced class," (eighteen to thirty-six months old), we announce:—

First.—John Henderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Henderson, 73 Park Avenue, Quebec, Que.—Fifty dollars.

Second.—Ethel Alice Bourne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bourne, 739 Water St., Peterboro', Ontario.—Forty dollars.

Third.—Betty Barbara Baird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Baird, 23 Edward St., Halifax, Nova Scotia.—Thirty dollars.

Fourth.—Christopher Wain, son of Mrs. Eve Wain, 57 Charles St., W., (Apt. A.), Toronto.—Twenty dollars.

Fifth.—Henry Melville Coffyn, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Coffyn, Box 40, Salvador, Saskatchewan.—Ten dollars.

Subscriptions to the CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL for one year are awarded to the parents of Collis J. B. Lewis, Bracebridge, Ontario; Doris Isabel Wood, Mt. Herbert, Prince Edward Island; George Russell Clarke, 16 Geoffrey St., Toronto; William Frederick Pollock, Norton, New Brunswick; Phyllis Proudfoot, 5 Millerson Ave., Toronto; Kenneth Perrin, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, R.R. 2; Margaret Bertha Hodgins, Box 173, Shawville, Quebec; John Dunn Shearer, 10104, 125th St., Edmonton, Alberta; Gerrard George Graf, 51 Pandora Ave., Kitchener, Ontario; Eileen Margaret Anderson, Edrans, Manitoba; Bessie Marguerite Julien, Wheatley, Ontario; Carman Wilkins, Lethbridge, Alberta; Shirley Eleanor Tuckwell, Pilot Mound, Manitoba; John Leslie Maw, Minesing, Ontario; Harry Wilson Hawkins, Reid Hill, Alberta.

OUR CHRISTMAS THOUGHT

IT IS one of the pleasures of our business life to know that G.B. Chocolates have brought so much happiness to thousands during the year; and that they will help, in their own delicious way, to make the holiday season a bright and happy one for young and old alike.

GANONG BROS. LIMITED
ST. STEPHEN
N. B.

26

My! What A Beautiful Polish

There is no muss, no trouble, when you use

Ideal Silver Cream
The Perfect Silver Polish

It instantly removes tarnish and dirt, without scratching or staining.
It will not stick in the chasing; it gives a high, lasting polish in a few minutes; it is a cream you can safely use in cleaning your finest possessions.
For gold, silver, brasses, cut glass, mirrors and statuary.

Ask for it at your dealer's.

CANADIAN POLISHES LIMITED, HAMILTON, ONT.

YALE

Look for the name YALE

THAT everyday, plain key that you are accustomed to seeing in the pantry door can be every bit as much a Yale key as the small, flat key in your pocket.

Shape does not settle identity, but the presence of the name "Yale" does. Buy by the name "Yale" on it and you'll be SURE.

That's the test for the best, in keys that are flat or keys that are round—

As well as in all that is finest in reputation, invention, design, workmanship and material in Builders' Hardware, Locks, Padlocks, Night Latches and Door Closers.

Canadian Yale & Towne Ltd.

Makers of the Yale Locks.

St. Catharines

Ont.

Christmas Shopping—Its Joys and Perplexities

By CHARLOTTE M. STOREY

WE never shop with as much zest at any other time as we do at Christmas. We may profess that we hate it, that it bores us to death and wears us to a frazzle, but down deep in our hearts we enjoy it, even though we haven't all the money to spend we should like to have. The gaily decorated shops, the holly and the ribbons all have a psychological influence that we can't get away from. Christmas shopping without them might be a bore, but with them, no.

Besides there is the joy of our own little plans to be carried out; the surprise for some member of the family or a friend which must be kept a secret, the gift that costs a little more than we had planned and must be purchased even at a personal sacrifice; there is the gift which we can't quite decide upon and for which we are questing suggestions, and, before we get well started, we have become obsessed with the Christmas spirit and our list grows daily. It is amazing how many more gifts we send out Christmas Eve than we thought it possible three weeks before. The only limitations we know are those our purse strings impose.

Now, we will admit that shopping is an arduous proceeding. Crowded stores, not always well ventilated, are fagging. Other shoppers elbow us; they trample on our feet; they crush us against the counter and against each other, and we are constantly rescuing our belongings from being carried off in the eddying crowds of fellow shoppers, but one who is past mistress of the art of shopping at all seasons and especially at Christmas, confided to me some of the elementary rules of her success, one mellow October afternoon as we motored along a country road revelling in the sunshine and autumnal splendor.

She is Lady Alert, who long before Christmas, begins to do her shopping. In the summer she watches for bargains and buys odd bits of ribbon and silk and muslin, silk hose and gloves that to her, practised eye represent extraordinary values, quaint little conceits that she finds while passing through a department or doing her regular shopping, in fact everything that she believes she will be able to make a good use of at Christmas. She doesn't label them at the time. If she has any idea who will be the recipient, it is too vague. She simply puts them away in a seldom used trunk, her own special possession, till she has her Christmas list complete or almost so. Sometimes she sells some of them to some other member of the family, if she finds she does not need them, or they want them more than she does.

THEN she begins to sort them out: a pair of gloves for Sally, silk hose for Molly, a tie for Jack, a pair of suspenders for the furnace man, a pair of warm mitts for the milk man, and so on. She just sorts them out and makes a temporary allotment. She doesn't tie them up yet, for she may change her mind, and it's so nice to be able to exercise a woman's prerogative without incurring too much inconvenience. Perhaps I should have said that as far back as the time she made her first chance purchase, she had been on the alert for suggestions concerning what each member of her rather numerous family and friends would like to find in their stockings on Christmas morn; also that it is a time-honored custom in her household for each one from the Man of the House down, to remain absolutely silent as to what he or she would like, but to pin up a list of suggestions in a not too obvious but altogether discoverable spot in his or her own room. Not for the world would Lady Alert tell the Man of the House that she would like a nice green silk umbrella, nor would the Man of the House tell Lady Alert that he wanted a new pair of house slippers or a Morris chair, and Mary Matilda wouldn't think of saying anything about the bracelet watch she is sure of receiving, nor Billy, the skates he too is confident of. No, they don't discuss them, but they make known their wants all the same. When Christmas day comes and the tree is unveiled, and Santa Claus, fur-coated and frosty, hands the gifts to those to whom they are addressed, the exclamations of surprise are next to the genuine thing and the joy of receiving has not been diluted by the certainty that comes of talking things over in cold blood. Part of the sweet surprise and mystery of a less sophisticated age still pervades Christmas in Lady Alert's household.

Not all of the fun and jollification comes from the gifts they give to, and get from each other, for once upon a time, Lady Alert, having a secret desire pens that she has been unfortunate enough to select a busy morning for her shopping, she buys only the things she can't order over the telephone, then she goes home and telephones for the remainder. This saves her a good deal of time and energy, and all through the shopping season, never does she buy in person, anything she can order by telephone, or have sent up c.o.d.

Apropos of paying for purchases, Lady Alert never starts out on a shopping expedition without at least half of her money in small change. If she is going to spend ten dollars, she stops at the bank and gets half of it changed into five, ten, twenty-five and fifty-cent pieces. Then when she comes to pay for her large or small purchases at different counters and stores, she can make the right change at once and no time is lost waiting for it.

Lady Alert has always been addicted to reading and, as the Christmas season draws near, she develops a perfect passion for newspapers and magazines. She becomes almost omnivorous in her reading, or at least she appears to. To tell the truth, she doesn't read nearly as much as she does at other times, but she confided in me, that what she really does is to read the advertisements, from which she gets some of the most valuable suggestions for many unique gifts. She finds that it is the newest and most seasonable things that are advertised, and as she told me, once she gets the suggestion she can always find the goods.

Two cast-iron rules has my friend, and they are rarely violated. One of them is to go shopping alone, and the other is to go early. Shopping with others is always more fagging than shopping alone. One is always being called upon to help the other make a choice when two go together, or to look at something which one is interested in and the other is not, or worse still, stopping to be presented to each other's casual acquaintances.

When she comes to town, her train arrives about nine o'clock. Breakfast has been both hasty and early so she stops at a restaurant for a cup of coffee and a cornmeal muffin. Of course, the stores tire her for she is not used to their hustle and bustle, the maze of merchandise and the bigness of it all. However, she goes straight to the checking room, where she leaves her coat, muff and any superfluous parcels she may happen to have. Then with her shopping bag, list and wallet, she begins. She has determined to keep her temper under control, no matter what may happen, for she knows from past experience, that it is foolish to lose one's temper. She knows, like the true shopper, what she wants, buys it if she can find it, and then she doesn't have to return any of her purchases, making trouble for herself and others.

About half-past eleven, she has made a good deal of progress and naturally begins to feel weary. Does she keep on? Most assuredly not! She knows the effect of a cup of tea or coffee and some light refreshment—not too light—fifteen or twenty minutes' quiet in a comfortable chair in the rest room afterwards and then a walk around the block to get some fresh air before beginning the afternoon session. She allows about an hour for this and then returns to her shopping almost as fresh as when she began in the morning, and by four-thirty she has done a good day's work and is ready for her train at five.

Lady Alert never goes shopping wearing high heeled boots nor a heavy hat. She wears shoes with sensible heels and a hat that is light and fits her head. In fact Lady Alert is aware that easy feet are essential to buying just what suits each friend for Christmas and the New Year.

Dainty things skilful fingers can fashion from ribbon for Christmas gifts.

for a simple little gift which she forgot to put on her list, and feeling sure no one else would think of it, purchased it herself, and wrote a card: "From Lady Alert to herself with love and best wishes." When opened it occasioned much laughter and thenceforth every member of the family did the same in his and her own original way. This is part of the Christmas programme. As she has to do about one-half of her consort's shopping, besides almost as much for the boys, my friend starts about a month before Christmas. By this time she has a pretty good idea of what she will require. She has a limited amount of money to spend and a limited amount of time, for like the model woman whom King Solomon immortalized, she looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

HAVING her gift lists complete enough for a start, she makes a shopping list of all the materials she needs for the things that have to be made up. She buys these first and at the same time she buys tissue paper for wrapping, ribbons for the parcels, the cards and stickers. She knows just how many and how much of each she used last year and the knowledge governs her purchases this year. These are things she will surely need, so she buys them and gets that much out of the way early before shopping begins to be a task, because of the crowds. If it so hap-

Boudoir caps may come and boudoir caps may go, but never have they been as fascinating as they are this season.

Evening Gowns of Stately Velvet, Taffeta, or Filmy Lace

9127—Ladies' One-piece Evening Dress. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard. Size 36 requires  $3\frac{1}{4}$  yards 40-inch Georgette crepe— $2\frac{3}{8}$  yards 36-inch satin for foundation dress. A girdle placed at Medieval waist-line and skirt drawn in at the bottom in Turkish fashion give piquant interest to this evening dress of Georgette and satin, and large circular beaded motifs in design 12601 add a final note of style. The gown is really in one piece from neck to lower edge but the girdle at the waist-line gives the fashionable Moyen Age touch. Sometimes instead of a girdle of satin or self-material, silver or chiffon flowers form a dainty girdle on evening gowns. Silver leaves are especially effective used in this way, but they must not look stiff. Tack them very softly, and not too frequently. They should look almost as if they grew on the gown.

9141—Ladies' Evening Blouse. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. No. 9070—Ladies' Tunic Skirt. Designed for 24 to 34 waist. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. The costume in medium size requires  $5\frac{7}{8}$  yards 36-inch taffeta— $1\frac{1}{8}$  yard 10-inch lace— $1\frac{1}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining. With satin and lace, taffeta shares the favor of the mode for evening gowns. It is especially attractive in this model with a spiral tunic on which is applied a deep border of embroidery in design 12511. The blouse, too, is charming and quite novel with three looped-under panels at the back. Gold or silver slippers strapped in classic fashion, with ribbon high up on the leg, are a pleasing accompaniment to the gown.

Evening
Dress
9127
Beading 12601

Evening Blouse
9141
Skirt 9070
Embroidery 12511

Evening
Blouse
8711
Skirt 8670
Beading 12569

Evening
Blouse
8669
Skirt 9070
Beading 12513

Evening Bodice 9108
Tunic Skirt 8656

8711—Ladies' Evening Blouse. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. No. 8670—Ladies' Two-piece Gathered Skirt. Designed for 24 to 32 waist. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard. The costume in medium size requires  $3\frac{3}{4}$  yards 36-inch charmeuse— $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard 10-inch silver lace banding— $3\frac{1}{2}$  yards 36-inch lining for underbody and foundation skirt. Embroidery, which the new mode favors over other trimming, adds decided charm to this evening gown of charmeuse. The embroidery in design 12569, forms two deep bands, and for harmony there is a deep trimming-band of silver lace used cami-ole-wise under the sleeveless blouse. The blouse closing is arranged at the left shoulder and under the left arm, while the underbody closes at the center-back. The two-piece skirt is drawn in at the lower edge and tacked to a narrow foundation in Turkish fashion.

9108—Ladies' Evening Bodice. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. No. 8656—Ladies' Two-piece Tunic Skirt. Designed for 24 to 32 waist. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard. The costume in medium size requires  $3\frac{3}{4}$  yards 36-inch black taffeta— $3\frac{1}{4}$  yards 36-inch allover lace for tunic and sleeves— $\frac{3}{4}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody. Just to give variety to the season's frocks the mode, despite its preference for straight lines, occasionally flirts with bouffant silhouette effects for evening gowns. This works out pleasingly in the model illustrated with its long-waisted taffeta bodice and its adorable lace tunic which falls in jabot-like folds at the sides.

8669—Ladies' Evening Blouse. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. No. 9070—Ladies' Two-piece Tunic Skirt. Designed for 24 to 34 waist. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. The costume in medium size requires  $5\frac{1}{4}$  yards 36-inch velvet for skirt and tunic— $\frac{5}{8}$  yard 40-inch Georgette crepe for blouse— $1\frac{1}{8}$  yard 11-inch silver lace banding— $1\frac{1}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody and upper part of gores. As the season advances, one sees more and more of velvet dinner and dance frocks. The new velvets are soft, pliant as satin, and come in the most wonderful colors, so it is hardly to be wondered at that they have achieved such popularity. To add to the charm of this frock there are odd beaded motifs in design 12503 scattered at intervals on the tunic and the sleeveless blouse. The embroidery may be carried out in beads or spangles.

8755—Ladies' Evening Blouse with Train. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. No. 829 Ladies' Two-piece Skirt. Designed for 24 to 36 waist. Width at lower edge about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  yard. The costume in medium size requires  $6\frac{3}{8}$  yards 36-inch velvet— $\frac{3}{4}$  yard 36-inch beaded net for trimming-band— $\frac{3}{4}$  yard 36-inch lining for underbody. Most of the formal evening gowns this season gain stately dignity from the use of train which may be square or pointed. Bands of jet beads that start and end in bracelet and a beaded motif on the train in design 12572 relieve the severe simplicity of the gown. With it may be worn black satin, gold or silver slippers with Louis heels.

Evening Blouse
8755
Skirt 8295
Beading 12572

CORSETS AND CLOTHES

Long before the face shows signs of passing years, the lines of the figure betray it. To the gentle persuasion of a Gossard, the prominent hips, the fleshy back, or the too-short waistline of maturity give way to the graceful proportions of youth.

The slender woman should never sacrifice her full possibilities of beauty on the fallacy "I'm so slight it doesn't matter what corset I wear." The predestined Gossard will smooth unflattering angles to attractive roundness and enhance the lithe grace that is her chief charm.

The woman of discrimination does not radically change her style from season to season. Lucile costumes her to best express her individuality, and upon this, bases an exclusiveness of service.

The same principle applies to correct corsetry. The well-dressed woman finds the corset that best accents her natural charm—just as much and just as little corset as may be necessary and possible—and is not influenced by those doubtful changes in so-called corset styles that result in much confusion of mind and improper corsetry.

Successful corsetry is the foundation of all charm in dress; it is the expression of personality.

LUCILE, LTD.

J. Duggan
Manager

The woman of large proportions cannot but be interested in what Gossard's artistry has accomplished for the stout figure. Symmetry of line is gained by a natural, pliable support with no excess weight and clumsy over-straps to distort the figure to the ungraceful appearance of being over-corseted. Would it be convincing to know that the woman in the photograph above weighs quite a bit over two hundred?

G O S S A R D Front Lacing C O R S E T S

are to be found at those stores that merit your confidence by making every sale conditional upon your complete satisfaction.

At this time of generally unsatisfactory buying conditions, it is reassuring to know that Gossards are still moderately priced. The cost of Gossard Corsets represents that fair price where the utmost in quality has been reached and every Gossard will give you a wearing service that alone will justify its cost.

Good taste in dress must find its first expression in the right corset.

The woman who by self-study will find the corset that best expresses her individuality and does not radically change her style from season to season is far better dressed than the superficial woman who follows every whim of fashion and distorts her figure with unsuited corset styles.

It has been written that violent contrasts destroy the very basis of art and maim the truth. The possibilities of becoming dress vanish in the violence of contrast between too-large bust, too-small waist and too-large hips—always the disfiguring marks of the over-corseted figure.

There are many Gossard Front Lacing Corsets designed to accent the natural charm of every type of figure. Whatever your corset needs there are many models created in accordance with the unchanging principles of beauty and good taste that will assure you graceful lines and proper proportions with that unconsciousness of restraint that can only result from the healthful support of a faultlessly fitting corset.

The Canadian H. W. Gossard Co.
366-378 West Adelaide Street, Toronto.

THE CECILIAN CONCERTPHONE

Plays all records more clearly. The Cecilian is a sweeter and fuller-toned phonograph than any you have ever heard.

Beautiful in design and finish, and has many exclusive features.

Write for Catalogue.

The Cecilian Co. Ltd.
247 Yonge St.
TORONTO

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 32.)

"Stronger Than His Sea," a novel by Robert Watson, author of "My Brave and Gallant Gentleman," "The Girl of O.K. Valley," etc. Published by McClelland and Stewart, Toronto.

THIS is a good old-fashioned story of the small boy whose drunken father departs this life in sudden fashion, leaving the juvenile hero to be a wage-earner. Sandy was but five years of age when his father, Duncan Porter, a soft-hearted hard-drinker, was struck down by mortal illness, leaving his wife, Sandy, and Nelly, to make a living in the weaving town of Piershaws. Of course there was a good Samaritan to be found—and this time it turns out to be the landlord, who actually lowers the rent and takes a kindly interest in Sandy. The villain in the play is the school-master, Mr. Todrick, who is a fearsome dominie, almost worthy of a place with Squeers. The corporal punishment administered in that small school in Piershaws, plays such a harrowing part in the story that the reader breathes freely only when Mr. Todrick is finally deposed and a younger, kinder man, Mr. Galt, takes his place and proceeds to lift the school to a proud eminence.

The heroine of this story is also of the good, old-fashioned kind. Doreen Telford is wilful and imperious, but she is dainty and winsome to her finger-tips and is a welcome relief from the "jazz heroine" of modern fiction, who smokes cigarettes, consumes cocktails and knows altogether more than is good for any desirable young person.

This is a wholesome story of village life in Scotland, which will appeal to many readers.

A QUARTETTE OF CANADIAN WRITERS

This snapshot shows a group of writers familiar to most of our readers. Standing are Mrs. MacKay, author of "Up the Hill and Over" and "Mist of Morning," also Mr. Robert Alison Hood, author of "The Chivalry of Keith Leicester." Seated are Miss Marjorie Pickthall, author of "Drift of Pinions" and "Little Hearts" (a native of England, but now resident in Victoria), and Mr. Robert Watson, author of "My Brave and Gallant Gentleman" and "Stronger Than His Sea."

Ye Olde Firme Heintzman & Co., Limited.
Established 1850—70
years—Three generations of Heintzmans.

Calve

One of the World's Greatest Singers

This is another picture from the world's album of great musicians who have used a

Heintzman
& Co.
Grand Piano
in their several Canadian tours.

The choice of great musicians, who must have the best; so we find the Heintzman & Co. piano chosen by citizens of culture everywhere, who recognize that no single means of refinement more unmistakably distinguishes the enjoyment and appreciation of cultural influences than one of these beautiful pianos placed in the drawing, living or music room.

Choose a Piano
for Christmas
Canada's much-loved Piano.

Heintzman
& Co. Ltd.
193-197 Yonge St.
Toronto - Canada

Branches and Distributors in all parts of Canada.

MAIL THIS TO-DAY
Heintzman & Co.,
Limited

Please mail me illustrated catalogue of your Grand and Upright pianos and Player pianos, and current week's bargain list.

Mention Canadian Home Journal.

Name

Address

The Name is Your Guarantee

SILK REMNANTS for making Quilts,
Pillow Tops, Bags, Portieres, Fancy
Work, etc. Send 10 cents for big package of beautiful pieces in rich colors and attractive patterns and our catalog describing our wonderful remnant bargains. Dept. 42,
Chicago Silk Co., 39 W. Adams St.,
Chicago, Ill.

No. 210

THE Pictorial Review Company's Knitting Directions No. 210, price 20 cents. In this set are included a knitted middy sweater, a crocheted tam, and a knitted scarf. This is a cunning skating set for the dolly, that may combine pink and white or blue and white worsted.

All Sorts of Pretty and Practical Things to Knit for Baby's Christmas
Doll

No. 211

THE Pictorial Review Company's Knitting Directions No. 211, price 10 cents. Illustrated above is a knitted Tuxedo sweater for an 18-inch doll.

No. 215

No. 216

No. 216

No. 215

The Pictorial Review Company's Knitting Directions No. 215, price 10 cents. This design includes a knitted scarf in two colors for dolly, as well as a Roman-striped scarf. Dollies must be in fashion, too, as well as their small mistresses. Hence these knitted scarfs which are the very newest things either in solid colors or with Roman-striped inserts.

The Pictorial Review Company's Knitting and Crocheting Directions No. 225, price 20 cents. For the baby this set includes three cute toys which are illustrated above, and at the right. These may be hung at the top of baby's perambulator.

No. 220

Three Patterns Free with a Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home
Journal.

No. 225

No. 218

THE Pictorial Review Company's Knitting Directions No. 218, price 10 cents. The cunningest of knitted coat sweaters is this, shown above, with a smart sailor collar and patch pockets in which dolly may carry her 'kerchief. The buttons may be covered with sections of knitting and fastened with knitted loops.

These are Pictorial Review Patterns. If your dealer cannot supply them, send direct to Pictorial Review Co., 263-267 Adelaide St. W., Toronto.

No. 224

THE Pictorial Review Company's Knitting Directions No. 224, price 20 cents. Even the most fastidious of dolls would be pleased with this knitted set which includes scarf, muff, and stocking-cap for which tan and brown yarn may be selected.

MONARCH KNIT
THE MONARCH KNITTING CO., LIMITED
DUNNVILLE, ONT. CANADA

MONARCH FLOSS, DOWN & DOVE

are the ideal

YARNS

for all hand-knitting

THESE well-known yarns are spun in our own plant from the finest grades of pure Australian wools. Their soft, even texture and length of fibre assure the most satisfactory results. They come in three weights, with forty popular shades in each weight, put up in handy balls. Ask your dealer for Monarch Floss, Down and Dove, and you will have reason to be glad of your selection.

Christmas Gift Suggestions

- A box of Monarch-Knit Hosiery for ladies or gentlemen.
- A lady's silk Monarch-Knit Sweater Coat.
- A lady's or gentleman's fine worsted Monarch-Knit Sweater Coat.
- A garment — Tam, Cap, Bag, Slippers or Child's Set — knit by yourself with Monarch Yarns.

THE MONARCH KNITTING CO., LIMITED
DUNNVILLE, ONTARIO, CANADA

Manufacturers of Men's, Women's and Children's Sweater Coats and Slipovers, Fancy Knit Goods, Hosiery, etc., and Monarch Hand-Knitting Yarns.

MAIL US THIS COUPON

The Monarch Knitting Co., Limited,
Dept. H.J., Dunnville, Ont.

I enclose 25c, for which please send me a copy of "Art in Knitting Monarch Yarns," No. 5.

Name .....

Address .....

SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES, SHEETINGS AND PILLOW COTTONS

are the world's standard of quality, durability and sound value for the money—and have been so accepted for more than a century.

You can get Horrockses' Sheets and Pillow Cases in all standard sizes; and Horrockses' Sheetings and Pillow Cottons in all weights and widths.

Look for the name "HORROCKSES" on the selvedge.

For name of nearest store carrying HORROCKSES' Cottons, Longcloths,
Nainsooks, etc., write

JOHN E. RITCHIE, Canadian Agent
591 St. Catherine Street West Montreal
Branches:—Toronto and Vancouver

Made by
HORROCKSES, CREWDSON & CO., Limited
Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers
MANCHESTER, England

28

LOOK FOR THE NAME Horrockses ON THE SELVEDGE

"Cash in" now when eggs are high

HAVE eggs to sell—plenty of them—all through the season. There's a nice profit in table eggs, so making money is only a matter of healthy hens—assured by the use of

Pratts Poultry Regulator

Tones up the digestive system and keeps layers and breeders in a normal natural condition, so that they keep on laying. Used by thousands of successful poultrymen and farmers all over the world. Always sold with the guarantee:

"Your Money Back if You Are Not Satisfied"

Pratts Roup Remedy is a sure preventive and remedy for colds and roup. Added to the drinking water, it keeps these destructive diseases away from the flock.

Made in our own Factory in Toronto.
Sold by dealers all over Canada.

Expert Advice Free. We help solve your poultry problems. Write. Ask for FREE Booklet—worth dollars to you.

Pratt Food Co. of Canada, Limited
228 E. Carlaw Ave., Toronto
Ad No. 4.

Dainty Christmas Gifts

AMONG the daintiest and most acceptable of Christmas gifts is a hand-embroidered handkerchief or hand-made bag and every member of the feminine sex will appreciate both.

THE Pictorial Review Company's Transfer Design No. 12603, yellow, 20 cents. The design is 7½ by 9½ inches and designs for both the front and back of the bag are furnished.

THE Pictorial Review Company's Crochet Directions No. 226, 15 cents. At the foot of the page, center, is a charming crocheted bead bag fashioned of black crochet silk and steel beads. Three spools of silk and 15 bunches of steel beads, size 4, will be required.

THE Pictorial Review Company's Transfer Design No. 12605, blue, 20 cents. Some of these designs are illustrated on handkerchiefs at the foot of the page. There are 12 different ones with duplicates of each, and all are exquisitely dainty in effect.

THE Pictorial Review Company's Transfer Design No. 12604, blue, 20 cents. There is no daintier Christmas present than one of these hand-worked handkerchiefs. The design supplies 12 different motifs with duplicates of each.

These are Pictorial Review Patterns. If your dealer cannot supply them, send direct to Pictorial Review Co., 263-267 Adelaide St. W., Toronto.

Three Patterns Free with a Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home Journal.

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 30.)

MRS. TODD'S MESSAGE.

MRS. WILLIAM TODD, president of Ontario Women's Institutes, vice-president of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada, was unable to be present at the Ottawa Convention and she sent this inspiring message.

Greetings to the Women's Institutes of Eastern Ontario, in Convention assembled at the "Chateau Laurier," Ottawa. The setting of the stage in the beautiful Banquet Hall, is most fitting, for though our Ontario Women's Institutes are young in years, the principles and aims of our organization, are fundamental to the nation's life.

For fifteen years our Women's Institute was the one movement tending to the improvement of living conditions in rural Ontario; not better farming, nor better business methods in marketing, but better living was our special interest.

We stood unexamined, unchallenged, but accepted and recognized as a force in the development of rural life, which radiated from the home as the centre of community and national life.

So, unchallenged, the Great War found us, and the trial by battle, to which we, with others, were subjected, was met by a record of united, terest and true pleasure. Reaching out after a larger house-keeping, the Ontario Women's Institutes entered into a "Federation" one year and nine months ago—which we have decided to call two years. This Federation has shared in the testing of the Institute movement. The Federation welcomes the test; the only thing we need fear at all is indifference; that would be fatal. But the desire back of all the questioning and opposition has been to know and to judge of the value of the new relationships. The value of an organized work as compared with an unorganized effort, however greatly conceived or nobly executed, can not be consistently questioned to-day. The same great Creator, who "hath set the solitary in families," has as surely placed us in social and economic relationships where co-operation is needed as a rule of life and where co-ordination of our efforts in the moral and spiritual realms of life finds a parallel in the mighty economy of Nature itself. Ontario has a proud place as the pioneer of Women's Institutes work: her numbers add to her responsibility, especially in the Dominion Federation.

We must believe in our own organization, get a vision of the opportunities before us in Rural Canada, through such a national movement

READY FOR CHRISTMAS

The turkeys in the Ontario farm yard do not realize that December is the "best time of the year."

though diverse, activities, unequalled in the sum total, and unexcelled in the greatness of sacrifice it entailed.

Reaction, common to all, followed the signing of the armistice, and in the questionings, the opposition, "the foes without and the fears within," which have assailed our Women's Institutes in these two years, we have been subjected to the trial by fire. These tests are valuable; virtue, untried, is a weak thing; unexamined by ourselves and unchallenged by others, only an unworthy place could be accorded us in Canada's life, but these tests have clarified our vision, sloughed off some weaknesses, and strengthened us greatly where we need most to be strong—in an understanding of the ideals and aims of our Institute movement itself.

Never has our motto: "For Home and Country," meant more to us as Institute workers: "Home" is to-day, the whole round circle of life with influences the most lasting, the most far-reaching of all in human life.

The world, weary of strife and selfish gain, needs the home as never before, for, by action as by word, we must sound the warning: "The world is too much with us; late and soon getting and spending, we lay waste our powers." Especially should our rural home set such a standard of life, for the distractions of town and city life catch the vacant eye and mind of the uninformed and unobservant, and, too often pass for real in-free from all the limitations which differences of creed, of class and of partizanship, create for our undoing as citizens, and then in very practical ways we shall make our dreams for a worthy rural community life come true. The Dominion Federation has outlined a programme of activities in Women's Institutes from Coast to Coast, and it is for each Province to be seized of the greatness of the task attempted, and do its part in the general forward movement, "For Home and Country."

Agriculture, the distinctive mark of the Women's Institute movement, the world over, is more than living on a farm; it is necessary that we recognize that upon our conception of agriculture as a way of life, rather than as a means to make a living, depends our future. There have been great empires in the past, whose people lost their vision of the one creative industry in the world, and pitched their tents over toward Sodom and Gomorrah, with much the same results which followed "Lot's folly." There are open doors on every hand to make rural life desirable through our Women's Institute.

Our Education Department is alive to the needs of our Rural Schools; the Department of Public Health seeks a medium through which to offer its great service to the people in the rural sections of Ontario. Our own department was never more ready to give of its best to solve

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 50.)

By Special

Appointment

Finished and Furnished by Waring & Gillo
Specialists in all Branches of Interior Decoration.

WALLPAPERS!

In stock, a large selection of English Wallpapers.

WARING & GILLOW LTD

London : Paris : Montreal : Buenos Aires.

394 Phillips Place

MONTREAL

Just A Ball o' Yarn

for every knitting purpose-in every fashionable shade

Corticelli

Give Him what He wants

A Gillette Safety Razor for CHRISTMAS

The well-chosen Christmas gift must, first of all, be useful. The Gillette Safety Razor has an advantage here. 365 days in the year it is useful. It relegates stropping and honing to the past; it cuts down the shaving minutes; it makes shaving easy and the chin comfortable.

And a Christmas gift should last. The Gillette Safety Razor never wears out. A razor is as young as its blade. Every time the little waferlike Gillette blade is renewed, the owner has a new razor.

And then the status of the gift. Its reputation must be beyond question. The Gillette Safety Razor is known by every man everywhere as the best that money can buy, and there are few suitable gift articles the best of which can be bought for $5.00.

Give him a Gillette for Christmas—the gift that has the “edge” on others.

$5<sup>00</sup>
the Set

By NORMAN HARRIS

Osgoode Sta.

Editor Concerning Investments:

Could you give any information concerning International Portland Cement Company, of Spokane, U.S.A.? Are they operating? Are they paying dividends? And what are their future prospects?

N. F.

INTERNATIONAL Portland Cement Company has its general offices in Spokane, Washington. The shares are not traded in or quoted in Canada so far as I have knowledge. The company, in the 1918 year, issued a statement to its shareholders, which recited that the occurrence of the war had put an end to most domestic construction, but that for the 1919 year large sums of money would be spent by the national State and County governments in the building of concrete highways and other works. The company supposed that fifty millions of dollars would be expended in these and other works. They looked forward to a much heavier demand for their cement, in anticipation of which the cement plant was enlarged, and the quarry operations were being converted into a steam shovel proposition which was estimated to reduce quarry costs materially. The last statement I have seen was for the year 1918, which shows that the company has issued $2,658,000 of preference and common stock, and $165,000 of bonds. The liabilities statement showed no bank loans, and only fair sums representing notes and accounts payable. The valuation of the total assets was $2,984,732. The company paid in dividends during 1918, some $95,067. I would class the stock as still decidedly speculative in nature, either preference or common, but apparently considerable headway has been made and possibly the last annual report will make a better showing than the one treated here.

Speculation.

THESE columns contemplate aiding the reader to an understanding of investment problems, much more than to help him on the way if he chooses to be a speculator. But there is a place for speculation, and a time for it, and there are securities which are by nature of a speculative class. Stock in Hollinger mines would appear to be a reasonable speculative purchase at the present time. The price of the share on the market is around $5.50. The mine has an estimated ore reserve equal to a value of forty million dollars. The management is first-class, the mine has the ore, the equipment, and it lacks only sufficient skilled labor to greatly increase its output. The expectation amongst those who have looked into the Hollinger position, is that when the opportunity becomes more favorable, the size of the dividend will be increased. When that is done, the stock should be worth more money on the market.

Tire and Rubber Companies.

I THINK a general warning at this time should be made public, advising people that they might better decide not to embark funds, large or small, in any new tire and rubber company or in any new motor company, unless the corporation can show that to an extent at least, it is on its feet when the securities are offered for sale. The motor tire business is in a very bad way. The factories of the United States have equipped themselves for a possible production of fifty-five million tires per annum. The present consumption is at the rate of about forty million tires per annum. The plants have now large stocks of tires and rubber on hand, and their first thought is to get their tires sold. They are bound to sell these tires, for more reasons than one, and no small company, just starting out with its overhead expense at the highest point, can hope to compete with them.

A New Plan of Financial Promotion.

ON the first page of the Financial section of Toronto "Saturday Night" there appeared recently a very comprehensive and interesting account of the invasion by Canada of a new school of financial people from the United States. Brokerage houses are being organized who are employing salesmen to sell securities in new financial corporations. Each salesman is instructed to approach the prospect in a certain manner, to use a stereotyped form of address, and to place his proposal in a form dictated in so many words by the brokerage concern. These new selling agencies do not appear to be exercising very great discrimination in the selection of their employees. These employees, or salesmen, are instructed to try to get the money in one visit, and first of all, to make the prospect qualify by having him say whether he has or has not the money to embark in a proposition if it is offered him. Apparently, if the man or woman tells such a visitor to come back the second time, this prospect is struck off the list. Canadians should keep a shrewd eye out for such agents. Their offerings may be good or bad; the point is, full information should be demanded and obtained on such offerings.

Good Time to Invest.

THERE never has been a better time for the acquisition by the investor of the first mortgage bond or the municipal debenture. These interest securities are giving at present a very tempting yield, and the investor is reminded that this yield endures not only for a year, but over the entire term of the bond until the same reaches maturity. To purchase a bond to-day that yields almost seven per cent. is to own a security which in future years should be worth much more money when interest rates have fallen to the point that the borrower does not have to offer seven per cent. in order to secure the needed money.

Speculation and Investment.

THE man who unconsciously deludes himself, or who does it wilfully, by speculating when he should be investing, only has to give the matter sufficient time, to realize that investment is the rock of Gibraltar and speculation is a castle of salt. Common stock of Atlantic Sugar Refineries, Limited, a comparatively new sugar promotion launched by D. Lorne McGibbon interests, has sold this year on the market at over par. At this writing it is quoted at sixteen dollars per share. The difference between the two sums is eighty-four dollars, representing the loss between the two points. Common stocks do not take the place of first-class investment issues. Many a person comes to the verge of ruin before he learns the lesson.

Information Coupon

December, 1920.

If a subscriber will fill in this coupon, and send along with the enquiry, the best service at our command will be ensured.

Name .....

Address .....

Canadian Women's Institutes

RESOLUTIONS OF ONTARIO INSTITUTES.

The Board of Directors of the Women's Institutes of Ontario submitted for the approval of the Convention, recently held in Toronto, the following resolutions:—

1. That the resolution from the district of North Lanark, asking for a more rigid censorship of moving picture advertisements be heartily endorsed, and that the Board of Censors encourage a more general use of educational films.

2. Resolution from Western Ontario Women's Institutes disapproving of the Act of the Dominion Government in rescinding the order-in-council prohibiting the importation of Liquor into the province, the effect of such act being to practically render void the vote of the people in the province enacting prohibition to the full extent allowed by the Provincial Government.

Your Committee endorse the proposed legislation prohibiting the importation of liquor into any province, which by vote of the people has enacted prohibitory legislation, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Hon. the Prime Minister at Ottawa and Toronto.

3. Regarding the Resolution from the Western Ontario Women's Institutes regarding the safeguarding of the highways of the province, the Committee desire that the Ontario Motor League be requested to provide more stringent legislation regarding the safeguarding of the highways of the Province.

4. Resolution from the Western Ontario Women's Institutes regarding public bathing houses; the Committee considered this a local matter and not of a sufficiently general character to call for action by this Convention.

5. The Committee puts themselves on record with the Muskoka Districts as strongly disapproving of the tendency at the present time to immodest dress and would further add that they consider one of the chief causes of this is the lack of home training and the generally relaxed discipline of the home.

6. That the Resolution from the Western Ontario Women's Institutes "THAT legislation be introduced raising the age of consent in seduction cases under the criminal code from 16 to 18 years," be endorsed.

7. That the Resolution from the Western Ontario Women's Institutes "THAT, in the opinion of this association, the Dewar Act should be so amended that a woman's interests in her husband's real property should be absolute and not dependent upon his death. AND FURTHER that every married woman whose husband is the owner of Real Property should be entitled to vote at Municipal Elections, be endorsed."

8. We are grateful for the assistance heretofore given us by the Department and trust that by our service to Home and Country, we may merit continued support.

9. WHEREAS, some of the Institutes have already granted life membership and

10. WHEREAS it is desirable to place the granting of life membership upon a definite basis, BE IT THEREFORE RESOLVED

(a) That life memberships granted by Branch and District Institutes be recognized.

(b) That Branch Institutes be empowered to grant life membership upon the payment of $5.00 to the local Branch.

(c) That District Institutes be empowered to grant life membership upon the payment of $10.00 to the district and $5.00 to the Branch.

(d) That the Provincial Federation be empowered to grant life membership upon the payment of $10.00 to the Federation; $10.00 to the district and $5.00 to the branch.

(e) That life membership will entitle the holder to voting power in the Branch Institutes only.

THAT in the development of the Hydro Electric System of the Province, every consideration be given to the needs of the farm and farm home.

Dunlop Cord Tires

have experienced a remarkable year. As a matter of fact, we doubt if ever in the history of the industry a tire has been received with greater acclaim than DUNLOP CORD. We expect our Cord Tire capacity to be taxed to the limit for 1921 demand. It would be advisable for you to purchase your requirements early.

¶ Tread Toughness, Greater Air Capacity, No Separation, No Weak Walls—these factors make for Security when your car is equipped with DUNLOP TIRES.

¶ We have scores of excellent tributes to "TRACTION" CORD TIRES. Here is a sample testimony (the excerpt being from a Winnipeg motorist's letter of June 17th, 1920):—

"Have also taken a trip from Winnipeg to Toronto and return, and your Tires have now covered in the neighborhood of 20,000 miles and are still in good shape."

DUNLOP TIRE & RUBBER GOODS CO., Limited

Head Office and Factories: TORONTO
Branches in the Leading Cities

GOOD THINGS IN 1921

THERE are many good things awaiting you in the JOURNAL numbers which will bloom in 1921. Mrs. Green, the editor of our JOURNAL JUNIORS' department, was appointed during the year, and is giving us a delightful new story, "The Wind Wheel of the Djinn." Short stories by our best-known writers will be found in the year's fiction, and you all know, by this time, what a valuable page you have in "Health and the Home," written by one of Canada's best-known women physicians. Mary Neil will send us the latest advice on cookery, illustrated by photographs which are good enough to eat. We published during last year a series of articles by Mrs. Becker on the "Woman Citizen." We have an article on "Alberta's Official Guardian Act," by Elizabeth Bailey Price, and, from time to time, will publish contributions on legislation which affects the home.

As to fashions, we have selections from the "Pictorial Review" pages—and what every woman knows is that the "Pictorial Review" patterns mean a perfect fit.

COOKS!

You will immensely improve the tastiness of dishes and add tremendously to their nourishing value if you use plenty of

BOVRIL

The Best Part of Dinner

is the exhilarating, digestive-helping café noir. Particularly true, when the Coffee used is

SEAL BRAND COFFEE

—the fragrant, satisfying, upland-grown Coffee, rich, mellow, nourishing, blended and roasted. In  $\frac{1}{2}$ , 1 and 2-lb. Tins, hermetically sealed. Whole, ground, or FINE-ground (for Tricolators or the ordinary percolators).

"Perfect Coffee—Perfectly Made" free on request. WRITE us for it.

CHASE & SANBORN

MONTREAL.

Beautiful Women

To be truly beautiful, must have a clear skin. Without it the charm is lacking. Most women have good skins, but have neglected to care for them. Pimples, Blackheads or blotches, rough or oily skin will completely disfigure an otherwise beautiful face. If you have neglected your skin, you will receive immediate help from the use of Princess Preparations, successful for 27 years in the treatment of all non-infectious diseases. We will be glad to advise you. Consultation FREE.

Princess Complexion Purifier ..... $1.50
Princess Skin Food ..... 1.50
Princess Cinderella Cold Cream.... .75
Princess Face Powder (all shades) .75

Sample of Cold Cream or Face Powder on request. The above preparations will be sent with full instructions for home use, to any address post free on receipt of price.

The Hiscott Institute, Limited
61B COLLEGE ST., TORONTO.

This light, dry fleecy wadding

Applied (straight from the box) to any chill-caused ache, attacks the trouble at its source, and gives quick and sure relief. It is "grateful warmth" in dry, convenient form.

THERMOGENE
CURATIVE WADDING

From Your Druggist
50c

Vapo-Cresolene
Est. 1879

A Vapor Treatment for Coughs and Colds
The time for Vapo-Cresolene is at the first indication of a cold or sore throat. It is simple to use, you just hold the little lamp that vaporizes the Cresolene and place it near the bed. The soothing anti-epileptic vapor makes breathing easy, relieves the cough, eases the soreness and congestion, and protects in epidemics. Recommended for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Coughs, Nasal Catarrh and Asthma. Cresolene has been used for the past 40 years. The benefit is unquestionable. Send for descriptive booklet.

SALE BY DRUGGISTS
VAPO-CRESOLENE CO.,
Leeming-Miles Bldg.
Montreal

Puddings, Pies and Cakes For the Holiday Season

By MARION HARRIS NEIL

AUTHOR OF "THE THRIFT COOK BOOK."

"There Is Always Pleasure In Variety"

Plum Pudding.—Two cupfuls of currants, one cupful of seedless raisins, one cupful of seeded raisins, two cupfuls of chopped suet, one cupful each of brown and maple sugar, one cupful of shredded mixed candied peels, one-half pound of peeled and chopped apples, one cupful of bread crumbs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one cupful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, grated rinds one orange and one lemon, one tablespoonful of powdered mixed spices, five eggs, one cupful of fruit juice.

Clean fruits carefully and put them into a large mixing bowl, add suet, sugars, peels, apples, bread crumbs, baking powder, flour, salt, rinds of orange and lemon, spices, eggs well beaten, and fruit juice. Mix thoroughly and allow to stand in a cool place for one hour. Divide into two well greased moulds, cover and steam steadily for ten hours. The puddings may be boiled instead of steamed.

Turn out and serve with hard sauce or liquid sauce. The puddings may be kept in a cool place for several weeks before using them and reboiled or steamed for several hours as required.

Left over cold plum pudding is very good if cut in slices and fried in a little hot butter. If desired, plum puddings may be decorated with whipped and sweetened cream, or whipped evaporated milk and sprigs of holly.

Vegetarian Plum Puddings.—Sift two cupfuls of flour into a bowl, add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt and sift again, then cut and rub in one-half cupful of vegetable fat until free from lumps. Add one-half cupful of grated maple sugar, one-fourth pound each of cooked mashed carrots and mashed potatoes, one cupful each of seedless raisins, currants, and shredded candied citron peel. Mix all together, add two tablespoonfuls of corn syrup and one cupful of milk and put the mixture into a well greased bowl. Cover with a greased paper and steam steadily for five hours. Turn out and serve with lemon sauce.

Fruitarian Plum Pudding.—Two cupfuls of bread crumbs, one cupful of seeded raisins, two cupfuls each of currants and seedless raisins, one-half cupful of chopped preserved cherries, three-fourths of a cupful of brown sugar, one cupful each of mixed chopped nut meats, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one cupful of chopped candied mixed peels, grated rind and juice of one lemon, one-fourth cupful of butter, two teaspoonfuls of powdered ginger, nutmeg and cinnamon, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and three eggs.

Put bread crumbs into a large bowl, add fruits, sugar, nuts, salt, lemon, butter, spices, baking powder and eggs well beaten. Mix thoroughly and pour into a well greased mould, cover and steam steadily for six hours. Turn out and serve hot with liquid sauce.

Pumpkin Pie.—Three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of powdered cinnamon and powdered ginger, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of steamed and strained pumpkin, three eggs, two cupfuls of milk, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and pastry.

Put the sugar into a bowl, add spices, salt, pumpkin, eggs slightly beaten, milk and butter. Mix and pour into a pastry-lined pie plate and bake in a moderate oven for one hour. When a silver knife is inserted in the pie and comes out from it clear, it is done. In baking pies they should, if possible, be kept from boiling. Pumpkin, squash and custard pies will become watery if allowed to boil. Serve cold. If desired, serve with cottage cheese balls and strained honey.

New and Quick Mince Pie.—Two cupfuls of currants, one cupful of sugar, four apples, grated rind and juice of one-half lemon, and one-half cupful of suet. Wash and pick the currants, pare, core and chop the apples. Mix all together. Use the day it is made.

Mince Meat for Pies.—One cupful of suet, two cupfuls of seedless raisins, one cupful of currants, one cupful of figs, one cupful of apples, two cupfuls of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of marmalade, two cupfuls of mixed candied peels, one-half cupful of nut meats, one tablespoonful of mixed spices, the rinds and strained juice of two lemons, one-half cupful of grape juice and one-half teaspoonful of salt.

Pick and clean the currants and raisins. Peel and core the apples and chop them. Shred the peels finely and add the nut meats. Remove the stalks from the figs, wash them in very hot water, then dry and cut them in small pieces.

Put all into a large bowl and add the spices, also the suet chopped and the lemon rinds grated and mix thoroughly with a wooden spoon, then add the marmalade, the lemon juice, grape juice and the salt and mix again. Cover and stand in a cool place for twenty-four hours, then mix once more and pack into pots or jars. Tie a piece of parchment over the top of the pots to make them perfectly airtight and keep the mince meat in a cool place. Do not use for several weeks.

To Make Individual Mince Pies.—Roll out pastry to one-eighth of an inch in thickness and stamp out rounds with a cutter three or four inches in diameter. Wet round the edge of half the number of rounds with a little cold water and put a good teaspoonful of mince meat in the centre of each. Cover with the other rounds of pastry and press the two edges well together. Make a small hole on the top of each pie, brush them over with slightly beaten white of egg and dredge them with sugar. Place the pies on a greased baking tin and bake in a hot oven until the pastry is well risen and nicely browned. When ready dredge again with sugar and serve hot. This may also be made into a large pie and ice cream served with each portion.

Old-Fashioned Apple Pie.—Line a pie plate with pastry and fill with thinly sliced tart apples, add a little water and cover it with a top crust made a little richer than the under one, which is easily done by rolling in pieces of butter and folding the paste several times. Cut a few slits in the centre to allow steam to escape while cooking. Brush over the top with beaten egg. When baked and still hot remove the top crust carefully, add one cupful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of powdered nutmeg and two teaspoonfuls of butter and beat well into the cooked apples. Replace the top crust and sprinkle with sugar.

Cranberry Pie.—Line a pie plate with pastry. Mix together two and one-half cupfuls of cranberries, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one-fourth cupful of water, one teaspoonful of lemon extract and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Cover with upper crust or a lattice of pastry strips, or bake without any upper crust. Decorate when done with pastry baked in fancy shapes.

Another Method. Mix together one and one-half cupfuls of cranberries, one-half cupful of seedless raisins, one cupful of grated maple sugar, one-fourth cupful of water and three tablespoonfuls of butter and fill into a pastry lined tin.

HEALTH AND THE HOME

Read what our Family Physician has to say about the extremely live topic of health, especially as it relates to home life and happiness.

Wholesome Foods Make Husky Boys

It is not so much the quantity as the quality of food a boy eats that conduces to his physical development.

And the same thing applies to any individual—child or grown-up. Particularly in these times is it essential to bear this fact in mind.

The materials which go into the manufacture of Bowes' Mince Meat have been selected with this point in view, and the utmost in food value is the result.

Buy a trial tin from your grocer and see what enjoyable pies you can make.

Mince Meat in
Its Most Wholesome Form

A Home-Made Gray Hair Remedy

You can prepare a simple mixture at home that will gradually darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Orlex Compound and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at little cost, or the druggist will put it up for you. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look many years younger. It is easy to use, does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

THE GREATEST GIFT OF ALL

LIKE Love's benediction comes the Spirit of Christmas-time, the greatest gift of all—the Gift of Giving. Throughout the ages it has lasted, deep in the hearts of men, bringing forever its joy and happiness.

IT is best expressed by the most enduring of man-made gifts—those of the Jeweler's Handicraft, beautiful Gifts that last.

DIAMONDS · PEARLS · GEMS · JEWELRY · WATCHES
CLOCKS · SILVERWARE

COCOA KEEPS THE LUMBERMAN FIT!

COWAN'S
"Perfection"

COCOA
Brand"

NUTRITIOUS & STRENGTHENING — IT FIGHTS THE COLD.

Hear Rachmaninoff on the New Edison

THIS illustration is reproduced from an actual photograph of Rachmaninoff playing the Second Hungarian Rhapsodie (Liszt) while the New Edison RE-CREATED his previous rendition of the same composition.

The absolute fidelity of the RE-CREATION to the artist's original performance amazed and astonished the listeners.

Once more the New Edison's perfect Realism was proved by the acid test of direct comparison.

We are very glad to announce that Rachmaninoff has also made recordings for one of the standard talking machines. We invite comparison. Hear Rachmaninoff at the store of any Edison dealer.

Thos. A. Edison, Inc., Orange, N. J.

EDISON RACHMANINOFF RE-CREATIONS

Now on Sale (Others to be Released Later)

No. 82169 Second Hungarian Rhapsodie (Liszt) Part 1

No. 82169 Second Hungarian Rhapsodie (Liszt) Part 2

No. 82170 Second Hungarian Rhapsodie (Liszt) Part 3 (With Mr. Rachmaninoff's Cadenza)

No. 82170 Pastorale (Scarlatti-Tausig)

No. 82187 Prelude In C Sharp Minor, Op. 3 (Rachmaninoff)

No. 82187 Polka de W. R. (Rachmaninoff)

From an actual photograph taken in Mr. Rachmaninoff's home, in New York City

The Wonders Of a grain of wheat

Each wheat kernel contains over 125,000,000 food cells. It embodies 16 elements—practically everything the body needs. It is rich in needed minerals—the leading food of the world.

But in whole-wheat bread the elements pass largely undigested. Experiments show that 25% of the protein is lost, and 51% of the minerals.

Food cells must be broken

The food cells must be broken to digest. Cooking breaks only part of them. So Prof. A. P. Anderson invented a process which now blasts them all.

He seals the wheat in guns, then applies for an hour 550 degrees of heat. About 10% of the kernel is water. The trifle of moisture in each food cell is by this process changed to steam.

Then the guns are shot and over 100 million steam explosions occur inside each kernel. Every food cell is blasted.

The wheat kernels are puffed to bubbles—airy, flimsy, flaky globules—eight times normal size.

Scientific food delights

That is Puffed Wheat. Puffed Rice is whole rice puffed in like way.

The grains are thin, crisp, toasted tidbits, fascinating in texture and in flavor. Millions of children find in them the finest foods they know.

They do not tax digestion. Every atom feeds. They are all-hour foods to be served in many ways.

If you don't serve Puffed Grains in all inviting ways, you are missing the world's greatest food delights.

Puffed to bubbles
8 times normal size

Puffed Wheat

Puffed Rice

Toasted whole grains
Puffed to bubbles, 8 times
normal size

Flimsy and flavory, easy to digest

At night, Puffed Wheat in milk

The greatest cereal dish for luncheons or for suppers is Puffed Wheat in milk. This means whole wheat made delightful and easy to digest. Nothing else you can serve in milk makes such a perfect dish.

The Quaker Oats Company

Sole Makers

Peterborough, Canada

Saskatoon, Canada

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 43.)

the questions throbbing at the heart of our people in Rural Ontario.

In our "Federation," we have laid foundations according to our Women's Institute ideals of growth; we have guarded as our most precious asset, necessary to our progress, the individual initiative and development from within of our own membership, which have distinguished this movement at all times.

Every branch in the farthest outpost of our Province has equal representation with the branch nearest the centre. Every Province-wide movement, whether official as the various departments of Government, or voluntary as the Social Service Council, the Home and School Council, etc., is asking that representatives of our Provincial Board sit in consultation being $3,112.75. At our annual it was definitely decided to have Medical Inspection, and arrangements were made with the Department, for the carrying out of the same. The following resolution was presented to the County Council by a delegation of four ladies, the day after the annual meeting: "Resolved that the Women's Institute of North Lanark, hereby memorialize the County Council that suitable accommodation and attention be provided for the indigent and aged sick who cannot be admitted to any other Institution than the House of Industry of Lanark and Renfrew."

We make the proud boast of having as one of our branches, a very wide 'awake Girls' Institute possessed of boundless energy, their activities this year including plain sewing for the

A SEWING LESSON

This is a scene in one of Winnipeg's schools where boys' and girls' clubs have special instruction.

with them for a united power for good in the land.

In our Federation, with its standing committees, we leave with you a far-reaching constructive policy which with the wide vision and generous grasp of which we know you to be capable will keep Ontario, the "Mother of Women's Institutes" in her well-earned, but most responsible place for leadership.

It is unnecessary to put our organization in detail before you; you have it in your booklet with the programme, but we place it with our successors in office, as but a foundation for a nobler and more comprehensive work in the future.

"Unless, above himself, he can erect himself;

How poor a thing is man!" says the poet and this is true, also of Women's Institutes to whose growth and influence we can see no bounds.

With all good wishes for successful Conventions.

From North Lanark.

THE District of North Lanark includes eight branches, two of those being the towns of Carleton Place and Almonte, each of which has a large membership. Our annual meetings are always well attended, and each is better than the one preceding, our total receipts this year

Almonte hospital. 2. Organizing a Literary Society. 3. Social Service. 4. Visiting schools. 5. Repairing and fitting up a hall to hold meetings in. 6. Donating prizes to school fairs. 7. Class for Home Nursing (conducted by Miss Pirt, our summer lecturer) and a Sports Day at which $40 was cleared.

Carleton Place branch had this year a membership of 135. Their work included help to the House of Industry ($25), also a booth at the Chautauqua, which realized $181, and serving a supper to the returned soldiers. A nursing class was organized with a membership of ninety-three. The classes were continued during the winter months, a number of the doctors and nurses, including Miss Catton, Supt. of General Hospital, Ottawa, assisting. The total receipts for the year were $1,530.

Almonte held a Donation Day for the hospital, when large supplies of fruit, jelly, and eggs were received, also a cash donation. A sale of baking realized $50 for the hospital, and a Souvenir Sale held during the "Old Boys' Reunion," resulted in the sum of $500 being sent to the hospital. A series of lessons on "Home Nursing" was given by the President, and time and money spent relieving distress in destitute families during the winter.

"The clear, smooth, flawless complexion you long for—does it seem to you a special gift of nature that only a fortunate few can hope to possess?"

Facts about her skin that every girl should know

IS your skin a constant source of worry to you? Do you find its care continually perplexing? The clear, smooth, flawless complexion you long for—does it seem to you a special gift of nature that only a fortunate few can hope to possess?

You are wrong if you think that a beautiful skin comes merely as the result of good fortune. Any girl, by giving the skin the special care its special needs demand, can win the charm of a smooth, clear, soft complexion.

Remember that each day old skin dies and new takes its place. You can make the new skin what you will—by regular, persistent care, you can overcome any condition that has been troubling you.

Is your skin dull, sallow, lacking in color and life—marred by blackheads—by ugly little blemishes? Is it too oily? Begin today to give it the right Woodbury treatment for its needs, and see how quickly, with this care, its own vital power will help you to overcome its defects.

How to keep your skin fine in texture

Perhaps the pores of your skin are becoming enlarged. If so, your skin is not functioning properly—the pores are not contracting and expanding as they should.

To restore your skin to healthy, normal activity and give it back the fine, smooth delicacy it should have, begin tonight to give it this special treatment:

Just before you go to bed, dip your washcloth in very warm water and hold it to your face. Now take a cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap, dip it in water, and rub the cake itself over your skin. Leave the slight coating of soap on a few minutes until your face feels drawn and dry. Then dampen the skin and rub the soap in gently with an upward and outward motion. Rinse your face thoroughly, first in tepid water, then in cold. Whenever possible, finish by rubbing your face with a piece of ice.

The first time you use this treatment it will leave your skin with a slightly drawn, tight feeling. This means that your skin is responding to a more thorough and stimulating kind of cleansing than it has been accustomed to. After a few treatments the drawn feeling will disappear, and your face will emerge from its nightly bath with such a new, healthful sense of softness and smoothness that you cannot help realizing the good this treatment is doing your skin.

Use it persistently, and it will bring about a marked improvement in your skin's texture.

Special treatments for each different skin condition are given in the famous booklet of treatments that is wrapped around every cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap. Get a cake today and begin using your treatment tonight. A 25-cent cake lasts for a month or six weeks of any treatment, and for general cleansing use. Sold at all drug stores and toilet goods counters in the United States and Canada.

"Your treatment for one week"

A beautiful little set of Woodbury's skin preparations sent to you for 25 cents

Send 25 cents for this new miniature set of Woodbury's skin preparations, containing your complete Woodbury treatment for one week.

You will find, first, the little booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch," telling you the special treatment your skin needs; then a trial size cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap—enough for seven nights of any treatment; a sample tube of the new Woodbury's Facial Cream; and samples of Woodbury's Cold Cream and Woodbury's Facial Powder, with directions telling you just how they should be used. Write today for this special new Woodbury outfit. Address The Andrew Jergens Co., Limited, 5212 Sherbrooke St., Perth, Ontario.

Columbia

Grafonola

Give Music This Christmas

Give your family a Columbia Grafonola with Columbia Records for Christmas. Then right at your fireside you will find such famous exclusive Columbia popular artists as Al Jolson, Bert Williams, Frank Crumit, Harry Fox, Marion Harris, Nora Bayes, Ted Lewis' Jazz Band, and Van and Schenck; such exclusive Columbia opera stars as Barrientos, Gordon, Hackett, Ponselle, and Stracciari; and a world of other artists besides. Call on any Columbia dealer and he will gladly demonstrate that the Columbia Grafonola playing their Columbia Records always gives you exact reproductions of the music these artists themselves produced on the original wax in the Columbia Laboratory.

COLUMBIA GRAPHOPHONE CO., TORONTO

The Only Non Set Automatic Stop

Nothing to move or set or measure. Just start the Grafonola and it plays and stops itself. Never stops before it should. Always stops at the very end. Exclusively on the Columbia Grafonola.

Standard Models up to $360

The Journal Puzzle for December

By TOM WOOD

Guess the things pictured on each of these eight cards. Now place in proper order and, if correct, the initials will spell a unique "day" in the year, found only in December.

The finals will give you the name of a certain period, also found in December only.

Two prizes will be given—first, two dollars, and second, one dollar—for the best solutions, judged according to neatness and accuracy.

All are eligible to compete. Answers must be received by December 20th to be included.

Correct Solution of the October Puzzle

Circular pictures—Goat, Inch, Vanilla, Iron (Cross), Neck, Grapes.

Figures—Pears, Rye, Oats, Squash, Peaches, Egg Plant, Radishes, Indian Corn, Tomato, "Y."

First prize, C. M. Haslam, Springfield, P.E.I.; second prize, Miss Mae Butler, 1143 Alder Avenue, Moose Jaw, Sask.

Address Puzzle Department, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto.

Which Shall It Be?

A Crepe Georgette Waist; or one of Voile?

You can get these popular materials and others—in dainty, exclusive styles, smartly tailored, at popular prices—in

Mack Waists

It does not pay to make Waists at home, when MACK WAISTS are so good and so reasonably priced.

They are cut generously in full sizes.

They are designed by artists; and tailored with those little niceties of finish and trim that every woman appreciates.

MACK WAISTS have established their reputation for sound values—the Trademark is a guarantee of quality.

Ask to see MACK WAISTS at your favorite stores.

Fashioned by
McCutcheon Waist Co. Limited
323 St. James St., Montreal.

THE Mack BRAND
REGISTERED

PALL MALL

FAMOUS CIGARETTES

CORK AND PLAIN

ONE SHILLING AND THREE PENCE IN LONDON
THIRTY CENTS HERE

— at the Tea Hour

"Oh, How Warm that Feels!"

Apply "Vaseline" Capsicum Jelly immediately your children feel any tightness or congestion in chest or throat. It is an invaluable safeguard against chest colds. Just a little bit rubbed on the skin sends a warm, comforting glow through the affected part.

If "Vaseline" Capsicum Jelly is applied at night the trouble is gone in the morning. Better than a mustard plaster—does the work and doesn't blister—not so mussy and a surer way to ward off a cold.

At your druggist's.

CHESEBROUGH MANUFACTURING COMPANY
(Consolidated)

1880 Chabot Avenue

Montreal

Vaseline
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.
CAPSICUM
PETROLEUM JELLY

ONLY TABLETS MARKED
"BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"

The name "Bayer" on Aspirin is like Sterling on silver. It positively identifies the only genuine Aspirin—the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada.

Always buy an unbroken package of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which contains proper directions for Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains, and Pain generally. Tin boxes of 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Larger "Bayer" packages.

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Mono-acetic acid ester of Salicylic acid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

Safe Milk for INFANTS and INVALIDS

Nourishing,
Digestible,
No Cooking.

For Infants, Invalids and Growing Children. Rich Milk, Malted Grain Extract in Powder.

My Christmas Burglary

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6.)

footmen, too, for at sight of me descending the stairs in my idiotic outfit they betrayed no surprise at all. One of them set his tray down on a table, stepped neatly ahead as Mr. Felix reached the lowest stair, and opened a door for us on the right. I found myself at a stand on the threshold, blinking at a blaze of light, and staring up a perspective of waxed floor at a miniature stage which filled the far end of the room. Light, as everyone knows, travels faster than sound; were it not so, I should say that almost ahead of the blaze there broke on us a din of voices—of happy children's voices. Certainly it stunned my ears before I had time to blink.

The room was lined with children—scores of children; and some of them were gathered in little groups, and some of them, panting and laughing from their dance, had dropped into the chairs, ranged along the walls. But these were the minority. The most of the guests lay in cots, or sat with crutches beside them, or with hands dropped in their laps. These last were the blind ones. I do not set up to be a lover of children; but the discovery that the most of these small guests were crippled hit me with a kind of pitiful awe; and right on top of it came a second and worse shock, to note how many of them were blind.

To me those blind eyes were the only merciful ones, as Mr. Felix beckoned Father Christmas to follow him up to the stage between the two lines of curious gazers. "O-oh!" had been their first cry, as they caught sight of me in the doorway; and "O-oh!" I heard them murmuring, child after child, in long-drawn fugue, as we made our way up the long length of the room that winked detection from every candle, every reflector, every foot of its polished floor.

We gained the stair together by a short stairway draped with flags. Mr. Felix with a wave of his opera hat, called on the orchestra to strike up "A Fine Old English Gentleman," (meaning me or, if you like it, Father Christmas; and I leave you to picture the fool I looked). Then, stepping to the footlights, he introduced me, explaining that he had met me wandering upstairs, rifling his most secret drawers to fill my bag with seasonable presents for them. Five or six times he interrupted his patter to pluck a cracker or a bon-bon out of my beard, and toss it down to the audience. The children gasped at first, and stared at the magic spoil on the floor. By-and-by one adventurous little girl crept forward, and picked up a cracker, and her cry of delight as she discovered that it was real, gave the signal for a general scramble. Mr. Felix continued his patter without seeming to heed it; but his hand went up faster and faster to my beard and wig, and soon the crackers were falling in showers. I saw children snatch them off the floor and carry them to their blind brothers and sisters, pressing them between the wondering, groping hands with assurance that they were real. . . . Mr. Felix saw it, too, and his flow of words ceased with a gulp, as though a flowing spring gurgled suddenly, and withdrew itself underground. "I am a sentimentalist," he said to me quickly, in a pause which nobody heeded; for by this time crackers were banging to right and left, and the children shouting together. Their shouts rose to one yell of laughter as, recovering himself, he dived at my neck, and produced the two struggling rabbits. His opera hat opened with a snap, and in they went. A second later it shut flat again, and they were gone, into thin air. He opened the hat with a puzzled frown, plunged a hand, and dragged forth yard upon yard of ribbon—red, green, white, blue, yellow ribbon, mixed up with packs of playing cards that, with a turn of the hand he sent spinning into air, to fall thick as leaves in Vallombrosa.

"Your turn!" he panted as, at the end of the ribbon he lugged out an enormous cabbage, and trundled it down the room. Catching my bag from me, he shook his cloak over it once, and returned it to my hands, bulging, stuffed full to the brim with toys—dolls, tops, whips, trumpets, boxes of animals, boxes of tin soldiers. . . .

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 55.)

An Appetizing Meat Loaf—

and made the new Cox way! Try this—

MEAT LOAF

1 envelope Cox's Gelatine, 2 cups (1½ pints) water, 1 teaspoon beef extract or bouillon cube, 1 cup (½ pint) chopped celery, 4 tablespoons chopped sweet red peppers, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon pepper, 3 cups (¾ lb.) chopped cooked meat Parsley.

Pour water into a saucepan, sprinkle in Gelatine and dissolve over fire; add beef extract or bouillon cube and cook; then add celery, red peppers, seasoning and meat. Pour into a wet mold and leave in a cool place over night. Turn out at serving time, cut in slices and garnish with parsley.

Any kind of left over meat may be used in this way.

There are any number of other ways in which to use Cox Gelatine to make your cooking better. The underlying secret of many a dainty and unusual salad and rich, delicious dessert is one of the little checkboard packages of Cox's Gelatine.

The new Cox Book of Selected Recipes shows you the surprisingly varied ways in which Cox's Gelatine, pure, unflavored and unsweetened, will improve your cooking.

Write for a free copy.

COX'S
Instant Powdered
GELATINE

J. & J. COX, LTD.,
Dept. G., P.O. Box 3009
Montreal

Gifts that brighten the whole year
Making cleaner homes

WHERE Christmas brings a Bissell, that house will be happier and healthier for years to come, for there is almost no wear out to a Bissell.

The Carpet Sweeper for the daily sweeping the Bissell Vacuum Sweeper for the more thorough cleaning—quickly and effectively remove all dust, litter and dirt.

BISSELL'S

Carpet Sweepers and Vacuum Sweepers
Put your sweeping reliance on a Bissell's Appliance.

See Bissell's at most good stores everywhere. Prices $13 to $17.50. "Cyclo" Ball Bearings, Carpet Sweepers, $9 and less, depending upon style and locality.

BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER CO.
of Canada, Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont.
240 Erie St., Grand Rapids, Mich.
Oldest and Largest Sweeper
Makers

My Christmas Burglary

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 54.)

"Father Christmas, now! Make way for Father Christmas!"

The infection took me, and stumbling down from the stage by the stairway, I fell to distributing the largesse left and right. The first bagful carried me less than a third of the way down the room, for I gave with both hands, and, when a blind child fumbled long with a toy, dropped it at his feet, and tried another, and yet another till his smile suited me. The dropped toys lay where they had fallen. The spirit of the game had made me reckless; and I halted with a cold shiver as my fingers touched the gems at the bottom of the bag, and looking down the room, I was aware that my store was exhausted, and as yet two-thirds of the children had received no gift. I turned—all in a cold shiver—to retrace my steps and pick up the toys at the blind children's feet, and as I did so, felt myself a bungler past pardon. But in the act of turning, I cast a look back at the stage; and there stood Mr. Felix, nodding approval and beckoning. So, as in a dream, I went back. "Capital!" was his only comment. Taking my bag, he passed his cloak over it again, and again handed it to me, stuffed to the brim.

Thrice I returned it to him; but the third refill was a scanty one, since by this time there lacked but half-a-score of the taller children to be satisfied. To these, too, I distributed their gifts, and when every eager pair of hands had been laden, I wheeled about for the next word of command.

But Mr. Felix had skipped down from the stage, letting the curtain fall behind him. He stood with his back to me, waving both arms to the orchestra, and as the musicians plunged at the opening bars of the Toy Symphony, the curtain rose, almost as soon as it had dropped; and rose upon a scene representing a street with shops decked for Christmas, and snow upon their eaves and window ledges.

Then, still to the strains of the Toy Symphony, a Harlequin ran in, with a Columbine, whom he twisted upon his bent knee, and tossed lightly through the upper window of a baker's shop, himself diving a moment later, with a slap of his wand, through the flap of a fishmonger's door, hard by. Next, as on a frozen slide, came the clown, with red-hot poker, the Pantaloon tripping over his stick, and two Constables wreathed in strings of sausages. The Clown boxed the Pantaloon's ears; the Pantaloon passed on the buffet to the Constables, and all plunged together into the fishmonger's. The Clown emerged running with a stolen plaice, passed it into the hands of the Pantaloon, who followed, and was in turn pursued off the scene by the Constables; but the fishmonger, issuing last in chase, ran into the Clown, who caught up a barrel of red herrings and bonneted him. The fishmonger extricated himself, and the two began to pelt each other with herrings, while the children screamed with laughter.

It was a famous harlequinade; and, as usual, it concluded the entertainment. For after a harlequinade, what can stand between a child and happy dreams?—especially if he go to them with his arms full of Christmas presents. Five minutes after the curtain had fallen I found myself standing beside Mr. Felix in the hall, while he bade good-night to his guests. Carriages of his hiring had arrived for them, and the coachmen apparently had received their orders. A dozen well-trained nurses moved about the hall and, having dressed the little ones—who by this time were almost too drowsy with pleasure to thank their entertainer—carried them out into the portico, where the liveried footmen stood by the carriage doors. Slam! went the doors, and one after another—with scarcely a word of command—the carriages bowled off over the thick snow.

When the last guest had gone, Mr. Felix turned to me.

"The play is over," said he. "When I am gone, it will be repeated year after year at Christmas, at the Cripples' Hospital. My will provides for that; and that will be my monument. But for a few years to come I hope to hold the entertainment here, in my own house. Come, you may take off your robe and wig and go in peace. I would fain have a talk with you, but I am tired, as perhaps you may guess. Go, then—and go in peace!"

Motioning the footman to fall back, he walked out with me and down the steps of the portico, but halted on the lowest step by the edge of the frozen snow, and with a wave of the hand dismissed me into the night.

I had gained the end of the street, and the bridge that there spans the river, before it occurred to me that I was carrying my bag, and—with a shock—that my bag still held the stolen jewels.

By the second lamp on the bridge I halted, lifted the bag on to the snow-covered parapet, thrust in a hand, and drew forth—a herring!

Herrings—red herrings—filled to the brim. I dragged them forth, and rained handful after handful overboard into the black water. Still, below them, I had hoped to find the jewels. But the jewels were gone, at least, I supposed that all were gone, when—having jettisoned the last herring—I groped around the bottom of the bag.

Something pricked my finger. I drew it out and held it under the lamp-light. It was a small turquoise brooch, set around with diamonds.

For at least two minutes I stared at it, there, under the lamp, and slipped it half-way into my waistcoat pocket; but suddenly took a new resolve, and walked back along the street to the house.

Mr. Felix yet stood on the lower step of the portico. Above him, still as a statue, a footman waited at the great house-door, until it should please his master to re-enter.

"Excuse me, sir—" I began, and held up the brooch.

"I meant it for you," said Mr. Felix quietly, affably, "I gave precisely five pounds for it, at an auction; and I warn you that it is worth just thrice that sum. Still, if you would prefer ready money, as in your circumstances I daresay you do"—he felt in his breeches pocket—"here are the five sovereigns, and—once more—go in peace."

places, everywhere it was the same thing. If a man was married then the first question was, 'Have you got any children back home?' And you knew he wasn't exactly pining to hear about your children, but to talk about his own. And if he wasn't married and he wanted to draw you out, it was the same thing: 'I suppose you've got a family hidden away somewhere?' I never felt so poverty stricken in my life. I used to laugh and say 'No, but I've got a husband, and a ranch, and a hundred chickens, and so on. They tried to be interested, of course, but they weren't really. Even fighting was tame compared to the dangers of a family."

"That's a queer way of thinking of it," said Selina.

The clock struck twelve. There was a sound of doors opening, and with the coming of the men a wild hungry breath of the snow-filled prairie entered the warm house.

The doctor came into the room.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 58.)

1847 ROGERS BROS.

SILVERWARE

Table Silverplate that lasts

When the silverplate you choose is "1847 Rogers Bros." you are choosing silverplate to be lived with for years and years—the family plate.

There are many kinds and makes of silverplate, but there is only one "Family Plate" that has been the choice of the discriminating for over seventy years—and that is the "1847 Rogers Bros." brand.

Its enduring quality, the lovely designs from which to choose, the unqualified guarantee—these are the reasons why it is preferred.

The table setting shows the Cromwell Pattern, one of the most popular of the many which can be seen at your dealer's.

Cromwell Pattern

A Lasting Gift

No woman ever says that she has too much silverware; certainly not too much of this finest of silverplate.

Give "1847 Rogers Bros." then, and you give usefulness that endures and ever appeals to one's sense of beauty.

There are many attractive designs to select from, and you will make no mistake in regard to durability, if particular to ask for "1847 Rogers Bros." by its FULL name.

At leading dealers

MERIDEN BRITANNIA
COMPANY, Limited
Hamilton, Ontario.

Made in Canada by Canadians and sold by leading Canadian dealers throughout the Dominion.

Old Colony Pattern

The Family Plate for Seventy Years

You Save Middlemen's Profits

when you order

Hallam's

Guaranteed
Furs

By Mail "Direct from Trapper to Wearer"

Because we buy the Raw Furs direct from the trappers for cash. Then we select the best and make them up into beautiful Hallam Guaranteed Fur Garments, which we sell direct by mail to you.

This does away with all middlemen's profits and expenses, so that Hallam's prices are very low.

No matter where you live in Canada you can take advantage of our mail order service, the prices are the same to everybody—everywhere. You are sure of satisfaction, for Hallam's guarantee is to satisfy or refund the money. No questions are asked. You are the only judge.

FREE Hallam's 1921 Book of Fur Fashions. In this beautifully illustrated book you will find what leading people will be wearing this season. The articles are illustrated from genuine photographs of Hallam Furs, Coats and Sets as they really appear on live people. The book contains 48 pages and is crammed full with bargains from cover to cover. Send for your copy to-day. It will be gladly mailed free on request.

The coat or muff illustrated here will be promptly sent you on receipt of money—satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.

Address in full as below

John Hallam

Limited

Department No. 642

TORONTO

The Largest in our Line in Canada

Handsome coat of Hudson Cooney, trimmed with finest Natural Australian Opossum. It is 30 ins. long; lined with silk poplin and finished with sailor shawl collar and full belt. The Opossum trimming contrasts beautifully with rich black fur and makes a lovely garment. M230. Delivered to you $247.50

Australian Opossum Muff to match, melon shape, lined with velvet and a soft down bed. Complete with cord and ring. M211. Delivered to you $49.50

A Worker in Sandal Wood

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16.)

wind goes through the sky. And out of them thrust forth the little birds, and after them the lilies, for a moment living, but even while Hyacinthe looked growing hard and reddish-brown and settling back into the sweet wood. Then the stranger smiled again, and laid all the tools neatly in order, and opening the door quietly, went away into the woods.

Hyacinthe lay still among the shavings for a long time, and then he crept slowly to the door. The sun, not yet risen, sent his first beams upon the delicate mist of frost afloat beneath the trees, and so all the world was aflame with splendid gold. Far away down the road a dim figure seemed to move amid the glory, but the glow and the splendor were such that Hyacinthe was blinded. His breath came sharply as the glow beat in great waves on the wretched shed, on the foam of shavings, on the cabinet with the little birds and the lilies carved at the corners.

He was too pure of heart to feel afraid. But, "Blessed be the Lord," whispered Hyacinthe, clasping his slow hands, "for He hath visited and redeemed his people. But who will believe?"

Then the sun of Christ's day rose gloriously, and the little sparrow came from his nest among the shavings and shook his wings to the light.

MRS. WARD, HER GREEK, AND HER POMERANIAN

FROM the truly great, Mrs. Humphry Ward would take any contradiction, mind leaping to mind. But let a lesser personality attempt to defame one of her idols—and there were many of them—and the lesser personality was not long in regretting his temerity, says Muriel Harris in "The North American Review." She could not even bear reflections on minor points, such as dress or bearing. Any one whom she had once canonized was, once for all, perfect—to be worshipped as she worshipped them. The same characteristic applied equally to causes. She could tolerate the point of view of her peer, but she simply could not bear the differing point of view of any lesser light. This sense of rightness and her power of expression made her a formidable antagonist.

My pleasantest memory of Mrs. Ward dates back to the spring before the war—a Sunday in her country house at Stocks. It was a day of fitful sunshine. Purple hyacinths scented the air and in the copse near the house daffodils bloomed, thousands of them, their yellow heads swept by the breeze. Patches of sunlight flecked the smooth lawn. The grandchildren were there—a little Mary, remarkably like her grandmother, with the keen eye, the dominant character, the tendency to brush aside the non-essential.

The kindest of women, Mrs. Ward never suffered fools gladly. In her early married days at Oxford, she was the centre of a group of intellectuals. She came of the George Eliot tradition, was indeed Eliza to her Elijah, carrying on George Eliot's passion for learning with perhaps something of the same self-consciousness that a woman should indeed read Greek before breakfast! But she mellowed greatly as she grew older and this mellowness was never more apparent than on that spring Sunday, in the tenderness which she showed to her own family, her passion for the flowers in her own beautiful home, her pride in her son, and her fondness for a little yapping Pomeranian dog, who, after the manner of Pomeranians all the world over, took liberties under her august protection, which did not make for his general popularity. I see her now, wearing a long cloak, sweeping, stately, across the wide lawn to greet her friends, her face alight and the dark, hawk-like features losing something of their keenness in the welcoming smile.

Black Stockings are always smart and fashionable.

THE favourite, most becoming and effective stockings for the slim ankle and shapely leg, are Black Cotton or Thread Stockings dyed with the deep, dense, permanent brilliancy of

Hawley's Hygienic Black

British Dye

FOR COTTON AND THREAD
STOCKINGS AND SOCKS.

Hawley-Dyed Stockings and Socks are made in two distinct finishes—"Cashmere" finish and "Silk" finish—and every pair bears the Hawley mark, which guarantees the dye to be stainless, perspiration-proof and absolutely fast.

Look for this mark when buying hosiery

Enquiries from the Trade invited

Sole Dyers (to the Trade only):

A. E. HAWLEY & CO., LTD.

Sketchley Dye Works

HINCKLEY

ENGLAND

Lift off Corns with Fingers

Doesn't hurt a bit and "Freezone" costs only a few cents

You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

Apply a few drops of "Freezone" upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!

Tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs few cents at any drug store

AN IDEAL GIFT
Every Woman Will Appreciate One

PORTLAND METAL
HOT WATER BOTTLE

PRICE $3.

DELIVERED
Duty Prepaid

Money Back if Not Satisfied.

Bright Nickel Finish. A handsome and useful article. Will not burst or leak. Sanitary.

Keeps hot three times as long as a Rubber Bottle. Packed in attractive box. Flannel bag and wire handle free. Order Early.

PORTLAND SALES CO., Mrs.

At your dealers or send on receipt of price.
570 Commercial Street
Boston, Mass.

"California Syrup of Figs"

All druggists sell the reliable and genuine "California Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna."

Laxative for Children

Full directions for children of all ages are plainly printed on label. Mother! You must look for our name—The California Fig Syrup Company.

DEAFNESS IS MISERY

I know because I was Deaf and had Head Noises for over 30 years. My invisible Antiseptic Ear Drops restored my hearing and stopped Head Noises, and will do it for you. They are Tiny Megaphones. Cannot be seen when worn. Effective when Deafness is caused by Catarrh or by Perforated, Partially or Wholly Destroyed Natural Drums. Easy to put in, easy to take out. Are "Lemon Comforts." Inexpensive. Write for Booklet and my sworn statement of how I recovered my hearing.

A. O. LEONARD

Suite 97, 70 5th Avenue New York City

His dull grey cloak of many folds was wrapped about him.

The Wind Wheel of the Djinn

By BERTHA E. GREEN

THERE is a land where there are many mountains. Clouds float, roll, and swirl about their tops, but there is one mountain where, far below its peak, there is a ring of cloud that shuts off its top forever from the view of men. This mountain is unscalable, and even below the clouds, the snows lie all year round. Above the curtain of cloud that shuts off the world, the mountain top is flattened like a great uneven floor. Huge masses of jagged rock are strewn on this gigantic table, and there, amidst them, sits Aewol, the Djinn, the Master of the Winds.

As old as the mountains themselves is Aewol, and wondrously wise. Naught that happens in the world of men is hidden from him, for when he calls them, the winds bring back tales great and small of everything and everyone.

Beside the Djinn upon the mountain top is a great wheel, such a one as that upon which a fisher winds his nets to dry. As Aewol calls each wind back from its wandering, he winds slowly on his wheel, yet never is the wheel found over-full. For every wind reeled home, another is set free to go its way again.

It was in our December, near the last day, when the Djinn called for the return of a certain wind, a high East wind that had been abroad for many days. Swiftly it sped to Aewol on the mountain top, where it was gathered in by the wind's master, who bound it to his wheel.

It was a rough wind, and from its ceaseless driving over many lands was torn and ragged. Its voice was hoarse and hurried, as a passing hail from a ship in the night.

So to the Djinn came home the Ragged Easter, and as it was slowly wound upon the wheel, Aewol saw pictured on the wind the story of its wanderings, and heard the tales it had to tell.

His dull grey cloak of many folds was wrapped about him, and his hood was thrown back but enough to show the strong face and the eyes full of patience and understanding. Ceaselessly turning his wheel, the Djinn came to the story of a Christmas Eve. For hours the night had been moving on, and would soon make way for Christmas morning. A high wind, the Ragged Easter, swept in uneven swiftness on its way, now with the steady rushing of a rapid stream, now in swirling and uneven haste. It tossed the treetops in rough playfulness, and gathered up the powdered snow to scatter it abroad like sand again.

You would not think that the wind was carrying a passenger as smoothly and carefully as a broad river; yet it was so, and the passenger was Santa Claus.

It was not yet the hour of dawn, but close to it, when Santa Claus rode down a long slope of the East wind toward the last house that he wished to visit. There were no bright lights shining from the windows, but smoke and many sparks from the broad chimney told him that someone was at home.

Now Santa Claus always goes down chimneys. This was a fine, big one, but there were so many sparks rushing up out of it into the night, that Santa Claus could not get in the house that way. He sat down at the edge of the chimney-top, while his reindeer and sleigh stood on the roof, and it was then that a streamer of the Ragged Easter whispered hoarsely to him to wait where he was.

In a moment the wind had whipped over the eaves, down and around the corner of the house, where it paused in front of the door. Then, as a strong and lively wind can do, it went right through the key-hole.

But the Ragged Easter had not entered the house unseen—Jack Frost was outside; and, after the wind was inside, the frosty chap peeked through the key-hole.

It was a long room with a broad, low ceiling, brightly polished floor, a round table, easy chair, and a white rug over toward the wide fireplace. All this could be seen in the light of a fire, three goodly logs ablaze.

The East wind was intent on its plan to help Santa Claus. Over to the fireplace it flew, and, spreading out suddenly above the fire, kept down the rising sparks for a moment. That instant was all that Santa Claus needed, and, almost before the helping wind had withdrawn from the fireplace, Santa was standing in the room.

He had his pack, his fur-trimmed coat, his jolly face, and the first thing he noticed was a Christmas-tree in one corner of the room—there was nothing on it.

The pack was opened, and toys were chosen quickly for each boy and girl that slept within the house. Then, for Santa Claus knows just how to do it, he fastened all the gifts upon the tree in a twinkling, and on each branch tip hung a little bell.

But there was something missing. The tree looked far more Christmas-like than it had looked before, but there were no twinkling lights upon it, no flashing of gold and silver tinsel, and Santa Claus had nothing more left in his pack.

Meanwhile, the Ragged Easter, as winds always are, was restless. It tried to help Santa Claus, but only managed to swing the branches out of Santa Claus' reach, and ruffle up the woolly lambs and Teddy-bears. Santa Claus, to get the wind out of the way, set it the task of brightening up the fire, so that there might be a bit more light in the room.

Then, as Santa Claus was thinking disappointed thoughts at not being able to fix the tree as he would have wished, something happened. The Ragged Easter fanned the fire, and tongues of red-gold flame leaped from the glowing logs. They were mirrored on the polished floor, flickering here and there, playing hide-and-seek as did the darting shadows on the ceiling above them.

Then, instead of the flash of red and gold upon the floor, Santa Claus saw goblins, jolly, little, red goblins, leaping and dancing toward him. Instead of darting shadows, black-coated elves came from the ceiling to the walls, and joined the goblins in their merry dance.

But it was not all dancing that the little people had in mind, but help for Santa Claus. Each goblin climbed up like a squirrel, and hung a tiny light upon the tree; and when they had set

Make This Test

See how teeth glisten then

This ten-day test costs nothing. To millions it has brought a new era in teeth cleaning. This is to urge that you try this method. Then let your own teeth show you what it means to you and yours.

To fight the film

The object is to fight the film which causes most tooth troubles. Film is that viscous coat you feel. It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays. The old methods of brushing do not end it. So, despite all care, tooth troubles have been constantly increasing.

It is the film-coat that discolors, not the teeth. And nearly all teeth brushed in old ways are coated more or less.

Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. And that disease has become alarming in extent.

A daily combatant

Dental science has now found ways to daily combat this film. For five years the methods have been carefully watched and proved. Now leading dentists everywhere advise them.

These methods are embodied in a dentifrice called Pepsodent. Millions now know it and employ it. Wherever you look, the results are seen in glistening teeth to-day.

Acts in five ways

One ingredient in Pepsodent is pepsin. Another multiplies the starch digestant in the saliva to digest starch deposits that cling. The alkalinity of the saliva is multiplied also. That to neutralize the acids which cause tooth decay.

Two factors directly attack the films. One of them keeps teeth so highly polished that film cannot easily adhere.

With every application, Pepsodent combats the teeth's great enemies in new and efficient ways. To millions it is bringing cleaner, safer, whiter teeth.

Send the coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth whiten as the film-coats disappear.

This test will be a revelation. Make it now. Cut out the coupon so you won't forget.

Pepsodent
REG. IN CANADA

The New-Day Dentifrice

A scientific film combatant combined with two other modern requisites. Now advised by leading dentists everywhere and supplied by all druggists in large tubes.

10-Day Tube Free

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY,
Dept. 136, 1104 S. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

Mail 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to

Only one tube to a family

Sunset is the Real Dye

that brings the "know-how" of the professional dyer into your own kitchen.

You can do really wonderful things with Sunset—"making over" heavy winter materials as well as light filmy goods—at the same time in the same dye bath. But the only sure way to get the beautiful Sunset results is to get the genuine Sunset Soap Dyes. Similar products have imitated the form and price—but they do not approach Sunset quality.

15¢
a cake

North American Dye Corporation, Dept. Z, Toronto, Can., Mount Vernon, N. Y.

See the Sunset Color Card at your dealer's, or send us your dealer's name and fifteen cents and we will mail the cake of your choice postpaid.

22
FastColors

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 60.)

"Unlit Decem- bers"

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 55.)

Selina went into the living-room. The two men were standing within the area of the blazing fire, stretching out their numb hands but too cold to venture near enough to thaw out at once. On the high wooden mantel holly wreaths were laid, and above it Andrea del arto's Madonna looked down, bearing the south in her gaze.

Grayson asked questions eagerly, already he seemed to have thrown off the inertia of the endless bitter drive. But the cold enveloped Strode. Looking from one to the other the word lying in the back of her mind, recalled this evening, rang over again like a dull chime—the word "unlit."

From the doorway Alice Grayson called Selina sharply: "Come at once will you? I need you."

CHRISTMAS morning always brings toys. If we are two or twenty, seven or seventy, to the richest or the poorest of us it brings a toy. But if your mother breaks her leg and you arrive unexpectedly, if the prairie beckons a tempest and the two remain inseparable, oblivious of the Day of the Child, what then of a gift to greet the newly born?

The clock struck eight. A truly Western breakfast party assembled in the great living room. There were the Graysons and besides them, Davids, the father, who had blown in the night before, more by the good graces of his horse than his own cunning, and who was serving the meal like the good army cook he is. There was the English Lieutenant, whom he had been sent to meet, the doctor still storm-stayed, the Strodes, and half a dozen dogs rescued almost frozen from the kennels. There was a glory of firelight, a great steaming of coffee and sizzling of bacon and eggs. There was joking and jollity, and the barking of dogs, and the laughter of folks who had had good sleep after long strain.

"Davids, your son is to receive gifts this Christmas morn," announced Grayson. "I hereby present one cow, in lieu of the proverbial spoon—Holstein—and we'll see that she's a good one."

"Oh, now Mr. Grayson!" protested Davids.

"Yes, Davids, and I shall set him up with a rooster and two hens," added the lady of the ranch.

A wail in the distance was considered appreciative by the company.

"I made him a rattle," said the young soldier, producing a strange effect of clothes-pins and bells, much jeered at by the doctor.

"Mine is at home," added Selina.

"I'd like to know what it is," volunteered her husband. "We don't seem to have toys of any kind at our place."

"It's something you've never seen," she said laughing, and hesitated as she found the whole breakfast table listening. "You see I only had a real birthday party once in my life. It was when I was ten, and my mother was alive then. She loved beautiful things, and she found somewhere the sweetest little candle-holders for my cake. They are of silver filigree. I have kept them, and some of the pink candles. They seem to me more lovely now than they did even then. I have never taken them out of the box where they have lain for years, and they are in a trunk with some other things that I thought too precious for a prairie shack. That's where I made a mistake. Anyway, Davids, I shall bring a pink candle in a real silver filigree holder to your baby."

This appealed to Davids even more than the Holstein and the chickens or the rattle.

"It's a funny thing," he said, "how presents will come along at Christmas time, whether you're in the way of cities or just about buried in the snow and far away from other folks, like we all are out here! Certainly, the kid's done well this morning, and the missus and I are obliged to you—for all the trouble you took for us. You certainly have been the real thing—all of you."

"What's Christmas but a birthday?" sang the hostess gaily.

A little later, the two women stood at the window, looking out on dazzling fields, across which sun rays ran like brilliant, laughing waves.

"I love the prairie—from here," said Selina, looking less peaked-like than ever before in her life. "And"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 67.)

SUPERIOR
4 HEAT GRILL No. 155

"Superior"

Electric Grills with a New Indestructible Element

When You buy a "Superior" Grill, you get an appliance which is decidedly "SUPERIOR" in every way.

Not only are "Superior" Grills to be preferred as to design, workmanship and finish, but our element makes the grill practically everlasting—"Superior" Grills do not burn out or "short circuit." Remember that the "Superior" Grill is the only one with this type of element, so look for the name to avoid disappointment and to secure long satisfactory service.

In spite of their many advantages, "Superior" electric appliances cost less than usual. They are entirely made in Canada, there is no duty or exchange added to the price. Every "Superior" appliance is fully guaranteed for one year. Aluminum utensils are supplied.

When buying a Grill, Toaster or Iron, tell your dealer you want "Superior." He has them, or can get them from his wholesaler.

"SUPERIOR"—all that the name implies.

MANUFACTURED BY

Superior Electrics, Limited
PEMBROKE, ONT.

SUPERIOR
SINGLE HEAT GRILL
No. 161

Nature Helps All Who Help Themselves

and the best help comes from Beecham's Pills. Who can do full duty in this world if hampered by ill-health? The failures are those whose ambition or power to work has been destroyed by sickness. Take a proper pride in your physical welfare, and you will be a success. The race is to the swift, the prize to the able. Any derangement of stomach or liver interferes with your well being and happiness, and makes your day's work distasteful.

TAKE BEECHAM'S PILLS

when you feel out-of-sorts. They make all the difference. They cleanse the blood, tone the system, strengthen the stomach, stimulate the liver, and change the fear of failure into the certainty of success. For seventy years Beecham's Pills have been the favorite remedy for all disorders of the digestive organs. They are good not only where a specific remedy is required, but are also an excellent tonic for the general health. Get a box at once and keep them on hand. Try them when you feel out of sorts

And Give Nature a Chance

In Boxes, 25 cents and 50 cents.

"The Largest Sale of Any Medicine in the World"

Sold Everywhere
in Canada

Office workers should use Lifebuoy Soap

Think of the hundreds of dusty, germ laden things you must touch every day! Think of the danger to your skin. You need the best soap—and more—the best disinfectant. You get both in

LIFEBUOY HEALTH SOAP

Its healing, soothing oils and grateful disinfectants thoroughly cleanse and disinfect—particularly useful for bruises, cuts, wind sores, etc.

The carbolic odour in Lifebuoy is a sign of its protective qualities, quickly vanishing after use.

LEVER BROTHERS
LIMITED, TORONTO, ONT.

Mend Your Pots and Pans.

VOL-PEEK Mends Cooking utensils. Granite-ware, Aluminum, Enamelled-ware, Tin, Copper, Brass, Iron, etc. Easy to use, no tools required. Ready for use in 2 minutes. Saves a pot for 25¢ a cent. 25 cents at your Dealer, or postpaid by Vol-Peek Co., Box 2024, Montreal, Can. Agents Wanted.

The Mystery of "C.Q."

By WILLIAM LE QUEUX

ANCHORED about eight miles from land the old hulk rose and fell and pitched and tossed in the long grey, angry waves of the North Sea.

From the deck of the discarded old iron vessel, so rusty and dilapidated that no "U" boat would expend a torpedo upon her, Jack Henderson, a tall good-looking young fellow, in a shabby civilian suit, gazed at the low-lying spit of sand which he could just discern through the gathering mist of that December afternoon.

"Christmas morning!" he muttered bitterly to himself. "No leave! Only this eternal listening-in, until one's head aches and every tick sounds like thunder. Bah! I'm sick of it. If I could only get away again to sea!"

And he cast his eyes longingly towards the horizon where the visibility was distinctly bad.

At that moment another man, slightly younger, appeared on deck and cried excitedly:

"I say, Henderson! There's a U-boat somewhere close here. Perhaps we may get her. Shall we try?"

"She'll get us, more likely," declared Henderson. "We're bound to be had one day when they get to know the old hulk's game."

Now "the old hulk's" name had once been Her Majestys ship "Valerian," but then she had been in harbour a good many years. On the outbreak of war, however, she had been towed out of the Tyne and anchored off that spit of sand for a very special and confidential service, a service connected with wireless communication. In charge of the latter was Lieutenant Henderson, a wireless expert of the Admiralty. His three assistants and the crew of five were all sworn to secrecy and had been selected on account of their previous meritorious services. All had been in various "scraps" and all were very keen upon their work, conducted as it was upon the edge of the minefield.

It was near the end of December in the year 1917. The U-boat menace was a very real one and it seemed that no matter what Britain did, Germany always went one better.

Life on the old "Valerian" was indeed precarious. Day and night those on board always had their life-belts handy, and there was a constant and glorious uncertainty as to whether they might not all be blown into the air at any moment. The old hulk was well camouflaged. There were no weird paintings upon her hull, or stripes of grey, green, and brown. But her two masts were broken, there were great holes in her funnel due to rust and decay, and outwardly she was only fit for the ship-breaker's yard. Yet, strung among the broken masts and funnels, apparently as stay-wires, was cunningly concealed a very efficient wireless aerial, both for transmission and reception.

Henderson, summoned by Wis'en, the second-in-command of the "hulk," lost no time in going below. While the "Valerian" presented such a dilapidated appearance outside, within she was a very complicated box of tricks. Two spacious cabins were fitted with the very latest apparatus of wireless and direction-finding, together with a wireless telephone.

A stout man, also young, dressed in rough tweeds, sat at a table, with a pair of head-telephones clamped over his ears, intently listening. Around him was a very complicated and intricate-looking mass of apparatus and wires with here and there a small electric bulb or valve, glowing. To the uninitiated it presented a perfect maze of curious appliances, but to the wireless man it was a "set" to admire—perhaps one of the most perfect and most effective wireless sets afloat.

Henderson lit a cigarette with his usual nonchalance and putting another pair of phones on his head sat down beside the operator on duty, a young fellow named Forbes, and listened intently. All was silence as the ship rolled and pitched in the heavy sea.

A few moments later Henderson rose, crossed to the other side of the cabin and consulted a big chart which was carefully mapped into numbered squares.

"Four-two-six!" he exclaimed placing his finger upon the small square marked with that number. "She's lying down there, no doubt!"

Then he turned to the code-book and a few minutes later wrote upon an official message form as follows:

"G.T.S.I., to M.Z.—Roberts, Exchange Chambers, Liverpool. Your quotation at fifty-three-and-nine accepted. Please send immediately twenty-five boxes.—Goddard and Co."

Then seated at the wireless key he placed the telephone on his ears and tapped out the message in the Morse code.

Hardly had he done so when he heard a distinct series of high-pitched dots and dashes in what is known as "tonic train," which he at once read as:

"M.Z. to G.T.S.I.—S.N."

and which told him that his message had been received by the secret listener at a certain Admiralty station, and that through the ether the warning would at once be given to the cruising airship patrolling that portion of the seas that a German submarine was lying in a certain spot in order to attack any merchant ship attempting to take passage through the mine-field.

"That's all right," Henderson remarked as he removed the head phones and switched off the current. "We ought to see some fun presently."

Again he turned to the chart and measured carefully the distance from the hulk to the square numbered four hundred and twenty-six.

"About seven-and-a-half miles, isn't it?" queried Wisden. "It's growing dark. We shan't be able to see very much."

"Well, we'll try. Let's go on deck," was the reply.

Both men put on their oil-skins and sea-boots, for a blinding rain had started, and the wind, now quickly increasing, caused the old hulk to toss about like a cork.

"It's going to be another rotten night," remarked Wisden. "I'd rather be on a blessed lightship than on this hooker."

"Never mind, old bean, you'll go on leave on Thursday. I've got mine and I've got to spend Christmas on the old tub. A merry Christmas it'll be for me!" Henderson growled.

"Yes, I don't envy you—I must say," Wisden replied, while the chief wireless officer put his binoculars to his eyes and peered into the fast gathering mist in the direction of that portion of the North Sea mapped for their purposes as number four-two-six.

"I bet that message of ours has put the wind up Talfourd," Wisden remarked as he stood beside his brother officer on the slippery decks of the dilapidated old vessel, which every now and then was swept by the waves that broke over her.

"No sign of the blimp yet!" Henderson said after he had scanned the grey horizon. "Perhaps Talfourd hasn't got our message!"

"Talfourd is having his tea, perhaps. He never hurries."

"But he does when a U boat is about. He'll get a move on the blimp at once."

"Ducane's wireless is a rag-time set. He told me so in Yarmouth three weeks ago. He sails about in the air, but there's something wrong with his amplifier, he says."

"Then why doesn't he draw another from stores? He surely has the Mark Three," asked Henderson.

"No, he's got an old pattern one, with no high-frequency."

"Then it's criminal to let him sail the air with such an obsolete instrument. He may, or may not, get Talfourd. Besides there's a lot of jamming on nine hundred at the moment."

Both men strained their eyes as they clung on to the rail, the waves every now and then washing around their legs.

He Is Never Well—

YET neither is he wholly sick. He is nervous and depressed, catches cold easily. Has frequent headaches, spells of indigestion, a twinge of rheumatism now and then.

"Pyorrhea," says his dentist. "He is but one of thousands of men and women who go to pieces in middle age because of this insidious disease."

Pyorrhea begins with tender and bleeding gums. Then, the gums recede and expose the unenameled tooth-base to decay. Eventually the teeth loosen and fall out, or must be extracted to rid the system of the infecting Pyorrhea germs that breed in little pockets about the teeth. These germs, which are carried in the blood-stream to other parts of the body, are now known frequently to be the cause of rheumatism, anaemia, nervous disorders, and other serious ills.

Don't let Pyorrhea get established in your mouth. See your dentist often for tooth and gum inspection, and start today to use Forhan's For the Gums.

Forhan's For the Gums will prevent Pyorrhea—or check its progress, if used in time and used consistently. Ordinary dentifrices cannot do this. Forhan's keeps the gums firm and healthy—the teeth white and clean.

How to Use Forhan's

Use it twice daily, year in and year out. Wet your brush in cold water, place a half-inch of the refreshing, healing paste on it, then brush your teeth up and down. Use a rolling motion to clean the crevices. Brush the grinding and back surfaces of the teeth. Massage your gums with your Forhan-coated brush—gently at first until the gums harden, then more vigorously. If the gums are very tender, massage with the finger, instead of the brush. If gum-shrinkage has already set in, use Forhan's according to directions and consult a dentist immediately for special treatment.

35c and 60c tubes in Canada and United States. If your druggist cannot supply you, send to us direct and we will mail tube postpaid.

At all druggists.

Forhan's, Limited, Montreal

Forhan's
FOR THE GUMS
Checks Pyorrhea

LA TAUSCA PEARLS

A La Tausca Pearl Necklace for Her Christmas Gift

IT is hard to imagine a gift that is at once so useful and beautiful as a La Tausca Necklace of French Pearls. The warm beauty of these wonderful gems faithfully reproduce the most costly Oriental strands, and are the choice of women everywhere.

In a wide range of prices—At your Jeweler's

Each La Tausca Necklace bears the maker's unqualified guarantee

Goldsmiths' Stock Co. Ltd., Toronto
Canadian Distributors for
KARPELES, Maker of the World's Fine Pearls
Paris Providence New York

"It's Your Lead, Partner!"

"YES, yes, I know, but I was thinking how nice it would be if we had a nice, light, portable, convenient little like this in the house. You could use it for sewing, afternoon tea, and lots of other things—while I need it for my cigars, and to hold the phonograph."

ELITE
FOLDING TABLE

Sold by the best dealers everywhere.

Write for illustrated Catalogue of various styles.

HOARD & CO., LIMITED,
Sole Licensees and Manufacturers,
Dept. H. J., London, Ont.

96-D

The CANDY
Cathartic

As Santa Claus was thinking disappointed thoughts.

The Wind Wheel of the Djinn

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 57.)

them twinkling, the elves and goblins strung long tinsel chains of gold and silver, and roped them here and there from branch to branch.

The Ragged Easter was so busy watching the goblins and the elves, that it forgot to fan the fire at all. So, as the flames died down, the elves and goblins disappeared, and there was no light save the deep glow of the embers, and the twinkling lights upon the tree.

All this time Jack Frost had been outside the door, either sitting on the knob or peeking through the key-hole. He wanted to help Santa Claus, too, but it was too warm and cosy in the room for Jack Frost to dare to enter.

Then he thought, "If I cannot go in myself, I can send some of my helpers."

A call into the winter night was answered by a faint rustling of wings in the crisp air, and then ever so many tiny fairy forms hovered around Jack Frost. Each one, with snowy robe and wing dusted over with a million sparkles, was beautiful enough to be the Fairy Queen herself.

They were the Frost Fairies, and when Jack Frost himself told his plan, they sped quickly through the key-hole into the room. Over to each window-pane they went, and on the glass they fashioned hills and valleys, trees and flowers. They did not stop until each window pane was turned into a picture, and then, as Santa Claus opened the door and came outside, they and the Ragged Easter came out too.

But the Ragged Easter came out last. Just before he left, the wind, in mischief, swayed the branches of the Christmas tree so that the bells that Santa Claus had hung on each tinkled and rang.

There was a scampering of little feet upon the stair—the bells had awakened the children to the Christmas morning.

Then, with a dash the Ragged Easter was outside just as Santa Claus closed the door. Within the house were happy children's voices, without, the high East wind bore Santa Claus far and away, to the tinkling of the sleigh bells, and the laugh of the Ragged Easter.

A Song of P'raps

This poem, by BETH SADLEIR, was the conclusion of the "Land of P'raps," and was unfortunately "crowded out" of the conclusion of that interesting story in November.

P'raps you'd like to linger in the merry month of May;

Be a bird, and whistle such a joyous little tune;

Or a rose in blossom, growing sweeter every day.

P'raps you'd rather linger in the happy time of June.

P'raps you wish the whole year 'round was all one fair July;

To change into a sunbeam a-dancing through the day;

Or be a sea-born whitecap under a summer sky.

P'raps in dreamy August is the place that you would stay.

P'raps you love the Autumn with its leaves of red and gold,

Just to go a-nutting with the squirrel in the wood;

Or would you be watching the first shy flower unfold?

P'raps it's in the Springtime that you'd wander if you could.

P'raps you haven't found it, the long year's journey through,

Found the joy you longed for, the happiness you sought.

Maybe 'round Time's corner it's waiting there for you;

P'raps just what you've wished for is what to-morrow's brought.

Every woman should take as much pride in her kitchen as in her drawing room. But no woman can be proud of a kitchen if it is filled with unsightly cupboards and shelves. When you get your Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet you will be just as anxious to show your friends your kitchen as you are to show them your drawing room.

TRADE MARK

KNECHTEL
ITCHEN
ABINET
REGISTERED

Our Booklet "C" shows all the new appliances of the Knechtel
Kitchen Cabinet which is recommended by dealers in hundreds of cities and towns.

The Knechtel Kitchen Cabinet Co., Limited
Hanover : Canada

And so "A Visit to Toy-Land," was your story, Ivy Walker, and do you know it just made me feel that I

Conducted by
BERTHA E. GREEN

Sincerely,
B. E. GREEN.

IT was Christmas Eve. The snow was falling softly on the housetops and down into the busy streets below, where the very breath of Christmas seemed to fill the air, and

"A Country Scene,"
Sent by Winnie Fisk, R.R. 1, Greenock, Ont.

Sincerely,
B. E. GREEN.

Mrs. Knox's
Corner

I am also giving you a recipe for Christmas candy that I am sure you will find dainty, delicious, and which will add pleasure to your day.

|   |                                 |
|---|---------------------------------|
| 1 envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine      |                                 |
| $\frac{3}{4}$ cup cold water            | $\frac{1}{2}$ cup currants      |
| 1 cup sugar                             | $\frac{1}{2}$ squares chocolate |
| $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoonful vanilla       | or 5 tablespoons cocoa          |
| 1 cup seeded raisins                    | Pinch of salt                   |
| $\frac{1}{2}$ cup dates or figs         | 1 pint of milk                  |
| $\frac{1}{4}$ cup sliced citron or nuts |                                 |

Soak the gelatine in cold water for five minutes. Put milk in double boiler, add melted chocolate or cocoa which has been stirred to a paste in a little water, and when scalding point is reached add sugar, salt and soaked gelatine. Remove from fire and when mixture begins to thicken add vanilla, fruit and nuts. Turn into mold, first dipped in cold water, and chill. Remove to serving dish and garnish with holly. Serve with whipped cream, sweetened and flavored with vanilla.

2 envelopes Knox Sparkling Gelatine
4 cups granulated sugar
1½ cups boiling water 1 cup cold water

Soak the gelatine in the cold water five minutes. Add the boiling water. When dissolved add the sugar and boil slowly for fifteen minutes. Divide into two equal parts. When somewhat cooled add to one part one teaspoonful extract of cinnamon. To the other part add one-half teaspoonful extract of cloves. Pour into shallow tins that have been dipped in cold water. Let stand over night; turn out and cut into squares. Roll in fine granulated or powdered sugar and let stand to crystallize. Vary by using different flavors such as lemon, orange, peppermint, wintergreen, etc., and different colors, adding chopped nuts, dates or figs.

If you would like suggestions for a MARSHMALLOW ROAST and other delicious candy recipes, write for special Christmas suggestions. Our booklets "Dainty Desserts" and "Food Economy" containing recipes for Desserts, Salads, Ice Creams, etc., will also be sent free, if you enclose a two-cent stamp to cover postage and mention your grocer's name.

MRS. CHARLES B. KNOX
KNOX GELATINE

DEPT. G, 180 ST. PAUL ST. W., MONTREAL

*"Wherever a recipe calls for Gelatine
it means
KNOX"*

This package
contains an envelope of pure
Lemon Flavor
for the convenience of the busy housewife

Cut It out of
"Viyella"
 OR
"Clydella"
 (REGD)

Unshrinkable Flannels

and have the satisfaction of knowing that the garment will give unusual service, keep its soft, fleecy appearance and will not shrink despite numberless washings. Sold in the piece and as made-up garments at first-class shops.

Wm. Hollins & Co.
Limited

(of London, England.)
62-A Front St. W.,
TORONTO
45 East 17th St., New York

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF

—Every Deaf Person Knows That
I make myself hear, after being deaf for 25 years, with these Artificial Ear Drums. I wear them day and night. They are perfectly comfortable. No one sees them. Write me and I will tell you a true story, how I got deaf and how I make you hear. Address
Geo. P. Way, Artificial Ear Drum Co. (Inc.)
7 Adelaide St., Detroit, Mich.

Medicated Ear

Pat. Nov. 3. '00

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 64.)

Illustrated

is the Waltham Ladies' Convertible Bracelet Watch—a very popular model which can be worn in many different styles. Price $37.00 upwards. Many other Waltham Models for Ladies and Gentlemen.

WHEN you give a Waltham your gift will be sure of enduring appreciation. It is both beautiful and useful. The recipient will get many years of good service from your gift and will have the satisfaction of owning a watch which everywhere commands respect. Since 1854 the name "Waltham" has signified all that is best in watch mechanism. Visit your jeweler early, while his stock of Waltham Models is complete, so that you can be sure of selecting just the right watch that will be most highly appreciated.

WALTHAM

THE WORLD'S WATCH OVER TIME

WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY, LIMITED, MONTREAL

Makers and Distributors of Waltham Products in Canada
Factories: Montreal, Canada; Waltham, U.S.A.

The Mystery of "C.Q."

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 59.)

"DO you know, Wisden," said Henderson as they stood there, "this is the very worst dog's life in the whole service. Think of those chaps doing comfortable home-duty at the Admiralty, strutting about Whitehall in well-brushed uniforms and lunching at the club or restaurants with lady friends every day. We see the obverse of the medal—eh?"

"True. But the people of London have a lot to thank you for Henderson, if they only knew it," Wisden said. "The papers never tell them that it was you who spotted the wireless of the Zepp they brought down on a certain night just before she reached London. She got through, and had it not been for your quick ears and your expert reading she would have done a terrible lot of damage. Instead, she was discovered and sent down in flames."

"Luck, my dear fellow! I just heard her report to Wilhelmshaven and took up the cue at once. That put the wind up Talfourd—if anything did. But we're bound to be discovered by the enemy sooner or later. We are one of the outposts of the sea, and it's a marvel to me that they haven't suspected us before."

"Bah! They're a dull lot, those sausage-warriors. They are devoid of imagination," Wisden remarked.

"I wonder what's happened to Ducane? It must be horrible to be in the air on an evening like this."

"Yes, but he's used to it. Weather doesn't trouble him, but the crew of the dirigible complain horribly of sickness. I did a month on wireless in one at Stonehaven. Gad! Wasn't I glad when my duty ended! It's a wearisome job looking down to the sea constantly, and going over and over the same spot where you think you can spot a submarine."

"And all that is compensated by the dropping of the depth charge—eh?" laughed Henderson, lowering his glasses in disappointment.

"Yes. When we let one go and it brought up the debris to the surface we always gave a 'hoch' for the Kaiser—a kind of requiem for the German crew!" and he laughed.

Twilight was quickly gathering and there were many indications of a wild night, one of those tearing, howling nights which are experienced so frequently in the North Sea in December.

The news of the presence of an enemy submarine had spread to the crew and several men were grouped near, their eyes also strained into the gathering gloom. No uniform was worn. The crew, though all naval men, wore old civilian suits and presented quite a piratical appearance. Yet every man among them was a tried hero who had volunteered to serve his King and Country in that hazardous undertaking. Of leave there was little. Once each fortnight a pinnacle came out from Lowestoft with fresh provisions and took men on leave—a welcome visitor he it said. Except for the wireless news from Poldhu, Paris, or Cleethorpes the little staff were cut off entirely from the world.

In the driving rain the men watched and waited. The British sailor is always patient and the weather never worries him. On the "Valerian" nobody worried about anything else except leave.

Suddenly Henderson, peering through his powerful glasses to the north-east, discerned through the falling light a small black speck many miles away.

"Hurrah!" he cried. "Here comes Ducane! He's coming up against the wind—by Jove! he's coming slowly. I bet he's examining every inch. Slip down, Wisden, and ask Forbes if he is still hearing the enemy boat," he added.

Wisden obeyed this order promptly, and returning, reported that Forbes had heard nothing more. He was still listening upon the new submarine signalling device, but had heard no suspicious sound whatever.

"H'm. Perhaps it's a wash-out, after all," growled Henderson. "But look! Here comes Ducane!" And they beheld the dirigible battling with the storm and approaching nearer.

Every man on deck strained his eyes to see the fight which the small airship was making against the storm. She had come down to about a thousand feet above the sea and was apparently uncertain as to her bearings.

Indeed of Forbes, seated in silence in the wireless cabin, she inquired by wireless her true bearings. Forbes consulted the direction-finder and gave them. Then the dirigible rose again and made a complete circle while she plotted for the exact position of the enemy boat lying submerged and unconscious of discovery.

Twice she passed majestically over the same spot. The officers and crew of the hulk "Valerian" watched her breathlessly.

At last, so suddenly as to startle them, a loud dull explosion rent the air, there was an angry, red flash, and a great column of water rose from the surface of the raging sea.

"That's got her!" cried Henderson in satisfaction. "By Jove! Did you see the pieces flying in the air? Well done, Ducane! That's one the less! Hoch the Kaiser!"

"Hoch the Kaiser," echoed Wisden, and they strained their eyes into the grey mist.

The dirigible slowly showed herself and each moment came forth clearer as she headed for the mystery ship at about a thousand feet above the surface. Suddenly out of the grey gloom a bright light showed from the boat-like attachment beneath the balloon. It showed for a second and then disappeared.

Then it began winking in the dusk, and Henderson reading it aloud said:

"O.K. Thanks 'Valerian.' Look out for another as soon as you can. But take care of yourselves. Do you hear the mystery signal on one thousand metres wave-length?"

"Ah! So Ducane has heard it, too!" remarked Wisden. "I wonder what it really is?"

"I wonder," echoed Henderson, as they watched the dirigible rapidly disappearing towards her lair close to Yarmouth. Her work was done for the day. Ducane would have a comfortable dinner at his hotel, the Old Star, while they, the sea-scouts, must be on the alert all night for other signs of U boats approaching the English coast.

Below, in that wireless cabin the instruments were so delicate that the movements of submarines, enemy and our own, could be distinctly heard upon those super-sensitive telephones.

THE dirigible laden with its deadly depth-charges, which was ever at the beck and call of Henderson and his staff, had disappeared. The noise of her propellers could no longer be heard, therefore the chief wireless officer and his assistant returned to where Forbes was still seated with the telephones clamped to his ears.

"That same strange signal has just come through," remarked Forbes to Henderson as he entered the wireless cabin. "It will be repeated."

Quickly Henderson took the spare phones, and placing them over his ears, waited—

Half-a-minute later he started, for through his head ran a loud burst which nearly deafened him.

"That's certainly not an atmospheric," he declared, removing the phones. "Taylor at the Admiralty has peep-pooled the affair and says that this mysterious C.Q. signal is merely due to an electric storm."

"That's impossible," declared Forbes. "Why is the call 'C.Q.' asking everyone to listen always sent as a preliminary, exactly ten seconds before that sudden buzz?"

"Of course it's a message to somebody—an enemy message, no doubt. If we could only read it we might discover something of great interest."

"But we can't read it," said Wisden.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 66.)

The New Edison Phonograph
Violins
Guitars Ukuleles
Mandolins
Brass & Reed Instruments
Phonograph Records & Player Piano Rolls

The R.S. WILLIAMS
& SONS COMPANY LIMITED

145 Yonge Street Toronto.
"Canada's Home of Music"

Established 1849.

INSIST ON BEING SHOWN THE GENUINE

CREX

THE IDEAL FLOOR COVERING IN TOWN AND COUNTRY ALL YEAR ROUND

WITH NAME WOVEN IN SIDE BINDING

Give What You Have Set Your Heart on Giving

You Will Find Your Christmas
Gifts in the Mappin & Webb Catalogue.

GIFTS

- F609. Diamond Lavalliere
Platinum Setting..$40.00
- F621. Fine Oriental Pearl
Earrings.....$125.00
- F1215. Peridot and Pearl
Lavalliere .....$9.50
- F1417. Pearl Sunburst
.....$10.00
- F1512. Gold Baby Handi-pins.....$1.75
- F1528. Gold Maple Leaf
Safety Pin.....$2.00
- F2206. Gold Waldermar
Watch Chain.....$12.50
- F2418. Enamel and Gold
K. of C. Button....$2.00
- F2438. Gold filled Masonic Locket & Fob $5.50
- F3402. Ladies' Fine 15
Jewel rectangular movement Wrist Watch $35.00
- F6008. Sterling Silver Tea and Coffee Set with tray
.....$688.00
- F6402. Sterling Silver 5½ inch Bon Bon Dish $26.75
- F7303. Sterling Silver
Vanity Case.....$5.00
- F7502. Sterling Silver
Vanity and Card Case
.....$22.25
- F3507. Ladies' Tonneau shape Wrist Watch $35.00
- F3902. Mahogany Bedroom Lamp.....$8.50

LET this be the Christmas of complete satisfaction. Give exactly what you want to give. Pay exactly what you want to pay. Choose each gift with the recipient clearly in mind, and let the gift fit both the need and the personality. Let it be expressive of your judgment and your taste, as well as of your esteem and friendship.

All this you can do with the help of the Mappin & Webb Shopping Service, and the Mappin & Webb Christmas Book. Everything that you could wish for in Diamonds, Pearls and other gems—in Jewellery of unique and exquisite design—in Watches and Clocks—in Silverware for the table, for the dresser, for personal use and adornment—in China and Cut Glass—in Leather Goods and Art Objects—are ready for your choosing in our Montreal store.

Make up your Christmas lists of gifts—set down the amount you wish to pay for each—and mail the list and the required amount to us. We will save you all the trouble of shopping around, and send you each article ready for Christmas presentation and in the Mappin & Webb box to show

"It Came from Mappin & Webb's"

*Have you the Mappin & Webb Christmas Book, with over two thousand suggestions for Gifts?
Mailed on request, post paid. Write for a copy.*

Mappin & Webb

(CANADA) LIMITED

353 St. Catherine Street West, Montreal

LONDON    PARIS    ROME    LAUSANNE
SAO PAULO    RIO DE JANEIRO
BUENOS AIRES    JOHANNESBURG

Speaking of Christmas

She'll bless the day, and the donor, if you make your Christmas gift a

CADILLAC ELECTRIC VACUUM CLEANER

If she does her own work, what she wants most is something to lighten the labor. That's what the Cadillac does. It saves time and energy, besides keeping the home spotless and preserving valuable rugs, carpets, etc. You can't go wrong if you give her a Cadillac. Write to

CLEMENTS MANUFACTURING CO., LIMITED
78 DUCHESS STREET, TORONTO

Advice to Mothers

BABY should be nursed if possible. If not, provide the best substitute, cow's milk, sweetened, and modified with barley water made from

Robinson's "Patent" Barley

Do not endanger the child's health by experiments with untried preparations.

ROBINSON'S "PATENT" BARLEY has been proven by the test of time.

The mother who nurses her baby, will find Robinson's "Patent" Groats an excellent milk producing food.

Write for our valuable booklet, "Advice to Mothers"—sent free on request.

Toronto - MAGOR, SON & CO., Limited - Montreal
Canadian Agents

Eat

Produced in a factory where scrupulous cleanliness and purity prevails.

M'CORMICK'S

Jersey Cream SODA

BISCUITS

Hair Seems Twice as Abundant

After a "Danderine" massage, your hair takes on new life, lustre and wondrous beauty, appearing twice as heavy and plentiful. Each hair seems to fluff and thicken at once.

Danderine is "Beauty-Tonic"

Don't let your hair stay colorless, plain, scraggly, neglected. You, too, want lots of long, strong hair, radiant with life, and glistening with beauty.

A 35-cent bottle of delightful "Danderine" freshens your scalp, checks dandruff and falling hair. This stimulating "beauty-tonic" gives to thin, dull, fading hair that youthful brightness and abundant thickness—All Drug Counters!

LUX

Helps Business Girls

A few minutes easy simple work in your room and your dainty blouse—your silken underwear and stockings—can be Lux-bathed and made like new.

Lux is so easy and pleasant to use.

Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto

Jaeger

Undergarments

Jaeger Undergarments are made in all weights for all seasons. They are carefully woven from pure undyed wool of the finest, smoothest and strongest texture. Made in all sizes for men, women and children.

A fully illustrated catalogue free on application.

For Sale at Jaeger Stores and Agencies throughout Canada.

DR. JAEGER Sanitary Woolen CO. LIMITED
Toronto Montreal Winnipeg
British "founded 1883".

GENUINE DIAMONDS
CASH OR CREDIT.
TERMS: $1-$2-$3 Weekly
We trust any honest person
Write for catalogue to-day
JACOBS BROS.
Diamond Importers
15 Toronto Arcade
TORONTO.

The Journal Juniors' Club

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 61.)

children's voices rang out merrily, full of hope and cheer as children's voices always are.

In one corner of busy London stood a dismal looking row of tenement houses, crowded so closely together that you would wonder that humans could possibly exist there. In the top story of one of these buildings, with face pressed hard against the window pane stood little Pauline Wells, gazing at the busy scene below. Butchers were hanging turkeys in their windows, surrounded by holly and evergreen. Boys and girls were buying Christmas trees while the glad pealing of bells seemed to say: "Be glad, for to-day a child is born unto the world!"

The gay scene, however, did not rouse the little girl. The big tears dropped unheeded on the window sill. Pauline was not happy. Her mother was a poor washerwoman and she worked very hard to keep up the fight with existence. Rent was high, and coal was dear, so the poor mother, as she bent over the heavy washings, bade her little daughter not to expect a visit from Santa Claus this year, "for rent is so high and coal has gone up in price."

So Pauline stood before the window wondering vaguely, why Santa Claus was connected with rent and coal bills. Somehow, she had "set her heart" on a little fluffy lamb which she had seen in the splendid shop window. "Oh, how I wish that Santa would come and bring me that little white lamb," she sighed. "Maybe he will if I write him such a nice letter, although mother said I was foolish to expect him to climb up into this rickety old tenement." In the dimness of the ill-lighted room, the little girl wrote:

Dear Santa:—

I am the little girl who lives in the big tenement in the back alley. I wish ever so much that you would come and bring me a little fluffy lamb like was in Lytle's window.

Sincerely,

PAULINE WELLS.

Pauline ate her scanty supper and putting the letter into the pocket of her old plaid shawl, she threw it over her head, and ran out into the frosty air. "I will drop the letter into the box," she thought. As she ran through the dark alleys, she stopped to glance in the brilliantly lighted windows of the homes of the rich. The tables gleamed with glass and silver, and blazed with candles. The splendid Christmas trees glittered with gilded walnuts, and were wreathed with snowy chains of pop-corn. The little girl turned away from the bright fairy spectacle, when the bright lights and pealing bells of a nearby church invited her. "I will go in and see the Crib," she said. As Pauline hurried up the high stone steps, the treasured letter to Santa Claus fell unheeded to the ground.

Christmas Morning! The glad pealing of church bells rang throughout the city. When Pauline awoke there greeted her on a chair by her bed the longed for lamb, and plenty of warm clothes and money, too. So Santa had come.

Surely the kind heart that found the little girl's petition, was rewarded with the great joy that comes from giving, and knew that "Unto these ye do it, likewise unto Him."

CLOTHES DINNER.

Riska, Muskoka,

Age 14.

Ontario.

(Prize)

MY IDEA OF A CHRISTMAS TREE.

It was snowing hard in the afternoon, but it didn't prevent the boys getting a lovely cedar tree, and putting it up in the window. Tom had piled wood for one of the neighbors and got fifty cents, which he spent in getting lovely candles of all colors, red and pink and blue and green.

Harry was older and had a steady job of carrying parcels for the butcher when he was out of school, so his pile of money looked like a fortune to the rest of the family. He bought yards and yards of glittering tinsel and Christmas ornaments.

Mother always gave the girls ten cents a week for helping her, and they had been saving it up for weeks and weeks. They didn't think they could spend much on decorations because they had so many presents they wanted to buy, so they bought colored tissue-paper and cut it into fancy shapes for scarfs and wreaths, and twined it among the branches. By the time it was dark they had the things pretty well arranged.

Mother made bags of red netting and filled them with pop-corn and candy. After supper the candles were lit; it was a beautiful sight. We all played around till time to go to bed.

It was lots of fun for us, sneaking out with our presents so nobody would catch us. Such dodging and giggling in dark corners when we were pretty nearly caught. We all liked to put our presents on after every one was in bed.

On Christmas morning, when breakfast was over, Daddy was given the job of giving out the presents. There was a great deal of excitement.

Such funny things that the children had bought for each other. Tom bought Amy a "Boy Scout" jack-knife; Harry was presented with a little bottle of perfume; Grace bought Tom a book of Henty's, but was surprised when opening her parcel, that Tom had bought her the very same book. There were all kinds of funny things bought for father and mother, but the funniest thing came from little Ann (who was just six). She bought a little doll in a box, with a nursing bottle and nipple for mother, and for father, she bought two all-day suckers, which stuck to the paper so

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 65.)

CONTEST FOR DECEMBER

- Boys and girls 12 to 16 years. Not more than six hundred words—"A Valentine Story."
- Boys and girls 8 to 12 years. Not more than five hundred words—"My First Pair of Skates."
- Camera Contest; subject, "A Turn or Corner of a Road or Street."

RULES

Name, age and address must be written on each entry.

Write on one side of paper only. Members under 12 years, please write on ruled paper.

Stamped, addressed envelope must be enclosed for return of photographs.

Closing date, the 24th of December.

Those who have taken three prizes in the various contests will not be eligible for further competition.

Address all entries to Journal Juniors' Club, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto, Canada.

The Journal Juniors' Club

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 64.)

that we strongly suspected that they had been sucked a few times before wrapping up, and this is our idea of a Christmas tree at our house.

PHYLLIS GRANT,
Princeton, Ont.

Age 9.

A WORD TO THE WISE. By Bertha E. Green.

"Alone and warming his five wits,
The white-owl in the belfry sits."
—Tennyson.

BUT to-night the white owl was not in the belfry; he was at a meeting. There had never been a meeting like this before, and it is not likely there will ever be another one.

At the edge of a dark wood, sometime between sunset and midnight, there were ten owls, each one different from the others, except in this—all were very solemn and very wise.

A great, dead tree with bare limbs was their meeting-place, and the moonlight showed the ten wise ones perched in a row on the highest long limb. They had met to see if they could not agree on some one place, where all the different kinds of owls might live together. So, beginning with the smallest owl, who sat out near the tip of the branch, they talked it over.

"There is only one place to live," said the little brown Saw-Whet owl, "that is, where the woods are thickest, and there are plenty of pine trees."

And the little brown owl, with the white breast and the rings of white feathers around his yellow eyes, looked as solemn as you could possibly imagine.

"Nonsense," said the next owl, "we should live where there are barns and church towers that men make especially for us to spend our winter in."

This owl was two inches taller than the first speaker, a plump black-streaked, grey screech owl with two upstanding cat-ears. And he was two inches wiser than the Saw-Whet owl, and the others paid more attention to him.

A round-headed owl with a long, rounded tail, and mottled grey, white and black feathers with black bars, perched next to the Screech owl.

"We must have trees," he said fiercely, "but we must have plenty of room near by to go hunting over. The most important thing is to have good hunting grounds. I know, because I am the Hawk owl."

And the Hawk owl was five inches taller, and five inches wiser, than the Screech owl, and everybody listened to him.

The next speaker talked through his nose quite softly.

"Trees, by all means; evergreen trees make the only homes worth while. Yes, silence and evergreen trees."

This was a dappled brown owl, with a round face, and strange, barred markings on its breast. It was no taller than the Hawk owl, but its two long ear-tufts made it seem taller, and the other owls listened to it.

The next owl spoke and said, "It doesn't matter what kind of trees we have, or how many of them there are, so long as we are near fields where there are plenty of fieldmice." He was a speckled, brown, short-eared owl with a barred tail. He was only half an inch taller than the long-eared owl, but he got half an inch more attention paid to him by the other owls.

"What is the use of having so many trees? A hollow one for each owl would be enough, but we must have lots and lots of barns—and don't you forget it!"

This was a long-faced owl in a beautiful soft suit of light brown and white. He straightened up on his long legs, and though he had no ear-tufts, he was two-and-one-half inches taller than the short-eared owl, and of course he got the most attention of anybody so far.

"Hoots, toots! What's this I hear—no trees? Lots of trees, I say. Trees there must be to hide in, comfortable, shadowy places. Lots of trees, I say."

A big round head, a fluffy body, grey with brown bars, and two soft brown eyes, as well as the noisy voice, all proclaimed him to be the Barred owl. He was the tallest by two inches of all those who had spoken, and all the other owls listened two inches harder than they had before.

A deep voice now boomed through the night.

"I want trees with squirrels in them. I want trees with woodchucks and skunks under them, and I want barnyards with chickens in them. That's what I want."

It was the Great Horned owl who had spoken, dark brown with a white band under his chin. His two great ear-tufts stood straight up, and of all the owls who had spoken, he was the tallest by three inches. So all the other owls let his words three inches deeper into their minds than all the other speeches.

"Trees are no use except to perch on, and watch the marshes for ducks and hares. We must have rivers full of fish, too. There must be fish and ducks whether there are trees or not."

He was a great white owl spotted with black, and he had white feathers on his toes. He was two inches taller than even the Great Horned owl, was the Snowy owl, and his speech carried two inches more weight than all the sayings that had gone before.

But there was still another owl to speak. He was an enormous owl, grey and fluffy. His tail was very long, and his yellow eyes gazed at the other owls unwinkingly. He spoke slowly and solemnly.

"Each one of you wants just the sort of place you have at home. It is no use. There isn't any one spot that would satisfy you all, so each must pick out the place where he can find his dinners easiest, and where he can hide from men with guns."

The Great Grey owl wagged his head solemnly, and because he was taller by two inches than even the Snowy owl, being twenty-seven inches high, all the other owls wagged their heads solemnly, and each said to himself:

"A word to the wise is sufficient. Now for home."

And each owl, the little Saw-Whet first, and the Great Grey owl last, sailed through the moonlight on silent wings.

Dye it Right

Don't Risk Material in Poor Dye

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can diamond-dye a new, rich, fadeless color into worn, shabby dresses, blouses, stockings, sweaters, draperies, coverings, everything, whether wool, silk, linen, cotton or mixed goods.

Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect results are guaranteed even if you have never dyed before. Druggist has "Diamond Dyes" Color Card.

Diamond Dyes

16 Rich, Fadeless Colors.

Make Your Skin Like Velvet

DON'T you wish your face was as smooth and fair as your body? It would be if protected from wind and dust. If you want a clear smooth skin.

Try this simple formula—"A little CRÈME ELCAYA rubbed gently into the skin; then if you need color, a very little rouge spread carefully over the cheeks before the cream is quite dry; and after that the film of Elcaya face powder over all."

CRÈME ELCAYA

is a delightful, non-greasy, disappearing toilet cream that makes the skin like velvet.

In jars at 35c and 75c

MacLean, Benn & Nelson, Limited
Montreal

The favorite for 20 years.
Sold all over the world.
Made in CANADA by
THE ELCAYA Co. of CANADA, Limited
James C. Crane, Pres't.
Montreal, Canada

Give Colicky Babies

Mrs. Winslow's Syrup and watch the smiles that follow. This has been the happy experience of many mothers after being sorely tried over baby's fretfulness, sleepless nights and other disorders due to stomach and bowel troubles.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SYRUP

The Infants' and Children's Regulator

is purely a vegetable preparation that causes stomach to digest food and bowels to move as they should, thereby overcoming constipation, diarrhoea, flatulency, wind colic and similar troubles. During teething time it is especially good.

Contains no opiates, narcotics, alcohol or other harmful drugs. Absolutely harmless. Formula on every label. Agreeable and useful as a household remedy.

At All Druggists

ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG CO., 215-217 Fulton St.
NEW YORK

General Selling Agents

Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Inc.
New York Toronto, Canada

The Mystery of "C.Q."

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 62.)

hanging up his streaming oilskin and sou'-wester. "That's the point. I've heard it lots of times lately when I've been on night duty. I kept a record, but it goes at odd times and on different wave-lengths. Once it was on eight thousand, and once on fifteen hundred."

That mysterious C.Q. signal was one of the puzzles of the war-watchers at that critical year-end. Things were going very badly for the Allies and though Britain, by her pluck and perseverance, had taken the U-boat menace by the throat and was sinking the enemy lurkers wholesale, it was not considered politic by the Hush Department to tell the public anything. Hence there had arisen that army of pessimists who did much terrible harm to the great British endeavor.

The destroying of the U boat in section four-two-six of the North Sea area would never be recorded publicly. Henderson and his gallant assistants and crew who braved the elements and risked their lives on the old hulk would never obtain any reward or recognition. They knew that, and all thanks to them they acted only as patriotic Englishmen can act. They were true "sports." To them, the destruction of an enemy submarine was a thing to be proud of. The beery boasters of Berlin had attacked us, and we were now on our self-defence.

That evening as Henderson sat with Wisden eating his frugal meal in the long dilapidated mess-room of the old hulk—once gay when the old "Valerian" had been the flagship on the China station years ago and a pride of the Navy, the latter remarked:

"I wonder if any one will ever be able to fathom that mystery signal to C.Q.?"

"Everybody has tried and failed. The message is an insult to us," Henderson declared. "C.Q. is the signal for a general call and yet nobody can read it!"

"An enemy trick, of course."

"I certainly think so," was Henderson's reply. "But what does it mean?"

"Perhaps the duration of the buzz is a code. The chap sits on his key evidently!"

"No doubt. At all the interception stations they are trying to elucidate the mystery. But up to the present they've been unsuccessful. The last time I was on leave I saw Greening at the Admiralty and he was at his wits' end. By watching it has been found that invariably twenty-four hours after that strange signal comes through the air some disaster happens to us, either on land or sea."

"We ought to keep a strict watch and do our best to discover what it all means," Wisden remarked, "I'm sorry you're going to be here over Christmas, old chap. Shall I send you a bit of mistletoe?"

"Mistletoe! On this hulk! That's enough, Fred. I believed I was going up to town to spend the festive season with Elsie, but no luck this time. I'll eat my plum pudding here in this dull old cabin—if we aren't drowned before."

Wisden knew Elsie Munro, a pretty dark-haired girl, who was Jack's fiancée. They had had supper once at the Savoy when both had been on leave together. Wisden was now the lucky one and was going ashore for the "season of grab and guzzle."

They finished their meal with a glass of port and drank "the King" in true naval style, after which Forbes was relieved of those everlasting head-phones, and his chief placed them upon himself. To wear telephones over one's ears for four hours at a stretch is a terrible strain, especially in war time when every tick heard may mean an important enemy signal.

FORBES and Wisden were in the mess while Henderson was alone, listening to the continuous musical note of the Marconi Station at Clifden, in Ireland, transmitting commercial messages to Glace Bay across the Atlantic, when suddenly he again heard the call "C.Q." Then there was a slight pause, followed by a loud buzzing which lasted about six seconds.

It was the mysterious call repeated—the call which was puzzling the Admiralty.

Almost instantly Niton, in the Isle of Wight, began to send out messages to shipping in the channel, while

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 67.)

ROYAL VINOLIA VEGETABLE HAIR WASH

To keep your hair soft, shimmering with health and growing normally you should shampoo it regularly with Royal Vinolia Vegetable Hair Wash. Do not neglect your hair—give it the simple care it needs and make it your womanly crown of Beauty.

Royal Vinolia Vegetable Hair Wash gives a genuinely beneficial and stimulating shampoo. It thoroughly cleanses the hair and scalp without in any way washing out the natural oils which give the hair life and Beauty.

At all first class Druggists in handsome Dipoli Glass
Jars—50c

VINOLIA COMPANY LIMITED
Soap Makers to H. M. the King
London TORONTO Paris

Use the Royal Vinolia Toilet Preparations—"All alike Perfect"

V6

Barber - Ellis FRENCH ORGANDIE

Is used by all who appreciate high class stationery

In note paper
and tablets with envelopes to match

FRENCH ORGANDIE
"THE STATIONERY OF THE REFINED"
ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR IT

The Mystery of "C.Q."

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 66.)

faintly he heard Poldhu, in Cornwall, making his usual inquiry of Madrid, whether the latter station had anything to transmit.

But he was obsessed by that mysterious C.Q. signal which puzzled everyone in the wireless confidential department because nobody could read it.

He was cursing his luck because Christmas leave was not due to him when of a sudden an idea flashed through his mind. He took up a pencil and scribbled a curious sum of figures upon the signal pad before him.

Then he sat back for a moment closing his eyes, the high-resistance telephones still upon his head. He drew a long breath, and then excitedly called a man who was a signal-boatswain, but who was now a supernumerary in the hush-ship.

"Ask Lieutenant Wisden to come along," he said. "Tell him I want to be relieved—at once."

A few moments later Wisden came in and taking the telephones from Henderson's head placed them upon his own. The "listening in" upon the "Valerian" was never ceasing for a single second. Watch was kept continuously.

Henderson ascended to the wind-swept deck. Across the ship there ever and anon came a swirl of spray and sometimes a sweeping wave. But above he breathed freely, and standing in shelter he concentrated his mind upon the great war problem.

As to his decision he said nothing. Next day, however, he wrote a letter to the Admiralty asking for an interview with a certain department, and as he had no communication with land he sent out a copy by wireless just after midnight, when it was his turn of duty while his assistant slept.

Into his head-phones came back the signal that his message had been received at Whitehall. Then he waited all through the next grey, stormy day.

At four o'clock Wisden, being on duty, took down an official message in code to the effect that Lieutenant Henderson had been granted immediate leave, and that Lieutenant Percival, from Hull, had been placed temporarily in charge of the wireless of the "Valerian."

When Henderson stood at Wisden's side five minutes later, the latter said: "By Jove! You are going ashore with me—eh? We shall spend Christmas on land after all. The tender comes off for us to-morrow at noon and is bringing Percival over from Hull. Ever met him?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"I don't envy him his Christmas on board this old hulk," laughed Wisden. "We shall both be ashore, so that's good, eh?"

Twenty-four hours later Jack Henderson, now in smart naval uniform, sat in a room in the Admiralty and begged the elderly man, an Admiral, who was seated at a table, to allow him to conduct certain wireless experiments.

The old officer who had spent thirty years in the Navy, but who regarded wireless as a new-fangled invention of the Devil, heard the young fellow through, and admiring his pluck, at last gave him carte blanche to conduct experiments in order to elucidate the strange message to C.Q. which, by the way, was on the continuous wave system in a high-pitched musical note, very pleasant to the ear.

Well, to cut a long story short, on the night of Christmas Eve, 1917, Lieut. Henderson, sitting in a hut at a certain East Coast aerodrome of the Naval Air Service around which the wind howled dismally and surrounded by a most complicated-looking set of instruments which he had devised and adapted, waited until midnight for the curious C.Q. message.

With him were two other wireless experts.

At last it came. "C.Q." was called on that high-pitched note in the telephones, and then a few seconds later came that sharp mysterious buzz.

But on one side of the table whereon stood the apparatus a little motor was at work and the buzz was automatically turned into the delicate recording instrument it was operating.

"Excellent!" cried Henderson, a few moments later. "We've got it at last—photographed it!"

Then from the instrument he took out a tiny spool of photographic film which he transferred to a small light-proof box. On Christmas morning by the first train he carried the box up to London, where at the Admiralty experimental wireless laboratory in Soho, it was developed.

Afterwards an enlargement of it was made and by an ingenious process the series of microscopic dots and dashes of which the mysterious burr consisted, were transferred to a wax phonographic cylinder.

On Christmas afternoon, Henderson's ingenious device was tested, and as he stood by the phonograph he heard a wireless message which, by being run slowly, became perfectly audible and decipherable as a most important enemy message from the German naval command, giving actual details of a desperate attack upon London by six Zeppelins arranged on the night of January 1st.

That Christmas night, Jack Henderson, having triumphantly learnt the secret of the mysterious C.Q. messages—which, by the way, was destined to be of the utmost importance to us, and greatly assisted in the defence of Britain—spent with his fiancée, Elsie Munro, at her mother's house, out at Purley. And on New Year's night, being still ashore, he had the satisfaction of seeing another Zeppelin brought down in flames in the north of London, as a result of his discovery.

For a whole year afterwards the Germans used to send out that rapid "C.Q." signal, fondly believing that nobody could read it. But by Henderson's device the messages were ever afterwards photographed and read easily on the phonograph.

Indeed from that Christmas Day until the Armistice the authorities at the British Admiralty were, thanks to Henderson's zeal, in full possession of the intended movements of hostile air-craft and, being forewarned, were always forearmed.

"Unlit Decembers"

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 58.)

feel somehow as if I were having a birthday too."

"Let's both have one," said Alice Grayson, "let us join forces and go on together a little way. This place is so big, it means that people should come together, so that they can look it square in the face and not be afraid. Suppose that you two move into this huge house for a while, and help us. Together you and I can plan many things to work out in the spring, and you will go back to your own farm with new vim. The prairie is no place for separate aims. It has wide arms, and sometimes it seems to me to be calling aloud to a multitude of associates. It needs a thousand thousand friendly hearth fires to light it up."

"This shall be a birthday," echoed Selina.

Expectation again flooded her, she heard the eternal call of a wonderful, wide, unpeopled world, but this time, as again she listened, in her thoughts she also lit pink candles one by one.

For Ladies

Said Mrs. C—— to Mrs. T——
One bleak and cold and wintry day,
"You know, my dear, this time of year
Is hard on folks.
If only we could feel assured
Of health and comfort, 't would be fine,
But it seems we can't, in such a clime."

"Well, do you know", smiled Mrs. T——
"I used to think this time of year,
Meant colds and sickness always near,
But we heard of an easy way,
To be healthy and comfy every day.
You know Mrs. Wise, across the street,
(Just the picture of health and always neat)
Well, she was told by a doctor friend
She'd never regret the money she'd spend
On good wool 'Undies,' the 'Ceetee' kind,
Made by Turnbull's of Galt, I think she said.
An advertisement somewhere then she read—
Telling folks how that particular kind
Was fashioned by experts—and that you'd find
The 'Undies' they made were the better kind—
Fashioned of wool that was not one bit 'tickly'
(Others, you know, tickle and seem sort of prickly)
That all "CEETEE" garments are so downy and soft,
We'd just love to wear them—in fact, very oft
Mothers buy them for babies, all fears to allay
Should they go for an airing on a stormy, chill day—
Why! the rain would'nt matter, neither wind, snow or frost—
"CEETEE" garments, in truth, are worth twice their first cost.
They're the finest of high-grade underwear,
And the thriftiest, best-dressed women who care,
Know that it pays to buy none but the best;
Don't you think we'd do well to give them a test?"

* * * * *

"CEETEE" for ladies is made with low cut neck and no sleeves—also with elbow sleeves and in higher neck and long sleeves.

"CEETEE" is knitted on very fine needles—this makes it very warm, soft and light.

Any doctor will advise you to wear wool next the skin: it is a non-conductor, thus retains the warmth of the body, keeps out the cold—and safeguards your health.

Why not try it this winter?

THIS IS THE NAME

"CEETEE"

THE PURE WOOL UNDERCLOTHING THAT WILL NOT SHRINK

"The Woollen Underwear without the itch"

THIS IS THE TRADE MARK

GUARANTEED UNSHRINKABLE
PURE WOOL

Look for the Sheep on every garment.

Manufactured only by Turnbull's of Galt Worn by the best people
ONTARIO Sold by the best dealers

INDIGESTION

Millions of men and women now eat favorite foods without fear. If your meals don't agree, eat one or two tablets like candy. Help is prompt. Impaired digestion is usually corrected by neutralizing excessive acidity with

PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN

AIDS DIGESTION

Large 60c Case—Drugstores

The Hoover lifts the rug from the floor, like this—flutters it upon a cushion of air, gently "beats" out its embedded grit, and so prolongs its life

Give her a Hoover and you give her a lifetime of pride in an immaculate home. You give her an electric carpet-beater that flutters out all injurious embedded grit; an electric carpet-sweeper that brightens colors, straightens nap and collects all stubborn, clinging litter; and an electric suction cleaner that removes surface dirt. Only The Hoover combines these three essential devices in one. And it is the largest-selling electric cleaner in the world.

The HOOVER

ELECTRIC SUCTION SWEEPER

It Beats — as it Sweeps — as it Cleans

Write for booklet, "How to Judge an Electric Cleaner," and name of nearest dealer

THE HOOVER SUCTION SWEEPER COMPANY OF CANADA, Limited
The oldest makers of electric cleaners
HAMILTON, ONTARIO

Made in Canada—by Canadians—for Canadians

All Outdoors Invites Your Christmas

KODAK

If it isn't an Eastman, it isn't a Kodak

CANADIAN KODAK CO., LIMITED, TORONTO, CANADA

COLGATE'S

For Christmas
Useful Gifts, not Gimcracks

SHOPPING LIST

For a Man

Colgate's "Handy Grip"
Shaving Stick
Ribbon Dental Cream
Lilac Imperial Toilet Water

For a Woman

Florient Talc Florient Perfume
Florient Face Powder

For a Boy

Ribbon Dental Cream
Colgate's Mechanics' Soap Paste

For a Girl

Cashmere Bouquet Perfume
Cashmere Bouquet Soap
Charms Cold Cream
Mirage (Vanishing) Cream

For Baby

Coleo Soap Baby Talc

For the little Gifts—give Colgate's

THE problem of the little gifts at Christmas time and even some of the greater ones—can be satisfactorily decided among the many Colgate articles.

Colgate Gifts are appropriate for young or old, for man or woman, for boy or girl—not forgetting the baby. They have daintiness and acknowledged superiority. Also they show that you have taken thought for the receiver's comfort and have given something that can be used.

Make this a Colgate Christmas. You would be glad to receive Colgate Comforts yourself—and so will your friends. At your favorite store ask to see the "Colgate Assortment of Gifts."

To tuck in the Christmas stockings—the big red tubes of Colgate's Ribbon Dental Cream. The Colgate Mother Goose Books will slip in well, too. They come in a set of 12, with colored covers by Jessie Wilcox Smith, the famous artist of child life. Send 20c for the set, addressing

COLGATE & CO. - 137 McGill Street, Montreal
W. G. M. Shepherd, Montreal, Sole Agent for Canada

CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL

VOL. 17 NO. 9. JANUARY 1921

TORONTO

JANUARY 1921

PRICE 20 CENTS

"Best by Every Test"

THE constant effort of manufacturers to improve their products and reach the highest point of perfection entitles them to your consideration, and while, for selfish motives there may be forces working to belittle such commendable efforts, the ultimate results are sooner or later bound to be recognized and appreciated by the thoughtful and intelligent individual. The success of any of the well-known articles that have come to be looked upon as the standard articles of their kind, is invariably followed by the attempt of envious imitators to benefit by another's success, basing their claims for recognition on the unsubstantial statement of "just as good." Such claim is of itself a recognition of superiority of the article imitated.

Gillett's Goods have reached the point of perfection that places them in a class by themselves, and while often imitated, are never equalled.

All dealers are authorized to guarantee Gillett's Goods as being the best and purest that it is possible to produce, and to be just as represented.

E. W. GILLETT COMPANY LIMITED

MONTREAL

TORONTO, CANADA

WINNIPEG

Canadian Home Journal

A Monthly Magazine of Interest to all Progressive Canadians

NEW YORK
505 FIFTH AVE.
CHICAGO
608 OTIS BUILDING

OFFICE of PUBLICATION
RICHMOND and SHEPPARD STREETS
TORONTO, CANADA

JANUARY, 1921

Copyright, January, 1921, in Canada.

Volume Seventeen

Number Nine

Contributors and Readers

By THE EDITOR

THERE is a tradition to the effect that no editor is willing to believe in the untried writer, that it is passing difficult for the newcomer to make his way with stories, poems or special articles. The new poet is supposed to have an especially hard time, and the newspaper jokes at his expense are perennials. Have you ever considered that most professions are advertised, with "vacancies" attractively set forth. There is a long list of "teachers wanted," there are frequent demands for nurses, there are many and urgent advertisements for saleswomen; but for journalists there are no demands. The training for journalism is undefined—and yet there is no expression which arouses a more prompt protest from an editor than: "He drifted into journalism." In fact, to succeed in that calling, perseverance is absolutely essential—and sensitiveness is a positive drawback. However, this first page for 1921 is not intended to be about editors (who are not interesting persons), but about contributors.

In spite of the tradition aforementioned, editors are not only willing but eager to discover new talent—for does not the early encouragement of a new writer redound to the credit of the Christopher Columbus in the editorial chair? There is no prejudice against the new writer, but there is a decided distaste for the untrained newcomer who expects an editor to punctuate and "re-spell" a manuscript of several thousand words. I have heard aspiring contributors say, with an air of fine disdain: "Of course I know nothing about punctuation and spelling. I just write the ideas which come to me." There are few writers in this country who are possessed of such a fine frenzy that they can afford to despise the matter of orthography.

THE intelligent reader may be disposed to say: "Surely all your would-be contributors have learned to spell! In a country with our system of education, no one would think of sending an ill-spelled, unpunctuated manuscript to a magazine editor."

Let me tell you, intelligent reader, that there is not a week in the year in which manuscripts do not arrive from persons who have attended school for many years, who, nevertheless, do not appear to know the difference between "its" and "it's," and who persist in misspelling the apostrophe in such negative forms as "didn't." You will say: "But this is elementary English." Of course it is a knowledge of the elements that is lacking—and the reason for the lack is to be found in the laxity of the young student. During the month of November, a manuscript on a "timely" subject arrived, duly typewritten and double-spaced. It looked as if it were a desirable article, but the reading of the first four pages proved depressing. Every sentence in the first two paragraphs had "and" as its opening word—and the sentences ran gaily along, with no heed for a comma and a positive scorn for the semicolon. It is not the business of an editor to punctuate and remodel every sentence. The article, which promised interest and was not without merit, proved disappointing, and was returned, with the conventional "regrets." The writer thereof was probably disgusted with the editor and did not think of revising the manuscript; yet the article was a rather tempting contribution had it not been for its excessive need of revision.

* * * * *

EVERY week, Someone from Somewhere writes to ask if we publish short stories, if we are willing to read short stories, and how long the short story may be. We prefer that class of contribution not to exceed six thousand words and not to fall short of three thousand. This, of course, is a rough estimate, for an inspired bit of description or narrative may wander beyond the limits or a brilliant bit of abbreviation may refuse to exceed twenty-five hundred words. Wherefore, we refrain from too many cut-and-dried restrictions. Of course, we are willing to read short stories by new writers, and we endeavor to make a decision on such manuscripts within a fortnight. Special articles should be illustrated, and articles dealing with domestic topics are decidedly acceptable. Children's stories are not desired, as we have a "Journal Juniors' Club" under a special editor. Stories of Canadian life are naturally preferred, but it is not essential that the scene of action be our own Dominion.

* * * * *

SOME of our readers have been good enough to express approval of our covers—and we, ourselves, are rather happy in the contemplation of the covers of the last six months and more. We have several old friends in our creators of covers. Miss Long, who gave us August and October covers, is to give us a bright and "fetching" young person for February. Mr. Herbert Palmer will delight you in April and May with characteristic and colorful studies of animal life. Mr. Drummond, who has painted this spirited "Canadian" cover for January, also gives us a charming cover for June. There is a tennis girl for July, by Mr. Kemp, and Miss Estelle Kerr, whose September cover of 1920 was such a decided success, is to exercise her artistic gift for our benefit in August and September. Miss Yvonne McKague, whose November cover was highly attractive, is a welcome newcomer, whose work we hope to present again to our readers. We have received many requests for information regarding cover designs, to which we can reply only in the stereotyped "We are always pleased to see new work." Correspondence is vague, at best. The only test is the production.

A PRIZE WINNER

John Henderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Henderson, of Quebec, won the first prize in the Better Babies Contest (eighteen to thirty-six months).

A PRIZE WINNER

Graham Bachelder, son of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Bachelder, of Revelstoke, B.C., won the first prize in the Better Babies Contest (nine to eighteen months).

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Subscriptions must be paid in advance.

Yearly subscription price for Canada and Great Britain is $2.00; United States, $2.50; Foreign, $2.60. Remit by Express or P. O. Order. Add collection charges to cheques.

To change address we must know former and new address. No address changed later than 15th.

We have discontinued the sending of receipts for money paid by subscribers. The first figures on the wrapper of your journal show to what date your subscription is paid.

An interesting feature of Fels-Naptha is its deodorizing quality which leaves only that delightful clean-clothes smell.

Put them away really clean!

What a satisfaction to put away white clothes and dainty linens made white with a Fels-Naptha washing! And how sweet and wholesome they are sure to be—even weeks or months afterward when you take them out!

How many uses in your home?

Besides being a wonderful laundry soap Fels-Naptha takes spots out of rugs, carpets, cloth, draperies. Brightens woodwork instantly. Cleans enamel of bath tub, washstand, sink. Safely cleans anything cleanable.

Smell the real naptha in Fels-Naptha! Blindfolded you can tell Fels-Naptha from all other soaps.

Why put up with yellow-white clothes or gray-white clothes when you can have white-white clothes so easily by using Fels-Naptha?

The exclusive Fels-Naptha process has never been imitated successfully. It perfectly combines real naptha with good soap.

Of course you can boil clothes with Fels-Naptha but the point is, you don't need to. Fels-Naptha does the work with cool or lukewarm water—so much more comfort for you!

The naptha in Fels-Naptha works its way through every fibre of the clothes, and makes the dirt let go, with only an occasional rub needed. The snowy-white Fels-Naptha suds flush away all dirt. Then the clothes are white. And their sweetness is added proof that they are clean through and through.

Order the genuine Fels-Naptha of your grocer today, and learn how easily you can make clothes really clean.

© 1921. Fels & Co., Philadelphia

FELS - NAPTHA

THE GOLDEN BAR WITH THE CLEAN NAPTHA ODOR

Some Correspondence Concerning Schools

A page which is devoted this month to the discussion of Private and Public Schools

Editor's Note.—In our October issue, the writer of "O Canada" discussed the matter of schools—public or private, pointing out that the Canadian parents are rather "casual" in their attitude towards Jack's school, whereas, in older countries, many sacrifices will be made that children may be educated at institutions deemed especially desirable. The subject is one of interest to every Canadian household, and we take pleasure in publishing a letter received from a western reader.

O'Malley, Sask.,
October 13, 1920,

Editor,
CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL,
Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Editor:—

For a number of years I have read an American contemporary of your JOURNAL, and in parts enjoyed it. But I became rather wearied of continually having American ideas and propaganda forced upon me, and of reading tales of their eighteen-month war heroes. So I gave up the magazine, and for the last few months I have been reading our Canadian JOURNAL and have been much delighted in reading Canadian thoughts and seeing Canadian scenes (many of which are familiar) extolled.

I was especially interested in the article on the "O Canada" page of the October JOURNAL. I am a Canadian, born of Canadian parents. Being a graduate of Canadian Public and High Schools and Universities, and having taught in Canadian Public and High Schools in two provinces, I am rather intimately acquainted with the subject of education. In view of these facts, may I be permitted to voice my opinion with regard to the above mentioned article? Though I intend to oppose some of the ideas advocated there, I do not intend to do so arrogantly. Heated argument rarely bears any fruit, but thoughtful discussion often brings helpful data to light.

Before dealing with the educational topic, let me say in passing that I believe there may be some occasions when our country and people and resources have been extolled beyond their merits, in the effort to create a national pride. Yet from my own experience in mingling with the "residents" of Canada, I am of the opinion that there is not nearly enough national pride. Our Canadian "residents" come from many nations and form a very large percentage of our inhabitants. Our English, Swedish, Italian, etc., immigrants are quite prone to consider Canada a place to make enough money to enable them to return to and retire in the Elysian "home" across the sea. In their opinion Canada is by far the least "best-in-the-world" place. This attitude has made such a general impression that American, French and other foreign merchandise, literature, music, art, is much preferred here to the Canadian commodities. Of course I have no doubt that in some cases the foreign commodities are superior. However, the point I want to advance is, that, far from being too conceited about our own country, we have not faith enough in her. Yet, I believe I echo the idea of the author of "O Canada" when I say that our national pride should be such that it gives credit only where credit is due and earnestly endeavors to cleanse any national blots rather than to conceal them by vain boasting. Similarly our democracy is an attribute of which we are justly proud. I think every thoughtful Canadian will agree with me when I say that the only class distinction we want is that due to nobility of character. We do not want to wave the Bolsheviks' Red Flag; we do not want an upper class of the most ignorant. But we do want and need an upper class of the finest characters and best intellects that the country can produce. And I do not believe that the encouragement of private schools is conducive to that end. On the contrary, I greatly fear that the more prevalent private schools become the greater will be the tendency towards an upper class based on the criterion of wealth.

I have every sympathy with the parents who dread to send their child to a school which is brimming over with the "latest arrivals from Southern Europe." The contact with these children is sometimes a very grave danger, especially in the large towns. Yet I contend that if the home training is what it should be, the improper school influence will have little or no effect upon the child. "O Canada" quotes, "Give us a child till he is nine and you can have him afterwards." But you have the child at home with you till he is grown; then cannot you mould his early life so that he will obtain benefit rather than harm from his contact with other children? All teachers know the effect which home training has upon a child. You can compel him to act like a gentleman in school but the minute he is out of the teacher's sight, he is whatever little ruffian he is allowed to be at home. Home influences are by far more effective and enduring than school influences. Too many parents leave character-building to the teacher and when such is the case it is not to be wondered at if Jack picks up objectionable things at school. A teacher's influence and power is at best only transient. The real character moulding is done in the home and if a child's ideas are properly guided there, the school influence will not be such a menace. Rather by mixing with that world of children he will gain strength and force of character.

Take only one instance. "O Canada" mentions the danger of contact with children who use obscene language. I believe that there are very few children who would suffer morally from such contact if they had properly been taught sex hygiene at home. This is a subject which belongs to the home. It is a vital one, yet how many parents fortify their children by teaching it? No one can present it with the same beauty that a mother can if she will. It could be taught in the schools but the good effect would be greatly diminished. I maintain that if intelligent parents would see to that side of their child's education themselves, they would have little to fear from school contact.

Let me remind you also that it is not always from the immigrant or the laboring class that bad influence comes. In one little Ontario High School where I taught, were two boys from two of the wealthiest families in town. The parents could have afforded to send them to private schools. The manners of these boys were perfect but they were the most depraved boys I have ever met.

Moreover, if you send your girl or boy to boarding school it means prolonged absences from home, and home influence. Of course, if the home is not a desirable one it is well. But in most cases I think Jack's father is wise to buy his car and keep the boy with him.

There is yet another side to the question which should not be overlooked. If a boy is kept sheltered at home and in private school, how is he going to cope with the world when he is finally allowed to start out on his own initiative? If a child learns how to meet and overcome the hard places he is much better equipped to fight life's battles than if he were kept from all trials in youth. Since man, as an adult, must live in the world, is it not wise, that as a child, he should learn how to live in it?

On the other hand, a child who attends a public school, gains a broader interest in childhood of all kinds. It will not hurt him to realize a little of "how the other half lives." If only our wealthy people could see into the lives of the so-called lower classes, and be made to realize their struggles and handicaps, we should soon be a step nearer the brotherhood of man. Private schools are one of the best instruments for developing class consciousness, class which is based on wealth. We do not want our democracy to be one of "levelling down," but one of uplift. And how can anyone help in social uplift if he is devoid of human interest in the "under dog"? And how can one have such an interest if one is never allowed to obtain the faintest knowledge of him? Teach your children the love of mankind and show them how to exercise it in the public schools.

If there is something better to be had in the "good private boarding-school" than at the public schools, why should not every one have the chance? Certainly the child of the immigrant needs very badly the best we can give him. Even our best would have to work hard to make him a good Canadian citizen during his school years.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 50.)

AN INTERESTING PORTRAIT OF AN ACADEMIC AUTHORITY

This portrait of Dean Cappon of Queen's University, Kingston, is painted by F. H. Varley. An article on "Developing a National Art," by Miss Long, on page ten in this issue, refers to Mr. Varley's noteworthy work.

See What Happens

when you brush teeth in this new way

Five desired effects

Five things happen every time you brush teeth in this new way which dentists now advise.

The salivary flow is multiplied. That is Nature's great tooth-protecting agent.

The starch digestant in saliva is multiplied. That is to quickly digest the starch deposits which otherwise cling and form acid.

The alkalinity of the saliva is multiplied. That to neutralize the acids which cause tooth decay.

The film-coat is attacked in two efficient ways.

The teeth are so highly polished that film cannot easily adhere.

Three aids to Nature

Three effects are simply aids to Nature.

They would come through diet if you ate much fruit. But they must come regularly to prevent acid attacks on teeth.

Pepsodent brings them twice daily, whatever the diet. It combats the starch and starch effects when diet fails to do so.

Film—the great enemy

But the still greater object is to fight film, the cause of most tooth troubles. Film is that viscous coat you feel. It is ever-present, ever-forming. It clings to teeth, enters crevices and stays.

It is the film-coat that discolors, not the teeth. Film is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it, and many serious troubles, local and internal, are now traced to them.

A many-year problem

Film has for many years been a great dental problem. Careful people have dentists remove it twice yearly. But there are months between when it may do a ceaseless damage. So Dental science has been seeking a daily film combatant.

Efficient methods have now been found and proved by ample tests. These methods are embodied in Pepsodent. Thus all these five desired effects are now secured by this one application.

We supply it free

Pepsodent is now advised by leading dentists everywhere. Millions of people daily employ it, largely through this advice.

The results are evident wherever you look, particularly in glistening teeth.

A 10-Day Tube is being sent to everyone who asks. Also a book which tells the reason for each unique result.

This is to urge that you send for that tube. Watch the effects, learn their meaning, judge them for yourself. Then consider what they mean to you and yours.

Based on years of research

Pepsodent is based on years of research. Its principles have been evolved by some of the ablest authorities. It accords with the best modern dental opinion.

Its effects are now regarded as essential to proper tooth protection. So everyone should make this test. See how the teeth improve. What you see and feel will then decide your proper course. Cut out the coupon now.

10-Day Tube Free

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY,
Dept. 311, 1104 S. Wabash Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.
Mail 10-Day Tube of Pepsodent to

Only One Tube to a Family.

The visible effects

Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth whiten as the film-coat disappears. Then let the book explain results less evident to you.

Pepsodent CANADA
REG. IN
The New-Day Dentifrice

A scientific film combatant which brings five desired effects. Approved by authorities and now advised by leading dentists everywhere. Supplied by druggists in large tubes.

by Hulbert Footner

ILLUSTRATED BY CAMPBELL DUNCAN

CHAPTER I.

IN PAPPS'S RESTAURANT.

THE interior of Papps's, like most Western restaurants, was divided into a double row of little cabins with a passage between, each cabin having a swing door. Garth Pevensey found the place very full; and he was ushered into a cubby-hole which already contained two diners, a man and a woman nearing the end of their meal. They appeared to be incoming settlers of the better class—a farmer and his wife from across the line. Far from resenting Garth's intrusion, they visibly welcomed it; after all, there was something uncomfortably suggestive of a cell in those narrow cabins to which the light of day never penetrated.

Garth passed behind the farmer's chair, and seated himself next the wall. He had no sooner ordered his luncheon than the door was again opened, and the rotund Mr. Papps, with profuse apologies, introduced a fourth to their table. The vacant place, it appeared, was the very last remaining in his establishment.

The newcomer was a girl; young, slender and decidedly pretty: such was Garth's first impression. She came in without hesitation, and took the place opposite Garth with that serenely oblivious air so characteristic of the highly civilized young lady. Very trimly and quietly dressed, sufficiently well-bred to accept the situation as a matter of course. Thus Garth's further impressions. "What a girl to be meeting up in this corner of the world, and how I should like to know her!" he added in his mind. The maiden's bland aloofness was discouraging to this hope; nevertheless, his heart worked in an extra beat or two, as he considered the added relish his luncheon would have, garnished by occasional glances at such a delightful vis-a-vis. Meanwhile, he was careful to take his cue from her; his face, likewise, expressed a blank.

The farmer and his wife became very uncomfortable. Simple souls, they could not understand how a personable youth and a charming girl should sit opposite each other with such wooden faces. Their feeling was that at quarters so close extra sociability was demanded, and the utter lack of it caused them to move uneasily in their chairs, and gently perspire. They unconsciously hastened to finish, and having at length dutifully polished their plates, arose and left the cabin with audible sighs of relief.

This was a contingency Garth had not foreseen, and his heart jumped. At the same time he felt a little sorry for the girl. He wondered if she would consider it an act of delicacy if he fastened the door open with a chair. On second thoughts, he decided such a move would be open to misconstruction. Had he only known it, she was dying to laugh and, at the slightest twinkle in his eyes, would have gone off into a peal. Only Garth's severe gravity restrained her—and that in turn made her want to laugh harder than ever. But how was Garth to learn all that? Girls, more especially girls like this, were to him insolvable mysteries—like the heavenly constellations. Of course, there are those who pretend to have discovered their orbits, and have written books on the subject; but for him, he preferred simply to wonder and to admire.

Since her arrival the objective point of his desire shifted from his plate some three feet across the table; he now gazed covertly at her with more hunger than he evinced for his food. She had a good deal the aspect of a plucky boy, he thought; a direct, level gaze; a quick, sure turn to her head; and the fresh, bright lips of a boy. But that was no more than a pleasant fancy; in reality she was woman clear through. Eve lurked in the depths of her blue eyes, for all they hung out the colors of simple honesty; and Eve winked at him out of every fold of her rich chestnut hair. She was quick and impulsive in her motions; and although she showed such a blank front to the man opposite, her lips flickered with the desire to smile; and tiny frowns came and went between the twin crescents of her brows.

As for her, she was sizing him up too, though with skilfully veiled glances. She saw a square-shouldered young man, who sat calmly eating his lunch, without betraying too much self-consciousness on the one hand, or any desire to make flirtatious advances on the other. Yet he was not stupid, either; he had eyes that saw what they were turned on, she noted. His admirable, detached attitude piqued her, though she would have been quick to resent any other. She was angry with him for forcing this repression on her; repression was not natural to this young lady. She longed to clear the air with a burst of laughter, but the thought of a quick, cool glance of surprise from the steady eyes opposite effectually checked her. As for his features, they were well enough she thought. He had a shapely head, broadest over the ears, and thatched with thick, straight hair of the ashy-brown just the other side of blonde. His eyes were of the shade politely called gray, though yellow or green might be said with equal truth, had not those colors unpleasant associations. His nose was longish, and he had a comical trick of seeming to look down it, at which she greatly desired to laugh. His mouth was well cut, and decisively finished at the corners; and he had a chin to match. In spite of her irritation with him, she was reminded of a picture she had seen of Henry Fifth looking out from his helmet on the field of Agincourt.

As the minutes passed, and Garth maintained his calm, she became quite unreasonably wroth. Her own luncheon was now before her. By and by she wanted salt, and the only cellar stood at Garth's elbow. Nothing could have induced her to ask for it; she merely stared fixedly. Garth, presently observing, politely offered the salt-cellar. She waited until he had put it down on the table, and removed his hand from the neighborhood; then took it.

"Thank you," she murmured indignantly; furious at having to say it.

Garth wondered what he had done to offend her.

Garth swung around and took in the situation at a glance. There was a crack as his fist met the half-breed's jaw, and Xavier rolled in the dust.

AT this moment there was an interruption; again the apologetic Mr. Papps with yet another guest. This was a tradesman's comely young wife, with very ruffled plumage, and the distracted air of the unaccustomed traveller. She was carrying in her arms a shiny black valise, three assorted paper-covered bundles with the string coming off, and a hat in a paper bag; and, although it was so warm, she wore her winter's coat, plainly because there was no other way to bring it. Her hair was flying from its moorings; her face flamed; and her hat sat at a disreputably rakish angle. As she piled up her encumbrances on the chair next to the girl, and took off her coat, she bubbled over with indistinguishable, anxious mutterings. At last she sank into the seat by Garth with something between a sigh and a moan.

"I've lost my husband," she announced at large.

Her distress was so comical they could not forbear smiling.

"Just came in over the A.N.R.," she panted. "By rights we should have arrived last night, but day-before-yesterday's train had the right of way and we was held up down to Battle Run. I tell you, the rails of that line are like the waves of the sea! I was that sea-sick I thought never to eat mortal food again—but it's coming back; my appetite I mean. He was to meet me, but I suppose he got tired after seventeen hours, small blame—and dropped off somewhere. S'pose I'll have to make a round of the hotels till I find him. You don't happen to know him, do you?" she asked Garth. "John Pink, the carpenter?"

"I'm a stranger in Prince George," said he politely.

"Oh, what and all I've been through!" groaned Mrs. Pink, with an access of energetic distress. She shook a warning finger at the girl. "Take my advice, Miss," she warned, "and don't you let him out of your sight a minute, till you get him safe home!"

The girl looked hard at her plate, while for Garth, a slow, dark red crept up from his neck to the roots of his hair. Yet Mrs. Pink's mistake was surely a natural one; there they sat lunching privately together in the secluded little cabin. Moreover they looked like fit mates, each for the other, and their air of studied indifference was no more than the air commonly assumed by young married couples in public places—especially the lately married. Without appearing to raise her eyes, the girl in some mysterious way, was conscious of Garth's dark flush. "Serve him right," she thought with wicked satisfaction. "I shan't help him out." But Garth's blush was for her more than for himself.

Mrs. Pink, absorbed in her own troubles, was innocently unaware of the consternation she had thrown them into. She plunged ahead; still addressing her remarks to the girl.

"Perhaps you think there's no danger of losing yours so soon," she went on; "and very like you're right. But, my dear, you never can tell! Bless you, when I was on my wedding journey, he hung around continuous. I couldn't get shet of the man for a minute, and I was fair tired out of seeing him. But that wears off—not that I mean it would with you" turning to Garth—"but nothing different couldn't hardly be expected in the course of nature."

Garth considered whether he should stop Mrs. Pink's tongue by telling the truth. But it seemed ungallant to be in such haste to deny the responsibility. He felt rather that the disclaimer should come from the girl; and she made no move; indeed, he almost fancied he saw the ghost of a smile. Under his irritation with the woman and her clumsy tongue, he was conscious of a secret glow of pleasure. There was something highly flattering in being taken for the husband of such an ultra-desirable creature. The thought of her being really one with his future, as the woman supposed, and travelling about the country with him made his heart beat fast. Slender, trim and mistress of herself, she had exactly the look of the wife he had pictured.

Mrs. Pink broke off long enough to order her luncheon, and from the extent of the order it appeared she had entirely recovered her appetite.

"The next thing I have to do after finding my man," she resumed, with a wild pass at her hat, which lurched it as far over on the other side, "is to find a house. They tell me rents are terrible high in Prince George. Are you two going to settle here?"

Garth replied in the negative. He had decided if the girl did not choose to enlighten Mrs. Pink, he would not.

"It has a great future ahead of it," she said solemnly. "It's a grand place for a young couple to start life in. And elegant air for children. Mine are at my mother's."

Garth swallowed a gasp at this; but the girl never blinked an eye.

"But how I do run on!" exclaimed Mrs. Pink. "No doubt you've got a good start somewhere else."

"Not so very," said Garth with a smile.

The smile disarmed the young lady sitting opposite, and somehow obliged her to reconsider her opinion of him. "I believe the creature has a sense of humor," was her thought.

"Are you Canadians?" inquired Mrs. Pink politely. "I am from New York," said Garth.

Mrs. Pink opened her eyes to their widest. If he had said Cochiti China she could not have appeared more surprised. For New York is a magical name in the Provinces; and the more remote, the more glowing the halo evoked by the sound.

"Bless me!" she ejaculated. Then, addressing herself to the girl: "How fine the shops and the opera houses must be there!"

"I've not been there in some years," she answered coolly. "I am from Ontario."

"Well, I declare!" cried Mrs. Pink. "Quite a romance! Where did you meet?"

"Here," said Garth readily. There was no turning back now.

"What a nice man!" now thought this perverse young lady.

"Well! Well!" exclaimed Mrs. Pink with immense interest. "Ain't that odd now! Was it long since?"

"Not so very," said Garth vaguely. He glanced across the table and saw that his supposed wife had finished her lunch. His heart sank heavily.

"Three months?" hazarded Mrs. Pink.

"It was about half an hour ago," came brisk and clear from across the table.

Mrs. Pink looked up in utter amazement; her jaw dropped; and a piece of bread was arrested halfway to her mouth. The girl had risen and was drawing on her gloves.

"Good-bye, Mrs. Pink," she said sweetly. "I hope you find your husband sooner than I find mine!"

With that she passed out; and the swing door closed behind her. All the light went with her, it seemed to Garth, and the cabin became a sordid, spotty little hole. Mrs. Pink stared at the door through which she had disappeared, in speechless bewilderment. Finally she turned to Garth.

"Wh—what did she mean?" she stammered.

"I do not know the young lady," said Garth sadly.

"Good land, man!" screamed Mrs. Pink. "Why didn't you say so at first?"

CHAPTER II.

THE UNKNOWN LADY.

GARTH PEVENSEY was a reporter on the New York Leader. His choice of an occupation had been made more at the dictate of circumstances than of his free will; and in the round hole of modern journalism he was something of a square and stubborn peg. He had become a reporter because he had no taste for business; and a newspaper office is the natural refuge for clever young men with a modicum of education, and the sister, and ever since his knickerbocker days he had been the best head the little family could boast of. New York is full of young men like Garth, who, deprived of the kind of society their parents were accustomed to, do not assimilate readily with that which is open to all; and so do without any. Young, presentable and clever, Garth had yet never had a woman for a friend. Those he met in the course of a reporter's rounds made him over-fastidious. He had erected a sky-scraping ideal of fine breeding in women, of delicacy, reserve and finish; and his life hitherto had not afforded him a single opportunity of meeting a woman who could anywhere near measure up to it. That was his little private grievance with Fate.

Garth came of a family of sporting and military traditions, which he had inherited in full force. These, in the young bread-winner of the city, had had to be largely repressed; but he had found a certain outlet in joining a militia regiment, in which he had at length been elected an officer. He had a passion for firearms; and was the prize sharpshooter of his regiment. Wonderful tales were related of his prowess.

When the "Leader" was invited to send a representative on the excursion of press correspondents, which an enterprising immigration agency purposed conducting through the Canadian Northwest, Garth was chosen to go—most unexpectedly to himself, and to the higher-paid men on the staff. This trip put an entirely new colour on Garth's existence. He had always felt a secret longing to travel, to wander under strange skies, and observe new sides of life. From the very start of the journey he found himself in a state of pleasant exhilaration which was reflected in the copy he sent back to his paper. Pevensey's articles on the West made a distinct hit. The editors of the "Leader" did not tell him so; but in the very silence from New York that followed him, he knew he had found favor in their eyes.

When the excursion, lapped in the luxury of a private car (nothing can be too good for those who are going to publish their opinions of you!) reached Prince George, the outermost point of their wide swing around the country, the good people of the town outdid themselves in entertaining the correspondents. Among the festivities, a large public reception gave the correspondents and the leading men of the country the opportunity to become acquainted. To Garth the most interesting man present was the Bishop of Miwasa. His Lordship was a retiring man in vestments a thought shabby; and the other correspondents overlooked him. But Garth had heard by accident that the Bishop's annual tour of his diocese included a trip of fifteen hundred miles by canoe and pack-train through the wilderness; and he scented a story. The Bishop was one of those incorrigibly modest men who are the despair of interviewers; but Garth stuck to him, and got the story in the end. It was the best sent out of Prince George on that trip.

During the five days the correspondents spent there, the quiet Garth and the quiet Bishop became fast friends over innumerable pipes at the Athabasca Club. They discovered a common liking for the same brand of tobacco, which created a strong bond.

Garth was entranced by the Bishop's matter-of-fact stories of his long journeys through the wilderness during the delightful summers, and in the rigorous winters; and the upshot was, the Bishop asked him to join him in his forthcoming tour of the diocese, which was to start from Miwasa Landing on the first of August.

Garth jumped at the opportunity; and telegraphing lengthily to his paper to set forth the rich copy that was pining to be gathered in the North, prayed for permission to go. He received a brief answer, allowing him two months' leave of absence for the journey at his own risk and expense; and promising to purchase what of his stuff might be suitable, at space rates. This was precisely what he wanted; it meant two months' liberty. By the time he received it, the excursion had left Prince George behind; and was turned homeward. Garth dropped off at a way station and made his way back, this time without any fetes to greet his arrival. He caught the Bishop as he was starting for the Landing; and it was arranged Garth should follow him by stage, three days later. Meantime he was to purchase an outfit.

On the evening of the day following his luncheon at Papps's, Garth, in his room at the hotel, was packing in a characteristically masculine fashion, preparatory to his start for the North woods next day.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 12.)

Outside

By Isabel Ecclestone Mackay.

When the night fire flares up red
Into the chimney wide,
And I am s'posed to be in bed,
I like to slip and hide
Behind the back of father's chair,
And, when they quite forget I'm there,
I like to think
Of how the night is black as ink
Outside!

The poplar trees down in the park,
All day, so stiff with pride,
Stand shivering inside the dark,
Quite limp and terrified—
I'd like to call out, "Boo!" beneath
And listen to their chatt'ry teeth;
But—I don't know—
To do it I should have to go
Outside!

Our black cat, with her tail all still,
Is watching, yellow-eyed,
Something beyond the window-sill—
That no one else has spied!
Soon she will go, with padding feet,
Out through the door and down the street.
I think she knows
What she won't tell—except to those Outside!

Of course, there aren't witches now,
(What was that voice that cried?)
I don't mind witches anyhow,
(Was that the wind that sighed?)
For two brass pins I'd run around
The house and through the croquet ground—
I'm brave myself—
But what if I should scare some elf
Outside?

need of providing an income. He was not considered a "star" on the force; and his city editor had been known to tear his hair at the missed opportunities in Pevensey's copy, and hand it to one of the more glowing stylists for the injection of "ginger." But Garth had his revenge in the result; the gingerized phrases in his quiet narrative cried aloud, like modern gingerbread work on a goody old dwelling.

It was agreed in the office that Pevensey was too quiet ever to make a crack reporter. On a big story full of human interest he was no good. It was not that he failed to realize the possibilities of such stories; he had as sure an eye for the picturesque and affecting as Dicky Chatworth himself, the city editor's especial favorite; but he had an unconquerable repugnance to "letting himself go." Moreover his stuff was suspected of having a literary quality, something that is respected but not desired in a newspaper office. Howbeit, there were some things Garth could do to the entire satisfaction of the powers; he might be depended upon for an effective description of any big show, when the readers' tearducts were not to be laid under contribution; he had an undeniable way with him of impressing the great and the near-great; and had occasionally been surprisingly successful in extracting information from the supposedly uninterwiewable.

Outside the office Garth led an uneventful life. He lived with his mother and a younger brother and

FOR many, many years the little bells which to this day hang above the quaint white-faced clock on Le Seminaire Saint Sulpice, Montreal, have struck the hours, the halves and the quarters. Before the big, handsome cathedral which now overshadows the Seminary was thought of by St. Sulpice Fathers, and even before the square in front, with its statue of that old French hero, Sieur de Maisonneuve, was a square at all, those bells chimed.

When Montreal was still Ville-Marie, and stockades stood where granite buildings do to-day, this group of time-reckoners called the priest to his devotion, the artisan to his work, and the soldier to his duties. The soldier, with his long rapier and plumed hat, has long ago disappeared. The artisan has been moved to the less congested portions of the city—portions that were then far outside the city walls. As to the priest—well, he remains in his abode as of old—the priest and the bells.

No one listens nowadays to the marking of the hours by this ancient time-piece, though they are struck none the less regularly.

Wait—there is one!

Far down the street, toward the river, is a low-eaved stone house crowded in between two mammoth warehouses. In its day, something like a century ago, when Grandpere de Moleville came over from France and took possession, it was accounted, next to the Chateau de Ramezay, the most pretentious house in the city. It had gardens which extended almost to the river bank. These had been laid out in exact counterpart of grandpere's old gardens in France, and Nathile has often told me how her grandfather, dressed in velvet and laces, would walk up and down the well kept pathways, as he might have done before the revolution in the gardens of Louis XVI.

Commercial life has swallowed up the mansion's old environments; Grandpere and Pere de Moleville were long ago gathered to their fathers; all that remains of the estate is the house itself, and all that remains of the family is the little withered up Mam'selle Nathile.

Mam'selle has always been credited in the neighborhood with being a little peculiar. In the first place, she will not, in spite of all inducements, sell the old house, though she has been offered many times its residential value. Then, at a given hour every morning, she goes up the street to the French Cathedral, but unlike the other devotees, never steps inside. She just waits within the shadow of the "portique" until the Seminary bells ring out the quarter after ten. Gentle expectation is depicted in her old face as she stands there gazing down the street beyond the seminary gates. This in turn gives way to a look of disappointment, as she shakes her head and moves away. Year in and year out she has repeated this, until its repetition creates no comment. "It's only that crazy old Frenchwoman," the neighbors say, and, indeed, it makes little difference to anyone except possibly a few French boys from the factory opposite, who call her "vieille folle," and refuse her nice little cakes in consequence.

But Mam'selle has not always been old and ugly, nor has she always lived the secluded life which for fifty years has been her custom, and is yet for that matter.

The time has been when Mam'selle Nathile de Moleville was accounted the handsomest woman in the city. Even the two little English boys, whose father kept the wholesale fur establishment on Rue St. Paul, and who had, in common with their father, an inborn hatred for anything un-British, always called her that handsome French girl. That she was really beautiful I have good reason to know, for many times she has shown me her portrait, which hung, with those of other members of her family, in what had once been the library. This must in its day have been a really fine room, with its high wainscoting and carved oak ceiling. Now, however, the windows which looked once straight down to the river, have their view shut off by the stone walls of the warehouse, and the hangings, still rich and heavy, are moth-eaten, dusty and dark with age.

With all the airs of a princess Mam'selle would usher one into this room, just as she might have done fifty years before. Here was grandpere's jewelled snuff box, his court sword, and the dearest ivory miniatures of dead and gone de Molevilles, painted long ago in France. She would sit and talk of the old days. Not of the days of her grandfather, nor father, but of her own girlhood—how she had received the attentions of Count ——— and Monsieur ——— at the famous ball at Monklands, the then Government House of the United Provinces. This was before the day that Lord Elgin was "rotten egged" at the Chateau de Ramezay for signing the Rebellion Loss Bill, and in consequence removed the seat of government to Quebec.

All these things, and many more, she talked of, as if they had occurred yesterday—and to her they had. Time did not move on with Mam'selle Nathile. With her the calendar stood still, and

The BELLS of ST. SULPICE

by Frederick Paul

had done so for fifty years. If Lord Elgin's place had been taken by another, if the old Parliament buildings had been burned by the mob, or if her old friends had all gone to their last resting place, it was merely a matter of yesterday—at most, last year.

It seemed the most natural thing in the world that Bertrand Chamfort and Mam'selle de Moleville should meet and fall in love. Brave, dashing, many years her senior, for he had won his title of captain in the Rebellion of '37, Bertrand was just the man to infatuate a young woman of Nathile's temperament and home training. With even more care than is usually exercised among French families, Nathile had been kept under the kind, though watchful, eyes of her father and maiden aunt—her mother having died years before—until she was twenty. This had only been varied by her four years at the convent, where the black-robed sisters looked after her welfare with even more care and attention.

What she then considered the event of her life occurred. This was her coming out at the levee given in her honor by that old friend of the family, Madame Hebert.

How Captain Chamfort came to be invited is not altogether plain. Though belonging to one of the best French families, his reputation for years had been such that polite society had not spoken kindly of him. Society, however, was careful not to speak too loud, for the gallant captain had the reputation of being at times hot-headed and a bit quarrelsome.

Bertrand Chamfort proved as fearless and persistent a lover as he was a fighter, and that was saying a great deal. He dashed at a woman's heart in much the same way as he led the rebels in '37, and even old Papi-neau himself acknowledged that that was magnificent.

A woman may openly resent this sort of warfare, but way down deep there is an admiration for the aggressive, knightly lover, which is likely to carry all before it. It was much this way between these two. Faults the captain had, but no one could ever say that he played fast and loose with women's hearts and names. That was his one virtue.

As for Nathile, she saw only the handsome, dark-skinned soldier—the man whose bravery in years past had been upon everyone's lips. True, she had heard also of how he had played the very devil at the English grog shop on Rue St. Pierre, and how it had ended in his arrest and fine for assaulting a half dozen Englishmen with a sword. The Captain's Quebec duel, in which he ran the officer through, was still fresh in everyone's mind; but those were stirring days, and the French were often pitted against the English. It was perfectly natural that she should forgive any little indiscretion of this character, particularly if the aggrieved party was an Englishman. Was she not French?—and did not every son and daughter of sunny France rejoice, at least silently, at the discomfiture of the conqueror?

Matters, however, did not progress as the two lovers would have liked. Objections were raised by her father, whose insight into man's character was perhaps on a par with his own knowledge of the world. Finally it all ended in his forbidding any further intercourse between his daughter and Chamfort.

That matters were not pleasant in Captain Chamfort's immediate neighborhood, when he heard of Monsieur de Moleville's decision can readily be imagined. What passed when the Captain called, is not exactly clear, but it concluded in his telling the old gentleman that marry his daughter he would, whether he liked it or not. After this the meetings between Nathile and the Captain were necessarily infrequent. Neither her father nor aunt had any idea that matters had gone as far as they had, and both were under the impression that Nathile, like an obedient daughter, would give up all serious thoughts of the Captain.

Chamfort, in the meantime, had never changed his original ideas. He intended to make Nathile his wife just as he had threatened to do, but runaway matches were not so easily planned then as now, and, besides, the chances were that not a priest in Lower Canada would marry them under the circumstances. So he was arranging to go to Boston, marry her there, and then, after a while, return to Montreal. This all took time, and the lovers met when occasion offered.

There was one place where the two could see each other for just the briefest possible time several days in the week. This was at Notre Dame. Like the good Catholic she was, it had for years been Nathile's custom to go to the Cathedral. Sometimes it was to low mass with her aunt, but more often she would go up alone later in the morning. It was not long before the Captain became aware of this custom of hers, and he, too, frequented Notre Dame in the morning hours. It may be said to Nathile's credit that even the presence of her lover at the church did not materially interfere with her devotions. Each prayer was said as conscientiously as if he had never existed, when, as a matter of fact, she knew full well that he was pacing backward and forward just outside the doors. The only difference it made was that another prayer had been added to the long list. This was for Bertrand, and while it was being offered the impetuous

It seemed the most natural thing in the world that Bertrand Chamfort and Mam'selle de Moleville should meet and fall in love.

A Season

By FRANCES BEATRICE TAYLOR

I.

Snowdrops,
And crocuses,
And velvet paws of catkin buds—
Shouting round the garden go the yellow daffodils,
Rainbow beds of hyacinth,
(Chiming bells of hyacinth)
Royal purple violets and musky blue squills!

II.

Tulips,
And buttercups,
And orchis-tinted iris spears,
Rosy, scented snow adrift beneath the almond tree;
Phials of honey-sweet perfume
In every tossing lilac-plume,
In every feathered clover-head and wind anenome!

III.

Balsams,
And lupin-spires,
And spicy breath of lavender,
Gillyflowers, and lily flowers, and
Bethlehem Star;
A single gold nasturtium cup,
Lapping all the sunlight up,
And white for youth, and red for love, and there the roses are.

IV.

Dahlias,
And goldenrod,
And mani-colored marigolds,
Burnished fire of oak copse and pale mistletoe;
Michael daisies' misty blooms,
And shaggy red chrysanthemums,
And one scarlet holly-berry on the new snow.

Captain was damning the length of time consumed in its delivery. But to do him justice, he was not aware that it was being offered for his good, or he probably would not have cursed.

Perhaps Nathile did look forward to her morning prayers at Notre Dame with more pleasure than formerly, and perhaps also there was an anxiety for the hour to arrive which she herself scarcely understood.

As time passed the Captain's arrangements for their flight were all but complete. He met her at the church on a Saturday morning, and in the few moments they had together briefly outlined his plans. She was to come to the Cathedral as usual on the following Monday morning. There he would meet her and together they would board a packet which lay in the harbor ready to sail. By 12 o'clock they would be well down the river, and in ten days should reach Boston. Such wearing apparel as was necessary had already been procured by the stewardess so there was no occasion to excite suspicion at home.

Then he stooped and kissed her upturned face, and, with the words, "Remember the hour, ten o'clock," he was gone.

Stories of that strange duel which took place in old Gwilt's tavern are so conflicting that it is hard to get at the real truth of the matter. Even the testimony of the tavern keeper and his son at the "enquete" was not of a nature to throw much light on an affair, which for many days annoyed and baffled Her Majesty's representatives.

Gwilt's inn was a famous hostelry at that time, and it was said that many disputes of long standing had been satisfactorily settled in a barn connected with the establishment. It was also linted that right over the hill, and a little way up from the river, was a level, grassy spot, which was one of the prettiest places for an encounter on the whole river side.

Years before Gwilt took to inn-keeping he had been a sergeant-instructor of swordsmanship in one of Her Majesty's regiments, and perhaps this in some manner accounted for his love of a fray and the plentiful supply of weapons which hung in the tap room.

It may be well, considering that Gwilt was the only one who could ever give an intelligible account of the affair, to take his own version just as he told it before the court:

"All day Sunday," he said, "business was mighty dull, but t'ards evening, after the candles were lit, in came two gents who I had never seen before. One was tall and soldier-like, looking enough like our old major to be his twin brother. The other was a mean looking little cuss, and no one can ever tell me it wasn't all his fault.

"They sat down in the tap room and had several drinks, the soldier-like man paying for 'em all. After awhile in came Captain Chamfort, and sat down to a table in the other end of the room. He was quiet like, and never no more than looked at the other two gents.

"After having a pint of old Burgundy, of which he was wonderful fond, the captain told me to look after his horse, as he might stay some time. It was while I was out tending to the beast that the row started, and as I came near the door I heard the captain say:

"If you don't take that back and drink her health, you'll fight!" And at that he threw his glass of wine over the both of 'em.

"The next thing there was a scramble for weapons, and before I was fairly in the door all of 'em had a blade, and had started for each other.

"I steps in between 'em, and says: 'Here, gents, this won't do. Two men can't fight one, and, besides, this ain't no fit place for a duel.'

"Fight they would, so I made the best of it, and was going to see fair play, anyhow. The captain wanted to fight 'em both at once, and the little one was willing, too, though I will say for the big fellow, that he insisted on taking his turn alone.

"I cleared the room as well as I could, and as the candles were all lit, it made a pretty fair battleground. The little fellow wanted to keep the weapon he had, so I says to myself: 'I'll look after you, my hearty,' and I takes a weapon and goes out in front of him, so he could do no hurt, wanting to go on.

"My, but that fight was awful!

"Both of 'em were about even as to height and reach, and were fine swordsmen, though I must say I liked the captain's style best. He was quick as a cat, and had a wonderful eye.

"Backward and forward they went. Cut—parry—thrust, with the captain always having a little mite the best of it. Finally, he began driving the stranger into the corner, and just there managed to get in a clean cut on the left shoulder.

"I calls time, expecting the duel to stop there, but the stranger, who wasn't much hurt, wanted to go on.

"The front door had all this time been closed, and it was desperate warm. So I opens it wide to let in what air there was, and the fight began again.

"When the captain saw that his man was dead game, and meant to fight to the end, I never saw such an expression come over anyone's face. He was white-like, and his eyes flashed. Upon my honor, he looked just as he did at St. Eustache, when the regulars had 'em in a corner at the old church, and I says to myself: 'Stranger, your time has come!'

"Honest, judge, I would liked to have stopped the fight right there, but couldn't.

"At it they went again, and this time the captain was pressing the stranger harder than ever. All at once a gust of wind comes through the door, and every candle but one in the place went out. I calls time, and went over to shut the door before lighting up. The fight appeared to have stopped as soon as the light went out, but before I reached the door I hears a groan and then a fall. Without waiting for anything I grabbed the one candle, and went over to the far end of the room. As I did so the two strangers passed me and went out of the door.

"I goes over, and finds the captain all blood, which was coming a stream from a wound in his side.

"It was all up with him, and before I could get his shirt open he was dead, your Honor.

"Then I heard the clatter of hoofs, and the strangers making off.

"The blow was a foul one, and I may be doing

When De Stars Shine Out

By NORMA E. SMITH

Dere's a li'l shadder creepin',
In de corner ob de room,
An' de quarters wear a blanket
Made ob twilight's purple gloom.
Soon de sky will be lak velvet,
Jewels flashin' all about;
Den de Massa's comin' fo' me
When de stars shine out.

Li'l darker grows dat shadder,
I kin heah de night-hawk call,
While de fire throws his glory
On ma rough log cabin wall.
Seems ter me dere's someone tappin',
Music is afloat;
Massa's comin' in de twilight
When de stars shine out.

Sho' He's comin', jes' as softly
An' as lubbly as de mawn;
I kin see His great wings shinin'
Lak de summer skies at dawn.
Let de door be open, honey;
Let ma ole eyes peer wifout;
Massa's comin' fo' yer mammy
When de stars shine out.

Her black han' is werry feeble—
Massa's han' is white lak snow;
But ma fingers feel de nail-prints,
So I clasp it as I go.
Hark! A voice soun's from de threshold,
Sweeter dan a blackbird's note;
Massa's here at las' to tak me
As de stars shine out!

the little fellow wrong, but I think he was the man that delivered it. Anyway, I found the sword he had outside, and there was a streak of blood down the blade."

Monday morning came, and at last the bells sounded the first strokes of ten. It was such a little distance, and almost before they had stopped their ringing Nathile was at the appointed place.

This time she did not enter the church as she had always done before, but stood in the centre doorway right under the shadow of the big stone arches. Bertrand had not arrived, and she peered far down the street, expecting every moment to see his muscular form in the distance.

Five and then ten minutes went slowly by, and still he did not come.

What could be the matter? Had anything happened? Was he ill?

Just then a cart could be seen coming up the street. It was surrounded by a group of excited men, who talked in loud tones. They were nearly opposite to where Nathile stood when one of them was heard to say:

"Poor Chamfort, it was too bad to have died that way, but, then, what could one expect?"

It all came upon her like lightning—the slowly moving cart, partly filled with straw, and upon it the inert form of her lover.

She moved forward, and then grasped the stone pillar. Without even a sigh the lids closed over the dark eyes. She swayed backward and forward once or twice, and then fell an unconscious heap upon the steps.

And then it was that time stopped for Nathile. In her disordered brain, Bertrand lives always, and she lives to hear the bells of St. Sulpice and keep the meeting.

The End of the Story

Revenge and Youthful Love Make a Romance in the Northern Wilderness

THE RED GUARDIAN

By MABEL L. STUART

ILLUSTRATED BY P. C. SHEPPARD

COMMISSIONER GRANT of the "Royal North West Mounted Police" rubbed his clean-shaven chin thoughtfully. Not a flicker of an eyelid betrayed his excitement but the keen grey eyes gazed at, and through, Corporal Smith with more than their usual steely penetration.

"Sergeant Gaston murdered, and Constable Thorpe missing," he muttered. "Give me the details concisely, Smith."

Corporal Smith's round, boyish face was clouded by the tragedy upon which he had stumbled so unexpectedly. "Constable Hope and I were riding in after cleaning up that trouble in one of the Reservations when we came upon Gaston lying on his back, shot through the heart. He must have been dead an hour or more. It was in the clearing near old Martin's hut, just above Dead Man's Rapids. Stevens came up almost at the same moment. He was looking for Thorpe—said you wanted to send him to Murphy's Construction Camp. He had passed Thorpe and Gaston at that very spot a couple of hours before. Gaston was talking rather noisily and Thorpe's face was white. They seemed to be having a heated discussion and paid no attention to Stevens, who rode on to the barracks and left them. They are bringing Gaston in now; I came ahead to report."

The Commissioner was silent for a moment. "Of course it is quite impossible that Thorpe has done this. There isn't a finer man on this Force than Garry Thorpe. Still he must be found and explanation made, and the murderer run to earth."

"It is horrible, Sir," groaned Corporal Smith, "one of our own men within a mile or so of our own barracks. Gaston was never a favorite. He was too overbearing and bull-headed—no tact. The Indians don't like him either."

"Just what were the relations between Gaston and Thorpe," inquired the Commissioner, "cordial or otherwise?"

Smith hesitated. "None too cordial, I imagine. Stevens knew them both in the East. They were at school and college together. Thorpe was brilliant and successful. Gaston was rather dull and jealous of Thorpe. There was some family trouble too. Gaston's father almost ruined old Mr. Thorpe in some shady business deal. Gaston has made things as hard as possible for Thorpe since he joined the Force—not openly but in little underhand ways. Garry is very popular—generous and good-natured, daring to recklessness. I will never believe that he has had anything to do with this. More likely it was someone with a grudge against Gaston."

"I shall assign this task to you, Corporal," decided the Commissioner without further comment. "Find Thorpe and bring him back. He holds the clue to the mystery. In the meantime we will have the whole area searched for several miles around, as well as the river, to disclose the possibility of suicide or foul play. Send Stevens to me at once."

Corporal Smith saluted and withdrew to join the little group waiting impatiently outside. An hour later he rode northward on his wicked-eyed bay, scratching his close-cropped red head speculatively. "He has the whole of Canada to hide in, the foothills, the mountains, the plains—up to the Arctic, maybe. But I'll get him of course. And here is where I start," as he dismounted at the scene of the tragedy and began examining the ground with extreme minuteness.

ON an Indian Reservation several hundred miles from the Police Barracks the "Little White Brother" lived in a log cabin, his general headquarters and dispensary whence he distributed healing for the bodies and souls of his dusky patients with equal impartiality. John McLean was a medical missionary, who from his early youth, had been filled with a fiery zeal for the salvation of his red-skinned brothers.

After graduation in theology and medicine, he had given up a brilliant career to go into the wilderness and live the simplest life, taking with him his young wife who was equally enthusiastic. Their private means enabled them to live in some degree of comfort and to help their half-civilized neighbors who repaid them with a dog-like devotion.

But the rigors of the northern winters and the unavoidable hardships soon proved too much for thrown off her blanket of white, emerged green and glorious with the promise of summer. Esther, who was a keen fisherman, was whipping the waters of Sunny Creek in search of a trout for her father's dinner, when a canoe containing two Indians, shot suddenly around a jutting rock almost beside her.

Instantly she recognized Hawk-Eye, one of the head men of the tribe who had been absent several months from the Reservation. Hawk-Eye was a skilful hunter and trapper, and his trade with the White Man was conducted with a sharp eye to business. His canoe was laden with trophies of the chase, and a look of calm and placid satisfaction rested on his sphinx-like face.

But the man with him! Esther stared hard. He was tanned and weather-beaten until his skin was the same hue as his companion's. He wore the costume of the tribe but his features were Grecian in their regularity and his eyes, the light, steely blue that betrayed his nationality.

"A white man!" Esther's lips formed the words though no sound came. Hawk-Eye looked disconcerted for an instant, then paddling to shore he leaped from the canoe and fell on his knees at the girl's feet, bowing to the ground. The "Little White Brother" and his daughter regarded as sacred personages, almost objects of worship.

His white companion followed him, gazing in hypnotized fascination at Esther as she stood with the sunshine on her red-bronze hair and the exquisite color coming and going in her face. He passed his hand across his forehead with a bewildered gesture, then mechanically saluted. Esther smiled. Her guess had been correct.

Hawk-Eye watched the two with inscrutable, glittering black eyes, then indicating the stranger with a lean forefinger, explained. "White man loves his Indian brother, likes our ways, good hunter, good rider, wants to live with Hawk-Eye and his people. The 'White Flower' will be kind to him. His head is sick."

The young man smiled apologetically. "Yes, it is queer, but I have lost my memory. Hawk-Eye says he found me lying half in the water at the foot of a cliff with a terrible gash in the back of my head. It is hardly healed yet. He nursed me for weeks. He has been a good Samaritan. Whoever gave me that blow almost stripped me so I have no clue to my identity."

"How dreadful," exclaimed Esther, holding out her hand in token of sympathy and friendship. "Was there nothing at all to suggest your past?"

"Only a scrap of paper torn from a letter which Hawk-Eye found beside me and kept when he carried me to his canoe. It read: 'Dear old Garry:—How do you like the wild and woolly West?' So I conclude that I am Garry."

Esther smiled. "Welcome to our wilderness home. We are a simple people but we know how to treat strangers. My father will be delighted beyond words to have a new friend. You will be a nine days' wonder on the Reservation. It is good that Hawk-Eye found you. He is kind and brave; his people will welcome you for his sake as well as your own."

The young man was frankly puzzled at finding an educated white woman, charming and remarkably attractive, buried alive in the primeval forest in a half-civilized community of Indians. But considering Hawk-Eye's presence he forced back the questions which rushed to his lips, determined at the earliest opportunity to find out the solution of the mystery.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 28.)

At that moment a shadow darkened the doorway, and all three looked up to greet the newcomer.

Mrs. McLean and her grief-stricken husband laid her to rest beneath the stately pines amid the weird lamentations of his faithful friends. His small daughter, Esther, a replica of her mother, was all that remained to remind him of his former life in old Ontario.

When Esther was nine years of age her father sent her East to be educated and trained in the ways of "polite society." The parting was a heart-break to both, and only twice in the nine ensuing years was he able to travel the many hundred miles to the eastern university city to spend a few months with his daughter.

Then Esther took matters into her own hands and insisted on joining him at Sunny Creek, for the spirit of self-effacing service was as strong in the girl as in her ascetic parents. The majestic mountains, the boundless forest where she had been born drew her with a resistless magnetism. Her dark-skinned kindergarten became unspeakably dear and in a few years the flesh-pots of the East ceased to interest her.

Then suddenly the East came to her. It was on a beautiful spring morning when Nature, having

An Article on a Subject of Importance to Every Canadian

"God gives all men all earth to love
But since man's heart is small,
Ordains for each one spot shall prove Beloved over all.
Each to his choice, and I rejoice,
The lot has fallen to me
In a fair ground—in a fair ground—"

WHEN the subject of a national, a distinctively Canadian art is mentioned, one is met with various questions. Probably the first ones asked are: "Is there really such a thing as a national art?" and "Is not all great art universal?" And the answer in each case seems to be "yes." The great fundamental—the universal, those of form, organization and unity, but on comparing the great periods of painting in different countries, it is impossible to deny that there certainly is a vast difference between them. It would be difficult to imagine the great art of Greece, produced by the same men that raised the art of the Netherlands to such heights; and the sumptuous, regal productions of 16th century Italy breathe an entirely different spirit from the more restrained art of Spain. They all have the great fundamentals, but they certainly are eternally different.

This can perhaps be explained by a quotation from Huntington Wright. "The theme of a picture is chosen by the emotions—the intellect determines the rhythm or construction and the will supplies the power of organization."

In other words, the type of picture produced depends on the character of the artist. It depends on his emotions, by what they are aroused; on his mind, what power of thought has he; on his will:—is it such as will carry his work to a masterly and successful conclusion? His personality is back of his art and this personality is largely the outcome of his nationality and country; for no person, be he ever so strong-minded, can avoid being influenced by his surroundings, and his personality naturally reflects the most marked feelings, the most important ideas of his community, while his sense of beauty is influenced by the face of nature with which he is most familiar. The artist, on account of trained powers of observation, probably reflects his surroundings and the great movements of his time more than most men and unconsciously becomes the human document of his age and country.

Consequently, a painter living in some age of great intellectual and artistic activity, reflects that spirit in his work; and just as he shows the ideas and intellectual developments of his time, so he will express the country he lives in. The sense of what is beautiful varies; the artist from a warm, sunny climate with its glowing colors and brilliant light loves a different color scheme from the inhabitant of a northern, foggy land with its delicate greys and subtle veiling of color by the curtain of mist. And the attitude of mind, even the physical types, are different in a warm, easily cultivated land from those found in a less fertile country with its more strenuous struggle for existence. Then, too, the artist painting in an old settled country with traditions handed down from generation to generation, where, perhaps, there has been a great art period, will look at things and paint things quite differently from the man living in a new country, still young and with its golden age of art in the dim future. The first man's work will be more finished, more technically perfect than that of the second, who is seeking for a way of expressing new subjects and ideas; his work may possibly be crude but it will be full of freshness and vitality.

BUT to go back to the fundamentals of all arts; there can be no great art without sincerity and truth. Consequently each country, each individual must work out his own salvation, learning from others but not copying them, seeking always to do his work in a way characteristic of himself and expressive of his subject. The painter of a new country cannot hope to express it in terms of an older

DEVELOPING A NATIONAL ART

By MARION LONG

DOWN THE VALLEY
Herbert S. Palmer, A.R.C.A.

land; he must seek to develop a type of work inspired by the life and scenes around him. Of course this leads to that subject which should be so important to all of us—the Art of Canada. Until we have a vital art of our own we are an inarticulate people, lacking in self-expression and unable to proclaim how fair is our lot, and how goodly our heritage.

We hear a great deal about reconstruction and development in Canada, and we are all looking forward to a wonderful material future for our country:—but are we equally planning to build up an art which will express her greatness and show the again it is the French-Canadian towns with their quaint houses and irregular streets bright with sunlight. Another time it is the habitant himself—a type which Mr. Suzor-Cote never tires of putting on canvas.

WHAT these men are doing for Quebec, Mr. G. A. Reid of Toronto, began some years ago to do for Ontario, with his pictures of country life and scenery. There Mr. F. S. Challener also found his inspiration before so much of his time was given to decorative work. And now there are a number of other painters finding material for their work in this part of the country so well known to them—Mr. Fred Haines, painting cattle and horses in surroundings that somehow always seem familiar, Mr. Herbert S. Palmer, showing sheep and great stretches of farm lands, Mr. Manly MacDonald, painting hay-making scenes, life in the bush, or winter life on the farm, and Mr. J. L. Graham, producing pictures of cattle in typical Canadian scenes.

Then the great north country has cast its spell over a number of our painters. One of the first to feel its possibilities was Mr. J. W. Beatty, who has grown to know it in all seasons. The late Tom Thomson painted it with a passionate love and understanding, and each year sees Mr. A. Y. Jackson, Mr. J. E. H. MacDonald, Mr. Lauren S. Harris, and Mr. Francis H. Johnston, answering its call and returning with sketches filled with the brilliant color, rugged form and the wonderful spirit of the northland. Mr. Arthur Lismer's canvases often show this same country, and Mr. Frank Carmichael paints it with a great deal of decorative quality.

In Toronto, Mr. Lawren Harris has made us feel the odd beauty of old houses in "The Ward," and of the shacks in the outskirts; and Miss Mary Wrinch has shown how paintable some parts of an old town can be. Mrs. G. A. Reid has found our Canadian gardens

BEAVER DAM
J. E. H. MacDonald, A.R.C.A.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 50.)

The Story in Which Pickles, a Play and a Prince Take Part

"BAD ACTORS"

By CHARLES G. BOOTH

ILLUSTRATED BY JOHN FRANCIS WHITE

LIKE the British Empire, the sun never sets on Peabody's Perfection Pickles. They are world-wide; they know neither class nor clan. Their universality is as unique as their flavor is distinctive. They create nightmares in the East as often and as adroitly as they occasion indigestion in the West. While the world knows that behind them is W. J. Peabody, it doesn't know that behind W. J. is W. J.'s wife!

"We have the biggest pickle plant in the world," said Joseph Peabody, one morning at breakfast.

"We have," agreed Ma.

"Consequently," went on Pa, puffing out his cheeks, "we are kings among our kind, Joseph."

"That's it, Mira. You always hit it right. But what I meant to say was this: The prince is coming here next week—incognito, you know. His reception is to be informal, but some sort of a committee was necessary and they've put me on it."

"How nice!" murmured Ma placidly.

"Daddy!" cried Nellie, clapping her hands. Nellie was nineteen, and from a potentially matrimonial standpoint, usefully pretty.

"And," went on Joseph, "it's been suggested that he inspect—" Pa paused here for effect, "that he inspect the largest pickle plant in the world!"

"Joseph! You don't say!" exclaimed Ma. "A splendid ad!"

"That's what I thought. So, I've arranged to have moving pictures taken of the prince inspecting the home of Peabody's Perfection Pickles!" concluded Pa proudly.

"Pickles and princes," said Nellie doubtfully. "Aren't they a little incongruous, daddy?"

"Nonsense!" reproved Ma. And then to her husband. "Joseph, he is coming incognito, you say. I—I wonder—yes, it could be done—easily! I see no reason why he shouldn't have afternoon tea with us—here—when he has been through the plant. I should like Nellie to meet a real prince; it would help her so!"

"Goody, mother!" exclaimed Nellie.

"Mira!" exploded Pa. "You're crazy. I—I couldn't—nohow—" relapsing into his boyhood vernacular.

"There is no reason why you shouldn't, Joseph—none! You have just said we are kings among our kind—he is only a prince!"

"It was you that said it, Mira!" corrected Pa.

"Joseph! Please don't contradict!"

"It—it can't be done!" stammered Pa.

"It isn't, usually, but it's going to be—this time. You have always professed contempt for European aristocracy when eulogizing your commercial success. I am merely equalizing the two."

"He wouldn't come."

"Of course he would—couldn't very well refuse—as your guest!" snapped Ma.

"The others would object," persisted Pa.

"Joseph! You are this city. You know you are! You're the mayor, the council, the board of trade, the heart, the eyes, the brain of the place! Without you and your plant it would go bankrupt in a month! Don't use that senseless objection!"

Ma's chin protruded slightly. Her blue eyes had become steely. Pa recognized the futility of argument and did not reply.

"Mrs. Brown-Gorman and I are arranging amateur theatricals to help the starving Poles, or the Serbs—I'm not sure which," went on Ma. "There is to be a prince in the play and I want to see how one acts in real life. This will give me the opportunity I have wanted. I shall expect you to respect my wishes, Joseph, by producing the prince!"

Ma eased herself from her chair and left the room. Pa's eyes followed the broad outlines of her shoulders. She radiated strength of purpose, self-confidence, vitality. If the world didn't know who was the creator of Peabody's Perfection Pickles, Pa did.

"Your mother is a remarkable woman, Nellie," said Pa, as his wife left the room.

Nellie didn't reply; she had heard him say that many times. Instead she went to him and snuggled into his capacious lap, pressed her glowing cheek against his big, good-natured jowl, and twisted his mustache about her fingers.

"I do love you, daddy," she murmured into his ear. Joseph hugged her to him. Nellie's methods were usually as effective as her mother's.

"Yes, dear," he said rather dubiously.

"And I want to help you. Mother's idea is perfectly silly, though it would be nice to shake hands with a prince."

"I don't think he's shaking hands with anyone," said Joseph. "They're both worn out."

"Well, anyway, I have a plan that will satisfy mother, help you, and—and help me, too."

He grunted disbelievingly.

"I have!" she repeated, giving his mustache a tug.

"Let's hear it," said Joseph, doubtfully.

"You remember that very nice young man you and I met in the Maine woods last summer, when Mother was at Newport? Well, he's just come from the east."

"The one I didn't like?" grimly.

"And," went on Nellie, ignoring his unpromising tone, "you may not remember, but everybody said one couldn't tell him from the prince unless one knew him intimately. Look!"

Unfastening her locket, she produced a miniature of the young man in question who was unmistakably prince-like in feature.

"You carry his photograph around after what I said Nellie!"

"Daddy! He's very nice, and look, just look, how like the prince he is!"

Joseph looked. "Yes," he admitted, "but—"

"Well, maybe if you were to say 'yes' to George when he asks you something awfully important some day," Nellie blushed, "he—he might make a very good imitation prince for you. After the real prince has seen the plant and gone away, you could bring George home and introduce him as the prince to Mother and me. He would have tea with us and leave almost immediately."

"Nonsense!"

"It isn't nonsense! Mother would never know anything about it. And even if she did find out some day, it would be too late then to make a fuss."

"I didn't like that young man, Nellie."

"You never do like my young men, daddy."

"College boy, wasn't he?"

"He's graduated with honors. And daddy! he plays football just lovely!"

"I started in at eleven years—"

"Yes, I know," agreed Nellie hastily. "But it would be nicer to have your approval when we get married. Though mother doesn't know, yet, she has always said I could marry whoever I wished."

"But your mother would recognize him again as soon as she met him."

"No; she would only remark the resemblance. George wears eye-glasses and blue suits, while the prince is usually in gray; besides, while George was acting princely, he would be acting unnaturally, and would be quite different from his ordinary self."

"But the prince always has his secretary with him," objected Pa.

"Oh, I forgot," pouted Nellie, nonplussed for the moment, and then, "We could leave the secretary in the car, daddy," she cried naively.

"It might work."

"It will if you'll only say 'yes' to George. If you won't, well, you know what mother is, and you couldn't very well ask the prince to afternoon tea—even if we are kings—pickle kings."

"Peabody's Per—"

"Yes, of course," interrupted Nellie, "but you know mother—"

"All right, I'll say 'yes' to George, what's-his-name, Milkington?"

"Pilkington, daddy."

"It may work. I don't know. I never put anything over your Ma yet. She—"

Nellie's lips were pressed to her father's, so he could not finish.

JOSEPH spent most of his time at his club during the ensuing week. The respect begotten of experience, for his wife's analytical powers, suggested the wisdom of keeping beyond the disconcerting range of her scrutiny.

Each day was a growing horror. Each hour accentuated his misery. Each moment brought nearer the dreadful day. It dawned at last, dreary, hideous, unescapable.

The inspection passed off successfully. Joseph swelled and beamed beneath the royal commendation. Under its influence his spirits rose. Indeed, during the interval between his disposal of the prince and his arrival at his home with the impostor, hope flickered in his breast.

Then it suddenly flickered out. He had not counted on Mrs. Brown-Gorman being there. And Pa detested Mrs. Brown-Gorman. She always discovered him in his den, overflowed his favorite chair, eyed his carpet slippers and patronized him. She suffered from palpitation and tight lacing and set Pa's teeth on edge.

In negotiating his prince, Pa had not realized that if his wife's social career was to receive the impetus she apparently desired it to receive, and which only royalty could give, outside appreciation of the royal favor was necessary, hence Mrs. Brown-Gorman.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 43.)

"Do remove those spectacles, George. They completely destroy your royal resemblance."

TWO ON THE TRAIL

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6.)

It would have been patent to an infant that he had something on his mind. He was not thinking of the romantic journey that lay before him, that prospect, so exhilarating the past few days, had, upon the eve of realization, lost its savour. He would actually have welcomed an excuse to postpone it for a few days, so that he might spend a little more time at Papp's. It was a pair of flashing blue eyes—for blue eyes do flash, though they be not customarily shown to illustrate that capacity of the human eye which had disturbed his peace. He was not much dissatisfied with the part he had played at luncheon the day before. What he ought to have said and done was now distressingly clear to him, and he seized an opportunity to put it into practice. He had spent the whole middle part of this day at Papp's, loitering in the entrance to make sure the blue eyes should not be swallowed in one of the canons without his knowledge; but they had not illumined the place; nor had his cautious inquiries elicited a single clue to the identity of the possessor. He felt sure if he had three days more in Prince George he could discover her; but unfortunately the weekly stage for the North left the following morning; and the Bishop was waiting for him at the Landing; likewise the Leader back in New York was waiting for stories—and not about blue eyes. It was at this point in his circular train of reflections that he would resume packing with a gusty sigh.

He was interrupted by a knock on the door, and, upon opening it, was not a little astonished to receive a note from the hands of a boy, who signified his intention of waiting for an answer. It was contained in a thick, square envelope with a crest on the flap; and was addressed in a tall, angular, feminine hand. Garth, his mind ever running in the same course, tore it open with a crazy hope in his heart; but the first words brought him sharply back to earth.

"Will Mr. Garth Pevensey," thus it ran, "be good enough to oblige an old lady by calling at the Bristol Hotel this evening? Mrs. Mabyn will be awaiting him in the parlor; and as it concerns a matter of supreme importance to her, she trusts he will not fail her; no matter how late the hour at which he may be able to come."

Garth dismissed the boy with a message to the effect that he would answer the note in person. As he leisurely put his appearance in order, he thought: "Verily one's adventures begin upon leaving home." He was human, consequently his curiosity was pleasantly stimulated to discover what lay before him: but the little adjective in the first sentence of his appellant's letter was fatal to the idea of any violent enthusiasm on her behalf.

THE parlor of the Bristol Hotel was on the first floor above the street level. Garth paused at the door; and cast a glance about the room. It was empty except for two figures at the further end. The one he could see more plainly was an old lady sitting in an easy-chair; she was dressed in black, with a white cap and white wristbands; a spare, erect, little lady. Garth judged her to be the writer of the note. The other figure, also a woman, was partly hidden in a window embrasure. She was standing by the window holding the curtain back with one hand, and looking into the street. She turned her head to speak to the old lady; whereupon Garth's heart leapt in his bosom, the room rocked, and the chandeliers burst into song; that clear profile, that slender figure could belong to none in Prince George but Her! He was overcome with delight and amazement; he could scarcely credit his eyes. He wished in the same instant he had spent more care on his appearance, and that he had not kept them waiting so long.

The younger lady perceived him standing in the shadowy doorway, and came toward him.

"Mr. Pevensey?" she began in a voice of cool inquiry. Then she stopped aghast; and the color flamed into her face. "You!" she exclaimed in a voice too low to reach the older woman's ears. "Oh, I didn't know—I never suspected it might be you!"

Garth was conscious of a complicated feeling of irritation, a kind of jealousy of himself. "Why did they send for me, if they didn't know it was me?" was his thought.

"What must you think of me?" she said in obvious distress.

"I am in the dark," said Garth helplessly.

She recovered her forces. "I am not in the habit of going to restaurants alone," she said. "But the hotel here is so bad! I am afraid you must think me a frivolous person, and I am anxious you should not think so."

"I don't," said Garth bluntly.

She smiled. "Very well," she said; "then there's no harm done."

"Natalie!" called the old lady, with a hint of irritation.

"Come and meet Mrs. Mabyn," she said quickly; and led the way.

"This is Mr. Pevensey, Mrs. Mabyn," she said.

The old lady regarded Garth with a sharp scrutiny; and Garth looked with interest at her. She was a fragile, elegant, plaintive little person of the old "lady-like" régime; but for all her gentleness, Garth was somehow conscious that he faced a woman of an iron will. She had the impatient, inattentive manner of one possessed by a single idea. With the result of her examination she appeared but half satisfied; she held out a delicate, wrinkled hand, dubiously.

"How do you do?" she said. "Please sit down."

"I am Natalie Bland," further explained the girl, who had again retreated to the window embrasure. "Mrs. Mabyn and I are travelling together."

"Dear Natalie is a daughter to me," murmured Mrs. Mabyn with commendable feeling.

The two women exchanged a glance which Garth was at a loss to interpret. He was looking at Natalie and he thought he saw patience, real affection, and perhaps a little kindly amusement—but there was something beyond; something grimmer and more determined, a hint of rebellion.

"My husband, Canon Mabyn, was the rector of Christ's Church Cathedral in Millerton, Ontario, up to the time of his death," murmured Mrs. Mabyn in her dulcet tones, with the air of one delivering all-sufficient credentials.

Garth murmured to show that he was suitably impressed.

"You are from New York, I believe," said Mrs. Mabyn.

Garth acknowledged the fact.

"So the newspaper said," she remarked. "Of course, I know very few Americans, still it is possible we may have common friends. You—er—" She paused invitingly.

"Hadn't we better explain why we asked Mr. Pevensey to call?" put in Natalie quietly.

"My dear, Mr. Pevensey was just about to tell me of his people," Mrs. Mabyn said in tones of gentle reproof.

Garth saw what the old lady would be after. "My father, Lieutenant Raymond Pevensey, was in the Navy," he said. "He was killed by a powder explosion on the gunboat Arkadelphia, twelve years ago."

"Dear me, how unfortunate!" murmured Mrs. Mabyn sympathetically; but it rang chillingly, and her abstracted eyes dwelt throughout upon that relentless thought of hers, whatever it was.

"I am related distantly to the Buhannons of Richmond, and the Mainwarings of Philadelphia," continued Garth, willing to humor her.

"There was a Mainwaring at Chelsea with my husband as a boy," remarked Mrs. Mabyn.

"Probably my great-uncle," he said. "In this part of the world," he went on, "there is no one who knows me beyond mere acquaintanceship, except the Bishop of Miwasa—"

"Pray say no more, Mr. Pevensey," interrupted Mrs. Mabyn. "The mere fact that the Bishop invited you to accompany him is, after all, sufficient." She turned to the girl. "You may continue, dear Natalie."

"We read in this evening's paper," began that young lady with a directness refreshing after Mrs. Mabyn's circumlocutions; "that you were starting for Miwasa Landing to-morrow morning, to join the Bishop on his annual tour. We wished particularly to see you before you started; and that is why I—why Mrs. Mabyn wrote."

"We thank you for coming so promptly," put in Mrs. Mabyn with her gracious air.

Garth murmured truthfully that the pleasure was his. He felt himself on the breathless verge of a discovery. Intuition warned him of what was coming; but he could not believe it yet.

"Mr. Pevensey," resumed the young lady as if with an effort; she had the humility of a proud soul who stoops to ask a favor; "we are going to make a very strange request, as from total strangers."

Mrs. Mabyn raised an agitated hand. "Wait, wait, my dear Natalie," she objected. "Perhaps after all, we had better go no further. I—I think we had better give the plan up," she said in apparently the deepest distress.

The girl turned a patient shoulder, and looked into the street again, abstractedly playing with the cord of the blind.

"It is really too much to ask of you," continued Mrs. Mabyn distressfully; "and I am so afraid for Natalie! Natalie is so very dear to me. The situation is so unusual!" she wailed.

Poor Garth was sadly perplexed and exasperated by all this. The discovery he anticipated was now apparently in retreat.

"We are glad, anyway, to have had the pleasure of making your acquaintance," said Mrs. Mabyn with an air of finality.

Suddenly it was borne in upon Garth, partly from the girl's patient attitude, partly from the other's emphasis upon her distress, that it was simply, in newspaper parlance, all a bluff on the part of the older woman. Her fanatic eyes seemed to tell him that she was still bent on her object, whatever it might be. Experience had taught him that the quickest way to find out if he were right was to seem to fall in with her desire. So he promptly rose as if to leave. It worked.

Mrs. Mabyn's eyes snapped. She did not relish being taken up so quickly. "One moment, Mr. Pevensey," she said plaintively—and hastily. "Overlook the distraction of an old woman; I am torn two ways!"

Garth understood by this that the matter was reopened; and sat down again. There was a pause, while the old lady struggled, with the air of a martyr, to regain her composure. The girl continued to look stolidly out of the window; and Garth simply waited for what was coming.

"You may continue, Natalie," said Mrs. Mabyn at length, faintly.

The girl resumed her explanation at the exact point where she left off. "We expected—that is, we

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 41.)

First Prize Sampler

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The sampler contest for members of the Women's Institutes (which closed on November 1st), brought us some interesting stories and picturesque photographs. The prize of fifteen dollars was won by Mrs. Welford, of Port Arthur, whose sampler is "pictured" on page 13 and is, indeed, a work of art. A special second prize of ten dollars was won by Mrs. Morgan B. Long, Creston, B.C.

AN OLD SAMPLER! As it hangs before me, framed in its old rosewood frame, its companion for seventy-six years, what memories it calls to mind.

From my earliest recollections, it occupied a prominent place in the home of my childhood in dear old England, and now takes the same position in my little home in this grand, new country of Canada.

As you will see from the photograph, it is the work of Mary Ann Noble, her work finished January 17th, 1844, aged 12 years. My mother. The Sampler measures eighteen by twenty-four inches, is seventy-six years old, and was begun and completed in one year. It is worked on the finest silk canvas, and is a most wonderful exhibition of patience, industry, most beautiful needlework, perfect blending of colors, and includes in its wonders, a sweet and perfect representation of a village at the top of the Sampler.

My dear mother, who died a few years ago at the age of eighty-one, was often coaxed by us children to tell the history of her Sampler. She was born in London, England, in the reign of William IV., and so lived in the reign of four Sovereigns. She was an exceedingly intellectual and well-read woman, even up to the time of her death taking a keen interest in good books and all the current topics of the day. Most of her education, like that of many other people, was gained after her school days were over. Her first years of study were spent in what, at that time, was called "A Dame's School," kept by an old lady, whose teaching capabilities were confined to a limited knowledge of the three "R's" and an extensive knowledge of Sampler work.

From the appearance of this Sampler, the Dame's idea was, as mother used to say, "to fill up every available inch of canvas," regardless of the general scheme, but this of course, constitutes one of its greatest charms.

My mother, who must have been passionately fond of her work, had to pass, on her way to school, two large fancy-work stores in Oxford Street. Here, she would stand and gaze so long and earnestly at the patterns of needlework and beautiful silks exhibited in the windows, that she could go home and reproduce them on her own canvas.

This "shop gazing," of course, sometimes caused her to be late for school. I do not know if her excuse was, "The study of art," or that lateness for school was not such a serious offence as in these days, but I do not remember mother ever telling us that she was punished for it.

We can just picture the little earnest child, with her soft brown eyes and auburn hair, so fascinated by the wonders and beauties of the "wool shop," that she heeds not the flight of time, or the noise and bustle of life in the busy London streets.

The manager of one of these stores, noticing the child's frequent visits to their window, called her in one day, and after seeing some of her work, gave her a small order. This led to several large commissions for footstools, fenderstools, cushion covers, and many other articles, some of which are now in my possession.

Her work was the chief joy of her life. Just as an artist lives in the creation of his pictures, so her whole interest in life was for her needlework.

I regret to say that the owner of the other store was not so kind as the first, for seeing the little girl one day copying a pattern from a piece of work in the window, he pulled down the blind.

Father used to tease mother, and laugh at all the little bits stuck in: the pair of gorgeous roosters, the butterflies; the parrots perched on the topmost branches of the trees; the stars; the birds; crowns; horsemen; baskets; fish; vases; urns; flowers; the French girl from the castle, who has piled up her large basket with ripe fruits; and many other details.

At the top of the Sampler is the wonderful little village, with its church and school. Mother often wished to make an enlarged copy of this, but never found the time to do so. The scene near the foot of the Sampler, appears to be a corner in a park, or well-kept garden. Here we see the beautifully shaded trees of various kinds; the border; the different colored flowers; the secluded seat; and the ancient couple, taking a walk and no doubt, enjoying it. And last, but not least, the funny, irregular corners of the border.

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Welford, 16 N. Hill Street, Port Arthur, Ontario.

A member of the McIntyre Branch of the Women's Institute, Port Arthur, Ontario.

The First Prize Sampler

The Sampler Contest held in the autumn resulted in many attractive specimens of this "art of our grandmothers" being sent. This shows the first-prize photograph, and a story of the sampler may be found on opposite page.

A Day With a Film Producer

ARS LONGA, VITA BREVIS

By M.F.S.

ILLUSTRATED BY GUINEVERE PARTRIDGE

"You look as though you could learn something. Report here at eight o'clock to-morrow morning. I mean eight o'clock and not half past nine," were the parting words of the director as I said good-night to him.

A social service worker who lives amongst the tragedies of the poor, I had been inspired to spend my holidays, not in lolling on a porch, but in a change of work that I felt sure would restore laughter, color and temperament to my starved nature.

In this Spanish director of a Canadian film company I had run into what I craved; dark clever face, his blue-black hair fantastically clipped on the cheeks gave a toreador touch, like a picture by Sorolla. He was all artist, all earnestness. No one is more in earnest than the actor. It is impossible for him to separate his work from his life, it is his life, more, his very self.

"Yes, an actor since I was so high! From Argentina alone, not knowing the language, I came North to work for nothing, for bread, to learn the Cinema business. Once I was -three days without food!"

Like a child who boasts for your amusement, and like a child because he more than half believes in what he boasts, the director continued. "Put me on an island with the King of England, and I will show you at the end of the week, who would have the crown and the palace!"

His golden skin did not change as he made this remark and added: "I'm that sort of man, put me in a city with fifteen cents in my pocket and I'll make money. They say I am a hard man to work for." This last with the first sign of pride!

This conversation took place in the "Studio," in the basement of a big office building. Three other hot and sweating men, who, when I entered, had been discussing with the director the merits of the new film they were unrolling from the little wheel clamped to the table, politely withdrew to the hall, while the director put me through the third degree and told me somewhat of his struggles to give the public Canadian films. "They want all-Canadian pictures," he put his hand over his blue-black hair wearily, "but they do not realize that to do that we must have Canadian actors and actresses, a Canadian school of acting is not developed in a day! First, I must train my actors before we can do the big pictures, train them in little rural comedies such as we are working on now, then 'The Big Historical Drama' which you speak of. Ah! But that means artistic accessories, costume designers, backgrounds. Do you know why so many companies in this country have failed? It is because your financial men have not supported us, they expect us to make bricks without straw. Also south of this country you will not find a farmer who is not civil and delighted to allow a producer to take a picture on his property."

Humbly I advertised the fact that I was no actress but could paddle, shoot rapids for him perhaps, or ride a horse. "Could you drive a cow across the road?" "Yes." "You will need some country

He was all artist, all earnestness.

He left with a backward glance at our happy party.

there's a wull there's generally a way," said the good Scot as he made an amateurish attempt at a goatee, and glued the finished article on the victim's chin, following it up with side whiskers. These were made from something that looked like a fine rope.

M'Corkill showed me with pride his new make-up box; formerly containing "blue parchment and envelopes," now adorned with a picture of Charlie Chaplin and some smiling beauties of the screen world. "The greatest artist in the world," said the little Scotchman reverently.

Here's to you, M'Corkill, and your talent and your good humor and your patience!

Helpless in our make-up, we waited. Time went on. I wondered if these people ever ate! This doubt was settled by the disappearance of M'Corkill, his reappearance, bearing luscious "ham-and-s," doughnuts, coffee and milk! The Irrepressible Youth mentioned lemon pie, but it was promptly vetoed as "bad with make-up." As we sat happily round the table, the fattest-man-on-earth, the Youth, the little "Baby Vamp," Scottie and self, a shabby, clever-looking man came to the door of the studio and asked for the director. "He's out shooting," said Scottie, "is there a message I could give him?"

"Oh! Tell him I'm just a poor little actor home from the States!" He left with a backward glance at our happy party, leaving me to meditate at the precariousness of this profession and to wonder, with a great sympathy, what it was that kept these children of Art so faithful to so fickle a mistress. The tedious, careful science of "make-up!" That boy with his weird blue eyelids and his chalk-white face, what a model for Maxfield Parrish! His carefully cherished lank red locks and hobble-de-hoy figure were the only things about him that seemed to partake of the character he portrayed, a farm lad honest and good; all else about him spoke of the city. He appealed to one as the Spirit of Youth, his "I'll tell the world" and frequent stories of success with the ladies only made his youthfulness more apparent, a would-be Don Juan, who played a part to impress the equally youthful "Baby Vamp." He hinted at great adventures by flood and field, and no doubt had the stories to tell, as he wore his Mons ribbon and bronze button. "Deep within the cubling's breast there beats the lion heart."

M'Corkill had recently returned from California. "where the hospitals are full of movie actors." He said: "The public has no idea! Ye'll hit a fellow with a brick and half kill him, and the audience will laugh!"

"Eating, are you, while we work!" said a voice. The rest of our company poured in, hot, tired and hungry. "Out with you others now," said the director. Directors and camera men, it appears, neither eat nor sleep while the sun shines! Into the car we piled, props such as ragged hats, extra waistcoats, a change for the hero, piled on our laps. "Get up, please, you are sitting on the plates!" I rose hastily, in time to save an unimportant-looking black bag from destruction! "Has anyone brought make-up?" M'Corkill has it, of course! One of the men will make-up on the spot, as time is precious now. A rural sign-post is thrust into the car, a most essential "prop" as round it centres the action of our scene. Ignoring the muttered words of the driver, "that something was rattling in the old girl," the director gave the word to start.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 39.)

Were I a heroine, I should be facing sunstroke with bobbed hair.

clothes—an old woman—character part." Rapidly he sketched the scene for me.

Fascinated by this absorbing life and these people, absorbed as are children in their games, I returned to my prim flat to ransack my band-boxes for really old clothes.

NEXT morning I was the first to appear at the studio. Time dragged. "A quarter to nine, why on earth is that girl not here, I'll need her first of all."

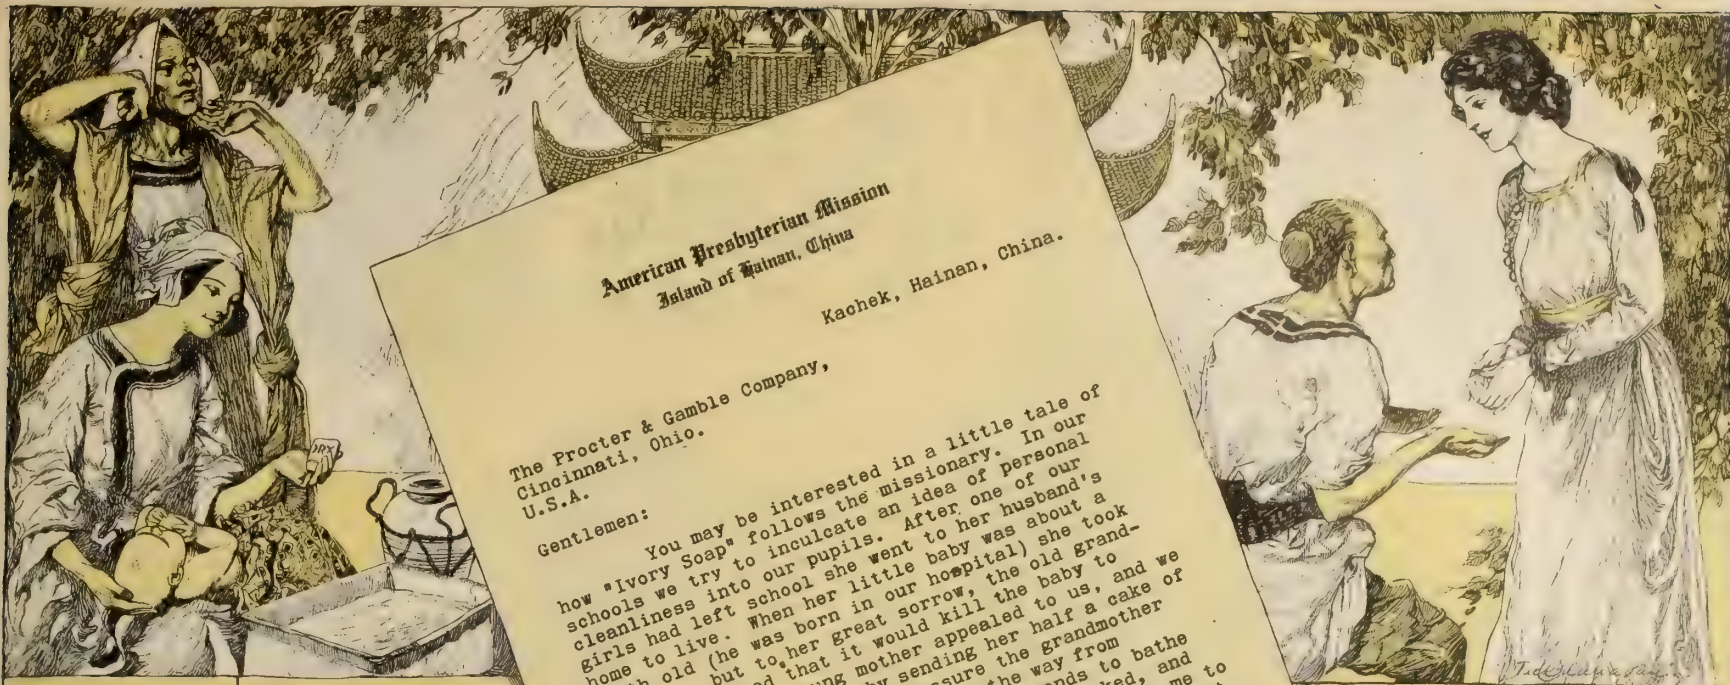

"He's talking about our baby vamp," said the Irrepressible Youth, "here she comes, now watch the fun."

Director, very meekly, after one glance from those blue eyes, "Yes, Miss So-and-so, it is a little after eight, make-up on at once please. I'll need you, and you, and you at once, we'll shoot at the farm this morning." After more delays, a powder box that would not open and got everybody on edge, a paper shade that shifted the strong light at the most critical point of make-up, they were off!

I proceeded to get my first lesson in the art of make-up, first ("with clean fingers," said the Irrepressible One) the cold cream, from the largest tin I had ever seen, evenly put on and wiped off, then "Flesh paint No. 2" rubbed over the face and neck. Then the real make-up, altering one's eyebrows to fit the character, wrinkles, black pencil "under, not over the lashes, Miss." "Hold that mirror steady, d— that shade."

A Scotchman was our mentor in all this delicate work. "Am I all right, M'Corkill, how about the left eye-brow?" "You'll hae to tak it off wi' a bit o' cold cream and start anew." Our director's right hand was M'Corkill, nurse, guide and friend to us all, adaptability, personified. "Where

American Presbyterian Mission
Island of Hainan, China
Kachek, Hainan, China.

The Procter & Gamble Company,
Cincinnati, Ohio.
U.S.A.

Gentlemen:

You may be interested in a little tale of how "Ivory Soap" follows the missionary. In our schools we try to inculcate an idea of personal cleanliness into our pupils. After one of our girls had left school she went to her husband's home to live. When her little baby was about a month old (he was born in our hospital) she took him home, but to her great sorrow, the old grandmother insisted that it would kill the baby to bathe him. The young mother appealed to us, and we solved the difficulty by sending her half a cake of Ivory, and telling her to assure the grandmother that this fine soap, coming all the way from America, was the soap used in many lands to bathe the babies and never injured one. It worked, and yesterday the young father came to me begging me to sell him another cake "of that nice white soap that was so good for the baby", and went off very pleased with the cake I gave him.

Sincerely yours,

M. M. Mouinger
Kachek, Hainan, China

BABIES the world over are happier and healthier because of Ivory Soap.

Its pure, mild, velvety lather always feels cool and soothing to baby's tender skin—gives him the perfect body comfort that is as important to his well-being as is cleanliness itself.

IVORY SOAP . . .  . . . 99 <sup>44</sup>/<sub>100</sub> % PURE
IT FLOATS

The manufacturers of Ivory Soap also make in Canada the following general household soaps: P and G The White Naphtha Soap, Gold Soap, Pearline and Sopade, thus enabling the housekeeper to use a Procter & Gamble high quality soap for every purpose.

HOW TO COOK POULTRY AND GAME

By MARION HARRIS NEIL

AUTHOR OF "THE THRIFT COOK BOOK."

Editor's Note.—This article is one of the latest written by Marion Harris Neil, whose death in November at her beautiful home, "Greenacres," Oradell, New Jersey, was regretted by a wide circle of friends and admirers. She had won the highest distinction in the work to which she had devoted herself, and her personality was of such charm and warmth that she had made a host of friends. Her sister and associate, Miss Mary M. Neil, will continue this column.

POUULTY and game form an important part of our menu. It is highly essential, therefore, that the art of cooking game to perfection should be thoroughly mastered.

On choosing poultry:—All poultry when young should have smooth and pliable legs, with the scales overlapping very slightly. The spur on the leg of the male bird must be short, and the feet should be soft. The flesh should be without long hairs. When choosing a bird that has not been plucked, one should see that the plumage is smooth and downy. If freshly killed, the eyes will be clear and not sunken; there will be no discoloration of the flesh and the vent will be hard and close. For roasting, choose a fowl with black or yellow legs and for boiling, choose one with white legs, as the flesh will be whiter. A fowl for roasting, frying, or grilling should be young and tender, but for boiling, braising, or stewing an older one may be taken, as old birds are generally cheaper, and long, slow cooking makes them tender.

Young ducks have yellow feet and bills; as they become older these become darker and redder. The wild duck is an exception, as it has small reddish feet even when young. The under bill should be soft and easily broken when bent, the legs should be smooth, and the breast should be plump.

A goose should always be eaten when young. The legs should be yellow and pliable, the breast should be plump, but without too much fat, and the skin smooth.

A good turkey will be recognized by the whiteness of its skin and its smooth black legs. The wattles should be a bright red, and the breast broad and plump, with the end of the bone tender.

A dark-colored pigeon is thought to have the highest flavor, and a light-colored one the most delicate. The legs should be of a pinkish color and the breast plump. A squab is a young pigeon.

A capon is a fowl which undergoes special treatment when young to prevent generating. In consequence, they grow to a large size and are much finer and better in flavor than the ordinary fowl.

Roast Capon.—Singe, draw and truss a large capon, cover the bird with drippings, and roast in a hot oven. Baste well with melted fat and turn frequently during the process of cooking, and dredge with flour when nearly done. Remove the capon from the pan, pour off any fat, add one cupful of brown stock and boil up, season with salt, pepper and paprika, and strain. Garnish the dish with parsley and serve the capon with bread sauce. To make the bread sauce, scald two cupfuls of milk, add one chopped onion, one bay leaf, one blade of mace, a few sprigs of parsley, two cloves, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and one-fourth teaspoonful each of pepper and paprika and cook for thirty minutes, then strain, add three tablespoonfuls of butter and one-half cupful of fine bread crumbs, cook for twenty-five minutes, and use.

Rabbit en Casserole.—Skin and joint one rabbit, then put into a casserole dish, add one sliced onion, one stalk of celery diced, one-half cupful of chopped carrots, one tablespoonful of drippings, and one cupful of cold water. Bring to boiling point, then simmer for thirty minutes, remove the rabbit, add one tablespoonful of butter, one tablespoonful of flour, stir over the fire until brown, then add two cupfuls of hot water or stock, stir until blended, then add one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper and the pieces of rabbit. Cover and bake for one hour. Serve in the casserole.

Chicken may be cooked in the same way.

Ox Tongue with Caper Sauce.—Cut a cold cooked tongue into slices and fry in melted hot drippings for a few minutes and keep hot until the sauce is ready. For the sauce, take the fat in which the tongue was fried, strain it and return it to the pan. Add one tablespoonful of flour, one-half cupful of boiling water and stir until smooth, then add salt and pepper to taste and two tablespoonfuls of capers, boil for two minutes, and pour over the tongue.

Ox Tongue with Caper Sauce.

Tongue is really a most economical kind of meat to purchase, for it is solid meat, and is both tasty and nourishing.

Raised Game Pie.

Raised Game Pie.—Almost any uncooked game may be used for making a raised pie, or a mixture of game is very good. Pick and clean the birds, and cut them in neat joints. If large, the carcass bones should be removed and used for making stock. Chop up the livers and the hearts, fry them for five minutes in hot butter, and then mix them with the pieces of game. Now prepare a forcemeat, put one-half pound of veal and ham through a food chopper, add one-half cupful of bread crumbs, season with salt, pepper and paprika, add the grated rind and strained juice of one-half lemon, and a pinch of powdered nutmeg. Make raised pie crust, and roll it out one-third of an inch in thickness. Grease a raised pie mould and line it with the pastry, pressing it carefully into the shape of the mould. Put a layer of the forcemeat all over the pastry, and fill up the centre with the pieces of game and two slices of cooked bacon cut in strips, seasoning them with salt and pepper. Add one tablespoonful of chopped parsley and one teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce. Cover with another layer of forcemeat and then put on a lid of pastry. Trim the edges neatly, make a hole in the top, and decorate with some leaves of the pastry. Brush over the top with beaten egg, and tie a band of greased paper round the outside of the mould and standing three inches above the top of the pie, so as to protect it while cooking. Bake in a moderate oven for three and one-half hours. Allow the pie to stand for a short time after removing it from the oven, then remove the mould, fill up the pie with a little good thick stock, and serve cold. Ordinary sausage meat may be used instead of the above forcemeat. A few pickled walnuts may be added to the pie if desired.

Rabbit en Casserole.

To Make the Pastry.—Sift two cupfuls of flour with one-half teaspoonful of salt into a bowl, cut and rub in four tablespoonfuls each of lard and butter. Butter alone should not be used, as it would make the pastry too soft. Mix together with the yolk of one egg and a very little water, keeping the pastry as dry as possible. Knead well, wrap it in a wet towel, and allow to stand for thirty minutes, then use.

Duck, Stuffed and Roasted.—Singe and draw one duck, making a slit lengthwise above the vent, to facilitate the pulling out of the inside. Then wash the bird quickly in warm water and dry it in a cloth. Cut off the feet and the wings at the first joint and season the bird with salt inside and outside, and fill with the following stuffing:—Peel four cooking apples, then core and cut into small pieces, add six stoned prunes which have been soaked over night. Put this mixture into the body of the duck and sew up the opening, then truss it into shape. When roasting, keep the breast of the bird well covered with greased paper, and baste frequently with hot drippings and cook for one hour. A short time before taking the duck from the oven, remove the paper, dredge the breast with flour and leave it in the oven until nicely browned. When ready, lift on to a hot platter, remove all the trussing threads and strings, and keep it hot while making the gravy. Pour away most of the fat from the roasting tin, leaving only one tablespoonful, add one tablespoonful of cornstarch or flour, stir until smooth, then pour in one cupful of stock or water, stir until boiling, cook for five minutes, season to taste, strain and serve. Garnish the duck with parsley, fried apple rings, stoned olives and celery.

Other stuffings may be used instead of the above, such as sage and onion, or walnut, or plain mashed potatoes nicely seasoned.

Stewed Fowl With Dumplings.—Cut one chicken in small neat joints, wash these carefully, place them in a saucepan with cold water to cover them, and bring them slowly to the boil, then add one teaspoonful of salt, two sticks of celery, one bay leaf, two sprigs of parsley, one onion cut in small pieces and one carrot cut in dice. Put the lid on the pan, bring to boiling point, then simmer until the fowl is tender, lift out the pieces and strain the gravy.

To make the dumplings:—Sift two cupfuls of flour with one-half teaspoonful of salt, and one teaspoonful of baking powder into a bowl, cut and rub in two tablespoonfuls of butter, then make into a stiff dough with a little milk or water, turn out on to a floured board, roll out, and cut into small rounds. Bring the strained gravy to the boil, drop in the dumplings and cook for fifteen minutes with the lid on the pan. Drain and serve with the chicken.

Duck Stuffed and Roasted.

Stewed Fowl with Dumplings.

Pompeian

NIGHT CREAM

Secrets

"Yes, I use Pompeian NIGHT Cream, too. Wherever I travel it always protects my skin, no matter what the climate or season may be."

If you use Pompeian NIGHT Cream (an improved cold cream) regularly before retiring each night, your face will keep its fresh, girlish charm. It will bring while you sleep the beauty of a soft, youthful skin. Chaps and wind-roughened skin are soothed. Pompeian NIGHT Cream is for sale at all druggists at 50c and $1.00 a jar.

Other popular Pompeian toilet preparations are the 60c Pompeian DAY Cream (vanishing), which removes face shine; Pompeian BEAUTY Powder (60c), a powder that stays on; Pompeian BLOOM (60c), a rouge that won't crumble; Pompeian MASSAGE Cream (60c); and Pompeian FRAGRANCE (30c), a talcum with an exquisite new odor—white and pink shades. Tear off the coupon now.

Marguerite Clark Art Panel 5 Samples Sent With It

Miss Clark posed especially for this 1921 Pompeian Beauty Art Panel entitled, "Absence Can Not Hearts Divide." The rare beauty and charm of Miss Clark are revealed in dainty colors. Size, 28 x 7 1/4 inches. Price, 10c. Samples of Pompeian Day Cream, Powder and Bloom, Night Cream and Fragrance (a talcum powder), sent with the Art Panel. With these samples you can make many interesting beauty experiments. Please tear off coupon now.

THE POMPEIAN COMPANY
3 Wyandotte Ave., Walkerville, Ontario, Canada

"Don't Envy Beauty
—Use Pompeian"

GUARANTEE

The name Pompeian on any package is your guarantee of quality and safety. Should you not be completely satisfied, the purchase price will be gladly refunded by The Pompeian Co., at Walkerville, Ontario, Canada.

TEAR OFF NOW

To mail or for Pompeian shopping list, please

THE POMPEIAN COMPANY

3 Wyandotte Ave., Walkerville, Ontario, Canada

Gentlemen: I enclose a time for 1921 Marguerite Clark Art Panel. Also please send 5 samples named in order.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

Prov. _____

Please state power sent unless you write and to return

"Its fragrance brings you instant charm."

"Absence Can Not Hearts Divide"

Copyrighted in Canada, 1920, The Palmolive Company of Canada, Limited

The Cosmetics of Cleopatra

HOW did Cleopatra wash her face? What cleansers did she use? Did she enhance her beauty with cosmetics?

Hieroglyphic records prove that while the finish of the royal toilet may have been rouging with carmine or vermillion, thorough, radiant cleanliness was always the foundation.

And the cleaners?—Palm and Olive oils—the same rare oils which produce a famous toilet soap today.

Remember that rouge and powder are harmless enough when applied to a clean skin and profit by the beauty secret of Cleopatra.

Wash your face with the same bland, beneficial cleansers the beauty-loving queen employed—scientifically combined in mild, soothing Palmolive.

Wash away imperfections

Work up a profuse thick lather from this gentlest of all soaps. Massage it thoroughly into every pore.

Don't be afraid of irritation—Palmolive is mild as cream. Rub gently, of course, for you must not roughen the delicate texture of the skin. Then rinse carefully in pleasantly warm water and end with a dash in cold.

This simple beauty treatment washes away imperfections. The Palmolive lather carries off dirt, excessive oil secretions, dead skin and the traces of rouge and powder which otherwise clog up the pores. No foreign substances are left to poison the skin with disfiguring blotches and imperfections.

If your skin is inclined to dryness apply Palmolive Cold Cream before you begin washing. This supplements the natural oil that keeps it smooth and supple.

If we made Palmolive in small quantities—

It would necessarily be a very expensive soap. Palm and Olive oils are costly and come from overseas.

But we import them in enormous volume and the Palmolive factories work day and night.

This gigantic production reduces cost and the price of Palmolive is no more than ordinary soaps. It is within the reach of all for every toilet purpose, the greatest of modern luxuries.

Palmolive is sold by dealers everywhere. It is made by

Why men have the best skins

Not from care, you may be sure. Men are thorough when they have used plenty of soap and water. Yet most men have finer and firmer skin than the average woman. And they usually look younger.

Soap and water is the answer—soap for thorough cleansing, water to harden and invigorate. Fine soap, of course, soap that cleanses without harshness. Preferably soap that is made from Palm and Olive oil—mild, soothing Palmolive.

Women may safely use rouge and powder if they will first thoroughly wash the face with mild, gentle Palmolive.

THE PALMOLIVE COMPANY OF CANADA, Limited, Toronto, Ontario
The Palmolive Company, Milwaukee, U. S. A.

PALMOLIVE

CANADIAN WOMEN'S INSTITUTES

PROVINCIAL SUPERINTENDENTS

ALBERTA . . . . . Miss Mary MacIsaac . . . . . Edmonton, Alta.
BRITISH COLUMBIA . . . . . Miss Olive E. Hayes . . . . . Victoria, B.C.
MANITOBA . . . . . Mr. S. T. Newton . . . . . Winnipeg, Man.
NEW BRUNSWICK . . . . . Miss Hazel McCain . . . . . Fredericton, N.B.
NOVA SCOTIA . . . . . Miss Helen J. Macdougall . . . . . Truro, N.S.

PROVINCIAL SUPERINTENDENTS

ONTARIO . . . . . Mr. George A. Putnam . . . . . Toronto, Ont.
PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND . . . . . Miss Della E. Saunders . . . . . Charlottetown, P.E.I.
QUEBEC . . . . . Miss M. May Chute . . . . . Macdonald College, Que.
SASKATCHEWAN . . . . . Miss Abbie DeLury . . . . . Saskatoon, Sask.

IT is written that some thirty years ago a small group of women gathered together in the little village of Stoney Creek, Ontario, to form an organization, the chief aim of which would be to improve rural home conditions, to provide a social medium for rural women, and generally to raise the standard of living in the country.

So successful was that small organization—and so far did "Those echoes roll from soul to soul and grow forever and forever" that other near-by communities heard of the good results and formed Women's Institutes of their own. The movement spread without central organization or propaganda for many years until the various provincial Governments and in some instances the agricultural colleges became aware of the economic and educational value of the Institutes and gave official and authoritative encouragement to the movement. They formed central organizations in Government departments, with a Government official at the head, known as the superintendent; they provided expert lecturers, put on short courses in home economics, home nursing and sewing, disseminated helpful literature on home problems and gave money grants.

Very shortly the United States imitated the organization, and in many States similar organizations were formed. A special feature of their work is the excellent literature they publish. Some years ago the Belgian Government sent a Commission to Canada to enquire into the working of Women's Institutes. On their return the Commission recommended their formation in Belgium under the general title "Les Cercles des Fermieres." They have proved successful, and have won a place for themselves in the farm and village life.

Women's Institutes were started in England and Wales in 1915 by the Agricultural Organization Society, the idea being introduced by a Canadian woman, Mrs. Alfred Watt. In a very short period they have had remarkable growth, there being over sixteen hundred branches in England and Wales.

Ontario Leads in W. I. Work.

MANY good ideas have come from Old Ontario, but there never was a better one than the Women's Institute. Although the first branch was organized thirty years ago, it was only in 1897 that the work was handled under the Department of Agriculture. To-day there are over nine hundred branches, with some thirty-five thousand members, and the membership is growing rapidly all the time. So varied have been the activities of the Ontario Women's Institutes—both in peace time and war-time—that it is difficult in a short space to give any adequate idea of them. However, on touching them, the work of medical inspection in the schools seems to predominate. It was the Women's Institutes of Ontario that agitated this important social work, which has been handed on to its proper department now, that of education. During the past year from 22,000 to 30,000 school children were inspected while 1,500 operations have been performed. The rest-room idea has developed into the "Central Rest Room," which is located in a village and several Women's Institutes in the surrounding country contribute to its support. Community work has expressed itself in the building of community halls, the upkeep of community parks and supervised playgrounds, where the equipment is provided in many cases by the W. I. The Ontario W. I.'s started also the travelling libraries and encouraged communities to get libraries of their own. Arbor Days have been used as occasions to beautify the town parks and schools particularly, and in many places the W. I. has co-operated with the fire marshal's department in clean-up campaigns. Agricultural fairs have been the objects of W. I. endeavor, in personal patronage, special prizes and members on the board. Only last year the various Institutes in Ontario federated under a central organization, with Mrs. William Todd, of Orillia, as president. This year Ontario has led the way in the establishment of training schools at the close of their district conventions, where workers have been trained in the principles and practices of Women's Institutes.

Mr. George A. Putnam, a graduate of the O. A. C., Guelph, is the superintendent of the Ontario Women's Institutes, and he has occupied that position for seventeen years—which fact is a tribute in itself to his organizing and co-operative ability. Before taking over the W. I. work he was connected with the Farmers' Institutes, of which the Women's Institute is an outgrowth.

Phenomenal Growth in Alberta.

THE success of any large organized work is to a large extent the reflection of the personality behind it—and just as the Women's Institutes in England reflect the vigorous enthusiastic work

Provincial Development of the Women's Institutes

By ELIZABETH BAILEY PRICE

of Mrs. Alfred Watt, so do the Alberta Women's Institutes reflect the masterly organization and the far-sightedness of Miss Mary MacIsaac. Although Alberta can only boast the population of the city of Toronto, the number of branches and membership of the Alberta Women's Institutes take second place in Canada, and Government assistance and organization began only in 1912. The first Institute in Alberta was organized in Lea Park in 1909 by Mrs. Graham. In 1912 the few branches in existence were assimilated under the Department of Agriculture. In 1915 when Miss Mary MacIsaac was appointed the first superintendent, they numbered 42, with a membership of 1,200. To-day they number approximately 300 branches, with a membership of 15,000, which is a phenomenal growth when one considers the population and the pioneer conditions of Alberta. Every year each Institute has the privilege of a short course in sewing, home economics and nursing, or the privilege of a speaker. Consequently an arduous educational campaign during the summer months is the result. At present plans are being considered of having short courses in handicraft work similar to those in England. Community work has been done along the lines of rest-rooms and community halls—there being some sixty of these in Alberta to-day. The beautifying of the cemetery has been a great pioneer work in which these organizations have led the way. Solving the health problems in working for municipal hospitals, educational campaigns on feeding children, distribution of literature on care of the child, has been a splendid work done. Scholarships in agricultural schools (this means the raising of two hundred dollars to send a girl for a term) has been a very important work of the W. I. in Alberta.

Miss Mary MacIsaac is a native of Prince Edward Island, having received part of her education at the Prince of Wales College. She is a graduate of Toronto General Hospital, and was superintendent of the Edmonton City Hospital, Edmonton, where she established the most northern training school for nurses in Canada.

Saskatchewan Home-makers' Clubs.

NEXT in growth come the Home-makers' Clubs of Saskatchewan, which number 180 branches, with nearly five thousand members. What a fine name for a club—especially in a pioneer province such as Saskatchewan, and one has only to follow the work of these clubs, which were organized in 1910, to see that they have lived up to their name. Saskatchewan Home-makers' Clubs have led the way in the help they have given to the Home Branch of the Soldiers' Settlement Department. Short courses, completely organized both as to educational and social benefit, were put on, and many a soldier's bride will be grateful to these women for the material assistance they were given in learning some of the rudiments of living conditions in a new country—a country so entirely different to the Motherland. They were taught as many practical things as could be crowded in the few days—bread-making, care of poultry, and dress-making—especially making over. In addition to the regular activities that a Home-makers' Club can take up there are some outstanding features of the Saskatchewan H. M. C.'s. This year they have raised funds to give a two years' scholarship for household science training, and when this is completed the successful candidate will take up work in the foreign settlements. It is a recognized fact that the Canadianizing of our new citizens can only be accomplished by trained teachers who will live among them, and providing these by the scholarship method is one of the aims of the Home-makers' Clubs. Public health and child welfare work has been accomplished by direct instruction in the form of Home Nursing courses, the holding of baby clinics in connection with school fairs and the distribution of literature. Agricultural work has expressed itself in the holding of school fairs, and agricultural fairs.

This work is directed by Miss Abbie de Lury, who is an Ontarian by birth. She has taken a two years' course in Household Science at Guelph, followed by a year's course in Household Science at Columbia University. For two years Miss de Lury taught at Macdonald College in Quebec, then went West, where she organized the Household Science in the Moose Jaw Public schools, and Collegiate Institute, and taught there for three years. Afterwards Miss de Lury was called to the University of Saskatchewan to direct the Home-makers' Clubs until such time as a course in Household Science could be started, and when that time came Miss de Lury chose to stay with the extension course.

Work in Quebec Divided.

WOMEN'S Institute work in Quebec is divided in two sections—the Women's Institutes, originally the Home-makers' Clubs, and Les Cercles des Fermieres. The Women's Institutes of Quebec differ from similar organizations in other provinces in that they owe their origin to the efforts of a few earnest women, and not to any outside initiative, as is the case in other parts of Canada, where Government assistance is made establishment possible. The first club was organized in January, 1911, and in March of the same year two other clubs were formed. Appeals were made to Macdonald College at Ste. Anne de Bellevue for assistance, and a member of the staff helped in the organization. In 1913 the work had grown to such an extent that Macdonald College added to the staff of the School of Household Science a member, whose duty was to take charge of this work. This member, Mrs. N. C. MacFarlane, remained until her death in 1919. The work grew rapidly under her guidance, and during the years of struggle was a valuable assistant to the

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 22.)

AN OFFICIAL APPOINTMENT.

R. S. Hamilton, Esq.,
Canadian Home Journal,
Richmond and Sheppard Streets,
Toronto, Ont.

My dear Mr. Hamilton:—

I have much pleasure in informing you that the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada have unanimously decided to accept the generous offer of your Company, to make the "Canadian Home Journal" their National Organ. As ex-officio members of the Executive, the Superintendents of the eight Provinces have also been pleased to express their approval.

We sincerely hope that every member in Canada may take advantage of the special subscription rate you are offering them, not only that it may keep them in the closest possible touch with their Provincial and Federal organizations, but that they may have the advantage of the very excellent reading material which appears each month in your pages.

With best wishes for the continued success of the "Canadian Home Journal."

Believe me,

Very truly yours,

EMILY F. MURPHY.

President of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada.

AN ONTARIO OFFICIAL

Mr. George A. Putnam is the superintendent for the Women's Institutes of Ontario, and has his office in the Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

Spend a few hours with Nancy

You will find her charming company, and her stories of hospital life are most illuminating. You'll meet her in

Nancy Goes to Town

By FRANCES R. STERRETT

Anne is the most engaging young woman. You will want to meet her occasionally and at other times pat her on the back.

"Anne" was created by Olga Hartley.

See what this journal's reviewer says of both books, in another column. You may have both young women forever for $2.00 each.

YOUR BOOKSELLER WILL INTRODUCE YOU

The Ryerson Press

Publishers
TORONTO

"The Rescue," a romance by Joseph Conrad, author of "Lord Jim," "Victory," etc. Published by J. M. Dent and Sons, Ltd., Toronto.

THE world was slow to recognize the unique work of Joseph Conrad, but it now looks eagerly for each book by this extraordinary genius, who is an artist, indeed. His work is tinged by the mystery and magic of the sea which he loves, for he has realized the truth of the ancient prophet's words: "There is sorrow on the sea—it cannot be quiet."

"The Rescue" is a Romance of the Shallows, and the first sentence takes the reader off to the East—the far East beyond Suez—with which Conrad is so familiar, and which has its finest interpretation in his "Youth":—"The shallow sea that foams and murmurs on the shores of the thousand islands, big and little, which make up the Malay Archipelago, has been for centuries the scene of adventurous undertakings." The hero, Luigard, is one of the born adventurers of whom England has always had her store, the men "who preach ahead of the army and skirmish ahead of the church." Luigard understands and knows the natives, as only an English adventurer can. His friends, Hassim and Immada, brother and sister, are of these Eastern islands, exiles from a district which they regarded as their own, and Luigard espouses their cause with a complete devotion. Conrad is one of the few writers who can make a vivid picture of an unusual feminine type, as witness this description of Immada:

"Her black hair hung like a mantle. Her sarong, the kilt-like garment which both sexes wear, had the national check of grey and red, but she had not completed her attire by the belt, scarves, the loose upper wrappings and the head-covering of a woman. A black silk jacket, like that of a man of rank, was buttoned over her bust and fitted closely to her slender waist. The edge of a stand-up collar, stiff with gold embroidery, rubbed her cheek. She had no bracelets, no anklets, and although dressed practically in man's clothes, had about her person no weapon of any sort. Her arms hung down in exceedingly tight sleeves slit a little way up from the wrist, gold-braided and with a row of small gold buttons. She walked, brown and alert, all of a piece, with short steps, the eyes lively in an impassive little face, the arched mouth closed firmly; and her whole person breathed in its rigid grace the fiery gravity of youth at the beginning of the task of life—at the beginning of beliefs and hopes."

Then there come the Europeans—and with them the usual complications of racial differences. Mrs. Travers, in her fair and sophisticated loveliness, is the extreme opposite of Immada—and Luigard's honor is well-nigh sacrificed in his headlong love for the woman from overseas. It is the point of honor that wins in the end—but, beyond this drama of conflicting passions is the life of the sea;—the sea which Wasub knew:

"And the wind—and the sea—these also are faithful to the strong. By Allah! I who am a pilgrim and have listened to words of wisdom in many places, I tell you, Tuan, there is strength in the knowledge of what is hidden in things without life, as well as in the living men."

"One After Another," a novel by Stacy Aumonier, author of "Olga Bardel," "Just Outside," etc. Published by the Macmillan Company, Toronto. Price, $2.00.

THE author of this novel first won literary fame as a writer of short stories and is now considered one of the most brilliant of England's younger novelists. The story is told by the son of "Old Purbeck," who kept a public house in London, and who was determined that his son, Roger, and his daughter, Laura, should be brought up "to better things." Roger is a sensitive and philosophic soul whose mild adventures are worth sharing and whose reflections on his varying fortunes and those of his friends are both entertaining and elevating. Laura is a tempestuous creature, born to tragedy, who refuses to learn to live and is always seeking the easiest way—with the usual result. The author has a curious fashion of telling us very little about certain characters, until they enter upon their important parts in the story. Thus we are told nothing about Mary until she appears upon the scene as the wife of Roger. We are told nothing of the manner of her death, and little is known of her successor, Stella, until she becomes the hero's second wife. This casual style of narration has its own charm, but its effect is to keep the reader from forming any warm attachments for the various characters. The most striking figure in the book is "Old Purbeck," who has a sturdiness which makes for remembrance. This is a readable novel by a writer of unusual gifts of analysis and imagination.

"Nancy Goes To Town," a novel by Frances Sterrett, author of "The Jam Girl," "Up The Road With Sally," etc. Published by the Ryerson Press, Toronto. Price, $2.00.

YOU may be certain that the heroine of a Frances Sterrett story will be a vivacious, lovable and an utterly charming, human nature girl, a first cousin to Amy, Jo, and the other Little Women. The young person in the present volume is no exception to this rule, and we are simply friends with Nancy and are sure that she is to be the happy-ever-after wife. Miss (or perhaps she is Mrs.) Sterrett, is always entertaining, without gushing, and wholesome, without being preachy. She does not introduce divorce, avoids spiritualists and is, altogether, the best of company for those of us who refuse to believe that the world has gone to the "bow-wows." Nancy is a nurse, who tries to be mercenary, but—well, it's a good old-fashioned story.

"Anne," a novel by Olga Hartley. Published by the Ryerson Press, Toronto. Price, $2.00.

THIS is an ultra-modern story with a heroine who is decidedly neurotic in type. The writer insists that she is charming, but the reader remains unconvinced and is inclined to sympathize with the husband, who has "faults of his own," but is to be pitied as the spouse of a young person who is more temperamental than artistic. Anne is capricious, selfish and undisciplined to a tiresome degree, absolutely refusing to grow up. Nevertheless the story is more interesting than the average novel—perhaps, it should be said for the reason that we are uncertain as to what the heroine will be doing next. There is one character, which is in shining contrast to the shallow worldlings who play their petty parts—and that is John Halliday—who is worth remembering for more than a day.

"The Little Mother Who Sits At Home," letters edited by Countess Burcynska. Published by Thomas Nelson and Sons, Toronto.

THIS volume is a collection of letters (posted and unposted) by a mother to her only son. The writer's husband had died when the boy was a very small lad, and the letters are such as a sensitive and loving woman would write to the child who is her world. There is a tenderness which never becomes mawkish, a comradeship which is always bright and yet brooding, in these messages—and there is an imaginative beauty in the (unposted) "On Coming Home for the Holidays" which makes these no ordinary epistles.

The School of Simplified Study, Ltd.

London, Eng.

Principal: Rev. J. C. Wilcox, M.A., Camb.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES

Hebrew, N. T. Greek, Latin, Arabic, English, French, Logic, Psychology, Spanish

For particulars please write to

CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE, 91A MANCE ST., MONTREAL

DRAWING FOR MONEY

$50 to $100 per week is earned by expert artists.

You can learn right at home in a few months by our special system. Our Students Highly Successful One recently placed after only five months' study

Write to-day for particulars to SHAW CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL (Dept. H.J.) TORONTO

The Canadian Girl at Work

A Book of Vocational Guidance

By Marjory MacMurchy

Object—"To assist girls in finding satisfactory employment."

Contents—Full information as to every form of employment open to women to-day.

Price $1.25, postpaid from your bookseller or from the publishers.

Thomas Nelson & Sons, Ltd., Toronto.

Young Women with Professional Tendencies Should learn Chiropractic

More and more women are launching into professional careers, and at least seventy-five per cent. are making a study of the art of Chiropractic. Why not you? Our college is the most up-to-date of its kind. The teaching staff the best obtainable. No expense has been spared in our efforts to make our college better than the best. Write for literature to-day.

Toronto College of Chiropractic

Dept. C-848 Broadview Ave., Toronto, Ont.

Bishop Bebhune College

OSHAWA ONTARIO

Visitor: The Lord Bishop of Toronto.

A residential school for girls.

Young children also received.

Preparation for the University. Art Department. Healthful situation. Outdoor Games. For terms and particulars apply to the Sister-in-Charge, or to the Sisters of St. John the Divine, Major Street, Toronto.

Ottawa Ladies' College

New Fireproof Building.

Academic work up to the first year University.

Music, Art and Handicraft, Household Arts, Physical Culture, etc., Ample grounds

The capital offers exceptional advantages

For Calendar, apply to Miss I. Gallaher, Lady Principal.

PURE GOLD

DESSERTS

Jellies Quick Puddings Delicious - Made in a jiffy

Developing a National Art

Read Miss Long's article on this subject in our January number. Miss Long's artistic work, both in cover design and illustration, has been popular for years with our readers—who will find this article highly interesting.

In the Good Old Winter-Time.

cause of the Allies by Red Cross and other patriotic work, and by the use made of food studies in conserving the necessary foods. All clubs have been interested in conditions for children, especially in the schools, and provision for school lunches has been initiated, while musical instruments have been donated to the schools. After-the-war problems include continued assistance to schools, improvement of community conditions in regard to social centres, rest rooms, care of rural communities, watering troughs on highways, centres for hospital supplies, tree planting, etc., in addition to further systematic study of all problems relating to home-making.

Miss May Chute has taken care of the work in 1919. She is a native of Nova Scotia, a graduate in Domestic Science of Acadia Ladies' College, with further training at Toronto University. It is to be regretted that Miss Chute has resigned the position of superintendent in order to take a position on the staff of Macdonald College. As yet no successor has been appointed.

Les Cercles de Fermieres are clubs among the French-speaking women of Quebec. The first Cercle was organized under Mons. Desilets, of the Department of Agriculture at Quebec in 1915. They now number forty branches, with a membership of approximately twenty-seven hundred.

The work of the Cercles embraces the study of home problems, such as methods of cooking, laundering, care of children, home care of the sick. Much attention is given also to vegetables and small fruit-gardening, poultry-raising and bee-keeping. The Provincial Government assists by furnishing seeds, shrubs, settings of eggs and hives of bees. Demonstrators visit the clubs for periods of three or four days giving demonstrations in various subjects of study.

New Brunswick Doing Fine Work.

THERE are three things that stand out in the work of the New Brunswick Women's Institutes this year, and these are the short courses held both in English and French, the thrift exhibits of canned fruit and vegetables, and needlework at the two provincial exhibitions at St. John and Woodstock, and the starting of Junior Institutes in Andover and Perth. Another feature of the W. I. work in New Brunswick this year is the election of a provincial executive at the annual convention, which was held in Moncton. Like most of the provinces, the Women's Institute movement is a new one in New Brunswick, having only been started in 1911. There are at present some 135 branches, both French and English, with an approximate membership of 4,000. For the past nine years their work has been along the betterment of the community by co-operating with the Minister of Health in child welfare and public health matters, the improvement of cemeteries, the erection and furnishing of community halls (in some cases these being memorial halls), the working for better sanitary conditions in the schools, while a good deal of effort has been directed to the installing of the hot school lunch.

Miss Hazel B. McCain, a New Brunswick born girl, is the superintendent of this important work. Miss McCain is exceedingly well-equipped to carry on, for she has been trained as teacher and has taught both in Alberta and New Brunswick and for a time she was director of the Military Clearing House, Quebec.

B. C. Establishes Health Centres.

CO-OPERATION in the establishment of health centres, provided over by the district nurses, has been the chief work of the B. C. Institutes, which number some seventy-two branches, with a membership of 3,000, since the cessation of the war. Of course, during war time the work, which occupied the attention of the members almost completely was Red Cross work. The objects of these centres will be health teaching, which is like the proverbial "ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Follow-up work in medical inspection of school children, infant welfare, maternity and tuberculosis, will be carried on from the centre. The first of these has been established at Saanich,

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 19.)

and the work has grown so well here that there are now three nurses engaged. A health centre house has been opened as temporary quarters, and the people in the district are trying to raise the sum of $25,000 for the erection of a permanent building. Other work that has been accomplished is the providing of the hot lunch in the schools, improving school grounds, agitating for manual training and domestic science, and in many cases a school committee has been formed, whose duty it is to visit the school periodically. Some interest has been taken in handicrafts, such as knitting, basket weaving, toy and glove-making. One cannot write about the B. C. Institutes without mentioning the names of two arduous workers, these being Mrs. Alfred Watt, chairman of the B. C. Advisory Board, who has become an international figure in Women's Institute work, who has written a book on the Women's Institute Practices and Principles, who has established schools for the training of Institute workers, and whose wonderful record of W. I. work excels that of any other woman in Canada, and Mrs. Vangie MacLachlan, the W. I. secre-

She is a native of Nova Scotia, and has been an instructor in Household Science in that province. For a number of years she was also supervisor of the Home Economics societies of Manitoba, and brings especially to the Board of Federated Women's Institutes of Canada the viewpoint of both East and West. Since Miss MacDougall returned to Nova Scotia to take up this work a year ago she has given it not only the benefit of her training, which is essential in the educational extension work of the W. I.'s, but enthusiasm and organizing ability which is an important asset in the promotion of any organization.

Prince Edward Island New in W. I. Work.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND is one of the last provinces to take up Women's Institutes, these being organized in 1913. They have grown in numbers to fifty-one branches, with 600 members. In the work of better schools they have practically revolutionized existing conditions, especially in sanitation, equipment and ventilation. New wells have been dug, individual drinking cups provided, clean-

A NEW SUPERINTENDENT

Miss M. Gibson, the Superintendent of the new Nurses' Community Home, which was opened recently by Prof. Dale. This home is situated on Charles Street, in Toronto, and is one of the first in Canada.

tary. Although Dr. Warnock, the Minister of Agriculture, is technically the superintendent, the secretary conducts the work from the department, and it is carried on most aggressively.

Nova Scotia W. I.'s Factor in Health Promotion.

HEADED by Miss Helen MacDougall, the superintendent, the Nova Scotia Women's Institutes, although only organized in 1913, are in a very thriving condition, and have reached the strength of sixty branches, with approximately 2,000 members. Particularly fine work has been done along the lines of public health and education. In fact, one inspector has reported to the Department of Education that wherever there is a W. I. he finds his work in that community accomplished and every assistance is given, especially in the rural science branch. Public health and child welfare have been two objects of the Nova Scotia W. I.'s, especially since the close of the war. They have co-operated with the St. John's Ambulance Society in V. A. D. courses, where certificates were given to the successful candidates; they have worked with the Red Cross, especially in the Public Health caravans which travelled through the province, turning themselves into health centres, where not only short course work was taken, but baby clinics and medical inspection was carried on. The Institutes have also given assistance to the Provincial Infants' Home and Children's Aid, and through their agencies a number of children have been adopted.

Miss MacDougall is particularly qualified to take charge of this work.

up campaigns instigated, and everything possible done for the schools. Every winter a series of cooking classes has been held and has proved very popular—also the extension work has included four two-week courses in Home Economics, nursing, laundry and millinery. Prince Edward Island Women's Institutes have also considered the revival of some of the handicrafts in which our grandmothers were so proficient, and intend to co-operate with the Handicrafts' Guild at Summerside. Girls' clubs have been started as a part of this year's work.

Miss Della E. Saunders is in charge of Women's Institute work in this province. She has a particularly pleasing personality, and has very special training, which is a great asset in her work. She is a native of New Brunswick, and a household Science graduate of Acadia Ladies' Seminary. She was at one time a teacher in the Fredericton Normal School, after which she took post-graduate work at Columbia University.

Manitoba Institutes Active.

THE Women's Institutes, or Home Economic Societies, of Manitoba, which number some 125, are under the direction of Mr. S. T. Newton, who is director also of the Agricultural Extension Service. During the year these societies have made, and are making, through their committees an organized effort to carry on their work provincially. In education and legislation Institute members have been studying the question of municipal franchise, and are making sure that every qualified voter has her name on the voters' list. It has also been the aim of the Institute to promote child welfare work by securing public health nurses, arranging, where possible, child welfare clinics, arranging child welfare exhibits, seeing that pure water is supplied schools, and asking the Public Health Department to see that each rural school is provided with a first aid cabinet and instructions relative to the use of same, and that child welfare score-cards be sent to each Institute from the Public Health Department. Manitoba has made a feature of district conventions, as it is inconvenient very often for members to attend the central convention. Last year ten of these were held, and this year very likely there will be more. The Household Economics short courses have been held in dress-making and millinery, not more than twenty-five being allowed to each class in order that more thorough instruction could be given. In fact the Manitoba members of the Women's Institutes have used every effort to back up every movement to provide for the rural women of Canada telephones, medical inspection of schools, rural postal deliveries, free hospitals, free libraries and community halls. One scholarship for a young woman on the farm was given to the Manitoba Agricultural College.

FROM NORTH LANARK.

Hopetown undertook the work of renovating the Public Hall and caring for the cemetery.

Clayton co-operated with the Community in buying three acres of ground, on which to build a Hall, sent donations to hospital and offered prizes to four schools for essay on thrift. Quilts were sent to House of Industry.

Cedar Hill sent thirty-seven pounds of food stuffs and eighteen quilts to Ottawa Day Nursery, held a sewing bee for family of small children left without mother or father, sewed for Almonte hospital, and sent substantial cash donations to Sick Children's Hospitals at Toronto and Weston, and $51 to American Fund. For a country branch with not very large membership, we feel proud of the work done by this branch.

Middleville spent considerable money on walks for the village, and reopened library. Very worth-while papers and addresses are always given at the meetings of this branch. They made $112 from a festival and took charge of dining hall at the fair.

Galbraith, our smallest branch, is making valiant efforts to increase their membership, to get the grant. This year they held a picnic and used the proceeds in renovating the school. MRS. HAYES BOYD.

NOVA SCOTIA SHORT COURSE FOR GIRLS.

A NEW feature was introduced into the Women's Institute work in Nova Scotia this year when a Short Course was planned for "teen age" girls at the Agricultural College, Truro.

In order that the work might be practical and that the students might receive the greatest benefit from the course it was planned that the girls should prepare and serve their own meals at the College. This also helped to reduce expenses very considerably.

As there is no residence in connection with the College, arrangements were made that the girls lodge in private homes in the vicinity.

Because the facilities for serving meals were limited it was necessary to limit the number of students to twenty, the first twenty who made application being accepted. Sixteen of these girls took the course, unfortunately at the last moment four who had registered were unable to attend.

The classes opened on a Tuesday morning, and were held daily. The girls were met at the trains Monday evening, given their tea and conducted to their lodging places.

The class was divided into groups, cooks, waitresses and stewards. Their names were posted in conspicuous places, and thus each girl knew what special duty she had to perform, and all had an equal share of the work. The cooks prepared the breakfast; the waitresses set the tables, served the food and washed the dishes; the stewards had charge of the food supplies, the care of the stove and general charge of the rooms.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 23.)

Canadian Women's Institutes

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 22.)

The cooks reported early to prepare breakfast and this part of the work was finished in time for the whole class to be ready for a demonstration at 9 o'clock.

At the morning demonstration a dinner menu was planned, and demonstration on food preparation was given, as well as a talk on the theory of the work. After the demonstration work was assigned the girls worked in pairs and prepared the food for their dinner.

Dinner was served at 12.30. All the work in connection with it was finished so that the class was ready for the afternoon demonstration at 2 o'clock. A supper menu was then planned, a demonstration given and work assigned the girls for the preparation of supper.

Practical work was done in canning fruits and vegetables. Each girl canned some variety and each girl also made bread and biscuit in addition to the other work.

Several picnics were held, the girls preparing and packing a basket lunch, and tennis was provided for those who wished to play.

SASKATCHEWAN PETITIONS.

THE following requests are of interest:

"Whereas, we keenly appreciate the benefit of the Departments of Household Science and School Hygiene to the children of this Province, and,

"Whereas, we realize at the same time that physical culture (including folk-dancing) is necessary to round out these systems already established by you for the health and happiness of the children,

"We, the Home-makers of Saskatchewan in Convention do petition,

"That a Department of Physical Culture, similar in organization and aims to the Departments of Household Science and School Hygiene be established as soon as you can make it possible."

A PROGRESSIVE STEP.

THIS resolution was addressed to the Home-makers' Clubs of the University of Saskatchewan:

"Whereas, we believe that the only true Canadianization of the non-English elements in our country, must begin with the home life and familiarity with our daily habits of living,

"Therefore, it is our wish as members of the Home-makers' Clubs, that our organization should establish a Scholarship consisting of $350 to a teacher for the purpose of enabling her to take the one-year Teachers' Course in Household Science at the University, on the understanding that said teacher be willing to teach in a non-English district for a term of not less than three years and use her knowledge of Household Science to assist in the Canadianization of the homes in her district.

"The scholarship is supposed to cover living expenses, fees and books for the seven months' school term."

FROM CARLETON COUNTY.

BRIGHT and cheerful reports of work undertaken along various lines, and successfully carried through and ambitious plans to reach out into new fields of activity during the coming months, characterize the reports from the different branches in the district. Other features which give a very optimistic outlook are increase in branches, a growing membership, a very evident, increased interest and enthusiasm, and a readiness, and eagerness to know about, and attempt things which give promise of benefit to the community.

Two Department delegates visited the branches during the year. Meetings were well attended, and addresses were helpful and inspiring. Printed programmes are used in almost every branch and all follow along similar lines. Paper on helpful and instructive subjects. Discussions on papers are held, or on a subject named in programme. Music, recitations, readings. Roll call answered by quotation from an author, original rhyme, helpful hints, tested recipes, conundrum, etc.

In some districts, there are frequent interchanges of visits with neighboring branches, the assisting branch giving the programme. This it is felt helps the Institute to know how others are working and promotes sociability.

Two branches mention having held discussions relative to helping build a Community Hall, but as yet no definite steps have been taken. A reading and recreation room is being prepared by one branch and will be opened in a few days. Several branches have formed sick and social visiting committees. Flowers and delicacies are provided for the sick, and cards as a welcome to strangers. This has proved to be a much appreciated activity.

Our Annual District Convention is held in connection with the County of Carleton Annual Field Day at the Experimental Farm, and is a day looked forward to by many. About eight hundred attended this year. The officials and staff at the Farm were very kind and hospitable. Lunch was served to all and everything possible done for the instruction and pleasure of the visitors. A large tent provided for our district meeting was filled with interested workers. Mrs. Blair, our District Superintendent, presided in a most capable manner, and the report of the district was read by our secretary, Mrs. Bradley. A delegate from the Department, gave an address, then came the reports from the branches, the appointment of officers and general business.

There are 14 branches in Carleton with a total membership of 411. Receipts for the year were $1,900.60. Many activities for the betterment of conditions in the community have been engaged in and much wisdom shown in the expenditure. Various methods were adopted to raise money, chief among them being socials, concerts, bazaars, booths at school fairs, collections at regular meetings, selling waste paper, etc. Donations have been made to Public Libraries, School Libraries, School Fairs, Equipment for Schools, Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto, Children's Fresh Air Fund, Ottawa, Navy League, and other worthy causes.

I am supposed to mention only one item of interest from each branch, but among such volumes of good works I find it difficult to choose.

CANADIAN NURSING MISSION NOW ON SERVICE IN RUMANIA

Madame Pantazzi (centre) and the group of Canadian nursing sisters who sailed recently from Canada for hospital and nursing school duty in the Capital of Rumania. The inspiration of the Mission belongs to Madame Pantazzi, formerly Miss Ethel Greening, of Toronto, who with her husband, Commander Pantazzi, and Colonel Boyle, escaped from the Reds during the early days of the Revolution. In the group are, left to right: Miss Helen Kendall, R.R.C., Sydney, C.B.; Miss Ethel Carter, Port Colborne, Ont.; Miss Olive Fitzgibbon, of Montreal; Madame Pantazzi; Miss Dorothy Cotton, daughter of the late General Cotton, Ottawa; Matron, Miss Garfield MacKay, Baddeck, N.S., and Miss Irene Savage, Toronto. The party, which was joined in Paris by the two remaining members, Miss Jean Grahame, formerly matron, Davisville Hospital, Toronto, and Miss Margaret Killmaster, of Brantford, reached Bucharest on November 19th.

Hollins

DAY & NIGHT WEAR

Soft, Warm and Durable—

Viyella

and

"Clydella"

Unshrinkable Flannels

are ideal for Winter Sports Wear. Insist on seeing the name "Viyella" or "Clydella" on the selv-edge.

For sale at first-class shops.

Wm. Hollins & Co., Ltd.
62 Front St. West,
Toronto, Canada
45 East 17th St., New York,
U.S.A.

Hollins

DAY & NIGHT WEAR

An Aspiration

Women love beauty, and throughout the ages their beauty has inspired men to higher aspirations. Any woman may have a beautiful head-dress, if she will take advantage of the able assistance offered by Dorenwend's. You may obtain a perfect hair-piece which will fit your individual requirement and enable you to dress your hair in an adorable fashion.

A booklet with full particulars will be sent on request. Your satisfaction guaranteed.

Dorenwend's

105 Yonge Street, Toronto

Floglaze

"The Finish That Endures"

Gives a Lasting Hard-Wearing Finish

to any surface of wood, metal or concrete. Can be used for an infinite number of uses both indoors and out.

IMPERIAL VARNISH & COLOR CO.
WINNIPEG TORONTO VANCOUVER

It is Unique!

There is no other tea just like "Salada," and for 30 years it has been the same—delicious. "Salada" is by far the largest selling tea in America, and the volume of its devotees grows daily. If you are not yet using "Salada," send us a post-card for a free sample. Address Salada, Toronto.

PURITY
PORRIDGE
DAYS ARE HERE

Children's Winter Play

with its attendant wet clothes, wet feet and hot little bodies subjected to the cutting winter blasts, means more care of health and strength. Strong nourishing food is most important. Start each winter's day with a breakfast of delicious hot

*Don't say
"Ammonia"*
Say

Snowflake
the FULL STRENGTH
Ammonia

THERE IS A TREMENDOUS DIFFERENCE

THE press and the pulpit have been unusually strong of late in denunciation of the extravagance and immodesty of woman's attire. Truly, the Georgette crepe blouse is a mere pretence, by way of clothing, and the backless evening gown is neither decent nor beautiful. However, fashion has occasional lucid attacks and we are now promised saner styles and more material. The old-time trailing skirt was a menace to health, and meant colds and germs and a sense of constraint; but the skirt up to the knees is hardly a becoming or decorous garb for anyone past the flapper age, and it is to be hoped that we are to have fairly sensible skirts, and waists with more "to" them. After all, we have not been so atrociously garbed as some censors would have us believe. Most women have avoided the extreme of "backlessness" and have not taken to the abbreviated skirts which only the girl of twelve would find becoming.

The trouble is that a few extremely foolish women are so much more conspicuous than the many wisely unobtrusive girls and matrons, who are doing the day's work and finding it very good that the censors judge the many by the noisy few and come to the melancholy conclusion that the world is on the way to ruin.

There have always been extravagant and reckless people in this extremely perplexing world and there always will be:—and the harm they do is not

She is British—but not aggressively so—showing by deeds rather than words where her affections lie. There is a very small section in Canada which would act with enmity towards Great Britain and would express itself in sympathy with lawlessness in the Empire.

A spokesman, for this section, went to the City of Moncton recently, to deliver a practically anti-British address, but found himself the most unpopular citizen who ever attempted to berate the country to which he belongs—and Moncton gave him emphatic notice to leave, insisting by physical argument that he was no desirable orator. The Eastern centre would not tolerate seditious utterances and plainly showed its sentiments towards the man who had no sympathy for our own Canadian soldiers and who is plainly on the side of Britain's enemies. Of course, free speech like other "freedoms" can be abused:—and there are times, as a great Irish orator of the past once declared when "the insignificance of the insulter is lost in the magnitude of the insult."

DO we make resolutions or keep diaries in the same fashion that our "foremothers" did? Certainly the diary has disappeared and we seldom hear any one speak in these days of making a vow or a resolution. "The fewer promises we make, the better," says a Scottish friend of mine—and this very true reflection applies to promises made to ourselves. The so considerable as some of us suppose. While it is highly desirable to pass such resolutions as that which was on the list, at the meeting of the Ontario Women's Institute last autumn, and which drew attention to the need for modesty in attire, we believe that the most effective argument for decorous dress is a gown which is both dainty and seemly. There are such gowns and they invite imitation.

AN INTERESTING GROUP

The executive officers of the Ontario Women's Institute, who held their annual meeting in Toronto last autumn. The bottom row, from left to right: Mrs. B. O. Allen, Fort William, the Recording Secretary; Mrs. William Todd, of Orillia, President; Mrs. C. Macoun, Campbellford, Secretary-Treasurer. The top row, from left to right: Miss E. D. Watson, Ayr, Vice-President, Central Ontario; Mrs. R. D. Fowler, Perth, Vice-President, Eastern Ontario; Mrs. J. P. Patterson, Gadshill, Vice-President, Western Ontario.

ANYONE who has been in the Eastern Provinces of Canada, is aware that there is a sturdy self-respect about the native of the Maritime Provinces, such as the visitor does not forget. The New Brunswicker is heard to refer to Ontario as "Upper Canada," the Nova Scotian is convinced that the rest of the Dominion is not quite as enlightened as the Province whose capital is Halifax, while the Islander:—ah, the Islander, is the king of them all, in his placid content with the beauty and peace of Prince Edward the "Garden of the Gulf." This aloofness is not an offensive attitude:—on the contrary, the Easterner takes time to be courteous and is a delightful host—or hostess; but woe betide the stray tourist or lecturer who imagines that this urbanity is an indication of weakness! Canada is not noisy in her loyalty or patriotism:—but the force she sent overseas showed unmistakably what are her convictions in national affairs.

more ready certain friends are to make promises or to receive confidences, the more likely they are to break or betray them.

The other day, I heard a small girl make the remark: "Muriel is angry at me because I 'told' when she said it was a secret; but if she couldn't keep it to herself, how could I?"

There is a logical appeal in the small girl's question, and we can hardly blame the betrayer of casual confidences. There is no quality more valuable, either in the social or the business world to-day, than this fidelity in the matter of a confidence. A certain woman in a position of high responsibility is known to receive a salary which would have startled our grandmothers.

"She was always such a quiet girl," commented a former school-mate. "I didn't think she would do as well as several others who are now far behind her."

"That very quietness is a valuable asset," was the reply. "She has ability:—and, above all, she respects the private and confidential side of business life. So, she can be trusted where large contracts and important deals are concerned. That reticence is a very valuable quality in an official."

Then the lines with which Kipling closes a rollicking poem came back: "Man may hold all kinds of posts, If he only holds his tongue."

Many Supposedly American Vocalists of High Rank Come from This Country

The Advance of the Canadian Singer

By HECTOR CHARLESWORTH

CONSTANTLY, in glancing over musical articles in American publications I encounter the names of rising and celebrated singers who are spoken of as natives of the United States; and it is probable that in many instances the Canadian reader of such articles is himself unaware of the misapprehension that exists with regard to them. This is, however, but a minor and at times annoying phase of what is on the whole a very beneficial movement on this continent. Time was when a singer native to this continent had to adopt a foreign name, preferably Italian, to obtain that higher recognition which ensures large financial rewards. That condition has absolutely passed away, and now in the United States at least the public is so eager to boast of its large coterie of native singers that it eagerly claims as its own vocalists from other lands. In this article I propose to speak of two or three so-called American singers of the highest eminence in whom Canada holds the original title. In truth, if you pick an announced list of artists for any important operatic season in the greater American cities or the agenda for some provincial music festival or performance of oratorio you are more likely than not to encounter a Canadian name.

Nearly fifty years ago a Canadian girl, Emma Lajeunesse, known to the stage as Madame Albani, had the honor

TWENTY odd years ago Edward Johnson was a very serious-minded student in the Collegiate Institute at Guelph, Ontario. He loved singing and music, and was very active in promoting all sorts of school entertainments. It is even said that he played the piccolo in the town band. As he grew up, he developed a tenor voice of very sweet quality. He had resolved from the outset to devote himself to a musical career, and he was assisted, not only by talent in that direction, but by a natural gift for languages. He went to New York for further study, and in a very short space of time built up a position for himself as a ballad singer, and appeared in many cities of America. An engagement in comic opera revealed his theatrical possibilities, and with artistic advancement ever in his mind, he went to France for further study. In Paris he sang French songs in a way that astonished critics, who had not supposed that a man of alien race and birth could so fully master their musical and verbal idioms. About fifteen years ago he went to Italy to obtain actual operatic experience, and within a short time had become such a popular figure that Italy desired and still desires to keep him as her own. The most singular honor that has come to him is the fact that nearly every important Italian composer, when he finishes a new work, asks Johnson to because her uncle, H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, had loved it so. On returning to America fifteen months ago Mr. Johnson astonished discerning critics not only by the beauty of his voice, but by the perfection of his technique. His reception at Toronto during the past autumn was one of the greatest ovations ever tendered a singer. On that occasion he gave his services free for the benefit of the National Institute for the Blind, and the value of such a donation may be gleaned by the fact that it costs two thousand dollars to engage Mr. Johnson for a single appearance.

I HAVE dealt with his career at length because it is a very remarkable example of Canadian ambition and achievement. But he is not the only one among contemporary celebrities hailing from Canada who has conquered European courts and the European public. In the middle nineties there was a little Toronto girl named Flossie Easton who used to sing at the closing exercises of Queen Victoria Public School, and whose childish voice was also heard in the choir of Parkdale Methodist Church, where her father, a poor but cultured English musician, was organist. Born in Yorkshire, she had been brought to Toronto as a baby, and her formative years were spent here; so that she is to all intents and purposes a Canadian. At the age of nine she made her first appearance at a public concert as a pianist, and at fourteen she developed a soprano voice of such sweetness and flexibility that a great future was predicted for her. The death of her mother shortly afterward, though a grievous misfortune, was influential in shaping her subsequent career. When she was sixteen, well-to-do relatives in England decided to bring home the motherless girl, and were so charmed with her when she arrived from far-away Canada that they gave her a most complete education at the Royal Academy of Music, London. When a child in Toronto she had sung for Elliott Haslam, at that time the city's most eminent vocal teacher. During the period of her study in London Mr. Haslam had removed to Paris, France; and on obtaining her diploma she decided to go to him and qualify for a career in grand opera. She revealed such abilities that within two years she was engaged to come to America as one of the prima donnas of the Henry W. Savage Grand Opera Company. At this time she made a marriage, which has turned out to be singularly happy, with Francis MacLennan, one of the tenors of the organization. Mr. MacLennan, though born in Michigan, also had ties with Canada, for his parents had by this time come to reside in Collingwood, Ontario. It is said to have been the mutual interest in Canada that brought them together.

Thirteen years ago Mr. and Mrs. MacLennan were accorded what was then deemed one of the highest musical honors, a five years' contract with the Royal Opera, Berlin, under the direct control of the Kaiser. This honor was regarded as exceptional, because German musicians were intensely national in feeling, and loth to admit foreign excellence. But greater honors were to come. The greatest of living German composers is Richard Strauss, and at that time he was at the zenith of his national fame. When, a decade or so ago, he produced his classic Grecian opera "Elektra" he selected Florence Easton for the title role, and his action in choosing a woman of Canadian and English education in preference to a German prima donna caused a great deal of jealousy and criticism. Madame Easton's guardian angel seems to have been responsible for the fact that she had left Germany to sing in other countries before the war broke out. For the past three years she has been a leading prima donna at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, and is its finest exemplar of soprano roles of a noble and spirituelle character.

A SINGER AT HOME

Miss Florence Easton (to give her the name by which she is known on the stage) is here seen at her country home.

of being the first singer of either sex from this continent to win established fame in European capitals. She was at that time heralded as an American, and the process has continued ever since. During the next few years a small group of girls from this side of the Atlantic followed in her footsteps, but the male singers from either Canada or the United States were quite unknown as public singers in Great Britain or Europe. David Bispham, who is not yet sixty-five, has left it on record that when in the later eighties he made a success at Covent Garden in London he was the only male singer from the New World then appearing in grand opera outside America.

Conditions have considerably changed since, but it has been reserved for a Canadian tenor, Edward Johnson, to win more emphatic recognition in European lands than any other man. Johnson is the most singular instance of a singer being adopted by people of another race, as their own national interpreter, yet recorded.

In Italy, the historic home of opera and of vocal art, the name of Eduardo di Giovanni, as it is translated, is a household word in musical circles. And the same is true of the cities of Spain and South America, where Italian opera flourishes as vigorously as it does in Rome, Florence or Milan.

interpret the tenor part in the first production, in preference to famous native singers, of whom there are many. In musical matters the Italians are intensely national in feeling, but this foreigner, in their opinion, expresses their music better than their own tenors.

Although in Southern Europe and South America music-lovers persist in regarding him as an Italian, Mr. Johnson takes care to let everyone know that he is a Canadian. He stands in high personal favor with the King and Queen of Italy, and he received from them a valued decoration for his services to the Red Cross in the war. While at Rome in 1918 he met the Prince of Wales, who had gone there as the guest of the King. The Prince on learning that he was a Canadian was doubly enthusiastic, and revealed to him his project of coming to Canada on a visit. Mr. Johnson, or Signor di Giovanni (as he was known) assured the Prince that he would receive a welcome from Canadians that would never be forgotten. Mr. Johnson during the war had many experiences of the great prestige gained by Canada through the prowess of her soldiers during the war. Two or three years ago when he was singing at Madrid he was presented at Court, and when the Queen of Spain learned his real nationality she gave him a long audience and spoke of Canada as a country she should like to see

Use
Old Dutch Cleanser

Clean and Sanitary

You get better results with less work by using Old Dutch for your baking and cooking utensils.

Cleans thoroughly; hygienically.

Made in Canada

"Yes, I Must Have One, Too!"

"—and you say I can get it in Early English, Golden Oak or Mahogany Finish, to match my furniture?"

"Yes, and when you get your

PEERLESS
FOLDING TABLE

you'll wonder how you ever managed to be without it, my dear. Why, it's useful in so many ways!"

Sold by the best dealers
everywhere.

Write for illustrated Catalogue of various styles.

HOUD & CO., LIMITED,
Sole Licensees and Manufacturers.

Dept. H.J., London, Ont. 95-D

STORY WRITING
Turn Your Ideas Into Dollars

We teach you at home in a few months under an expert. Our students are successful writers. They contribute to leading magazines.

One earned $300 while studying. We will help you place your stories. Write to-day for particulars to

SHAW CORRESPONDENCE
SCHOOL (Dept. H.J.) TORONTO

Such Wonderful Bristles!

If your hair is dry, brittle and seemingly lifeless, study the bristles of your brushes.
A high-grade brush should contain stiff, glossy—not dull—white bristles. These bristles should vary in length so as to penetrate to the scalp, stimulate circulation, and bring forth a bright, healthy lustre to the hair.

Keystone

Brushes are the choice of discriminating men and women. They are exquisite in appearance and they have such wonderful bristles. "Keystone" Military Brushes or "Keystone" Hair Brushes, of solid Ebony or solid French Ivory, are filled with the most expensive grades of stiff, brilliant, pure white Russian bristles, arranged in uneven lengths to produce perfect penetration.

All "Keystone" Brushes are absolutely guaranteed. Insist upon seeing the name "Keystone." It protects your purchase.

Stevens-Hepner Company, Limited
Port Elgin, Ontario

"My favourite flowers"—

crooned gay Madame Butterfly, lighting upon a dainty kerchief perfumed with the irresistible Rêve de Beauté. Rêve de Beauté is made from the essence of "your favourite flowers."

The perfume that bewitched Paris! Exquisite but unobtrusive.

Parfum Rêve de Beauté

Also Savon, Poudre de Riz, Creme de Beaute, Toilet Water.

"Erasmic"

At all the best shops.

Anglo-American Agencies Limited,
41-43 St. Francois Xavier St., Montreal.

Our Journal Juniors' Club

Ever so many of our young readers are taking an interest in the department so ably conducted by Mrs. Green. We are sure that any Canadian boy or girl who writes to it will be given a welcome in that corner which has so much to attract and interest the Juniors.

Through the Looking Glass

by VAIN JANE

SINCE we met here last, my friends, I have taken a bit of a journey—just to New York and back and only for a week, but those few days so filled me with impressions that I feel I must tell something of them.

The time of my visit was just before Christmas, the season when the shops make their most gorgeous display of ravishing treasures, and when a visitor's first tour of Fifth Avenue is likely to be a series of long-drawn breaths of wonder and admiration. The color, the richness and the beauty was overwhelming—not all the ancient bazaars of the East could surpass it in extravagant splendor. Here is a shop in which jewels shine behind barred windows—perfect and priceless stones of white purity spilled on a purple velvet pillow; or others of flawless color winking at you with their sapphire or their emerald light! There is the soft gleam of pearls in ropes of matchless beauty that women adore; watches of diamonds and platinum so small and exquisite that you feel they could never do anything so practical as record the hours of night and day. There are locket and bracelets, rings and pins, golden bags and jewelled combs for milady's shining hair.

A shop close by displays a gown; even the restless wave of Christmas shoppers pauses with delight before this window where a single figure of a lovely woman in a creation of mother o' pearl sequins is seated on a marble bench, with moonlight falling on her hair and casting pale shadows on the grass at her feet. Even to the throng this elaborate simplicity is arresting.

Not so artistic, perhaps, but equally fascinating are the windows which display all the accessories to a woman's costuming, such as gloves and stockings, handkerchiefs and beaded bags, gorgeously colored over-blouses, collars and cuffs and vestees of beautiful lace and hand-embroideries. No one wears a short glove this season—they must pull on over the wrist and fasten across with a strap like a gauntlet. Stockings are smartest when they have a lace panel front or some clever design of drop stitch, or if plain, must be of the sheerest quality. These are, of course, for evening wear—one doesn't have the bad taste to wear "fancy" stockings on the street! Handkerchiefs are gay—of sheer linen in shades of blue and rose and mauve and tan, and the merriest have tiny hand-worked designs in contrasting colors in one corner. And everywhere are shown beaded bags. New York has taken them to its heart, which is an excellent thing for the disabled soldiers in the factories in France who make them! There are American made ones also, but it is generally admitted that the French bags are more beautiful in coloring and design.

And the furs; oh, my dears, they are beautiful! Such glorious sables and mink, and soft chinchillas and satiny seals. The coats have huge cape collars that fall below the waist and the linings are the most brilliant colors and exquisite materials. In many cases two furs are used in combination to make these wrappy garments, for instance, mole and squirrel, or seal and beaver. The proper silhouette calls for a wide line at the bend of the arms and narrowing toward the hem and the coats therefore have the appearance of constantly slipping off the shoulders. They do doubtless, too, for every second woman one sees seems to be holding up in front the weight of voluminous furs which appear somewhat incongruous when you look down and find that she is wearing daintily strapped satin slippers and the finest of hosiery.

AND the skirts are short—by that we mean that all the girls in New York who follow the fashions are wearing them from ten to twelve inches from the ground, and that irrespective of whether they are bow-legged, knock-kneed, thickly-ankled or just passably well formed. It is my only complaint with them—they are a flock of foolish sheep and follow where the fashion leads. On the other hand, they have qualities which are greatly to be admired. You seldom see a slovenly girl or woman, even the shabbiest are well-groomed and show a care for detail in their toilettes. They never wear a shoe that has a run-down heel, nor a glove with a hole in the finger, or a soiled collar or a dusty hat. The seams in the back of their stockings run straight, for that is the way they put them on. New York might be a vast stage and every woman playing a part in which she must appear her best.

That is always one of my strongest impressions of the great city, that the generality of its women while they are not elegant, have learned the important art of looking their best. You do a play (Holbrook Blinn in "The Bad Man," Gilda Varesi in "Enter Madame" if you are fortunate), you tea at the Ritz or you dine at the Claridge, and everywhere you see throngs of women and every one as carefully costumed as the other—each prepared for the spotlight and unafraid. It seems to me that while we may condemn this devotion to appearance as a waste of time, there are plenty among us who have much to learn from them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BERTHA L.—Such a proper little note you have written me, Miss Bertha, just as though it were to an utter stranger, and yet you give me to understand that we meet before the Looking Glass quite frequently. However, perhaps from now on we shall know one another better. You and your sister have a beauty problem in common with many city people, though it is seldom that country girls appeal to me for a way of improving their complexion. Country air is sometimes too strong for delicate skin, but is usually so clean and pure that it leaves no accumulation of dust in the pores. However, perhaps you and your sister drive a great deal and the roads may be dusty, though I have a recollection of motoring through your town one hot day last summer when the oil distributing waggons had done their work not wisely but too well, with the result that with every revolution of the wheels of our car the occupants were sprayed with a dark and offensive liquid which was spread on the roadway for the evident purpose of laying the dust. I had a perfectly good driving coat ruined—cleaners could not remove the stains—and we all, even the pup who got it in his eye, blessed the mayor or the street commissioners or whoever has charge of these things in your town, with blessings that were not exactly holy. But to return to your troubles, I shall send you a private reply and perhaps may be able to suggest something that will enable yourself and your sister to acquire the complexion you most desire.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 27.)

THROUGH-THE-LOOKING-GLASS COUPON

Should a reader desire to avail herself of any advice which might be given through this department, her inquiry, written on one side of the paper, should be accompanied by this coupon. In the case of desiring a private answer, a stamped and addressed envelope should be enclosed.

Through the Looking Glass

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26.)

PATRICIA.—So much may be said on the subject of perfume, Patricia. On the one hand it may be objectionable if of the heavy, clinging variety. On the other, there are exquisite and elusive odors which could not offend the most fastidious. Why not experiment until you find one which seems to suit your personality? When you have discovered it, be very sparing in its use. Apart from the thrift of this measure, for good perfume is a real luxury these days, the faintest suggestion is all that is permissible.

WHITBY.—Think of anyone complaining of a too rosy complexion! My dear lady, how thankful you should be for your bright cheeks. I agree with you they should not be shiny, but that is very readily remedied. Ontario winds in winter are disastrous to the skin, I will admit, but I feel safe in saying that we all envy you your rosiness. It is such a relief once in a while to come across someone who doesn't want to be directed to the least harmful and most natural preparation of rouge.

A Gown for the Younger Girl.

MARION M.—No girl of seventeen should be unhappy about anything and much less about her complexion, therefore, Miss Marion, we must attend to your case without delay. Your skin must be in a highly sensitive state if warm water and good soap irritate it, and perhaps for a time it would be as well to use nothing but a cleansing cream to clear the skin, followed by an astringent. The astringent is important, for you see, the reason for the condition you describe, is that the pores are at some time left open and become clogged with dust and grime. Some skin is naturally porous and when this is the case, special care must be taken. Are you sure you have been using a good soap?

BLANCHE.—I have a dreadful time with my nose, too, on frosty mornings, Miss Blanche, so I can heartily sympathize with you and only wish I had got to your letter earlier, before the raw weather set in. But I hasten now to tell you how to keep it an aristocratic white, and though I cannot give you the formula for the preparation, as you seem to expect, I can tell you its name and cost and where it may be purchased. If you have been going about with a red nose on every frosty morning since October twenty-second, I shall feel terribly guilty; Do forgive me.

Are You Thinking Right About Rubbers?

Have you been thinking on the wrong angle that "rubbers are rubbers," and that as long as you can get a pair of rubbers over your shoes they will be all right?

On the contrary, you ought to look as carefully for quality, comfort and wear in your rubbers as you do in your shoes. And you should be equally careful about the fit.

The dealer who fits your shoes with can fit them perfectly, because he is able to obtain styles and shapes for every shoe worn by men, women and children.

DOMINION RUBBER SYSTEM RUBBERS

He has proved, by practical experience, the dependable quality, sturdy wear and comfort of these DOMINION RUBBER SYSTEM PRODUCTS, and knows that both shoes and rubbers wear longer when properly fitted.

You certainly get the best service as well as the best rubbers when you go to a dealer who carries DOMINION RUBBER SYSTEM RUBBERS.

Sold By the Best Shoe Stores Everywhere

PATTERNS AND PRICES.

9111—Misses' One-piece Dress. Designed for 16 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 16 requires 4¾ yards 40-inch Georgette crêpe—¾ yard 40-inch white Georgette crêpe for collar facing and vest. For the braiding that gives smartness to the skirt design 12320 is used.

7671—Juniors' Middy Dress. Designed for 12 to 17 years. Size 12 requires 3¾ yards 40-inch Georgette crêpe—¾ yard 40-inch white Georgette crêpe for collar facing and vest. For the braiding that gives smartness to the skirt design 12320 is used.

9107—Juniors' Dress. Designed for 12 to 17 years. Size 12 requires 2¾ yards 40-inch Georgette crêpe. Embroidery in design 12511 forms a large motif on the front panel.

9051—Misses' Dress. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about 1¾ yard. Size 16 requires 3 yards 54-inch chevron velours—¾ yard 48-inch broadcloth—1¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody and back gore.

9170—Ladies' Overblouse. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Size 36 requires 1½ yard 40-inch Georgette crêpe—½ yard 36-inch satin for girder and cuffs, ½ yard tucked organdy for collar—1¼ yard lace for trimming collar. Embroidered motifs in design 12571 are scattered over the blouse.

9196—Ladies' Long-waisted Dress. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Width at lower edge about 1¾ yard. Size 36 requires 3¼ yards 44-inch serge—1¾ yard 36-inch satin—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody. The dress closes on the left shoulder and under the arm and is embroidered in eyelets in design 12594.

8758—Ladies' One-piece Dress. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Width at lower edge about 1½ yards. Size 36 requires 3 yards 54-inch tricotine—¼ yard 40-inch Georgette crêpe for collar—¼ yard lace banding on collar.

9057—Ladies' One-piece Dress. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 36 requires 3¼ yards 54-inch tricotine.

9177—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 46 waist. Width at lower edge about 2 yards. Size 36 requires 3½ yards 54-inch white tricotine—¾ yard 36-inch lining.

9181—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Width at lower edge about 1¾ yard. Size 36 requires 4¾ yards 36-inch satin—1 yard flit lace for collar—2¼ yards 36-inch lining.

9178—Ladies' Long-waisted Dress. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Width at lower edge about 1¾ yard. Size 36 requires 3¼ yards 54-inch serge—¼ yard 18-inch velvet for collar—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody.

Dress 8716, 35 cents.

Braid 12319, blue or yellow, 25 cents.

Dress 7923, 20 cents.

Dress 9145, 35 cents.

Embroidery 12425, blue or yellow, 75 cents.

Jacket 9152, 35 cents.

Skirt 8733, 20 cents.

Embroidery 12510, blue or yellow, 20 cents.

Dress 9051, 35 cents.

Dress 9121, 35 cents.

Braiding 12574, blue or yellow, 75 cents.

Dress 9111, 35 cents.

Braiding 12320, blue or yellow, 35 cents.

Middy Dress 7674, 20 cents.

Dress 9107, 30 cents.

Embroidery 12511, 25 cents.

Dress No. 9071, 35 cents.

Embroidery 12510, blue or yellow, 20 cents.

Overblouse 9184, 30 cents.

Embroidery 12600, blue or yellow, 30 cents.

Overblouse 9170, 30 cents.

Embroidery 12571, blue or yellow, 25 cents.

Dress 9196, 35 cents.

Embroidery 12594, blue or yellow, 40 cents.

Dress 8758, 35 cents.

Dress 9057, 35 cents.

Dress 9177, 35 cents.

Dress 9181, 35 cents.

Dress 9178, 35 cents.

Dress 9174, 35 cents.

Blouse 8966, 30 cents.

Skirt 9209, 30 cents.

Beading 12568, blue or yellow, 35 cents.

Blouse 8931, 30 cents.

Braiding 12574, blue or yellow, 75 cents.

Blouse 9166, 30 cents.

Coat 9026, 35 cents.

Dress 9210, 35 cents.

Dress 9098, 35 cents.

Dress 9022, 35 cents.

Braiding 12463, blue or yellow, 20 cents.

Youth Claims the Simplicity of Slender Lines

Misses' Dress 8746 Braiding 12319 Girls' and Juniors' Dress 7923

Misses' Jacket 9152
Misses' Skirt 8733
Embroidery 12510

Misses' Dress 9121
Braiding 12574

8746—Misses' Dress. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 16 requires 5½ yards 36-inch crêpe satin—¾ yard 36-inch white satin for vestee—1 yard 36-inch lining for underbody. Soutache braiding in design 12319 edges the deep V front, borders the sleeves, and forms a finish for the top of the double-tier tunic. Velvet is another fabric that would make up effectively in this frock.

9121—Misses' One-piece Slip-on Dress. Designed for 16 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 16 requires 4 yards 36-inch velvet—¾ yard 40-inch Georgette crêpe for collar facing and vest. A border and spattered motifs of braiding in design 12574 provide the trimming.

Misses' Dress 9145
Braiding 12425

9145—Misses' Dress. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 16 requires 2¼ yards 54-inch tricotine—¼ yard 36-inch satin for flaring collar—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody. Soutache braiding in design 12425 forms a deep border.

8746 7923 9145

Misses' Dress 9111
Braiding 12320

Juniors' Middy Dress 7674

Juniors' Dress 9107
Embroidery 12511

Misses' Dress 9051

9152—Misses' Box Jacket. Designed for 14 to 20 years. No. 8733—Misses' One-piece Gathered Skirt. Designed for 14 to 20 years. Width at lower edge about 1¾ yard. The suit in size 16 requires 3½ yards 54-inch tricotine—2½ yards 36-inch satin for lining jacket. A touch of embroidery in design 12510 gives smartness to the jacket which is one of those delightfully youthful new box models.

This wrap from Russek shows a tier effect in the designing, with a huge collar of kolinsky. The wrap is of Russian seal.

Graceful Lines Mark the Smartest Winter Costumes

8931—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Size 36 requires 2½ yards 40-inch Georgette crêpe—1¼ yard 36-inch lace banding—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody. The blouse is braided in design 12574, and has smart long sleeves extending beyond the deep, close-fitting cuffs to form loops.

9166—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Size 36 requires 2½ yards 40-inch Georgette crêpe—¾ yard allover net 18 inches wide for chemisette and high collar—1¼ yard lace for trimmings—¾ yard 36-inch lining.

Blouse 8931
Braiding 12574

Blouse 9166

Dress 9174

Blouse 8966
Skirt 9209
Beading 12568

Coat 9026

Dress 9240

9174—Ladies' Long-waisted Dress. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 36 requires 3½ yards 54-inch tricotine—¼ yard velvet for collar and cuff bands—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody. The front of the blouse is cut in a panel in one piece with the tunic, and at each side of the panel the waist-line is marked with braid and embroidered arrowheads. The girdle is a narrow braided silk cord. Double rows of small wooden buttons trim the long, close-fitting sleeves and the front of the blouse below the collar. This dress is very smart for street wear.

8966—Ladies' Blouse. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. No. 9209—Ladies' Two-piece Skirt. Designed for 24 to 36 waist. Width at lower edge about 1¼ yard. The costume in medium size requires 6¼ yards 40-inch crêpe de Chine—¾ yard 40-inch tucked net for collar—2 yards lace for trimming collar—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody. The vest and tunic are beaded in design 12568. The front section of the tunic is pointed and the back section is in panel style. A draped girdle closes at one side under a tab-shaped trimming piece. Many an afternoon tea will be graced by frocks of this type fashioned of soft satin, crêpe, velvet, or divan.

Three Patterns
Free with a
Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home Journal.

FOR PRICES OF PATTERNS SEE
PAGE 28.

9026—Ladies' Coat. Designed for 34 to 48 bust. Size 36 requires 3½ yards 54-inch Bolivia cloth—4¼ yards 36-inch satin for lining. The deep cuffs and the convertible collar are outlined with three rows of heavy chain stitching. This is repeated on the patch pockets. The coat has the comfortable raglan sleeves that fashion has decreed smart and that every woman prefers to wear over frocks that might crush.

9240—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 42 bust. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 36 requires 4½ yards 36-inch crêpe satin—¼ yard banding for vest—¾ yard 36-inch figured silk for girdle—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody. The frock has the smart long-waisted Russian blouse effect so popular this season, and a plain gathered skirt. The long, close-fitting sleeves flare a trifle at the wrist. Perfectly adorable are these new long-waisted blouse frocks, the waist blousing over a deep sash of brilliant silk. The use of these sashes is a late development of the season's fashions, and they certainly add a brilliant note to frocks of somber hue. Roman-striped ribbons, finished with deep silk fringe showing the various shades of the ribbon, the most gorgeous brocades, and all sorts of fancy silks and satins are in vogue.

9098—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 36 requires 4¼ yards 36-inch crêpe meter—1 yard organdy for vest, long collar, and cuffs—1 yard 36-inch lining for underbody. The organdy may be trimmed with a fine embroidery or lace, or scalloped. The girdle is made of two narrow bands of the silk.

9022—Ladies' Dress. Designed for 34 to 50 bust. Width at lower edge about 1½ yard. Size 36 requires 3½ yards 54-inch duvetyn—¾ yard 36-inch silk duvetyn for collar—¾ yard 18-inch tucked vesting—¾ yard 36-inch lining for underbody. The flaring collar and the outline of the tunic are braided in soutache braid in design 12463. Silk or worsted may be used.

9174

9166

9022

Dress 9098

Dress 9022
Braiding 12463

EXPRESSING PERSONALITY IN DRESS

The least appearance of extravagance or want of moderation or restraint is destructive to all beauty whatsoever, in anything, color, form, motion, language or thought; giving rise to that which is in color called glaring, in form inelegant, in motion ungraceful, in thought undisciplined, in all, unchastened.

JOHN RUSKIN

IT is generally conceded that in all women there is an instinctive perception of beauty and a longing for it.

Failure lies in lacking appreciation of the intimate and essential relation true taste bears to fashion; in the blind assumption that beauty can be attained by imitation.

Costume is but a means of expressing personality, and the woman admired has learned to ignore the glaring vagaries of swiftly changing fashions and chooses those clothes that in the simplicity of good taste best become her.

Modifications of the figure require the most careful attention to the end of avoiding anything that will accentuate undesirable lines. Perhaps the most understandable rule for becoming corsetry is this: do not try to change your type, play up to it. Don't imitate.

From the beginning, Gossard artistry has recognized as many types of feminine beauty as there are types of women. So whatever your figure problems may be, there are many artfully designed models that will give you the ideal proportions of your type with that restful comfort that makes grace of motion as natural as breathing. Yes, even if you are of very full proportions, the resilient, scientifically placed boning that gracefully slenderizes you, will permit the comfortable freedom of unrestrained movement.

Because of the naturalness of its healthful support, your self-effacing Gossard is relieved of all undue strain and so will wear far beyond the life of the average corset. Its original grace and shapeliness will remain unchanged to the last day you put it on. In the economy of their wearing service alone, these original front lacing corsets are worth their cost.

To those women who appreciate the importance of following their own style and finding the perfect expression of their natural beauty, Gossard Corsets offer an unfailing foundation for becoming dress.

Quality

Our fixed principle is this: to make each and every

G O S S A R D
Front Lacing
C O R S E T

as good as true artistry, fine workmanship, and the highest grade of materials can make it, so that no purchaser may ever find a Gossard that does not give the unequalled service she has a right to expect. The high quality of every Gossard Corset is jealously guarded by a House proud of its eighteen years of prestige.

You will find these original front lacing corsets at the best stores the world over.

The Canadian H. W. Gossard Co., Limited
366-378 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Can.

Ideal Figure
Tall Slender

Ideal Figure
Short Slender

Ideal Figure
Tall Heavy

Ideal Figure
Short Heavy

Ideal Average
Figure

Ideal Figure
Large Below Waist

Ideal Figure
Large Above Waist

Ideal Figure
Curved Back

Ideal Figure
Short Waisted

Queen Mary Presents Festal Robes to Royal Ontario Museum

A GIFT OF ROYAL ROBES

By CHARLOTTE M. STOREY

THE Royal Ontario Museum, Toronto, was recently the recipient of a royal gift of two costly robes from the wardrobe of Her Majesty Queen Mary, and a cream silk negligee and two negligee slippers from the wardrobe of Her Majesty, the late Queen Victoria.

The two robes of white satin have been fortunate enough to find their way to the Queen Mary's. The latest pattern, 1900, which is of ivory satin, is decorated with such delicate water colors as to look almost like shadows of roses and bow knots, and was worn on the occasion of Her Majesty's first State entry into London after the Coronation. The robe was designed for some gorgeous reception in connection with the Coronation, and later at a Drawing Room when its beauty was further enhanced by a lovely veil of silver worn over the train, so I was told by her Excellency, the Duchess of Devonshire, who made the formal presentation to the Museum and, by the way, has been Mistress of the Robes.

This robe is also of ivory satin, heavy and lustrous with overdress superbly embroidered with pearls, brilliants and silk floss. The lily design on the corsage is carried out in the floss, and the petals of the beautiful roses down the centre of the front panel, graduating in size, are done solid in pearls with a large one in the centre. The whole design is encrusted with pearls—thousands of them—and brilliants.

These are gifts Her Majesty has graciously bestowed upon the Royal Ontario Museum, which incidentally has the largest collection of exhibits of any in the British Empire, outside the City of London, England, and stands third on the Continent of North America, and are the beginning of a collection of comparatively modern robes which Dr. C. T. Currelly, the Curator, hopes to add to very shortly. A number of titled and otherwise socially prominent English ladies, noted for their unimpeachable taste in dress, have promised soon to donate gowns they are now wearing, made by Worth and other notable couturieres.

Queen Victoria's negligee has nothing special in the way of style to make it interesting, save that it might have been designed yesterday instead of perhaps twenty-five years ago. Its coat front and narrow girdle which ties in front, bring it right up to date, though age has somewhat mellowed its creamy tint. However, there is something very interesting about this simple, comfy-looking garment. Everyone will remember that it was at an early hour in the morning when the school-girl Princess was informed that she was to be crowned Queen of England, and at the time she was wearing a white negligee, and thereafter, to gratify some sweet sentiment of her own, all her negligees were made of white, no matter what the material was.

The slippers are quaint little, soft, heel-less affairs, just such as one might imagine any practical person, even a Queen, might choose for comfort, rather than style. One pair is of black corded silk and the other a fine, soft kid, with the finish worn off the top of the toe of one, where she constantly tapped it with her cane. One can imagine her Majesty's life-long friend, the fashionable ex-Empress Eugenie, in their familiar intercourses, reprimanding her for this destructive habit. (I suppose Queens are privileged to reprimand each other in private.)

This is not the first royal gift the Museum has had. Last year a Toronto firm presented it with a collection of one hundred and seventy-two official robes from the Royal Palace of China. Only a few of these are on exhibition yet, as the number and size of the exhibits have outgrown the space, and not until the main building shall have been completed, will there be room to display the entire exhibit at once. This collection is also very interesting. Many of the robes are almost covered with embroidery, almost every stitch of which enters into the design of a symbol of rank, a wish for long life and happiness or something else equally desirable to the Chinese conception of things to be desired. The coloring and execution are marvellous examples of the application of color and of infinite patience and skill and are valuable as a study to anyone interested in this form of decoration.

PROPOS of interesting costumes, in the passage of fortune from master to man and from mistress to maid in the Old Land, during the trying years through which it has just come, many old and valuable family possessions, including jewels and ancestral robes, have been thrown upon the market, which collectors are gathering in as fast as they can, and the Royal Ontario Museum is likely to profit by the circumstance, for in addition to what other contributors have promised, the Canadian Women Designers' Club, a group of bright young women who design women and children's garments for Canadian manufacturers, have authorized Dr. Currelly to purchase, in their name, the nucleus of a collection of these ancestral robes, for which they have pledged themselves to provide funds periodically. Their object is to have a collection of artistic garments from which they can study the traditions of their calling, as it can be done only from existing objects of art in Museums and Art Galleries. The designing of an artistic costume is no mean thing, as the success of Poiret, Worth and others testifies, and much of their inspiration has come from a study of color, design and fabric in the Museums and Art Galleries of the Old World.

A robe worn by Her Majesty Queen Mary at a formal reception in connection with the Coronation ceremonies, and also at the Durbar in Delhi. It is of heavy, lustrous satin, gorgeously embroidered in pearls, brilliants and silk floss.

The gown worn by Her Majesty Queen Mary when making her first State entry into London after the Coronation. It is of ivory satin, hand-painted in water-colors. The design is the emblematic rose of England, with bow-knots of ribbon.

THE skating season is upon us, or should be, if it is not by the time this gets into print, and finds that the latest thing in skating costumes is a knitted dress. It can be machine knitted, but most of the knitted dresses I have heard about have been knitted by hand, the skirt in a purl stitch so that it looks like box-pleating. Some are knitted in one-piece princess style and others in two-piece, skirt and tuxedo sweater, worn with a frilly fronted blouse, decorated with hand drawn work. The colors preferred are brown or green heather. One of course wears brown shoes and heather hose with this costume.

Scarf, hat and mitts are made up in sets for skating and the long gauntlet-top is the last word in fashionable skating or snow-shoeing mitts. There are also shimmy bags and caps for sports wear. These are made of fine wool, knitted into loops which are caught together in little bunches, giving the finished article a fluffy surface.

A very practical skating or snow-shoeing garment is a heavy sweater coat, knit just like a man's with collar fastening up tight around the neck.

PROPOS of nobody and nothing, I wonder if all the Christmas presents we buy for our friends this year will stay sold, or if some of them will be taken back to the store, where they were purchased, the day after Christmas and be converted into cash. Shocking suggestion! Yes, I know, but one has many interesting revelations, standing in the vicinity of the Exchange Offices in the big stores the day after Christmas. Down the long queue there is every type of parcel and prominent among them, when the paper wrapping is removed, is the holly-covered box, and quite often the Christmas card still attached to the contents. Through the wicket it goes, and of course one doesn't follow to see whether the exchange slip is taken to the cashier to have the money refunded or to some section where goods are to be purchased but, (and one has it from casual conversations with merchants), people come with all sorts of ill-selected gifts, for which they have no possible use, and frankly say they would prefer the cash. We are all familiar with the woman who packs away quantities of gifts every year, either to be passed along to someone else or given to a bazaar the next year. And, frankly, if we do not consult the wishes and tastes of our friends when we bring them gifts, can we blame them?

NEW YORK femininity is about as inconsistent as she can be and survive. Indeed, seriously, one wonders how long she will survive unless she mends her ways, or at least, puts on her spats; for while a huge collar surrounds her neck and shoulders, she trips up and down Fifth Avenue in sheer silk hosiery with lace inserts and low slippers, strapped over the instep. And her skirts are atrociously short! We used to try to describe the length of suit jackets by saying they were finger tip length, which would be almost better applied to the skirts one sees smart young people wearing in New York just now.

But this unseemly display of hosiery, according to a fashionable Fifth Avenue Costumer, is to be short-lived. For next spring, he tells us he will make dress and suit skirts longer, say, seven or eight inches from the floor. Speaking of spring attire, a peep at some two and three piece suits, which merchants in the South are buying, for visitors seeking a milder climate, revealed oodles of embroidery, put on in every possible design. One model of beaver wool jersey cloth, had large round flowers, something like a conventional marguerite, done in white; these had a border of embroidery in contrasting shade around the bottom of coat and skirt, and sometimes around the coat only.

The three-piece suits are such practical, always-ready garments that we wonder Canadians have never taken them more seriously. They have silk tops, the skirt joined on at a low waist-line, the silk being either printed or elaborately embroidered. The coat is just the regulation suit coat. One having such a costume, has in reality a suit and dress.

The blouse of the hour for dress-up wear is of course the casquin of Georgette crepe, indestructible voile, crepe de Chine, or perhaps a combination of these materials gorgeously embroidered. When they came out first they were called "transformation" blouses, a name which was particularly suitable for with a pretty silk skirt, they do transform a blouse and skirt into a costume. Tuck-ins are now shown principally in tailored styles, as for instance the fine voile or batiste with hand-drawn work decoration or a frilly front which is so popular at the moment with women selecting costumes for the south. These are extremely smart. Crepe de Chine is also made up in tuck-in style, and tailor finish, white being the color advocated by Dame Fashion. Tucking and some hand embroidery, such as eyelet is used as trimming and the collar is convertible, so that it may be worn high or low according to the taste of her who wears it.

There were some beautiful white flannels and serges; some had white skirts and green or orange coats—regular sports suits. But more anon.

Embroidery the Popular Trimming for Every Gown

Overblouse
9184
Embroidery
12600

Overblouse
9170
Embroidery
12571

9184—Ladies' One-piece Overblouse. Designed for 34 to 46 bust. Size 36 requires  $1\frac{7}{8}$  yard 36-inch crêpe de Chine. Embroidery forms the trimming for this attractive overblouse worked out in heavy silk in design 12600.

Dress 9071
Embroidery 12510

9071—Ladies' Long-waisted Dress. Designed for 34 to 44 bust. Width at lower edge  $1\frac{1}{4}$  yard. Size 36 requires  $3\frac{1}{4}$  yards 54-inch Poirer twill— $\frac{1}{2}$  yard 40-inch dotted organdy for collar— $\frac{7}{8}$  yard 36-inch lining. Darts on the shoulders give a snug fit to the long-waisted bodice of this frock. It closes on the left shoulder and under the arm. The tunic is in four separate panels, embroidered at the bottom in design 12510. This is an admirable design for remodeling, as two materials can be combined readily, using one for the bodice and tunic and one for the skirt. Blue serge and black satin, brown satin and velvet, or plain and plaid fabrics may be used in combination, or one could select plain and check velours.

Dress 9057

Dress 9196
Embroidery
12594

Dress 8758

Dress 9177

Dress 9181

Dress 9178

Three Patterns
Free with a
Subscription at $2.00 per annum, sent direct to the Canadian Home Journal.

FOR FURTHER
DESCRIPTION AND PRICES OF PATTERNS SEE
PAGE 28.

Canadian National Railways

The Pacific Coast —Winter's Appeal

British Columbia, Washington, California

Daily Transcontinental Service to North Pacific Coast Points

From MONTREAL
(Bonaventure Station)
The "Continental Limited"
Leaves 5.00 p.m. Daily.

From TORONTO
(Union Station)
The "National"
Leaves 11.00 p.m. Daily.

COMPARTMENT - OBSERVATION - LIBRARY CAR,
Standard and Tourist Sleeping and Dining Cars, Colonist Cars and Coaches

For fares and full information as to routes, etc., apply to nearest agent, Canadian National-Grand Trunk Railways.

74

My "Snug Harbor" Cigarette

Enjoy them to-day

PLAYER'S
NAVY CUT
CIGARETTES

To The Women's Institutes

Read the letter (page 19) from Mrs. Arthur Murphy, President of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada, announcing that the CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL is now the official organ of that excellent organization.

By NORMAN HARRIS

The Easy Road to Riches.

HOW is the young man of twenty to manage his finances so that at forty he will own a cheque book, a strong box, and other evidences of a substantial estate?

What should the young woman of thirty do now, to lay the foundation for a position of practical if not total independence in later years?

What steps should be taken by the person of forty, or forty-five, to make any possible haste while the sun still shines, to fend off the shadows that possibly begin to impend?

The recipe is so simple, so easy, and so devoid of the element of the picturesque that to state it is perhaps to cause a certain disappointment to the reader. The "magic secret" is simply this: To simply save a certain proportion of the income or earnings, and to lay it away and let the money do the rest. The money must be lodged securely. It must be put to work at once. It must be available to come back to the hand of the owner, should he want it. It should be so laid out as to be nearly all the time, one hundred per cent. solvent. The moment the investor sketches out for himself a definite investment programme, and begins to follow it, in that moment he has detached himself from the crowd of ignorant and thoughtless persons who, having given no thought nor study to the field of investment, are possessed of a number of fallacious ideas which are the foundation for one disappointment and loss after another. They believe that no strike in the way of altering their conditions can be made until a thousand dollars is secured. They think that the way to treat the first thousand dollars is to grasp some wonderful opportunity which will double their money within a comparatively short period of time. When people who make a business of deluding the unwary, talk to them of twenty per cent. earnings, their inexperience prompts them to believe that if they put the money into the suggested channel, two hundred dollars gain in one year will be their portion. The thousand dollars will then be twelve hundred dollars. Next year, the twelve hundred dollars will be perhaps sixteen hundred dollars; possibly in three years it will be two thousand. And so on, allowing the imagination to expand the possibilities.

What is the fate of people who proceed along these lines?

In the majority of cases, they lose the money. What does this mean? Simply that, whereas a person is gullible because of his ignorance, this same ignorance deters him from ascertaining that his money is gone, and consequently during the years when he still has hope that there will be a good end to the transaction, his investment life is wasting away. He would be away ahead of the game if it were possible for him to say to himself, the day after he has embarked his savings into the enterprise: "This thing that I mistook for an investment, is at its best, a most hazardous gamble; therefore I will let the gamble take care of itself. I will assume that all this money is lost. I will start again right now and invest properly."

But it would be a very wise person that could so act two parts. And so the years go on. The company itself remains in existence. The president draws his annual salary. The directors take their fees for each meeting; more stock is sold to keep the corporation together, but there are no earnings. Each year the equity of the shareholder becomes less. Finally, there is scarcely enough value to warrant the services of the liquidator. The company ends its days. What happens the president and the directors? Nothing. They forward a notice to shareholders, and then form another corporation. This is only one instance of what is happening almost daily to the savings of the public. There is in existence an organized force of "enterprisers" who make a business of finding out in the community what person has accumulated earnings, and taking the money from him. The position is a scandalous one. To all intents and purposes the promoter and the directors of corporations of the kind mentioned are stealing money, yet there is no common law that will touch them.

The safety of the individual is to fortify himself at the outset by casting a strong and forward policy for himself. He will be right if he throws most of the prospectus literature that comes to him through the mails, from strange brokers, into the fire. He will be safe if he refuses to converse with people peddling stock; but he is always in danger unless he has a substantial counter policy founded on an emphatic belief. He can formulate this in the knowledge that money, put to work properly, loves to reproduce itself. If he is twenty years of age he should know that in twenty-six more years he can make five thousand dollars grow into twenty thousand dollars, not by manipulating any clever deals on the stock market, or by seizing any of the so-called golden chances that come along, but simply by putting his money systematically out at six per cent. interest. A person at almost any age who has knowledge of the wonderful results that money gives when saved systematically, and that is allowed to compound itself through the re-investment of interest into additional principal, can in five years put himself into a position where he will simply laugh at the frantic efforts of promoters to induce him to "sign here" so that he may get the lavish rewards pictured for him. He will laugh because he knows that the results he is getting cannot be bettered. He does not want to try any system that pretends to be so superior to his own that in half the time it will give twice the results. Once he has grown into this sound philosophy it may be said that he is a real investor, that his money is safe, that his future is assured.

How should one enter upon such a programme? An investment estate should be founded upon the bond, or a security in the bond class. The municipal debenture is an ideal instrument for the purpose. That debenture which pays a rate of interest in conformity with the general rate should be selected in preference to one that pays interest at a higher figure. Until he has actually found his feet, the investor might confine himself to purchasing, either outright, or on the instalment plan, municipal debentures and other bonds. He may procure many that are in denominations of one hundred dollars. The start is the most important thing. It does not matter how small may be the first payment; the initial money laid down is tantamount to being an assurance premium; a guarantee of indemnity in the later years.

Allen Theatres Stock.

S. R. O., Picton, Ont.:—Stock of Allen Theatres would appear to have a very great deal of speculation combined with it. The weakness of the offer of preference shares was that they were in part issued against equities including common stocks previously issued. Of course, so long as the parent company earns and pays its dividends, the shareholder need not worry too much as to the equity value underlying them. At the same time the position is that these shares seem much more speculative than they might have been.

E. R. B., Lachine, Quebec:—One of the disadvantages of purchasing stock in a Texas oil company is the inability afterwards of procuring any information asked for, apart from the annual report, if such is issued. I have no information on Texas United Oil Company.

Information Coupon

January, 1921.

If a subscriber will fill in this coupon, and send along with the enquiry, the best service at our command will be ensured.

Name .....

Address .....

WILLYS-KNIGHT

Canadian owners who have driven their Willys-Knight sleeve-valve motors thousands of miles, say the motor's only change is improvement with use.

These owners speak with enthusiasm of this motor's exertionless, unfaltering response.

The extra advantages of owning this fine car are undeniable. Its roominess, its classical design and other refinements more than compensate for the additional amount so wisely invested in the Willys-Knight.

WILLYS-OVERLAND LIMITED

Overland and Willys-Knight Sedans, Coupes, Touring Cars and Roadsters

Head Office and Factories: Toronto, Canada

Branches: Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Regina

A Greater Holiday Than Christmas

THROUGH one single act, it is possible for your home to know a greater holiday than Christmas ever was—greater, indeed, than all the holidays of the year combined! Exaggeration? No—here are the facts:

The Colonial-Maid BlueBird Electric Clothes Washer washes clothes clean in a fraction of the time required by the old-time washboard method. It will do an ordinary family washing inside of one hour—and save the balance of “wash-day” for other things. If it saves only six hours in each of 52 wash-days a year, it has reclaimed a total of 312 hours—or 26 days of 12 hours each—it has actually made for its user time equal to almost four weeks' holidays!

And, in addition, each and every day is a brighter, happier day in the home where there is a BlueBird. In brief, BlueBird means not merely a perfect piece of machinery, but

Freedom from Drudgery -- Time for Other Things

And it saves not only time, but clothes and health. It washes the heaviest blankets without effort and without human assistance; it washes the sheerest fabrics in a way that makes them last five times as long. There is a BlueBird Dealer in your town who will gladly tell you the whole story. If not, write us.

Specifications of the Colonial Maid BlueBird Electric Clothes Washer and Wringer

CABINET—White, Grey trim; has table top, waist high; working parts enclosed; safety for children; attractive appearance; graceful design; enamel finish—easily kept clean.

TUB—Heavy copper, extra large rocking type, tinned inside and perfectly smooth.

ACTION—Oscillating principle—quickest, smoothest, no vibration, simple control—locks on centre when not in operation.

FRAME—Strongest, most heavily constructed frame—built like a bridge; mounted on four double wheel roller bearing casters, easy to move.

MECHANISM—Simplest design, few moving parts.

WRINGER—All metal, enamelled grey, rigid, cannot warp; adjustable; approved safety release; full 12 in. width—extra wide.

ROLLS—Finest quality—highest grade Sumatra rubber—made by Goodyear, Toronto.

DRAIN—Operated from top of washer.

MOTOR—Strong; dependable; easily cleaned; waterproof; ample power; specially designed and built for Canadian BlueBird by Canadian Westinghouse Co.

Ask your local BlueBird Dealer to demonstrate. Write us for descriptive literature.

M-4

Made in Canada by BlueBird Corporation, Limited
Brantford, Ontario

The Colonial-Maid
Blue Bird
ELECTRIC CLOTHES WASHER

The Wind Wheel of the Djinn

By BERTHA E. GREEN

The Golden Guide

THE wheel was turning. The Djinn sat beside, and, as he turned the wheel, he slowly wound upon it a returning wind that carried a pictured story of a far-off land.

It was a rough wind, somewhat thinned and worn with long, wild sweeping across deserts, a hoarse wind, that told of screaming rushes through the rocky hills. But the Djinn smiled, for, with all its seeming roughness, the story that it brought was one of little children and a golden day.

The sun brought a wide-awake morning to the hills of Peru, and to Juan and Feliciano in their little village. A few poor, scattered houses, of which their home was one, stood on the long slope that led down and out across a desert highland. There were but few trees in the village (you might have counted them on the fingers of one hand), and the sparse grass grew in little clumps. It was not a very cheerful place, but it was home to the children, and there was the sunlight of the morning.

Their playground was the hill-slope, and often they wandered in their play

So the children journeyed through the early morning, stepping aside to watch the lama trains pass. Strange beasts of burden were lamas, like long-legged sheep, their small heads held straight up on long necks. They passed in single file, each with a pack strapped on its back, the line of eight, or ten, or twenty ending with a man, sandaled, with short trousers, a blanket-cloak, and a broad, felt hat.

Twice, at least, the children turned with home in their thoughts. But the wind was rough, and the sunshine was bright, and they journeyed onward. Everything was new, for they had never been so far from home before.

They were not tired, for to these children of the hills the beaten road was the smoothest of paths. Winding, turning, rising, descending, the road stretched on, until, as it curved around the base of a little mountain, it showed the children a place they thought was Fairyland.

SET high on the slope of a wide hill, grass-covered and green, stood a city. The white and pink walls gleamed in the sunlight, and bright flags were flying.

the broad path was bordered with roses in bloom, and bright carnations nodded everywhere. From beneath dark leaves of green they could see the purple bloom of grapes and every tree bore fruit.

They did not know it, but the garden was the most beautiful spot in all Peru, the Lucione Garden, but the children wondered at, and loved it all.

But the sight of the fruit in the garden reminded Juan and his sister that there was such a thing as dinner-time. Poor Juan—coppers were few and seldom in his pocket, and he felt that to eat, one must have money. The fruit in the garden was forbidden—a cross-looking man had told him so. Then the two wandered on, with minds anxious about their dinner.

They came out upon another square, in the centre of which stood a great building of pink and white stone, and it was here they came upon an old friend. Miguel, the muleteer, had come to Arequipa to sell his goods, the soft hair of the odd, goat-like vicuna, and, with his business done, was walking about the market talking to old friends.

AS his eyes fell upon the two children, his wrinkled face wrinkled still more as he smiled and greeted them.

"Ho, my little ones! What brings you from the village to the place of many people?"

Then, seeing the eyes of little Feliciano gazing hungrily at the cakes in a nearby stall, he continued:

"And not a centavo to buy even a loaf-end. Is it not so, Juan?"

Juan's face was his answer, and Miguel, smiling, bought, and the little ones ate. Truly Arequipa was a wonderful city, and never was such a friend as Miguel who stood there beside them.

Miguel was indeed a friend, for it was he who offered the means for a pleasant journey home. His way led back past the children's village, and the children, each seated upon a laden mule, rode proudly from the market square. A man of Miguel's led the first mule, the other mules following in line carrying the cloth and other goods that Miguel had bought. They passed through the city street, out along another road than that by which the children had come.

They halted, resting beside a wide pool, and when, for a little while, the children sat beside it on the soft grass, the pool stirred, bubbled with a faint singing, and there, dancing on the waters, were little, golden, butterfly figures. Golden as sunbeams, and as light, they danced, and as they danced, they sang:

Fairies come to bring you sunshine,
Sunshine to be yours away.
Take us, keep us ever with you,
Memories of a golden day.

The voice of Miguel called, the fairies vanished, and the children said nothing to their friend of what they had seen at the bubble-pool—men do not understand about these things they thought.

A little while longer on the road, and they were in sight of home, quite near home, and after they had said "good-bye" to Miguel, their friend, the children stood and looked back over what, to them had been the road of the golden day.

Arequipa lay beyond the little hills, but far beyond even the city rose El Misti's snowy mountain-top, gilded by the setting sun. The wind was hushed, and Juan, noticing, gazed at the sun-tipped mountain.

"It is there! It is there on the top of El Misti! I see it on the mountain-top!"

And to Feliciano's eager question he replied:

"Why, it is Puna, Puna the desert wind, our golden guide."

"Ho, my little ones! What brings ye from the village?"

to other hills. But this morning seemed different to Juan, for he said:

"We will go to the main road, and watch the lama trains."

So the soft-eyed little Feliciano followed her sturdy brother, not only to the main road, but out upon it. There were no travellers upon the hill-road as the children stood upon the beaten track, and Juan said:

"There will be more to see if we go along the road. Which way shall it be?"

The Puna, the desert wind, was blowing from the direction of the village. It was rough, and a little bit cold, even in the shelter of the hills, and Juan felt it, for he said:

"We will follow the wind along the road, and come back by the sheltered little paths."

Feliciano gazed in round-eyed wonder, but Juan exclaimed:

"It is Arequipa! It is the Great City, and we will go and see it!"

They passed through long, paved streets. There were houses and stores on either side, some built of white stone, and some even of pink stone. One street led them to a great square, or plaza, one side of which formed the front of a grand cathedral. Along another street the children passed and wondered at the little, box-like cars, with people in them, drawn on shining rails by mules.

But there was still another street, and this led the children, almost before they knew, into a garden. How different this was to their bleak hills. A starved flower or two, hiding close to a rock, was all they knew. Here

Cleanse Your Skin for a Beautiful Complexion

Dust, dirt and poisonous matter of every description are constantly collecting in the pores of the skin.

You must have a soap that purifies as well as cleanses if you would have a pure, clear skin.

Gouraud's Medicated Soap

is a scientific blending of the best-known purifying and cleansing properties. It will destroy all poisonous matter in the pores and thoroughly clean the skin. Unsurpassed for delicate skins and the treatment of skin troubles. Delightfully scented. Ideal for use in preparing the skin before applying GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM. In use over 75 years.

Every woman who values a beautiful complexion should try GOURAUD'S MEDICATED SOAP, especially those who use GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL CREAM. You will find better results will be obtained by cleansing and preparing the skin with this Soap before applying the Cream.

Send us 10c for a trial cake or 25c for a large cake.

FERD. T. HOPKINS & SON
Montreal, Quebec

Forestall Colds, Chills and Influenza

Take
BOVRIL

Use Bovril in your cooking. It flavours, enriches, nourishes more.

The Body-building Power of Bovril has been proved by independent scientific experiments to be from 10 to 20 times the amount of Bovril taken.

Be sure this trade mark is on every household electrical appliance you buy.

Northern Electric Company
LIMITED

Montreal, Toronto, Windsor, Calgary,
Halifax, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Edmonton,
Quebec, London, Regina, Vancouver.

The Bloom of Youth

Comes Mainly From Eating the Right Foods

Note Why Raisins Are Important

RAISINS are delicious, but don't eat them for their lusciousness alone.

Use them for their natural iron content also. Your daily food should furnish iron. A small supply is needed daily to keep the blood in good condition.

Iron brings the bloom of youth to women's and children's cheeks, and is vital to true vigor in all men.

Raisins make scores of plain foods taste luxurious, while adding but a mite to cost. Try them in your boiled rice, oatmeal, cornbread, cakes, and cookies.

Always use them in bread pudding, and in other simple puddings and desserts. See how much better the whole family likes these foods with raisins.

Raisins increase nutrition also. They furnish 1,560 calories of energizing nutriment per pound.

Try This Raisin Custard en Casserole

- |                 |  |
|-----------------|--|
| 1 cup sugar     | ½ cup Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins                        |
| 2 cups milk     | 4 tablespoons cornstarch (flour may be substituted)    |
| ¾ teaspoon salt | 1 teaspoon vanilla or lemon extract (flavor to taste). |
| 3 eggs          |  |

Put milk in top of double boiler; mix cornstarch with a little cold milk; add salt and cook thoroughly and until mixture thickens sufficiently to hold raisins; then stir in the well beaten eggs and add raisins, flavoring and sugar; turn into buttered pudding dish and bake in moderate oven fifteen or twenty minutes. Delicious served with flavored whipped cream or lemon pudding sauce.

SUN-MAID RAISINS

Ask for Sun-Maid Raisins when you order. They are made in California from the finest table grapes, kinds too delicate, thin-skinned and juicy to ship long distances as fresh grapes.

You may never have these fresh grapes, but you can buy them anywhere as raisins. Try them. See how good they are.

THREE VARIETIES: Sun-Maid Seeded (seeds removed); Sun-Maid Seedless (grown without seeds); Sun-Maid Clusters (on the stem).

CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATED RAISIN CO.

Membership 10,000 Growers
FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

Send coupon for free book, "Sun-Maid Recipes," describing scores of ways to serve.

California Associated Raisin Co.,
Dept. 16, Fresno, Calif.

Please send me, without charge, copy of "Sun-Maid Recipes."

Name

Street

City

State

The Red Guardian

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 9.)

The Missionary was overjoyed at meeting a white man once more, though he and Esther grieved with Garry over the terrible affliction which hung like a black pall between him and his past. And Garry, instead of growing robust and healthy from the outdoor life, which stretched on monotonously from day to day—hunting, fishing, trapping with the young braves—grew thin and lined from the agonized struggle to remember. Only the companionship of Dr. McLean and his daughter made life bearable.

Then added to the desperate plight in which he found himself, came the sudden realization of his love for Esther—a hopeless love it seemed, one he might never mention nor allow her to suspect for a single moment. A man without a memory! His past might be black with a record of crime, although he hardly believed that possible. He might already have a wife. The situation was becoming intolerable.

Finally he determined to lose himself in the forest and work his way South. He would disappear quietly from Esther's life for he had a suspicion that he was beginning to mean altogether too much to her. But just as he was about to slip his canoe into the water and make his escape, Hawk-Eye stepped from behind a pine, and although his dusky friend said nothing, Garry realized that he was virtually a prisoner.

"Well, Hawk-Eye, old sport," exclaimed Garry in the picturesque language which was one of the things he had not forgotten, "think I was about to beat it from your Happy Hunting-Grounds?"

Hawk-Eye smiled enigmatically and grunted, but a grunt from Hawk-Eye was an oration in itself. "Better stay and marry 'White Flower,'" he advised.

And Garry stayed, knowing that escape from his aptly-named guardian was quite impossible.

THE winter that followed was unusually severe even for that Northern wilderness. Blizzards raged; the frost-king held high carnival, and Sunny Creek Reserve felt the strain of the long, bitter months.

Garry hunted and trapped with Hawk-Eye. He had become an expert in wood-craft, as quick and cunning as the Redskin himself. He found that to keep his sanity he must work incessantly, but he had himself so well in hand that he adopted an attitude of genial good-comradeship toward Esther, although at times her look of sad bewilderment almost broke down his barrier of brotherliness. The long evenings reading, talking and smoking in Dr. McLean's cabin were his recreation and delight.

It was after New Year that the influenza came; sweeping like a scourge from sea to sea it found the lonely Reservation and proceeded to destroy the terror-stricken inhabitants. Dr. McLean, Esther and Garry, with some of the young men and girls, worked day and night trying to save the victims and prevent a spread of the disease. Only for the absolute faith of the people in the "Little White Brother" and their child-like obedience, the death-toll would have been infinitely heavier.

Then came the great disaster. Dr. McLean was an old man and unable to endure the terrific strain under which he was laboring. He and Hawk-Eye were stricken down the same day. Esther and Garry nursed them both in the Missionary's cabin, doing everything that skill and devotion could do. The second week Hawk-Eye began to show signs of recovery, but the older man developed pneumonia and Garry soon realized that his days were numbered. But Esther refused to give up hope.

One stormy March evening, when Garry returned to the cabin to take up his long night vigil, he found Esther on her knees beside her father's bed, sobbing in an abandonment of grief, while the old man lay smiling the smile of those to whom Heaven has suddenly opened.

"He's gone, Garry," she cried holding out groping hands to her only friend. And what could Garry do but take her in his arms and comfort her. After all he was not made of stone. The barriers were down at last. He told her everything—his love, his fears, his hopes.

"You were right, Garry," she sighed when he had finished. "We must find out about your past. If you can't escape I can go without arousing suspicion. Hawk-Eye must have reasons for keeping you here."

But Garry's turn came next. For weeks he lay between life and death, tended devotedly by Esther and Hawk-Eye, who showed an almost pitiful anxiety for his white friend's recovery. It was a mere wraith of the sinewy, active woodsman, who rewarded their untiring efforts by walking from his couch to a chair when the May sunshine was melting the frost-bound rivers, and birds were chorusing their welcome to returning summer.

"Splendid!" cried Esther, clapping her hands in sheer delight as the patient sank with a sigh into the missionary's easy-chair. "I never expected you to walk again. Hawk-Eye and I are wonderful nurses, aren't we, Hawk-Eye?"

The Indian nodded gravely but her joy was reflected in his dark eyes, and his customary grunt expressed volumes of approval.

At that moment a shadow darkened the doorway, and all three looked up to greet the new-comer. A tall, young man with a round, boyish face stood hesitating on the threshold. His hair was red and close-cropped and he wore the uniform of the Royal North West Mounted Police. For many months Corporal Smith had trailed his man, through blossoming summer, through bitter winter, following many false clues, but never wavering in his determination to find the murderer of Sergeant Gaston.

Garry was on his feet in an instant. The eyes of all three were upon him. His face was shining with a look of inexpressible belief. "Smith!" he cried, "the uniform, Mounted Police; I remember! Oh, Esther, I remember!" And he fell forward into Smith's arms in a dead faint.

IN his weakened condition the sudden shock had proved too much and it was several weeks before he could leave his bed. Meantime, Corporal Smith explained the whole situation to Esther. He knew that Garry could never have committed the crime but he must have some idea who had, so he would have to take him back to Commissioner Grant as soon as he was able to travel.

Esther was horrified at the story of the cold-blooded murder; but calmly confident, as was Corporal Smith, that Garry had had no hand in the matter. When he grew a little stronger the Corporal told him of his mission and asked him some details of the tragedy, but Garry's face became inscrutable; he shook his head decidedly. "I didn't do it, Smith; you know that of course, but I have nothing further to say." And no persuasions of Esther or the Corporal could move him one iota from his determined silence.

On a glorious midsummer day, the little party started southward. Esther insisted on accompanying the Corporal and his prisoner. She was going to see this thing through. Hawk-Eye also indicated his intention of escorting the travellers. His devotion to Garry seemed to increase daily. It astonished Corporal Smith. "That red rascal would cut himself in inch pieces for you, Garry," he laughed. "I wish I had a friend like him."

It was some weeks before Garry and the Corporal stood at length in the Commissioner's office. That worthy officer of the law leaped to his feet with a cry of amazement. "Garry, my boy!" he exclaimed seizing the wanderer's hand and wringing it frantically. "I never expected to see you alive—foul play, I thought. Thank God you are safe! Now tell me all about it."

"I have nothing to tell you about Sergeant Gaston," returned Garry quietly, "only that I did not murder him."

"But you know who did?" asserted the Commissioner.

"I have nothing to say," insisted Garry.

At that moment the door opened

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 39.)

The Red Guardian

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 38.)

softly and Esther entered, or rather was gently pushed into the room by Hawk-Eye. The Indian bowed gravely to the Commissioner and faced Garry.

"I have come to say I kill Sergeant Gaston," he began. "He took my squaw. I shot from behind a tree, behind my White Brother," indicating Garry. "When my Brother turn I struck him with my gun, big gash; I think it is Corporal Smith, not my Brother who once saved me from the river. Then I carry him to my canoe and care for him, take him up stream. For many moons we travel. His head is sick. At last we come to my people and to 'The Little White Brother' and the 'White Flower.'"

"I am sick in the lungs. I only live a few months. My White Brother is good. He will marry the White Flower and I will die happy."

There was silence in the little room when the low, guttural voice ceased. A spasm of coughing seized the Indian, witnessing too plainly to the truth of his words. Garry had slipped his arm around Esther and drawn her close. The last barrier was removed.

"Yes, I will, my Brother," he said gently, laying his other arm across the Indian's shoulders. "You are a real sport. Congratulate me, Commissioner, and let me introduce my future wife."

"You are indeed to be congratulated," declared the Commissioner heartily, advancing toward Esther. "And Hawk-Eye will be looked after in the hospital. I think he has diagnosed his case correctly. I will go into the whole matter thoroughly to-morrow."

"Death, romance, the blossoming of a new happiness—all together in the office of a hard-headed old Police Commissioner. I rather envy you, my boy, but the romance of the Force has got me in its grip. The adventure, the excitement, the reckless daring, the unerring justice—I am wedded to them for life."

"Seven different times did I haul that pony across the road."

Ars Longa, Vita Brevis

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14.)

ULTIMATELY we get set down where the real estate stops and the farms begin, beside a dusty road, a dusty stone wall and field of dusty beets wilting in the hot sun. I shortly begin to feel like the beets and am glad that my part calls for a sun-bonnet. Were I a heroine, I should be facing sun-stroke with bobbed hair!

First worry, no cow in sight, director is distracted but Heaven sends along a pony cart with two small boys in it! They are persuaded to join the movies.

Seven different times at the call of "Action," on the director's megaphone, did I haul that pony across the road on the lines marked out for it! Each time my whole soul was in the work! Each time something went wrong! Either the pony sneezed or the eloping couple did not elope as directed, or the sign post refused to do its work, or a passing motor forced us to halt. Once a car full of men who very evidently were blessed with too much money and too little imagination in spending it, held us up. They were tiresomely drunken, but the company treated them with a bored politeness, and soon these gentlemen left the hard working actors to their task.

An outsider can have no idea of how precious the light is! The day is all too short for the work that has to be done in it! At last our scene is completed and we sit by the roadside and watch a race between the fat man and the youth. "Fade!" yells the director to the camera man. "I guess we'll call it a day, it's seven o'clock." "I'll never get home to the missus," said the fat man gloomily. He has a wife and baby on an island out of town, and counts the hours till he can take a boat to that island.

"Pretty nice little company we have," the director said. "The Company!"

What magic, friendly words! To be of the company is to have friends and comradeship, to enjoy moments of fun and jokes in common and such a homecoming as we had that day! The Scot singing "Bubbles" through the megaphone, all of us laughing and singing. A stop was made for ginger ale and straws, enjoyed by us in the car and by fifty small children who gathered to stare at our make-up. "Father" and the pram joined the crowd. "Triplets for them as likes them, not for me," said the Irrepressible One, when he observed the three small children in the carriage. Once more we added to the happiness of the town, a tire burst and the delay drew us quite an audience. Children, of course, to whom the fat man conversed amiably, ladies in rockers on neighboring porches, men coming home from work, all stopped to watch the circus. That is the way we should all come home from work, happy, joking, comrades together!

"Don't you feel nice and clean when your make-up is off?" said the little girl to me, as we scrubbed at our faces with the big cold cream box, "my people think I am crazy about the movies, but I just love it, I'm going to Dramatic School twice a week too."

No man alive feels the dignity of his calling more than does the actor. "Ars Longa, Vita Brevis" must be their motto, their lives so short to learn all there is to know in the practice of this Magic. This Magic that with a few poor rags and a box of chalks makes the world laugh! We, who are disappointed with our part in Life, who have not been called upon to play that Hero's role we used to dream of, "Now Tom would be a soldier, and Maria go to sea," can sometimes persuade ourselves that Art is the Real Life and mirrors a world bigger and more complete than this, where each one finds the True Romance.

She Merely Turns the Button

to do the washing, where formerly she slaved all day at the washboard. The turns "wash day" into "wash hour" and delights you with abundance of clean linen, made truly clean with so little effort.

Connor Perfection Electric Washer

May we send you the story of "MORE CLEAN LINEN"?

J. H. CONNOR & SON LIMITED
OTTAWA, ONTARIO

H.J.

ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"

The name "Bayer" stamped on tablets positively identifies the only genuine Aspirin,—the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada.

Always buy an unbroken package of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which contains proper directions for Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains, and Pain generally.

Handy tin boxes containing 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Druggists also sell larger "Bayer" packages. There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Mono-aceticacidester of Salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

STAMMERING

or stuttering overcome positively. Our natural methods permanently restore natural speech. Graduate pupils everywhere. Free advice and literature.

THE ARNOTT INSTITUTE
KITCHENER, CANADA

Earn Money at Home

We will pay $15 to $50 weekly for your spare time, writing show cards; no canvassing; we instruct you and supply you with work. Write or call Brennan Show Card System, Limited, 38 Currie Bldg., 269 College St., Toronto. Open evenings (except Wednesday).

The Pilot Superior Pipeless Furnace

Nature's way of heating your home. The only sensible, efficient and economical method.

Every atom of heat generated in the furnace passes into the house.

Write for Booklet "C" to

The Hall Zryd Foundry Company, Ltd.

Hespeler - Ontario

Western Branch:
P.O. Box 687, Winnipeg, Man.

Gifts Which Bring Pleasure to the Housewife

NOTHING delights the housekeeper more whether she is a young bride, or one long experienced in housekeeping, than embroidered linens. Particularly is this the case in bed linen. A spread and bolster roll of mull, handkerchief linen, or sheer batiste, lace trimmed, and attractively embroidered is one of the daintiest of holiday gifts. Below is illustrated a very attractive spread in design 12587. Bands of insertion separate the spread into panels which are daintily embroidered in large French knots and flat satin stitch with the stems of the flowers in outline stitch. Does the embroidery seem elaborate? It is not so in reality, and you will be surprised to find how quickly you will get through. It is important, however, that such gifts be started early so that sufficient time can be given to the work to have it look well. Then there will be no last-minute rushing with its attendant evils—loss of temper, frazzled nerves, badly finished gifts, and a general feeling of dissatisfaction.

12587—Showing Enlarged View of Bedspread Design

Nos. 12585 and 12587 on Bolster Roll and Bedspread of Heavy Scrim

ON the bed shown above is arranged the spread which was described before design 12587, and on the spread is a bolster roll cover embroidered to match in design 12585. This set is made of scrim and trimmed with antique filet lace. It may be disposed over white, or if preferred, colored silk, sateen, or any of the silk-substitute upholstery fabrics may be used. The color should harmonize with the general decorative scheme of the room.

12585—Enlarged View of the Bolster Roll

12586—Design for Dresser Scarf Matching 12585 and 12587

AN added touch of daintiness may be given to the bolster roll cover by embroidering a monogram or an initial in the center of the motif, and to continue a harmonious ensemble the dresser as well as the dressing table in the bedroom may have scarfs fashioned of the same material as the bedspread and the bolster roll and embroidered in a matching design, 12586. An end of the scarf is illustrated just above showing the hemstitched edges with trimming of antique filet and with an embroidered motif. Any of these articles would make a most acceptable gift, and for the young girl's room the entire set would be simply ideal. The embroidery may be carried out in white or it may harmonize with the color scheme of the room.

Nos. 12588 and 12589 are Shown on a Spread and Bolster of a Child's Bed

FOR twin beds or a child's bed a most attractive spread is illustrated above with bolster roll to match. The embroidery forms large medallions, the one on the spread, design 12589, measuring 20½ by 24½ inches, while the bolster roll, design 12588, measures 9½ by 18½ inches. Medallions are worked in lazy daisy, raised satin, stem, and outline stitches.

12588—Bolster Roll Cover

ONE may get a clearer view of the beauty of the bolster roll by looking at the illustration above. This may be of any preferred fabric, tho the sheer white ones are much in vogue and lend themselves beautifully to embroidery. At the right the bedspread is illustrated spread out flat, showing the charming medallion at the center. Churn or filet lace and matching insertion provide further decoration. The insertion divides the spread into panels, the center one embroidered

12589—Showing Bedspread in Open Effect

Pain subsides— aching ceases—

When Thermogene is applied. This wonderful medicated wool generates instant heat—and soothes and cures pain-racked nerves and tissues. Takes the place of poultice or plaster.

42

THERMOGENE
CURATIVE WADDING

From Your Druggist
50c

OUR NEW SERIAL

THE opening chapters of our new serial

"Two On the Trail" relating hair-breadth adventures in the forests of the North-West are to be found in this issue and will be of interest to every reader.

Two On the Trail

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 12.)

CHAPTER III.

ON THE TRAIL.

hoped you were an older man—" Garth looked so disappointed she immediately added: "For that would make the request seem less strange." She hesitated.

"What is it?" asked Garth.

But she parried awhile. "What sort of man is the Bishop?" she asked. Garth described his modesty and his manliness.

"A very proper person to be Bishop in a wild country," remarked Mrs. Mabyn, patronizingly.

"And his wife?" asked Natalie.

Garth pictured a homely, unassuming body, with a great heart.

"Of course!" said Mrs. Mabyn. A whole chapter might be devoted to the analysis of the tone in which she said it.

"We had heard she accompanies her husband," said Natalie.

"Yes," said Garth.

"That simplifies matters!" exclaimed Mrs. Mabyn.

"Their route takes in Spirit River Crossing, I believe," pursued Natalie.

Garth affirmed it, wondering.

Natalie paused before she went on. "Whatever you may think of what I am going to tell you, Mr. Pevensey," she said with the same proud appeal in her voice, "we may count on you, I am sure, not to speak of it to any one for the present."

"Indeed you may!" he said warmly.

"I am obliged to get to Spirit River Crossing at the earliest possible moment," she said simply.

"Have you considered the kind of journey it is?" he asked quietly.

"That is the worst of it!" complained Mrs. Mabyn. "I had expected to go with her; but we find it is out of the question."

Garth hastened to assure her that it was.

"I have considered everything," said Natalie.

"But do you know that you will have to travel two or three weeks in an open boat in all weathers, a mere canoe in fact; that you will have to sleep out of doors, and live on the very roughest of fare? Could you stand it?" he demanded almost sternly.

"I am perfectly well and strong," answered Natalie.

"That is quite so, happily," said Mrs. Mabyn. "Otherwise, I would not hear of it for a moment."

"If the Bishop's wife can stand it, certainly I can," said Natalie.

"But she is obliged to do it," said Garth.

"So am I!" said Natalie quickly.

"Couldn't I help you more intelligently if I knew?" suggested Garth.

"But I cannot tell you," she said. "That is, not yet. Believe me, it is nothing I need be ashamed of—"

"Natalie!" exclaimed Mrs. Mabyn indignantly. "Is it not I who urge you to go?"

"Yes, I am doing what will be considered a most praiseworthy thing," said Natalie with what sounded strangely like—bitterness.

"Yes, indeed!" urged Mrs. Mabyn, who seemed to have forgotten her late anxiety on Natalie's account.

"But in telling you," objected Natalie gently, "I would have to trust you to a far greater extent than you would be trusting me, in lending me, without knowing my reasons, the assistance of one traveller to another."

Garth was ready enough to throw himself at her feet without this affecting appeal. "Please count on me," he said, moved more than he would let them see, especially the old woman.

"How can I help you?"

"See me as far as Miwasa Landing," she said simply. "I will then throw myself on the goodness of the Bishop and his wife; and trust to them to take me with them the rest of the way—that is, if I wish to go. The Bishop may be able to give me information," she added darkly.

"Natalie!" put in Mrs. Mabyn, warningly. "I—I will give her letters to those good people," she added hastily, to divert Garth's mind from the strangeness of Natalie's last words.

But Garth was in no temper to be deflected by a mystery. "I am thankful for the chance to be of service," he said fervently, having a keen sense of the poverty of words.

At a quarter to eight next morning, Garth was waiting again in the parlor of the Bristol Hotel. Promptly to the minute Natalie came sailing in, in her own inimitable way, walking all of a piece, with a sweep like a banner, Garth thought. When he saw her, his last doubt of the reality of this intoxicating journey vanished. She bore no trace now of the seriousness of the night before; all smiles and red-cheeked eagerness, she radiated the very joy of being.

"Enter Mrs. Pink!" she cried.

She had a brown valise, a fat bundle, a flat square package wrapped in paper, a coat and a parasol.

"You said trunks were taboo," she explained. "I only had one valise and I couldn't nearly get everything in. Indeed I sat up half the night studying how little I could do with."

"We'll get you a duffle-bag at the Landing," he said.

"Am I suitably dressed?" she demanded, showing herself.

Garth smiled. She was perfection, how could he blame her? She had interpreted his suggestions as to sober, serviceable clothes, in a diabolically well-fitting suit of brown, the color of her hair. At the wrist and neck of her brown-silk waist were spotless bands of white; and on her head was a dashing little brown hat with green wings. She exhibited square-toed little brown boots as an evidence of exceeding common sense; and was pulling on a pair of absurdly small boy's gloves. This most suitable costume for the North was completed by a brown-silk parasol.

"All in place and well tied down," she announced. "Nothing to fly or catch!"

They walked to the post office, quaffing deep of the delicious morning air, Garth glancing sidewise at his exuberant companion, and wondering, like the old lady in the nursery rhyme, if this could really be he. It was a day to make one walk a-tiptoe; the sky overhead bloomed with the exquisite pale tints of a Northern summer's morning; and the bricks of Oliver Avenue were washed with gold.

Natalie's face fell a little at the sight of the stage-coach; for it had nothing in common with the imagined vehicle of romance except the four horses; and they were but sorry beasts. In fact, it was nothing but a clumsy, uncovered wagon, which had never been washed since it was built; and was worn to a dull drab in a long acquaintance with the alternating mud and dust of the trail. Behind the driver's seat was a sort of well, for the mail bags and express packages; and behind that, two excruciatingly narrow seats for the passengers, running lengthwise between the rear wheels. The entrance was by a step at the tail-board.

Everything awaited the word to start. The driver, whip in hand, stood by the front wheel surrounded by a group of idlers; and his two great mongrel huskies, squatted on the pavement with expectant eyes on their master. Garth helped Natalie into the body of the wagon; and, climbing in after her, disposed her baggage with his own already in the well. The eyes of the driver and all his satellites were promptly transferred in wide wonder to the girl with the green wings in her hat. Garth, with a keen sense of difficulties ahead, was indignant and uncomfortable; but Natalie, serenely conscious that everything was in place, dropped her hands in her lap, and chatted away, as if quite unaware of her conspicuousness.

Garth had put Natalie in the right-hand corner of the little cockpit. Another woman passenger was already in place opposite; and the aspect of this lady made an additional element in his uneasiness. She seemed something under forty, tall and angular, her hair, a drab yellow, was tied with a large ghastly bow of black ribbon behind; and in her cheeks she had crudely striven to recall the hues of youth. Around her long neck another black ribbon accentuated the scrawny lines it was designed to hide; and on top of all she wore a wide black hat, which had a fresh yet collapsed effect, as if it had long been cherished under the lid of a trunk.

Horrockses

FLANNELETTE

for Children's Nighties, Petticoats and Underwear

HORROCKSES' FLANNELETTE combines the durability of cotton with the warmth of wool. It is easily washed—may be boiled if necessary—and makes up into warm clothes for children, particularly.

All high-grade stores have HORROCKSES' Nainsooks, Cambrics, Madapolams, Long-cloths, Flannelette, Sheets and Sheetings.

Look for the name "HORROCKSES" on the selvedge.

For name of the nearest store where procurable, write

JOHN E. RITCHIE, Canadian Agent
591 St. Catherine Street West Montreal
Branches:—Toronto and Vancouver

Made by
HORROCKSES, CREWDSON & CO., Limited
Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers
MANCHESTER, England

29

LOOK FOR THE NAME Horrockses ON THE SELVEDGE

A Smart Pleated Skirt of Fine Quality Navy Serge $6.25

A beautiful skirt, accordion pleated, of an excellent quality of navy serge. Think of it—just $6.25. How can we sell you a made-up skirt for practically the same price as you would have to pay for the material alone? First of all, because we were fortunate in securing this lot of serge at a very low price, and because we do all the pleating and finishing in our own factory. Skirts are 2 1/4 yards around when drawn out.

Send us length, size of waistband and Post Office or Express Order for $6.25 and we will send you one of these smart skirts at once, charges prepaid. If you wish to first see the quality of serge used—send for sample.

Skirts pleated from your own material, knife accordion or side pleated (not made up). Prices for pleating: Length less than 35 inches, $1.50; more than 35 inches, $2.00. Return postage 20c extra.

Send for catalogue of pleating, hemstitching, scalloping, etc.

Richardson's
LIMITED

7 Broadbalk Street, Toronto.
(Formerly Toronto Pleating Company)

Health and the Home

Our "Family Physician" department is at your service with the best of advice by one of Canada's prominent women physicians. Diagnosis, of course, is not given, but many a word in season has been helpful to those who avail themselves of the coupon which is an adjunct to the Family Physician's column.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 45.)

Rosy and Velvety

"Lips in whose rosy labyrinth, when she smiled, the soul was lost". Moore.

Wind sores, and cracks, on the lips not only irritate—but are unsightly. Keep your lips healthy and beautiful with

VINOLIA LYPSYL

Cooling and soothing in use, Lypsyl is indispensable to Milady's toilet. Tasteless, yet of a rich, natural color, nothing is so pure, yet so beneficial to the lips as Lypsyl.

In dainty Rose Red and White tins.

When you ask for Lypsyl, see that the cap of the tin is stamped "Vinolia Lypsyl".

Substitutes are worthless.

V8

BY APPOINTMENT

VINOLIA COMPANY
LIMITED

London, Eng., Toronto

SOAPMAKERS TO H.M. THE KING

Beauty is Easily Attained

because the first requisite to beauty is a clear and radiant skin. Lack of attention may have allowed your complexion to become disfigured by Pimples, Blackheads, Blotches, Rough or Oily Skin, but treatment with the Princess Preparations will quickly remedy any non-infectious skin disease. Thousands of women have brought back the girlish loveliness that was once theirs by using these preparations at home.

Consultation FREE by letter or by calling at the Institute.

Princess Complexion Purifier ..... $1.50
Princess Skin Food ..... 1.50
Princess Cinderella Cold Cream ..... .75
Princess Face Powder (all shades) ..... .75

Sample of Cold Cream or Face Powder on request.
The above preparations will be sent with full instructions for home use to any address, post free, on receipt of price.

The Hiscott Institute, Limited
61B COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Horlick's Malted Milk

Used successfully everywhere nearly 1/2 century Made under sanitary conditions from clean, rich milk, with extract of our specially malted grain. The Food-Drink is prepared by stirring the powder in water. Infants and Children thrive on it. Agrees with the weakest stomach of the Invalid and Aged. Invigorating as a Quick Lunch at office or table.

Ask for Horlick's And Get The Original

The Journal Juniors' Club

Conducted by
BERTHA E. GREEN

MY dear Club Members:

I am sure you all had a happy Christmas, and that Santa Claus was very good to you. And now that the holidays are over, I suppose you will be very busy with lessons at school from now on. You will have plans for the New Year, plans for work and play, and I am sure that you are planning, too, to do your part toward making this the most successful year for our club.

Your ideas of music and your ambitions were beautifully told, Daisy Aspinall. Loving music as you do, who knows but, some day, you may become a great musician. Let me hear from you again, and tell me of your progress.

From Wilfred Clark comes one of our best essays. The book that he would give to the world would be one, "that would never be forgotten by those who read it; a book that would stir others to do larger and greater things." I am read over and over, the kind you like to pick up in spare minutes and enjoy." Have you read "Janet of the Kooenay," by Eva McKowan? I am sure you would like it.

I was glad when your letter came, Florence Andrew, and the Journal Juniors' Club has a warm welcome for you. Although your "Favorite Game," Fox and Geese, was not the prize-winner, it was well told. I am glad you like the contests that appear, Florence, and know that you will enjoy those that are planned for the months ahead.

I liked your story, Pearl Bruce; it was full of good thoughts. Truly, there could be nothing finer, more loving, or beautiful, than writing "books for the little children, telling of wondrous fairies and Genii making this world a dreamland of golden thoughts for them." Your story is worthy of honorable mention, though it was not the looking forward to receiving and reading further splendid essays from you, Wilfred.

Write a story about this picture. See Contest.

You love the "heart" in music, don't you, Irene Smith? Your impressions of different melodies tell me that you play understandingly.

I am glad, Kathleen Dawes, that your journal reached you in good time, and that you were able to compete. You would write girls' books—that is good. There are too few of them, and so many girls who would love them. Perseverance, care, and observation are necessary, and one must be satisfied with being, "an authoress in a small way at first." You will write me again, won't you, "Kitty"?

"My Favorite Game," from Mary Moir, is the prize winner. Congratulations from the Club, Mary, and a welcome to you as a new member. So you like the stories I tell. Yes, I "think them out myself," and your liking them will make the writing all the more a pleasure to me.

It was a dear little letter you wrote me, Olive Nightingale. I wonder why your promised entry in our competition did not reach me? Do let me know.

A delightful letter came from you, Kitty Wilson. The Club extends a welcome to you, and you are already enrolled as one of us. There are no rules or obligations other than those which govern the competitions. Of "the kind of book I would wish to write," you say: "I will not write a book that, once read, loses all interest, but one you can prize-winner. I hope you will write me often.

The delightful story you sent me, Vera Johnson, is the prize-winner this month. I know the members of the Journal Juniors' Club will enjoy it, too. Could you send me a more definite address, Vera? A letter was sent to you from our Editor of CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL, to North Battleford, Sask. It was returned not having been called for. Please write me soon so we will know where to send your prize.

I received your letter, Doris Wonnacott, and your story, "What I would like my music to tell," was a pleasure to read. In it you tell us—"Music to me has hidden things in it—things deep and mysterious that thrill me through and through. I would want my music to have a soul, something that speaks to the hearts of people of all that is good and noble." Then as one reads further on, you tell us—"It isn't that I just want fame, though fame is very nice in its own way, but could I make music, I would like it to stir people to a higher and nobler ambition."

You love music, I am sure, and I love it just as you do. Some day, you may give to us all just the sort of music you have so well told us of. Won't you write me again soon?

We have a New Year before us, and I hope that all its days will bring happiness to each and every one of you.

Your sincere friend,
BERTHA E. GREEN.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 46.)

CONTESTS FOR JANUARY

- 1—Boys and Girls 12 to 16 years. Not more than 500 words about the picture which appears on this page.
- 2—Boys and Girls 8 to 12 years. Not more than 300 words; subject, "An Easter Story."
- 3—Camera Contest; subject, "A Winter Country Scene."

RULES

Name, age and address must be written on each entry.

Write on one side of paper only. Members under 12 years, please write on ruled paper.

Stamped, addressed envelope must be enclosed for return of photographs. Prize photo we cannot guarantee to return.

Closing date, the 24th of January.

Those who have taken three prizes in the various contests will not be eligible for further competition.

Address all entries to Journal Juniors' Club, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto, Canada.

"Bad Actors"

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11.)

The affair was hardly a success. Everyone, including the pseudo-prince, was nervous, excepting Ma. Mrs. Brown-Gorman forgot whether "your Highness" or "his Highness" was correct, so contented herself with that anxious admiring contemplation of the apparently royal person that one generally bestows on a piece of Dresden china. Pa, who detested afternoon teas, let his cup and saucer slip from his knee, narrowly missing Mrs. Brown-Gorman's generous ankle. While the resemblance of the guest of honor to the royal reality was unmistakable, Nellie watched him anxiously. Ma did most of the talking.

As the visitor was taking his leave, Mrs. Brown-Gorman went all to pieces. Allowing her tongue to slip its leash she asked to be remembered to the family and upon realization of her mistake grasped the pseudo-prince's extended hand and sought to hide her confusion by pressing it to her lips. Her head descending as she caused the proffered hand to ascend. The young man turned scarlet, Pa choked, and even Ma had to blow her nose. After shaking hands all round the guest entered his car, and the event became history.

"A delightful young man," murmured Mrs. Brown-Gorman.

"Yes, very," returned Ma blandly. "Joseph you had better change your trousers. That tea will leave a stain."

SEVERAL evenings later Pa and Ma were in the den. Ma was knitting and talking to Joseph who had just wiggled his toes into his carpet slippers and opened his evening paper. He didn't mind his wife talking if she only wouldn't knit at the same time. When Ma began to knit Pa knew that something was going to happen. It never failed. The needles, like bright winking eyes, seemed to be flashing him a warning. Desultory musical strains floated across the reception hall. Nellie's new young man, George Pilkington, had called for the first time that evening. After Pa's approval and Ma's O.K., he had been passed on to Nellie.

"Joseph, I have been a help to you in the business, haven't I, dear?" said Ma presently.

"It's you that's made it what it is, Mira," returned Joseph. He couldn't very well say anything else.

"Well, now it's got so big, I think you ought to attend to it yourself—you and George. I've—"

"George!"

"Yes. He's a bright boy is that. Put him at the bottom and he'll soon catch up with you. He's got nerve! I can see it in him! Nellie has shown judgment."

"Yes, he's got nerve, all right," agreed Joseph. "But why—"

"You've got a splendid organization behind you. You don't need me. I'm going into society."

"What!"

"Yes, I've neglected my social obligations shamefully. These theatricals and the prince are only the beginning. I'm going to get to the top."

Pa shuddered. "I'm sure you will, Mira."

Billings entered just then. "Mrs. Brown-Gorman insists on seeing you immediately, ma'am," said the servant. "She—she—"

"No comments, Billings. Show her up."

"Yes'm."

"Billings!"

The servant stopped.

"Ask Miss Nellie and Mr. Pilkington to come. And Billings, show Mrs. Brown-Gorman in first, but arrange for the other two to come in immediately behind her. You understand?"

"Yes'm."

There was a sort of Napoleonic awfulness about Ma. Joseph shrank still deeper into his chair determined not to yield to Mrs. Brown-Gorman. A strange weakness assailed him. The hour he had dreaded had arrived. He had guessed all along that Mrs. Brown-Gorman would be the jumping-jack in his house of cards. There had been a somethingness in Ma's manner during the past two or three days that portended disaster.

IN his mahogany office Joseph Peabody was the capable president of Peabody's Perfection Pickles, Inc. At home he was Mrs. Peabody's husband. Not that he didn't possess executive ability. He had plenty of it. While his wife was undoubtedly responsible for the hugeness of the concern. Joseph had the bump of organization largely developed and under his pilotage the commercial ship sailed a true course. But his wife was the star by which he steered.

Pa could hear Mrs. Brown-Gorman's grenadier footsteps approaching.

Repressing the raging tempest within her until she was in the room, Mrs. Brown-Gorman entered and seemed to burst, to blow up, to fling into their faces the elements of her rage and indignation. Ignorant of his wife's plan, whether of defense or offense, Joseph crawled inwardly. That she had a plan was very evident. The peculiar steely glint in her eyes matching the light of the flying knitting needles, told him that.

"How dare you! How dare you! I—I have just heard—you—you cheats—you—that prince—the faker—!!"

Incoherency robbed her of speech. Her eyes were twin furnaces, scorching hot, burning out of her flushed heavy face, lit with the malignant fires of a woman's hate.

Then suddenly Mrs. Brown-Gorman's fatty heart and torpid liver rebelled and took command of their owner. She collapsed into a convenient chair, her breast rising and falling like a steam-hammer. The rage squeezed out of her like air from a pricked balloon.

At that moment Nellie and Mr. Pilkington entered. Mr. Pilkington wore a blue suit and blue glasses; the last were only temporary, he had explained to Ma. At sight of Mrs. Brown-Gorman, George would have retreated backward into the hall had he not bumped into Nellie who was trying to do the same.

"Come in, children," cooed Mrs. Peabody. "I'm afraid you are unwell, my dear." This to Mrs. Brown-Gorman. "You haven't met Mr. Pilkington—that is, clothed and in his right mind—have you, Mrs. Brown-Gorman? It was Mr. Pilkington who made us such a delightful prince the other day, you know. Do remove those spectacles, George, they completely destroy your royal resemblance."

Mrs. Brown-Gorman's eyes opened wide. But for the palpitation of her, she couldn't say a word.

George removed his glasses and stared stupidly at stupefied Nellie. Pa's condition resembled Mrs. Brown-Gorman's.

"Mrs. Brown-Gorman and I are planning theatricals for the poor Europeans and we thought it would be so delightful to have a prince in them, and I arranged for Mrs. Brown-Gorman and Mr. Pilkington to take their parts before having met, hoping to secure more original effects. Are you sure I hadn't better get you something, Mrs. Brown-Gorman—a glass of water?"

"No, no—nothing," stammered that lady.

"It was a very good idea, Mrs. Peabody," broke in George, grasping the situation. "I should never have thought of that," Mrs. Peabody eyed him appreciatively.

"And you both did so splendidly, my dear Mrs. Brown-Gorman."

"I—I'm sure I don't understand," she quavered, too surprised to become indignant again.

"Of course, you don't. You see I was waiting until I had the films ready before telling you. I had a camera man out on that little balcony off the drawing room. I wanted to study expression and deportment—nothing like the moving pictures for that! Had I told you of my camera man, you would not have done nearly so well. As it is, the films are perfect. Really I don't think you will need to rehearse your part more than once or twice."

"Moving pictures!" gasped Mrs. Brown-Gorman at last.

"Yes. When you raised the prince's hand, Mr. Pilkington's, of course, to your lips, I could have screamed with delight. It was positively realistic!" went on Ma enthusiastically. "Those

KODAK means most in the home, because home pictures tell the simple every day story of the children—each one a fascinating chapter for the Kodak Album.

CANADIAN KODAK CO., Limited

Toronto, Canada

IDEAL SILVER CREAM

FOR

GOLD, SILVERWARE, CUT GLASS, BRASSES

Quick, clean, convenient—no trouble to use

Ideal Silver Cream, the perfect silver polish, gives a beautiful, lasting lustre to plate, glassware, statuary and mirrors. A cream you may safely use in cleaning your finest possessions.

Ask your Dealer for a Jar

CANADIAN POLISHES LTD.

Hamilton, Canada

DOMINION EXPRESS

MONEY
ORDERS

There is no better way to pay your out-of-town accounts.

On sale in 5,000 offices in Canada

Mend Your Pots and Pans.

VOL-PEEK Mends Cooking utensils Graniteware, Aluminum, Enamelware, Tin, Copper, Brass, Iron, etc. Easy to use, no tools required. Ready for use in 2 minutes. Saves a pot for 25 cents at your Dealer, or postpaid by Vol-Peek Co., Box 2024, Montreal, Can. Agents Wanted.

GENUINE DIAMONDS CASH OR CREDIT. TERMS: $1-$2-$3 Weekly. We trust any honest person. Write for catalogue to-day. JACOBS BROS. Diamond Importers. 15 Toronto Avenue. TORONTO

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 50.)

Maternity

THE period preceding the birth of her child finds the prospective mother half joyful, half afraid. She anticipates the happiness to come, yet doubts her courage and strength as the time draws near. These doubts and fears are Nature's warning that the great gift she is to bestow must be prepared for. At this period of a woman's life, constipation, a handicap to the health and happiness of every woman, becomes doubly dangerous.

The expectant mother must nourish two. She must be able to get rid of a double waste. Failure to do so poisons herself and the child she is to bring into the world.

The organs of elimination must therefore be kept as efficient as possible under the disturbances natural to this period.

Nothing is so safe and efficient at such a time as Nujol.

Nujol relieves constipation without any of the unpleasant and weakening effects of castor oil, pills, salts, mineral waters, etc. It does not upset the stomach. It does not cause nausea or griping, nor interfere with the day's work or play.

Instead of forcing or irritating the system, Nujol simply softens the food waste. This enables the many tiny muscles in the walls of the intestines, contracting and expanding in their normal way, to squeeze the food waste along so that it passes naturally out of the system.

Nujol actually prevents constipation because it helps Nature maintain easy, thorough bowel evacuation at regular intervals—the healthiest habit in the world.

Nujol is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take and is prescribed by leading medical authorities, particularly during pregnancy and the nursing period.

Nujol

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

For Constipation

Nujol is sold in all drug stores. For the Nujol trademark.

For constipation during Pregnancy and Nursing Period, to Nujol, Room 731, 22 St. Francis Avenue, Montreal.

Nujol

INFORMATION ABOUT NERVES.

YES, that is the first question. Are you prepared to pay the price for having a good nervous system? Will you keep the rules of the game? If so, well and good. There are very few people who cannot manage their nervous systems satisfactorily and escape the Bankruptcy Court of Nervous Collapse, if they will only keep the rules of the game and see that they get their "money's worth" for every expenditure of nervous force that they make.

Everything begins with the nervous system as well as with other things at the beginning. In other words, it makes a great difference what type and quality of brain and nerves your ancestors bequeathed to you, and how they taught you to begin to use these two wonderful tools when you did not know anything at all except how to clutch your father's little finger when he put it inside your tiny palm the first time he saw you, and how to nourish yourself at your mother's breast the first time she gathered you into her arms and taught you how.

NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND.

IT is not too late yet, whatever age you are. The foundation of a good nervous system is good habits of living, and you have to learn these habits one by one, day by day and minute by minute, by doing them, whatever they are. Begin with sleep. If they let you sleep twenty-two hours a day when you were a baby, the probability is that your nervous system is well built, but if you only had sixteen hours when you were a few days old, I would not give much for the way your nerves are built. It is a pity if you lost sleep at the beginning of your life. However, remember you are going to be somebody's ancestor too, and you can see that the future "he" or "she" in your family gets the due allowance of sleep on arrival and a proportionate allowance of sleep all along the line of life.

LEARN TO SLEEP.

BUT let us go back to you. You can still learn to sleep. Oh, yes, you can. Never mind telling me all those stories about how, if you go to bed at ten o'clock, you lie awake. Lie awake then. Lie there comfortably and rest yourself. After a few nights you will form the habit of sleeping at will. Yes, you can. If you don't know how, you ought to study medicine; we doctors have to take sleep when we can get it, and if we are called out every night for a week, then we get three hours more when we get back at 5 a.m., and that with the two hours we got before we were called out, makes five. Two more in the afternoon makes seven and going to bed that night an hour earlier than usual makes eight. Eight hours is the minimum allowance of sleep out of the twenty-four. No objections now! You are reading this because I am the Family Physician, and I am telling you what to do.

How are you going to learn to go to sleep? Go to bed. That's the first thing; and see that you are comfortable when you go to bed. Some people like a drink of milk and a soda biscuit or some other light refreshment at bed-time. They sleep better. No objection. Take it if you want it and can make good use of it.

MAKE YOURSELF COMFORTABLE.

NOW are you comfortable? If not, make yourself comfortable. Are your feet warm? If your feet and hands need washing, wash them. If you need a hot water bottle, take it; but you are better without. And have a comfortable bed. Flee from all patent deceivers.

"The chest contrived a double debt to pay, 'A bed by night, a chest of drawers by day.'"

They still exist—a trap for the unwary. Goldsmith had no idea how bad they were going to be in the twentieth century when he wrote those lines. Have a bed that is a bed, with a comfortable mattress. You can buy such things. You cannot invest money in anything that will give you a better return than a comfortable bed and bed-clothes to your liking. Don't have a bed and a coverlet like the one the Prophet Isaiah warned the tribe of Ephraim against—"For the bed is shorter than a man can stretch himself on it and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it." Have a pillow that suits you and don't smother yourself with heavy bedclothes; and above all, have the window open and stay in bed for eight hours—nine hours are better, much better. I always get nine hours myself, if I can, and I do a much better day's work next day.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 49.)

A PRIZE WINNER

Doris Elinor Chamberlain, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. H. C. Chamberlain, of Wheatley, Ontario, won the second prize in the Better Babies Contest (nine to eighteen months).

A PRIZE WINNER

Ethel Alice Bourne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bourne, 739 Water St., Peterboro, Ontario, won the second prize in the Better Babies Contest (eighteen to thirty-six months).

Two On the Trail

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 41.)

Promptly at eight o'clock the door of the post office was opened; and the last bag of mail was thrown into the stage. Still the driver made no move to climb into his seat; and Garth, becoming restless as the minutes passed, got out and approached him.

"Good-morning, driver," he said, while the bystanders stared afresh. "What's the delay?"

He gazed at Garth with a mild and cautious blue eye; and spat deliberately before replying. He was one of those withered little men, with a shock of grizzled hair, and deeply seamed face and neck and hands, who might be forty-five or seventy. As it turned out, Paul Smiley was within three years of the latter figure.

"I couldn't start off and leave Nick Grylls," he said deprecatingly. "He has spoke for two seats."

Garth was sensible that he was hearing a great man's name.

"I tell you it ain't often Nick Grylls travels by the stage," continued Smiley, addressing the bystanders impressively. "He hires a rig and a team and a driver to take him to the Landing, he does."

"Who is this Mr. Grylls?" asked Garth, pursuing the reporter's instinct. "Don't know Nick Grylls!" exclaimed old Paul, exchanging a wondering glance around the circle. "You must be a stranger! Nick Grylls is a wonderful bright man, wonderful! He's the biggest free-trader in the North country; trades down Lake Miwasa way. Wonderful influence with the natives; does what he wants with them. I tell you there ain't much north of the Landing, Nick Grylls ain't in on. Here he comes now! All aboard!"

As Garth resumed his seat by Natalie he saw a burly, broad-shouldered figure hurrying along the sidewalk; he saw under the wide, stiff-brimmed hat, a red face with an insolent, all-conquering expression, and fat lips rolling a big cigar. There followed after, a young breed staggering under the weight of a Gladstone bag, which matched its owner. Arrived at the stage, Nick Grylls flung a thick word of greeting to the bystanders, and taking the bag from the boy, threw it among the mail bags as one tosses a pillow; and climbed into the seat by the driver.

As they rattled through the suburbs the fat back on the front seat shifted heavily; and the red face was turned on them.

"Hello, old Nell!" shouted Nick. The woman simpered unhappily. "How's yourself, Mr. Grylls?" she returned.

"Fine!" he bellowed from his deep chest.

This little manoeuvre in the front seat was merely for the purpose of obtaining a prolonged stare at Natalie. The insolence of the little, swimming, pig-eyes infuriated Garth. The young man opposite him too, a sullen, scowling bravo, was staring boldly at Natalie. Garth stiffened himself to play a difficult part.

"I feel like a rare, exotic bird," whispered Natalie in his ear.

"You are," he returned grimly. "I think it would be better if you did not speak my name," he added. "I will not address you by yours. We must be prepared to parry questions."

"I will be careful," she said.

To do him justice, Nick Grylls, on a close examination of Natalie, had the grace to feel a little ashamed of his rough outburst.

"Bully day for our trip," he said.

They all agreed in various tones; even Garth. He knew it would not help Natalie for him to start by inviting trouble.

"You're the New York newspaper man," said Grylls to Garth.

"That's right," said Garth quietly.

"They tell me you're going to write up the country," said Grylls; exhibiting that curious blend of suspicion, contempt and respect his kind has for the fellow who writes. "I can tell you quite a bit about the country myself," he added with a braggadocio air.

Garth thanked him.

"It's an unusual trip for a lady," continued Grylls, cunningly trying to draw Natalie into the conversation; "but nothing out of the way at this season. The Bishop travels comfortable enough; separate tent for the women; and an ile stove like."

His move was not successful; Natalie continued looking charmingly blank. Old Paul created a diversion by facing them with a confiding smile. His pert Fedora with its curly brim was comically ill-suited to his seamed old face, and mild blue eye. He pointed with his whip down the road on the outskirts of the town.

"My place is down there," he said simply. "Just sold it last week; three hundred acres at three hundred dollars an acre. They're layin' it out in town lots."

"Good God, man!" cried Grylls. "You could buy me out and have a pile over!"

Old Paul smiled at him admiringly. "But this is only a sort of accident," he said. "You made yours."

"What in — Why are you driving the stage, then?" demanded Grylls.

"Well," said the old man slowly; "seems as though I just got in the way of it. Seems I just had to keep hanging on to the ribbons, or lose holt altogether."

"What are you going to do with all that money?"

"Well," said Paul with a quiet grin: "I bought me a new hat like the swells wear; and a pair of Eastern shoes. They pinch me somepin' cruel, too."

"Why don't you travel East, Mr. Smiley?" suggested Nell. She whom they all addressed so cavalierly was particular to put a handle to each name.

"Travel! I had enough o' that, my girl," he said. "Forty-five years ago I travelled east to Winnipeg and got me a wife. Brought her back over the plains in a Red River cart. Eight hunder miles, and hostile redskins all the way! What's travellin' nowadays!"

"Were you born out here?" asked Garth, shaping a story for the Leader in his mind.

"At Howard House, west of here in the Rockies," said Paul. "My father was Hudson's Bay trader there."

"Paul's an old-timer all right," said Grylls carelessly.

"One of the first eight who broke ground in Prince George," said the old man proudly. "Yonder's the first two-story house in the country. I built it. No!" he continued thoughtfully "I'm keeping my house and ten acres; and me and the old woman's calc'latin' to stop there and watch the march o' progress by our door. She wouldn't give up her front step for all the real-estate sharks in Prince George. But," he added with a chuckle, "I shouldn't wonder if she was shocked some when them trolley-cars I hear tell of goes kitin' by."

"I kin understand just how she feels," remarked old Nell to Natalie, with her apologetic little smile. "What could take the place of a home with real nice things in it? I got a house up near the Landing with a carpet in every room. I just love to buy things for it. You see I never had what you might call a regular house until just lately. This trip I bought a pink-and-gold chiny washin' set; and a down comfort for the best room. I never could tire of fixin' it up. We'll pass there to-morrow afternoon. I'd just love to have you step in—"

Grylls laughed boisterously. "Ah-h, shut up, Nell!" muttered the dark young man beside her.

"Thank you, I'd like to see it," said Natalie, with a flash of the blue eyes.

THEY had now left the town behind; and were rolling, or rather bumping, over the prairie. Here, it is not an empty plain, but a series of natural, park-like meadows, broken by graceful clumps of poplar and willow. On a prairie trail when the wheels begin to bite through the sod, and sink into ruts, a new track is made beside the old—there is plenty of room; and in turn another and another, spreading wide on each side, crossing and interweaving like a tangled skein of black cotton flung down in the green.

When they stopped at one of these places for dinner, Garth watched Natalie narrowly to see how she would receive her first taste of rough fare. But far from quailing at the salt pork, beans and bitter tea, she ate with as much gusto as if it had always been her portion. "She'll do," he thought approvingly.

Afterward as they toiled up a long, sandy rise in the full heat of the afternoon sun, Paul, the old dandy, had leisure while his horses walked to devote to his passengers. He was pleased as a child at the interest shown by Garth and Natalie in his anecdotes. Turning to them now, he pointed to a high mound topped by a splendid pine standing by itself, and said:

"Cannibal Hill. Used to be an Indian called Swift had his lodge there. A fine figger of a man too; high-chested; beautiful-muscled. He was a good Indian; and I want to say when a redskin is good, he's damn good—beg pardon Miss—he's good and no mistake, I should say. He has a high-minded way of looking at things, which ought to make a white man blush; but it don't; for them kind makes the softest tradin'. I been a trader myself."

"This here Swift had a wife and ten childer, that he thought a power of. He hunted for 'em night and day; and he come to be known as the best provider in the tribe. Well, come one winter he went crazy; yes, ma'am, plumb looney; and he went for 'em with his hatchet. He killed and et 'em one at a time, beginning with the youngest; while the others waited their turn. You see an old-fashioned Indian was the boss of his family; and they didn't dast fight him back. Right up there on that hill, under that very same tree; I seen the ashes of their bones myself. In the spring he come down to the settlement and give himself up; said he didn't want to live no more. Shouldn't think he would."

Grylls made no secret of his impatience with the old man's yarns. He interrupted him, careless of his feelings.

"Are you making the round trip with the Bishop?" he asked Garth.

Garth answered in the affirmative.

"I have a rabbit-skin robe at the Landing I'd be glad to lend the lady," he said leering sidewise at Natalie.

"Much obliged," said Garth agreeably; "but we really have all we can use."

"What does she say?" growled Nick.

"Thank you very much," said Natalie quickly; "but I could not think of accepting it."

He had forced her to speak to him at last; but the words were hardly to his satisfaction. He flung around in his seat with an ugly scowl.

Meanwhile old Paul was still pursuing his thoughts about redskins. "Indians think when they go off their heads they're obliged to be cannibals," he continued agreeably. "They can't separate the two ideas somehow."

"I suppose you hunted buffalo in the old days," said Garth to old Paul.

"Sure, I was quite a hunter," he returned with a casual air. "It weren't everybody as was considered a hunter, neither. You had to earn your repytation. We didn't do no drivin' over cliffs or wholesale slaughterin'; it was clean huntin' with us, powder and ball. I mind they used to make a big party, as high as two hundred men, whites, breeds, and friendly redskins. Everything was conducted regular; camp-guards and a council and a captain was elected; and all rules strict observed. Every night we camped inside a barricade."

THE trail to the Landing is considered something of a road up North; and the natives are apt to stare pityingly at the effeminate stranger who complains of the holes. It is something of a road compared to what comes after; but Natalie, hitherto accustomed to cushions and springs in her drives, could not conceive of anything worse. As the afternoon waned, what with the heat, the hard, narrow seat, and the incessant lurching and bumping of the crazy stage, which threw her now backward till her head threatened to snap off, and now forward on Nell's knees, the blooming roses in Natalie's cheeks faded, and her smile grew wan. Poor Garth, anxiously watching her, almost burst with suppressed solicitude.

But at last the journey came to its end; and at six o'clock the Royal Mail with its bruised and famished passengers swung into the yard at Forbie's, the half-way house, fifty miles from Prince George. Garth had learned that the men slept in an outside bunkhouse, while the women were received into the farmhouse itself. He hastened to

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 42.)

"Try This Syrup Sir!"

"It is made with Mapleine"

Leading chefs recognize the remarkable flavoring quality and delightful color of syrup made with

MAPLEINE
The Golden Flavor

Whether made in gallon quantities by the hotel or cafe chef, or in your home, its delectable taste and economy may be relied upon. A half teaspoon Mapleine added to two cups of sugar dissolved in one cup of boiling water makes a pint of delicious syrup instantly. Mapleine contains no maple sugar, syrup nor sap, but produces a taste similar to maple.

GROCERS SELL MAPLEINE
2 oz. bottle 60c
4c stamp and trade mark from Mapleine carton will bring the Mapleine Cook Book of 200 recipes, including many desserts. CRESCENT MFG. CO., 7 Wellington St., West, Toronto, Canada.

For a Gargle

or a mouth wash, put a few drops of Absorbine, Jr., in a little water. It is a herbal antiseptic and germicide remarkably effective for—

Checking sore throat in its incipient stage.
Reducing the swelling and taking out the soreness.
Cleansing the mouth and arresting infection.

Absorbine, Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

Extensively used and highly recommended by dentists. It leaves the mouth cool and clean. $1.25 a bottle at most druggists or postpaid. Send 10c for liberal Trial bottle.

W. F. YOUNG, Inc.
504 Lyman's Bldg.
Montreal

Vapo-Cresolene
Est. 1879

A Vapor Treatment for Coughs and Colds
The time for Vapo-Cresolene is at the first indication of a cold or sore throat. It is simple to use, you just light the little lamp that vaporizes the Cresolene and place it near the bed. The soothing antiseptic vapor makes breathing easy, relieves the cough, eases the soreness and congestion, and protects in epidemics. Recommended for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Influenza, Bronchitis, Coughs, Nasal Catarrh and Asthma. Cresolene has been used for the past 40 years. The benefit is unquestionable. Send for descriptive booklet.

Used While You Sleep
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS
VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., Leeming-Miles Bldg. Montreal

They remain black to the end

You may subject Hawley Dyed Stockings and Socks to the roughest laundry treatment, but they will still retain their inimitable deep, dense, black lustre.

Hawley's Hygienic Black British Dye

For Cotton & Thread Hose & Socks

is guaranteed fast and actually improves the quality of the hosiery upon which it is dyed.

Hawley-Dyed Stockings and Socks are made in two distinct finishes—"Cashmere" and "Silk" Finish. Every pair bears the Hawley mark which guarantees the dye to be stainless, perspiration proof, and absolutely fast.

Look for this mark when buying Stockings and Socks.

HAWLEY'S HYGIENIC DYE
WARRANTED
STAINLESS & ACID PROOF.

Enquiries from the Trade invited.

Sole Dyers (to the Trade only)

A. E. HAWLEY & CO., LTD.
Sketchley Dye Works
HINCKLEY ENGLAND

A Rich Tinted Lithograph

will perfect the decorative color scheme of a room. You can easily hang up color pictures, prints or transparencies if you use

Moore Push-Pins

Glass Heads—Steel Points

Transparent glass heads, practically invisible, easily inserted, easily withdrawn. Will hold firm and can be used over and over again.

Suggest a use, and we'll send you Free Samples. Sold everywhere by Hardware, Stationery, Drug, Photo Supply and Department Stores.

Moore Push-Pin Co.

6-1 Berkley St.,

Phila. Pa.

A Home-Made Gray Hair Remedy

You can prepare a simple mixture at home that will gradually darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Orlax Compound and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at little cost, or the druggist will put it up for you. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look many years younger. It is easy to use, does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

The Journal Juniors' Club

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 42.)

PRIZE LIST FOR NOVEMBER.

1. "If you were a great writer, what sort of book would you give to the world?" awarded to Vera A. Johnson, age 12 years, North Battleford, Sask.

2. "My Favorite Game," awarded to Mary M. Moir, R.R., No. 2, Auburn, Ontario.

3. Camera Contest: "A winter country scene":—no awards made.

PRIZE STORY.

"The Kind of Book I Would Give the World Were I a Great Writer."

By VERA A. JOHNSON.

Age 12 years.

If I were a great writer I would give the world a book that the readers would not think of as merely a piece of fiction written for the amusement of the populace, but rather as a true story of real lives, and struggles and joys. I would strive to make the characters life-like and realistic, and my heroes and heroines should not pass through hair-breath escapes with supernatural bravery and presence of mind, neither should they glide smoothly along life's page. I would have them have trials, everyday trials, so that boys and girls should see that by patience and truth, these little troubles may be conquered and lost sight of. But this should not be attained easily; my hero or heroine should strive and struggle, and thus their final victory should be an encouragement to strugglers all over the world.

Perhaps now you have the idea that the book I would wish to present to the world would be a dismal one. Not so, there should not only be trials, there should be rewards. I would wish to show that the upholding of the right will bring its own reward. My heroine should be happy and bright, and should never be self-righteously thinking that she has sufferings and sorrows greater than those of others. I would have this, so girls who would perhaps be tempted to take my heroine for an example, should be optimistic and cheerful.

I would wish to write a book that would be helpful to mankind, a book that a person tired and discouraged, could sit down, open and be cheered by good words, a book which would be a real companion to them. If I had one character in my book which would be fit to be taken as an ideal, I should have her kind, capable and bright, always radiating kind thoughts and deeds so that girlish readers would be tempted when reading it, to do the same.

Above all, I should try to keep the sentiments of my book high and lofty. Though I would wish it not to be narrow, I would try not to utter a line in my book which might perhaps make young and impressionable readers think it smart to make fun of scholarly or serious persons. This is a characteristic you often see in cheap books. The author will have her heroine just a light, charming girl and will seem to scorn anything savoring of thought or seriousness. I should strive to avoid this flippancy and foolishness regarded as smart by light writers. I should try, however poorly I did it, to impress on the readers' minds, that truth and courage are the most important things.

VERA A. JOHNSON.

Age 12 years.

PRIZE STORY.

"My Favorite Game."

By MARY M. MOIR.

Age 11.

I KNOW quite a few nice games, but I think the one I like best is "Prisoners' Base." There should be at least two people on each side, but the more there are the better, because the game will be more exciting then.

To play this game we must first get captains. Then, let each captain choose whoever he wants on his side. When we have this done, we must get two bases and two goals. The goals should be about sixty yards apart. Then each base, on which the prisoners have to stand, should be about nine feet from each goal.

Now we shall begin to play. Some from one side go out. They go up near the prisoners' base. Then some from the other side try to catch them. The last ones out from the goal may catch any on the opposite side, that are out.

If any are caught, they are to go and stand on the prisoners' base on the other side, till his side is able to win him back. To win anyone back, you must run up and touch him before the ones on the other side can touch you.

I have often played the game and I like it fine. If it is played right it is a very nice and very interesting game.

MARY M. MOIR.

R.R. No. 2, Auburn, Ontario.

LIST OF NEW MEMBERS.

Florence Andrew, 100 North College Avenue, Sarnia, Ont.

Mary Moir, R.R. No. 2, Auburn, Ont.

Kitty Wilson, Indian Head, Sask.

UNDER THE OAK.

By Bertha E. Green.

IT was not so very long ago that the squirrels held a party all their own. It was to be a very grand affair, for it was to be the last one of the season.

So far, everyone had been very busy harvesting—they had gathered nuts, and more nuts, until their store-houses were full to overflowing.

Now each little squirrel was very happy, indeed, for they would not need to mind the long winter months, with the deep snows, and cold winds that winter always brought.

So this was a real thanksgiving-party. Every squirrel in the neighborhood had a part in it, and each squirrel was given two invitation cards to send to two of his friends.

The invitations were written by the secretary, a large black squirrel with a very big bushy tail, and thus they read:

A welcome warm awaits you at the old oak tree by the pond's edge, on the night of the New Moon.
The Squirrel.

The big black squirrel secretary with the big bushy tail was called Bushy Jack, and so very busy was he, getting out all the invitations, that he had no time even to eat.

The other squirrels were busy preparing little acorn cups for their guests to drink out of, and gathering thorns for nut-picks.

It was not very long until one could hear the confusion and the chattering of voices of the woodland folk. There was Mistress Chipmunk, their cousin, busy making a party dress of soft grey to match the night.

A Meadow-Mouse, who had come to call, saw the party-dress lying on a stool, and was about to turn away, when Miss Chipmunk saw her guest.

"Why, Ann," she said, "I did so need you. I want you to tell me how my dress fits; and don't you think it is lovely?"

Ann thought it was lovely, but as she had had no invitation, she had very little to say.

"You are very quiet. Are you not going?"

"I am not invited," said Ann, the Meadow-Mouse, "and I never go where I'm not invited."

"Well, I am sorry, I'm sure you would have been welcome, for, just the other day, my cousin, Dumpy Red Tail, said that, of all the woodland people, you were the neatest."

But the little Meadow-Mouse did not say a word, and soon left by the front door for her home.

The older Rabbits were invited, even Pink Tail. They held a sewing-bee, and such a clattering of tongues you never heard.

John Crow, Esquire, was at home, carefully pressing his black suit. He intended to be at the party, and wished to look his best.

The two Miss Owls had had their feather-ears done up in curl-papers all day, and stayed indoors until the evening, as did Mister Spiney Woodchuck, who spent most of the day brushing his whiskers.

The Porcupines, who intended to be on hand, set out early, and arrived at

Perfectly Clean!

That's the feeling you have about everything washed with Lifebuoy, especially stockings, underwear, night gowns, sheets, blankets, and everything that touches the skin. The rich velvety ether of Lifebuoy has wonderful cleansing power, but more important the antiseptic qualities in

LIFEBUOY HEALTH SOAP

prevents germs, disease-microbes, (and they are present everywhere), and perfect cleanliness results

The carbotic odour in Lifebuoy is a sign of its protective qualities—vanishing quickly after use.

Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Have You Tried LIFEBUOY SHAVING STICK?

Why Don't You

MAKE MONEY

AT HOME

WRITE TO-DAY FOR FULL PARTICULARS

You can earn from $1. to $2. an hour in your spare time writing show cards quickly & easily learned

NO CANVASING we teach you how and SELL YOUR WORK

AMERICAN SHOW CARD SCHOOL

201 Ryrie Bldg., Yonge & Shuter Sts. Toronto, Ont.

America's Pioneer Dog Medicines

DOG DISEASES

And How to Feed

Mailed free to any address by author

H. Clay Glover Co., Inc.
118 West 31st St. New York City

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 51.)

The Journal Puzzle for January

By TOM WOOD

Just an old-fashioned rebus.

Can you read it?

Remember, the illustrations quite often follow sound more than correct spelling.

Two prizes will be given—first, two dollars, and second, one dollar—for the best solutions, judged according to neatness and accuracy.

All are eligible to compete. Answers must be received by January 20th to be included.

Correct Solution of the November Puzzle

The correct solution of the November puzzle is:

For the first part—Cat, hare, rat, yak, snake, ass, net, toad, hen, eels, mole, unicorn, mits—chrysanthemum.

For the second part—Oven, morn, over, bee, orb, even.

First prize—Janet C. McDowell, Lacombe, Alta.

Second prize—Lilian Fox, Bedford, Halifax County, N.S.

These were not perfect, but were the best contributed.

Address Puzzle Department, Canadian Home Journal, 71 Richmond Street West, Toronto.

"The Magic Touch"

—There is the infinite touch of daintiness, the brightness and newness which go to make real Easter perfection in the hat you colour with RAM-CO.

It is the straw hat dye which gives new hats for old and brings to Milady's summer millinery the essence of all that is dainty. There are sixteen beautiful Ram-co shades from which to choose, and bottle and brush are sold for twenty-five cents.

If you are unable to obtain any desired color of this product from a convenient dealer, please write to us direct and we will arrange to have you supplied.

A. RAMSAY & SON COMPANY

MONTREAL

Toronto

Winnipeg

Vancouver

Get Eggs in cold weather

DON'T let the temperature knock out your egg profits. Keep your hens in a natural, regular, laying condition—healthy. Good feed does the work, properly digested through the regular use of

Pratts Poultry Regulator

Tones up the system, aids digestion and assures health, so hens will just naturally lay and keep on laying. Used constantly by thousands of poultrymen and farmers. Buy it under this guarantee:

"Your Money Back if You Are Not Satisfied"

Pratts Dip and Disinfectant kills germs, prevents disease and keeps hens healthy and poultry houses sanitary. Use it freely.

Sold by dealers all over Canada.
Made in our own Factory in Toronto.

Expert Advice Free. We help solve your poultry problems. Write. Ask for FREE Booklet—worth dollars to you.

Pratt Food Co., of Canada, Limited
328E Carlaw Ave., Toronto

Ad. No. 5.

Why have Coughs ?

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES prevent or quickly relieve colds, sore throat, coughing, hoarseness, loss of voice, throat trouble, catarrhal and asthmatic conditions.

For over SEVENTY YEARS, speakers and singers have found them highly Four Sizes: 15c—35c—75c—$1.25

At all druggists

JOHN I. BROWN & SON
Boston, Mass.
General Sales Agents:
Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd.
Toronto, New York

effective in promptly relieving hoarseness and irritation of the throat caused by vocal exertion.

Not a confection, but a genuine cough remedy. Contain no opiates or harmful ingredients—safe for children. Handy for carrying in pocket or purse.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

Westclox

—that's Big Ben's family name

Big Ben thinks a lot of his family

HE helped little brother, Baby Ben, get a start. He introduced Sleep-Meter; and he spoke a good word for the America alarm, the oldest Westclox made.

So, today, wherever Big Ben is known, other Westclox are sure to get a welcome. On many farms you'll find Big Ben bossing the timekeeping job and other Westclox helping along in different rooms of the house.

Several clocks, here and there, save many steps. You've discovered that yourself when you were busy about the house.

Back of Westclox popularity is an interesting reason. Every Westclox alarm is made right to make good. That same good construction principle that made Big Ben famous is used in all of them. Big Ben's family name, Westclox, can't go on the dial until the clock is right inside.

Western Clock Co., Ltd., makers of Westclox
Peterborough, Ontario

If You Enjoy Good Coffee DO THIS—

Order some "SEAL BRAND" made from the choicest upland berries, grown in luxurious tropic hills, full of spicy nourishment and stimulating fragrance—the beans cleaned, blended and roasted with rare skill.

SEAL BRAND

Then in making, allow a tablespoonful of coffee to each cup desired, pour boiling water on it, simmer five minutes, clear with a dash of cold water.

Your dealer sells "SEAL BRAND", whole, ground, and fine-ground, in ½, 1 and 2-lb. tins, hermetically sealed, so that the coffee reaches you rich in its original strength.

CHASE & SANBORN
MONTREAL.

February Fiction

We are proud of our story-writers, who are giving us such enlivening fiction every month, and we feel that our readers are looking forward to new writers' work. In February, Frances Amherst gives us a story of war-time which is both tragic and courage-inspiring, and Beatrice Redpath contributes an unusual tale in "The Thirteenth Sonnet."

The Season for Apples and Oranges

By MARION HARRIS NEIL

AUTHOR OF "SALADS, SANDWICHES AND CHAFING DISH RECIPES."

APPLES and oranges are plentiful, so now we must take the opportunity to make some delicious dishes. No fruit is so universally popular as the apple. Apples, when peeled, cored and well cooked, are a most grateful food for the dyspeptic. Many things are suggested for the flavoring of apple pie: cloves, nutmeg, a few slices of quinces, prunes and lemons.

Very wholesome and nutritious jellies, marmalades and sweetmeats are prepared from both apples and oranges. Oranges are most enjoyable, and can be served in many ways by which their healthful properties are secured.

Orange Cake, With Frosting.—Beat yolks of three eggs thoroughly, add one tablespoonful of strained orange juice and one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, beat for ten minutes, then add one-eighth teaspoonful of salt, the grated rind of one orange, one-half cupful of boiling water, the whites of the eggs stiffly beaten, and one and one-half cupfuls of flour sifted with one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Mix well and turn into a greased and floured cake pan and bake in a moderate oven for thirty minutes. Cool, and ice with orange frosting.

For Frosting.—Sift two cupfuls of confectioners' sugar into a bowl, add the strained juice of one orange and beat well together; if too thin add a little more confectioners' sugar.

Eve's Pudding.—Take six large apples peeled, cored and chopped, the strained juice of one lemon and one-half of the rind grated, a pinch of salt, two cupfuls of fine breadcrumbs, one cupful finely-chopped suet, and one teaspoonful of baking soda dissolved in sufficient hot water to moisten the whole. Stir thoroughly, turn into a buttered mould, cover with a greased paper, and steam steadily for three hours. Serve with a sweet custard sauce, or with liquefied apple jelly.

Orange Ice Cream.—Mix together in a bowl one cupful of milk, three cupfuls of whipped cream, one cupful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one-half cupful of orange pulp, one and one-half cupfuls of strained orange juice and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice. Freeze and serve decorated with orange sections.

Apples and Sago.—Make a syrup with two cupfuls of water and one cupful of sugar and color it with a few drops of red color. Pare and core one pound of cooking apples, cut them into eighths lengthwise, stew in the syrup until tender and clear, but not mashy; and when cooked take out carefully and make a neat pile in a glass dish. Flavor the syrup with lemon extract and color with a few more drops of red color if necessary. Wash well two tablespoonfuls of sago and cook in the syrup until quite clear, then pour over the apples and leave until cold. Beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth, add one tablespoonful of apple jelly and beat together until quite smooth. Lay this in rocky heaps round the pile of apples and sprinkle over with chopped nut-meats.

Fine tapioca may be cooked in place of the sago.

Orange Custard.—Soak one envelope of gelatine in one-half cupful of cold water for ten minutes. Simmer two and one-fourth cupfuls of milk with the thin rind of one orange for fifteen minutes, then remove the rind. Beat the yolks of two eggs and stir them into the milk until it thickens, but do not allow to boil; now add one-fourth cupful of sugar and gelatine and stir until dissolved. Whip the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth. Allow the custard to become cool, and just before it begins to set fold in the whites of eggs, pour the mixture into a wet ring mould, and when firm turn it out into a glass dish.

Peel two oranges, divide them into their natural divisions, and sweeten with sugar; then fill the centre of custard with them and serve.

Apple and Celery Salad.—Wash and cut into fine shreds the white inner portion of one head of celery, and let it lie in ice water for thirty minutes, then drain and dry it well in a cloth. Peel and core three sharp, juicy apples, and with a silver knife cut them in very thin slices. Put the celery and the apples into a bowl, pour over enough salad dressing to mix together and to moisten them.

Line a salad dish with some nice crisp lettuce leaves, arrange the salad on the top, sprinkle with a little paprika and garnish with two gherkins chopped or cut in shreds. Serve before the apple has time to discolor. This makes a very good accompaniment to roast pork or goose.

For dressing:—Beat the yolks of two eggs until light, add four tablespoonfuls of butter, one teaspoonful each of salt and mustard, the strained juice of one lemon, two tablespoonfuls of orange juice, and a few grains of paprika, and cook and stir over boiling water until the mixture thickens. Take from the fire, and when cold add one and one-half cupfuls of whipped evaporated milk.

Orange Sauce and Fish Cakes.—Heat two cupfuls of cooked fish in one cupful of thick white sauce, add the well-beaten yolk of one egg, mix well and remove at once from fire to allow to cool. When cold, form into neat round cakes, dip into the beaten white of egg, toss into fine breadcrumbs and fry in smoking hot fat. Drain on white paper and serve with the following orange sauce.

For Orange Sauce:—Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a small saucepan over the fire, add one tablespoonful of flour, and when well blended add one-half cupful of strained orange, one-half cupful of water, and season to taste with salt, pepper and paprika. Stir and cook for five minutes.

Apple and Chocolate Sandwiches.—Cut some thin bread and butter it, then sprinkle it with grated sweetened chocolate. Peel and core two good eating apples and cut them into thin slices. Put a layer of these slices between two pieces of the prepared bread and press well together. If desired, the apples may be put through a food-chopper. Trim and cut into neat sandwiches.

Another Method:—Grate four apples and mix them at once with two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, then add one-half cupful of boiled salad dressing and one-half cupful of grated cheese, and seasoning of salt, pepper and paprika, and serve between a slice of buttered white bread, and a slice of buttered brown bread. If desired, a lettuce leaf may also be laid between each slice.

Orange Roly Poly.—Sift together into a bowl two cupfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of baking powder and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Cut and rub in three tablespoonfuls of butter and add enough milk to make a dough. Turn out on to a floured baking-board and roll out into a long strip, then spread with orange marmalade, sprinkle with a little sugar and roll up, pinching the ends well together. Put into a greased bowl, cover with a greased paper and steam steadily for one hour. Serve with milk or cream.

Apple Marmalade.—Peel, core and thinly slice good cooking apples. Allow three-fourths of a pound of lump sugar to each pound of prepared apple. Put the sugar into the preserving pan and allow one-half cupful of water to every six pounds of sugar, let it gradually melt, then boil for ten minutes. Put in the prepared apples, with a few cloves and a little lemon rind, and boil for one hour, stirring occasionally. It should now be a smooth pulp, moderately clear and of a bright amber color. Pour into sterilized jars, cover with melted paraffin and with the lids. Label and keep in a cool place.

Health and the Home

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 44.)

TO-DAY'S STRENGTH FOR TO-DAY'S WORK.

YES, next day. That's the next rule. Never use up to-morrow's strength for to-day's work—of which more next month. But the beginning of success in managing your nerves is managing yourself and the first thing in managing yourself is to put yourself to bed at the proper moment. When is it? Not later than ten o'clock; nine-thirty is better, if you are a busy man or woman.

END THE DAY QUIETLY.

TAPER off the day's work and excitement and joy, quietly. If you must have a fight with anybody about anything, don't have it after six p.m. (nor at any other time). Have a comfortable evening with your family. Go to sleep with a smile and don't forget your prayers. This is not a pulpit. It is the Family Physician's Consulting Room. Don't forget your prayers.

GET THE WORTH OF YOUR MONEY.

AND "get the worth of your money" for every expenditure of nervous energy you make in the day. Most of us in this modern life go best on "High Gear." Not too much noise and using the gasoline fairly well. If things are vexatious, don't you be vexed—don't go into "Low Gear" if you can help it.

"Or being lied about, don't deal in lies.

Or being hated, don't give way to hating,

And yet don't look too good, or talk too wise."

Don't get excited and use up as much nervous force over one transaction, or one conversation, as would carry you through a whole day's work.

A CHANGE.

AND don't talk about the same things every day. Why do your socks wear out at the heels?—Because that is the place that is rubbed all the time. Don't rub the same spot in your own or other people's nervous systems, all the time. There are new books to buy and newspapers to read, old friends to keep and new friends to make. There is always somebody to be kind to. There are very pretty walks near where you live—pictures painted by men and women and painted by Nature. Museums, public libraries, visits,—it is a very interesting world. The Nervous System thrives on new interests. It needs a Change.

Two On the Trail

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 45.)

interview Mrs. Forbie in private, that the dreadful possibility of Natalie's being asked to share a room with the other woman passenger might be avoided. It is doubtful if Natalie would have taken any harm from poor old Nell; but Garth was a young man falling in love; and so, ferociously virtuous in judging Nell's kind. Natalie had a room to herself.

CHAPTER IV.

THE STOPPING-HOUSE YARD.

NEXT morning, Old Paul, assisted by Nell's dark companion, and the half-breed Xavier, was hitching up in the yard of Forbie's, when Nick Grylls appeared from the house, and walked heavily up and down at some distance moodily chewing a cigar. Big Nick was wondering dully what was the matter with him. He had tossed in his bunk the night through; and now, at the beginning of the day, when a man should be at his heartiest, he found himself without appetite for his breakfast, and in a grinding temper, without any object to vent it on.

A deep dense of personal injury lay at the root of his discomfort. Nick was accustomed to think of himself as a whale of a fine fellow, as they say in the West; he heard every day that he was the smartest man up North; and, of course, he believed it. He regarded himself as a prince of generosity. He was fond of children; and one of his amusements was to distribute handfuls of candy over the counter of his store.

There was good in Nick Grylls; and Garth travelling alone would have got along very well with him, and worked him for copy; but having Natalie to look after, he instinctively put himself on his guard against him. Grylls, with an enormous capacity for pleasure, had carelessly taken his fill. He had to content himself with the coarse plants of the North; and up to now he had desired no other. Never so close to a woman of Natalie's world before, he had been free to look at her throughout an entire day; and she had actually spoken to him once.

Garth strolled out from breakfast; and filled his pipe while he waited for Natalie to repack her valise within. Nick's chaotic passions leaped to meet the aspect of the cool young man, and fastened on him.

When the horses were hitched, Xavier went into the bunkhouse for his master's bedding, old Paul potted around the harness, while Albert, Nell's companion, strolled back to join Grylls.

"What do you make of this young couple?" asked Nick, assuming an indifferent air.

"I dunno," Albert returned lethargically.

"There wasn't anything about a girl in the newspaper," pursued Nick; "and young reporters don't generally have coin enough to travel with a wife."

"They ain't married," said Albert.

"What!" exclaimed Nick eagerly.

"Nell says she heard her call him Mr. Pevensey before the stage started; and he called her Miss What's-this."

Nick's little eyes glittered. "Then what are they doing up here together?" he muttered.

"Search me!" said Albert indifferently. "Nell says she can't make it out."

"She seems to have taken a kind of shine to Nell," suggested Nick carefully. "Women are sly as lynx. Pass a quiet word to Nell to draw her out."

"She's tried," said Albert. "Nice as you please but mum. Why don't you pump him?" he suggested, indicating Garth.

"Because he's a self-sufficient dude!" Nick burst out with a string of curses.

"Well, he better not get you down on him," said Albert propitiatingly.

Natalie came sailing out of the farmhouse as fresh and smiling as the morning itself. Garth hastened to meet her.

Nell followed her out of the house; and Garth handed them both into the stage. He did not get in himself, but stood on the ground below Natalie, talking up to her. One of the horses had refused to drink at the trough, and old Paul, wishing to give him another chance, sent Xavier for a pail of water.

This Xavier deserves a word. The young breeds run to extremes of good looks or ill; and in his case it was the latter. In downright English he was hideous. A shock of intractable, lank hair hung over what he had of a forehead; and underneath rolled a pair of whitey-blue eyes, with a villainous cast in one of them. Some accident had carried Nature's work even further, for one swarthy cheek was divided from temple to chin by a dirty white scar. He wore a pair of black-and-white checked trousers, which, once Nick's, hung strangely on his meagre frame. He was absurdly proud of this garment. His outer wear was completed by a black cotton shirt, and the inevitable stiff-brimmed hat, without which no brown youth feels himself a man.

Returning from the pump with the pail of water, as he passed Nick, the big man threw him an idle word or two in Cree. Xavier grinned comprehendingly; and Nick and Albert followed him a little way. Xavier came up close behind Garth; and in passing him, made believe to stumble. Some of the water splashed over Garth's legs. Garth swung around, and took in the situation at a glance; Grylls and Albert were grinning in the background. There was a crack as his fist met the half-breed's jaw; and Xavier rolled in the dust. In falling the pail capsized, emptying its contents on the cherished trousers.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

"We're Glad it's That"

Betty and Nan, prowling around the kitchen, drop in on mamma while she is making up Jell-O for dinner—and they are "glad it's that."

Betty and Nan, and Bobbie too, who will be around at dinner time, like Jell-O, and as it is pure and wholesome, mamma gives it to them two or three times a week at least. One day when she asked Bobbie which Jell-O flavor he liked best he said, "Raspberry, I guess, or mebbe Orange, or Strawberry, or Lemon, or Cherry, or Vanilla, or Choc'lit. Oh, I guess I like all of 'em best."

Bobbie's answer sums up the general experience, and that is why so many prudent housewives buy by the dozen packages instead of one or two at a time. An assortment of the seven different flavors can be secured in this way.

JELL-O

There used to be a prevailing impression among mothers that if the children were particularly fond of anything eatable it couldn't be good for them. It isn't so now. Mothers have learned that Jell-O and many other good things which they themselves like, are all the more wholesome and nourishing from being relished. They have learned, too, that desserts, especially for the little folks, should be light and digestible.

The new Jell-O Book describes new things in Jell-O, salads, whips, knickknacks and dainties of almost unlimited variety. Recipes for every-day desserts and salads are given first place in it, of course, and particularly the new things in fruity Jell-O desserts. It is the finest of all Jell-O Books. A copy will be sent to you free if you will send us your name and address.

Other Things Worth Knowing About Jell-O

The plain Jell-O dessert—the one without trimmings or additions of any kind—continues to be the most popular of all. It is made, as everybody knows, by stirring a package of Jell-O of any one of the seven flavors in a pint of boiling water and letting it harden.

This is the made-in-a-minute dessert that costs a few cents and is as good and beautiful as if it cost a dollar and required an hour for making.

Each of the other flavors of Jell-O is made up in the same way. Any of them can be used for these plain desserts.

The plain dessert can be transformed, before the jelly congeals, into one as elaborate as may be desired, either by whipping or by adding fruit, fruit juices, nut-meats, whipped cream, or any one or more of fifty different things that are "lovely" with Jell-O.

The seven pure fruit flavors in which Jell-O is made, are Strawberry, Raspberry, Lemon, Orange, Cherry, Vanilla, Chocolate.

THE GENESEE PURE FOOD COMPANY OF CANADA, Ltd.

Bridgeburg, Ont.

BRAESIDE LODGE SANATORIUM, LIMITED PRESTON, ONTARIO

A quiet home for tired people. Treatments in Massage, Hydrotherapy, Electricity. Trained nurses in attendance. Write for circulars.
Miss Sophie L. J. Robb, Superintendent.

Only a Starved Skin Gets Dry and Rough and gives you lines and wrinkles before you know it. CREME ELCAYA is the ideal treatment for your skin during the day. It is non-greasy—just a harmless cream that the hungry skin absorbs.

Try this simple formula—"A little CREME ELCAYA rubbed gently into the skin; then if you need color, a very little rouge spread carefully over the cheeks before the cream is quite dry; and after that the film of Elcaya face powder over all."

CRÈME ELCAYA

is a delightful, non-greasy, disappearing toilet cream that makes the skin like velvet.

In jars at 35c and 75c

MacLean, Benn & Nelson, Limited
Montreal

Distributors for Canada

The favorite for 20 years.
Sold all over the world.

Made in CANADA by
THE ELCAYA CO. OF CANADA, Limited
James C. Crane, Pres't.
Montreal, Canada

Some Correspondence Concerning Schools

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 3.)

I do not mean to say that Canadian public school education is perfect. There is much about the system to be commended. There is also considerable to be condemned. But does it not only aggravate the disease to encourage private schools? Instead of substituting these institutions, which only a few can afford, and which have not been proved to be for the greatest good, let us improve our public schools. Let us make it possible for "individual capacities and aptitudes" to be considered. The lower class children have them as well as the children of the rich. Let us not only have supervision of the playground, but also play-organizing teachers. If the private school system of education is the best, let us have that system for all children. Give us good schools for all and at their head let us place practical, broad-minded, high-principled, far-seeing educationists; educationists, note, and not politicians.

"There is nothing too good for the children of Canada," says "O Canada." Let us see that "the children of Canada" means all the children and not just the few who can afford to attend the private schools.

Much more might be said upon the subject but I fear I have already been too voluble. Please do not consider this as an imposition, but rather as an honest attempt of one Canadian woman to express herself upon a topic of vital importance to our country.

Yours sincerely,

(Mrs.) Winnifred M. Rosewarne.

Developing a National Art

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 10.)

beautiful, and Mr. T. W. Mitchell records the wonders of our brilliant sunlight. Mr. Wyly Grier is painting many of the men prominent in national life, and Mr. F. Horsman Varley, as well as north country landscape, is doing figure work and portraits, strong in character and full of the sitter's personality.

In Winnipeg, Mr. W. J. Phillips is producing interesting paintings of the western winter. But the West is not painted only by those who live there. A number of Toronto artists have come back from sketching tours with fine records of that part of Canada. Mr. C. W. Jefferys has painted the prairies in a way most expressive of their flat immensity. The Rocky Mountains, too, have become familiar to us through the work done there by Mr. Robert F. Gagen, and by a collection of sketches by Mr. A. Y. Jackson.

It is impossible to cover the work being done; however, enough has been said to show that the artists are trying to give us Canadian pictures of Canadian subjects painted in a typically Canadian way. But they cannot carry on the work entirely by themselves; they need the support of the people whose country they are painting; they need the sympathetic interest which inspires to further endeavor and which will help them to build in Canada, an art of which no country need be ashamed.

"Bad Actors"

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 43.)

theatricals simply must be successful! You both have the latent talent; it was to bring it out that I arranged that little—er—tableau."

Mrs. Brown-Gorman's face was a study. So was everyone else's—except Ma's.

"Perhaps it wasn't such a bad idea, Mrs. Peabody," remarked Mrs. Brown-Gorman presently. "It was rather unusual, though."

"It was done to bring about an unusual effect," explained Ma.

"Of course!" Mrs. Brown-Gorman thought she began to understand. "At school they always said I possessed unusual talent. Perhaps you acted for the best. Unfortunately, I—I—thought—I—I've told several of my friends that—"

"That my prince was the genuine article!" Ma laughed merrily. "Well, suppose we let them continue thinking so. His Highness is leaving the States shortly and what your friends are unable to verify they cannot prove. It seemed such a splendid way of bringing out your talent. I—really—I—"

"You did quite right, Mrs. Peabody," approved Mrs. Brown-Gorman, who understood everything perfectly now. "Anything that gives us a true perception of our talents is justified. As you say, no one need know about the—prince."

"You would be much more comfortable in Mr. Peabody's chair, Mrs. Brown-Gorman," suggested Ma. "Joseph!"

Pa was already finding himself another.

"We have so much still to plan," said Ma. "Now would be a splendid opportunity."

It was a humble, awe-stricken trio that faced Ma after Mrs. Brown-Gorman had gone. But Ma was very sweet and forgiving about it all. She knew the value of smiling silence too well to surrender it to vulgar triumph.

"Do you think she believed you, Mira?" gasped Pa.

"She will believe anything I tell her to believe—when she has seen those moving pictures of herself bending over George's hand," asserted Ma with conviction.

"How did you find out that I—"

"My dear George! What a question! The real thing hasn't shaken hands for a month and you nearly broke my fingers with your grip."

"I wonder how Mrs. Brown-Gorman got to know?" began Nellie musingly.

"Oh," replied Ma, smiling blandly. "I attended to that!"

The room became very quiet.

Chic

WHETHER daintily trimmed, or fashioned on plain lines, your MACK WAIST is certain to be chic and distinctive.

One of the charms of MACK WAISTS is their individuality.

Their style is their own; created by artists who have the happy faculty of combining originality and good taste.

This does not mean that MACK WAISTS are expensive.

On the contrary, they are popular waists at popular prices.

Ask your favorite store to show you the new styles in MACK WAISTS.

You'll find that the prices are reasonable and the Waists charming.

Look for the Trademark in each waist.

Fashioned by
McCutcheon Waist Co.,
Limited

323 St. James St., Montreal. 12

Mack Waists

The Journal Juniors' Club

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 46.)

the oak tree before any of the squirrels were there to receive them. After climbing the oak, they settled themselves on the branches beneath which the party was to be held, and waited patiently.

It was not long until three separate parties of squirrels arrived, the Greys together, the Reds together and the Blacks together.

Each of the parties had brought a store of nuts, which they piled in little pyramids on the ground. Out of bright-colored Autumn leaves they made table-cloths, which they laid on the smoothest spots beneath the tree.

Then several Jays arrived, bringing haws, and quite a troop of young Rabbits came, without invitations, but each with a carrot.

"What are you youngsters doing here?" demanded Bushy Jack, the secretary, when he spied the Rabbits, "you were not invited."

"Oh, that's all right," laughed the Pink Noses, "we brought our own lunch. When is the fun going to start, Feathertail?"

Bushy Jack pretended he didn't hear, and turned to welcome the Coon family, each of whom carried a large apple.

A chattering crowd of Chipmunks brought beech nuts, Mister Woodchuck brought his wife, and John Crow, Esquire, brought himself in his best black suit.

In the meantime, little Ann Meadow-Mouse had gone home, only to find herself shut out of her own house. Leaning against her front door was a big square of birch bark, almost as large as the door itself. After a great deal of trouble, she pushed the bark over and found that it was her invitation to the party.

What would she do? What could she do? She had no gay clothes, but, rather than stay away, she put on a pair of bright pink mittens, and, filling a little basket with seeds from her store-house, she arrived under the oak tree at the same time as Mister Mink.

Bushy Jack was delighted, and so were the other Squirrels. Every one whom they had invited had come to their party except the Porcupines.

There were games and lunch, then more games and more lunch, and talk all the time.

The young Squirrels were sent for more nuts, the young Rabbits for more carrots, the young Coons for more apples and the Jays for more haws. Then the Squirrels found the acorns were running short, but no one wished to go for a fresh supply.

Everybody was waiting for someone else to start after acorns, and they all sat looking at each other with an "Aren't you going?" expression on their faces.

Suddenly, exactly seven hundred and seventy-seven acorns showered right down on them from the oak tree.

There were bumps on heads, and bumps on noses, but there were plenty of acorns.

As they were wondering what had caused the rain of nuts, the very youngest of the Rabbits jumped up, danced around excitedly, and, pointing upward, squeaked out:

"There he is—there they both are. The Needle-Coats have been here all the time."

The Porcupines would not come down. They were "quite comfortable, thank you." But Bushy Jack and the other Squirrels were happy. Everyone had come to their party.

The Woodchuck went home early, for he was getting sleepy, but the Coons left because they had an apple-harvest to bring in. The Crow said he was going to stay all night, and, perching near the Porcupines, started to snore. The Mink slipped quietly away, perhaps to hunt, the Chipmunks and the others scampered or flew home, until only Bushy Jack was left sitting beneath the tree.

He wagged his head in satisfaction, saying to himself:

"A fine party, a most exceedingly, exceptionally, extraordinarily, tremendously fine party—and the best of it all is that there are no dishes to wash."

Barber-Ellis FRENCH ORGANDIE

Is used by all who appreciate high class stationery

In note paper and tablets with envelopes to match

FRENCH ORGANDIE

"THE STATIONERY OF THE REFINED"

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR IT

GIRLS! GIRLS! Purify and Perfume Your Skin With CUTICURA

TALCUM

The most fascinatingly fragrant and healthful of all powder perfumes. Antiseptic, prophylactic, deodorizing, fragrant and refreshing, it is an ideal face, skin, baby and dusting powder. Convenient and economical, it takes the place of other perfumes for the person. A few grains sufficient. One of the indispensable Cuticura Toilet Trio for keeping the skin clear, sweet and healthy.

Soap, Ointment and Talcum 25c each. Sold throughout the Dominion. Canadian Depot: Lyman, Ltd., 344 St. Paul St., W., Montreal.

DEAFNESS IS MISERY

I know because I was Deaf and had Head Noises for over 30 years. My invisible Antiseptic Ear Drums restored my hearing and stopped Head Noises, and will do it for you. They are Tiny Megaphones. Cannot be seen when worn. Effective when Deafness is caused by Catarrh or by Perforated, Partially or Wholly Destroyed Natural Drums. Easy to put in, easy to take out. Are "Unseen Comforts." Inexpensive. Write for Booklet and my sworn statement of how I recovered my hearing.

A. O. LEONARD

Suite 97, 70 5th Avenue • • • New York City

LUX For Soft Blankets!

Keep your blankets soft, woolly and comfortable! Guard them carefully in the wash and they will repay you with a doubled life. The safest of all blanket baths is with the rich, creamy, cleansing LUX suds.

The best way to wash blankets.—Use two table-spoonsful of LUX to a gallon of water. Whisk into a thick lather in very hot water. Add cold water until suds are lukewarm. Work your blankets up and down in the suds and squeeze the suds repeatedly through the soiled spots. Do not rub.

Rinse the blankets in three lukewarm waters. Pass through a loose wringer or squeeze the water out. Do not twist. Dry in the shade in a moderate temperature.

Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto

A Bright February Feature

We expect to publish in our February issue an article by that well-known and highly popular Western writer, Mrs. Nellie McClung, entitled "Geography—And How It Is Written."

The Housewife Speaks on "Economy"

"THERE was a time when I bought ham in small quantities—ready sliced. That was before I had used

Swift's Premium Ham

"Once I learned of the delicious flavor of Swift's Premium I made up my mind to buy a whole ham, to be sure of the quality. I found first cost is cheaper that way, as the dealer can give me a lower average price when I buy the whole ham. Premium Ham keeps well, does not need parboiling, and there's no waste when I boil the shank, bake the butt, and broil or fry the centre slices. In this way we not only secure variety, but always have something on hand — And when all the meat is gone, the bone makes a wonderful addition to soup stock."

Order from your Butcher or Grocer.

Swift Canadian Co.
Limited

Toronto    Winnipeg    Edmonton

Look for the blue tag attached to every Swift's Premium Ham, whether you buy ham, whole or sliced.

LIKE THE BATH—

LIKE the bath itself, the change into fresh and dainty clothing refreshes both body and mind, and has its good effect on the mental as well as the physical health.

For the children's wardrobe or your own, use only the best, that is to say—PRUE COTTONS.

DOMINION TEXTILE COMPANY
LIMITED
MONTREAL TORONTO WINNIPEG

A corner of the reception room in the Governor's Mansion at Augusta, Me. (formerly the home of the Hon. James G. Blaine), where, as in innumerable other "Famous Windows," Hartshorn Shade Rollers are used.

To Eliminate Your Shade Troubles

TO have shades work so well that you can forget them entirely—this is the aim of every woman who has a household to manage.

And this is just the kind of service Hartshorn Shade Rollers give. For in a Hartshorn—

- the spring is of finest steel wire, treated and tested to take many more turns and stand more strains than actual usage demands.
- the brackets, pawls and other vital parts are die-cut of heavy metal—they fit together as precisely as the parts of a watch, and must function perfectly.

So that shades mounted on Hartshorn Rollers cannot fall, slip or "jam"—they give the smooth, easy action that makes for long, perfect shade service.

Specify Hartshorn when you order shades—it will eliminate all your shade troubles. Look for the script name "Stewart Hartshorn" on the shade roller label.

Stewart Hartshorn

SHADE ROLLERS

CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL

VOL. 17
No. 10

FEBRUARY 1921
TORONTO

FEBRUARY 1921

PRICE 20 CENTS

MADE IN CANADA

Delicious biscuit, cake and pastry are the natural consequence when Magic Baking Powder is used—not a matter of chance or accident.

Guaranteed to be the best and purest baking powder possible to produce.

Costs no more than the ordinary kinds.

E. W. GILLETT CO. LTD.
TORONTO, CANADA

Winnipeg

Montreal

Canadian Home Journal

A Monthly Magazine of Interest to all Progressive Canadians

NEW YORK
505 FIFTH AVE.
CHICAGO
608 OTIS BUILDING

OFFICE of PUBLICATION
RICHMOND and SHEPPARD STREETS
TORONTO, CANADA

MONTREAL
171 ST. JAMES ST.
WINNIPEG
310 BOYD BLDG.

FEBRUARY, 1921

Copyright, February, 1921, in Canada.

Volume Seventeen

Number Ten

Features for February

By THE EDITOR

THE last month of winter is a kind of "between-times" period, when we are so busy skating and skiing, if we are young, or reading by the fireside, if we are no longer in the twenties, that we hardly realize that just twenty-eight days are between us and the first month of spring. Of course you liked our January cover. We don't see how you could help it, with the joyousness of a New Year in the faces of the young man and the bonnie girl who were the embodiment of Canada's winter cheer. Mr. Drummond gave the January number and our 1921 career a splendid start with his glowing picture of the mid-winter spirit of Young Canada.

This month Miss Long has given us a bright-faced young person who loves a February snowstorm and whose cheeks glow all the brighter for the white flakes falling so fast. Canada has been foolishly sensitive about her snow, and has even tried to ignore her winter sports and carnivals. Perhaps the writers of long ago overdid the snowy aspect of this fair Dominion and made Canadians afraid of being considered inhabitants of a near-North Polar region. We are recovering from our sensitiveness concerning the frost, and are willing to admit the charms of the days when the snow is crisp to the tread and the air is the very vintage of Boreas.

LAST year we had a delightful Valentine cover by Mr. Norman Price. This year we have kept our Valentine touch for the editorial page, and we know that you will revel in the adventures of these amorous young persons, who seem to have found a bright little isle of their own. The artist, Mr. Paul Sheard, has written the verses, too—and we are sure that you will remember them, even if he makes havoc of "home sweet home." Mr. Sheard is a son of Dr. and Mrs. Sheard, of Toronto; and as his father is a prominent physician and Member of Parliament and his mother (Virna Sheard) is one of Canada's best-known authors, we are prepared for Mr. Sheard to write and portray any number of delightful adventures. We hope he will do some more of this work for us—and our readers will look forward to other stories of island wanderings.

There is an article on "Geography and How It Is Written," by Nellie McClung; and if you think geography a dull subject, just read Mrs. McClung's account of her visit to Copper Cliff and you will change your mind. There is a wonderful country in the making in New Ontario, and this writer, who is of Ontario by birth and of the West by education and mature development, gives us a sympathetic and graphic description of this community.

THERE are other Valentine things in this issue. You have just to read the cookery columns by Mary M. Neil to realize what a perfect feast a fourteenth of February party can be. Such caramels and punch (the kind approved by the O.T.A.) such tarts and hearts and peach spongeade are enough to make any company rejoice—and we hope you will have just such a party—and perhaps you will notice that pink is now considered a "properer" color than red for a Valentine festivity. Of course, it is ever so difficult to keep up-to-date in all these little matters; but if you'll only take the CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL and read what Mary M.

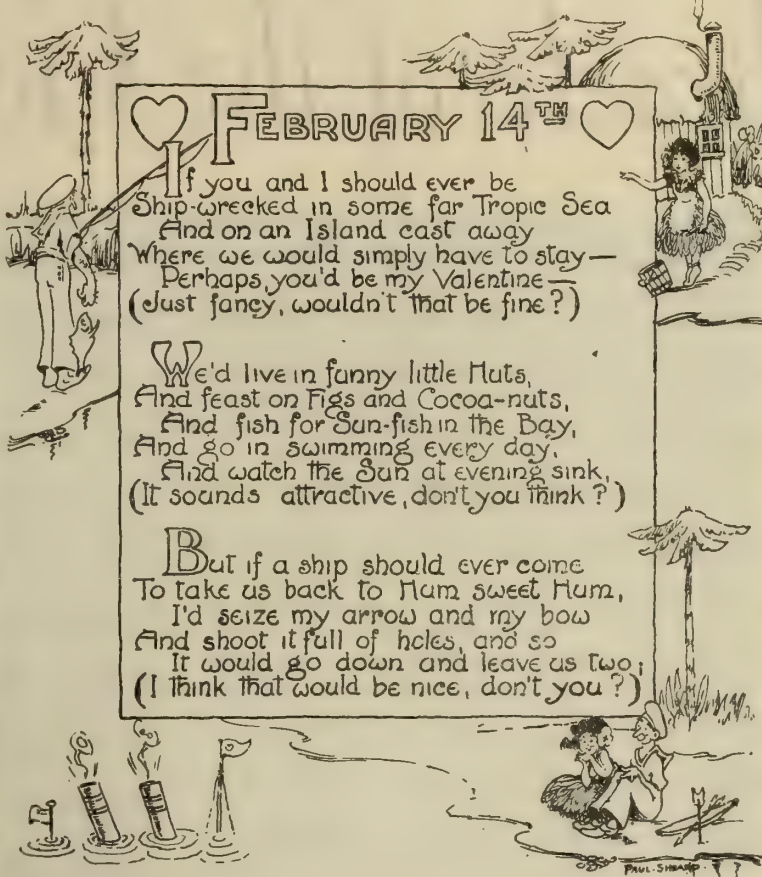

Neil has to say about things to eat and how they're to be served, you'll know just what bon-bons are the most toothsome and just what salads are highly approved in the best culinary circles. Personally, I have a fondness for the photographs, too. I think the peach spongeade at the top of the cookery page is the most tempting dish you can imagine, as it makes a fluffy headpiece for all the recipes. Then there's another article about "devilled" things. There is no profanity about them—in fact, they are harmless and comforting dishes, just the thing on a cold night after you've been skating or skiing.

* * * *

THERE are two features that the modern magazine for women must have—and those are fiction and fashions. "Two on the Trail," our serial which began its tempestuous course in January, continues to make everyone interested in the marvellous adventures of Garth Pevensy and Natalie, the plucky little heroine who goes into the wilderness of the North on a forlorn quest. Even in these days of startling movies we think you will find "Two on the Trail" a story to keep you wide awake in every chapter. It has many sensations, but is thoroughly wholesome in tone and has the proper scorn for the villain—who is a "really-truly" scoundrel. However, we are not going to anticipate any of the adventures to be found in the course of this journey northwards.

There is a characteristic story by Beatrice Redpath—who is a poet, even when she writes a story, and makes an appealing tale of "The Thirteenth Sonnet"—one which you will remember. Then there is a war story, "Kia Pono Tonu," a romance which links the two Dominions of New Zealand and Canada, and which is written by an understanding teller of tales. There is another story in that unusual series "The Windwheel of the Djinn," with which Bertha E. Green is entertaining the JOURNAL'S Juniors.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Yearly subscription price for Canada and Great Britain is $2.00; United States, $2.50; Foreign, $2.60. Remit by Express or P. O. Order. Add collection charges to cheques.

Subscriptions must be paid in advance.

To change address we must know former and new address. No address changed later than 15th.

We have discontinued the sending of receipts for money paid by subscribers. The first figures on the wrapper of your journal show to what date your subscription is paid.

The Miracle of the Golden Bar

The whiteness of white clothes washed with Fels-Naptha!! And without the labor of hard rubbing! How can it be possible?

You simply soap the clothes with Fels-Naptha, roll up and let them soak half an hour. A dousing in the foamy Fels-Naptha suds, or with some pieces a light rub; a good rinse—and there they are, the whitest of the white! Sparkling, sweet, clean

A washday with nothing to tire you out!

It is hard to believe; yet such is the miracle happening weekly in millions of homes with Fels-Naptha.

Real naptha, that surprising dirt loosener used by dry-cleaners to cleanse even the most delicate fabrics, is perfectly combined with good soap. The real naptha penetrates to every fibre of the fabric and makes the dirt let go without hard rubbing, and without boiling. Of course you may boil clothes with Fels-Naptha if you wish, but there is no need to. Fels-Naptha suds flush the dirt away and leave the clothes spotless and sanitary.

Whether you do your own work or have it done for you Fels-Naptha will prove a wonder in your home in saving time and labor.

Three things identify the genuine Fels-Naptha—the golden bar, the clean naptha odor, and the red-and-green wrapper. Order it of your grocer today!

Smell the real Naptha in Fels-Naptha! Blindfolded you can tell Fels-Naptha from all other soaps.

How many uses in your home?

Besides being a wonderful laundry soap Fels-Naptha takes spots out of rugs, carpets, cloth, draperies. Brightens woodwork instantly. Cleans enamel of bath tub, washstand, sink. Safely cleans anything cleanable.

Copyright, Canada, 1921, by Fels & Co.

1921, Fels & Co., Philadelphia

FELS-NAPTHA

THE GOLDEN BAR WITH THE CLEAN NAPTHA ODOR

The Canadian Girl At Work

The consideration of a book which tells much of the activities of the Girls of the country and how they have developed

THERE is nothing more notable in the modern world than the large army of girls who are working in the world outside the home. A century ago, the task of governess or "companion" seemed the only one for the educated young woman:—and a dreary life it must have been, if we may judge from the novels of the period. To-day the girl who is not anxious for "work"—meaning, thereby, a position beyond the walls of home—is the exception. Far be it from us to deny that the housewife and the daughters who remain at home earn their living, or to deny that they accomplish a task worth while. They are the workers, indeed, but most of us have associated the word with the world of factory, business office, laboratory, school-room or bank.

We turn to a new book, "The Canadian Girl at Work," by Marjory MacMurchy, with the expectation of finding out many things concerning feminine industry in this fair Dominion of ours.

Miss MacMurchy describes this volume as "A Book of Vocational Guidance"—and truly, no Canadian girl who wishes to know what her sisters are doing, or who desires a hint as to her own activities and their development can afford to be without this blue-bound book, with thirty illuminating chapters. From millinery to manicuring, from gardening to dentistry, we find every department of "girls at work" of interest, and the writer does not fail to discuss such subjects as Investing and Health, especially as these relate to occupational duties.

The subject of work has been variously treated, sometimes from an entirely idealistic standpoint, sometimes from the purely materialistic. Miss MacMurchy's attitude is a happy blending of the ideal and the practical, and figures become friendly, statistics become significant, when presented by such a discerning writer.

This book was prepared at the instance of the Minister of Education for use in Ontario School Libraries. It is now published by Thomas Nelson and Sons, Ltd., Toronto (price, $1.25), and should appeal to a wide and varied circle of readers.

There is a certain attractiveness about "Going Into Business For One's Self," and the chapter with this heading discusses the work and achievement of those who have "arrived." From it, we quote the following paragraphs:—

"IN the first place, few girls actually enter paid employment or business life with the intention of becoming independent proprietors. It is only after some years' experience of work that the idea occurs to them. A trained nurse may have been in private practice three or four years before she begins to think that she would like to own and manage a private hospital. For the properly qualified and equipped woman, this is a good business enterprise. A number of nurses are conducting excellent private hospitals. The work is exacting, the hours are long and the responsibility is heavy. But any girl who thinks of going into business for herself should know at once that all these conditions are true of every independent business that is worth while.

"The business woman requires a precise technical and financial knowledge of the business which she means to enter, and she needs as well originality, a fund of ideas, courage, initiative, imagination, that feeling of capacity for responsibility and enterprise which is like love of adventure, judgment, nerve and character. She should not be too excitable and yet she ought to be keen. She should not be easily disturbed and she ought to be a steady worker. Above all, she requires to be able to deal with people, both customers and employees.

"Instances of women who have been successful in business enterprises may be quoted which do not seem to conform to the requirements specified. But if they are examined, these instances will show that the women in question have fulfilled the conditions of success almost exactly as described. A woman has succeeded, for instance, in managing her own country inn. She was in a totally different employment before she started this successful enterprise. But she had already bought, built on, and sold with a margin of profit, three or four other properties. She had learned how to buy land to advantage in the neighborhood of a city. She bought her present property, choosing a few acres which were already in fruit or in use for growing vegetables. There was an attractive, large, old-fashioned farm house on the premises, the property was near a railway station and situated on a road constantly used by motorists. Other enterprises of the same kind were studied by her. The food provided was made a specialty. Every expense which could be lessened in connection with the property was considered. A flock of poultry was kept. The fruit was either sold or put down for winter use in the inn.

"In almost every instance the successful woman of business enters on her new enterprise in a small way. A girl begins by making and delivering lunches to the staff of a large office building. Later she adds other buildings to her list. She sells cakes, sandwiches and preserves from her own home. Having saved some capital, she embarks on a down-town tea room. Every detail of her business is planned as it expands and the management is entirely in her own hands. The successful management of a large business would have been impossible for an inexperienced girl, but it comes easily to the young business woman.

"In the same way a nurse began a business preparing supplies for doctors. Soon she added invalid cookery to her other work. Her venture developed into a business, partly catering, partly a dining club, and in part a depot for surgical dressings and home made cooking for invalids. Another woman has inherited a large catering business from her father. It was a considerable business when she became manager, but she had gone to work with her father as soon as she left school. Still another woman has established a system of hairdressing businesses. She began with one room in one city. Her business has been extended to over forty cities. No chance good fortune can account for successes such as these described. Managing ability, foresight and character are responsible for a great part of the achievement. The woman in each case made the discovery that the best commodity of its kind offered to the public in the right way must bring success, if the business enterprise itself is well managed.

"Examples of the wise judgment of women in business are found in every large community. A girl who makes good marmalade for home consumption began to make and sell this product in a small way. She is now part owner of a large business. A woman who went into a factory as an office helper proved to have a gift for designing dresses. After spending a number of years in the employ of the firm with which she began work, she has gone into partnership with a woman dressmaker in a small specialized factory. A large wholesale fish business is owned and managed by a woman, whose knowledge of the business, including sources of supply and distribution, is entirely adequate.

"Women who own and manage business enterprises when they succeed often do so because of their womanly qualities. There is no conflict between capable, thorough work and womanliness. The normal woman has always a capable and helpful side to her character. She generally retains in affairs her gentleness, considerateness, and patience in dealing with all sorts of people. No quality is more important in business than a natural ability to understand and sympathize. A woman's ideas may be original and her knowledge of business details exact, but it is her power to work with others and to make the best of them which is the highest part of her business ability. Many of the businesses owned and managed successfully by women are connected with food, clothing, health, physical, mental and moral training, and personal well-being. The woman's advantage in business has to do most frequently with perfection in detail, personal supervision, knowledge of the highest home standards, and with making her commodity a little the best on the market. The best women in business excel in making conditions for their employees ideal. They plan to give their workers opportunities for education and training, and sometimes help them to start in business for themselves."

MISS MACMURCHY has a valuably suggestive chapter on "A Girl's Reading," which concludes:

"A few rules will help us in our reading. Whatever book we read should be a good book of its class. Suppose we want to read a light and entertaining book for amusement and relaxation, then it should be good entertainment, well written, well planned, delightfully easy and gay in style. Do not read books which make you wish that you had not read them. Shun books which make one feel that life is not worth living. We can always judge the character of a book by the importance it gives to life. In the same way we should not read books that make us think poorly of people. The finer the book the more clearly it shows how worth while every individual is. Any book that separates us, or turns us away, from the highest, happiest things is not worth the time which we might spend in reading it."

A WRITER WHO ALWAYS HELPS

Miss Marjory MacMurchy, one of Canada's most widely-known journalists, who was for several years President of the Canadian Women's Press Club, has written books which have proved highly helpful to her profession and to the public. Her latest volume, "The Canadian Girl at Work," is published by Thomas Nelson & Sons, Limited, Toronto.

ALICE BRADY—delightful on the screen and in the spoken drama for her grooming—regards the care of the hands as one of the subtleties of beauty. She says: "I have found Cutex the quickest and most effective way of taking care of my nails."

Don't cut the cuticle—It protects the most sensitive thing in all the world

WHEN we want to describe an injury to our most delicate sensibilities, we say that we have been "cut to the quick." Did you ever consider what we mean by this?

The quick is the root of the finger-nail. It lies only 1-12th of an inch below the surface of the cuticle and it is so sensitive that it feels excruciatingly the slightest hurt.

Every time you trim the cuticle you risk being "cut to the quick." It is almost impossible to trim off dead cuticle without cutting into the live cuticle which is the only protection of the nail root.

If you should examine your fingers afterwards with a magnifying glass you would see that you had made numerous little cuts. To heal these wounds, nature immediately builds up a new covering that is tougher than the rest of the cuticle. This is why, when you cut the cuticle, it grows up coarser and more ragged than before.

The safe way to remove cuticle

Yet when the cuticle dries, splits and forms hang-nails, it must be removed some way. To do this simply and safely without cutting, try the new method provided in Cutex. Cutex Cuticle Remover is a harmless liquid that acts on the dry, dead cuticle as soap and water act on dirt, leaving a delightfully smooth, even nail rim.

But a beautiful, even cuticle calls for immaculate nail tips and both demand smoothly polished nails. See the detailed instructions accompanying the pictures at the side.

One trial will make a great improvement

Try a Cutex manicure today. However ragged your cuticle may have become through cutting, a single application of the Cuticle Remover will make an astonishing improvement. You will be amazed to see how cleanly and beautifully it takes off the ugly, ragged edges, and how smooth and lovely it leaves the nail rim.

You will be pleased, also, with the immaculate beauty of the nail tips after the Nail White, and with the delicate sheen that you get from the Cutex polishes.

Cutex Manicure Sets come in three sizes. The "Compact," with trial packages, 60c; The "Traveling," $1.50; The "Boudoir," $3.00. Or each of the Cutex items comes separately at 35c. At all drug and department stores and at chemists' shops in England.

Complete Trial Outfit for 20c

Mail the coupon below with two dimes for a Cutex Introductory Set to Northam Warren, Dept. 1402, 200 Mountain St., Montreal.

To give your nails the grooming that present-day standards require:

First, the Cuticle Remover: Apply around the nail with an orange stick wrapped in absorbent cotton. Rinse the fingers, and when drying them, push the cuticle gently downwards with the towel, whereupon all the dead, dry cuticle will wipe away.

Next, the Nail White: Squeeze it under the nails directly from the convenient tube with the pointed top. It will remove stains and give the nail tips that immaculate whiteness without which they never look quite freshly manicured.

Finally, the Polish: A delightful, jewel-like shine of just the brightness approved by good taste is obtained by using first the paste and then the powder, and burnishing by brushing the nails lightly across the palm of the hand. Or you can get an equally lovely lustre, instantaneously and without burnishing, with the liquid polish.

MAIL THIS COUPON WITH TWO DIMES TODAY
FOR COMPLETE TRIAL OUTFIT

NORTHAM WARREN,

Dept. 1402, 200 Mountain St.,
Montreal

Name .....

Street .....

City and Prov .....

Cutex Traveling
Set, $1.50

Two On The Trail

by Hulbert Footner

ILLUSTRATED BY CAMPBELL DUNCAN

CHAPTER IV. (CONTINUED).

NICK'S guffaw was quickly changed for a scowl; Garth saw that an explosion was imminent; and that quick thought was necessary. He knew he must at all cost to his pride avoid trouble until he got Natalie off his hands. He walked over to Nick; the big fellow clenched his fists as he approached.

"Hope I haven't hurt the beggar," said Garth blandly. "Perhaps he didn't mean to spill the water; but you have to deal quickly with a breed. That's your way, I'm told."

The breed picked himself up, and went crouching to his master with a voluble, whining complaint in his own tongue. Nick lifted his hand; and with a vicious backhanded stroke sent Xavier again reeling across the yard.

Old Nell looked at these things with a resigned air that spoke volumes for her daily life. Natalie kept perfectly quiet; but a bright spot burned in either cheek, and she turned a pair of shining eyes on Garth when he came back to her. His difficulties were by no means over. Old Paul, feeling that it might be well to forego the pail of water, gave the word to start. Grylls climbed in by the rear step, and sat next to Nell with a dogged air. This brought him opposite Garth, and very near Natalie. Albert and the half-breed following him, they started. Xavier, covered with dirt, snivelling, and nursing a split lip, was as ugly as a gargoyle.

Garth saw a way out in the vacant place beside Paul. "The front seat would be more comfortable for you; it's wider," he said to Natalie, loud enough for all to hear. "Paul," he called, "have you room beside you for the young lady? She wants to hear some more stories."

Paul, delighted, immediately pulled up, and held out a hand. Natalie climbed over the mail-bags and took her place beside him. In crossing, she gave Garth's hand a grateful squeeze; and he returned to his place with a swelling heart, ready for Nick Grylls and any like him.

Old Paul, whenever they came to a hill and he could allow his four to walk, turned around; and half to Natalie, half to Garth, delivered himself of one of his characteristic stories. Neither was Nick impatient with his monologues to-day; for when Paul turned Natalie half turned also; and then Nick could watch her face.

Garth had asked the old man about the half-breed rebellion.

"Sure, I was through it all," he began. "I was buildin' boats in Prince George; and scoutin'. Upwards of three months we hadn't no news from outside and the settlement was in a continuous state of scare. It was supposed the Crees had been joined by the Montana Indians; and all said we was cut off on the south. Women, children and cattle was crowded together in the stockade; but I didn't bring my family in. My old woman weren't afraid; and somepin' told me it was just one of these here panics like."

"Well, one day up came word to the commandant to send a force down the river to Fort Pitt, as they called it, to jine with General Middleton. Then it was Smiley here, and Smiley there, and they couldn't do nothin' without Smiley. I started down the river at last with two work boats carryin' fifty men under Major Lewis and Cap'n Caswell. It was a Saturday night, I mind. Lewis was one of these stuck-up, know-it-all-johnnies, not long breeched. But Caswell was an old Crimea veteran; his face had been spiled by a powder explosion; but he certainly was a sporter! Me and him got along fine. My! My! what a randy old feller he was! The men used to sit around him with their mouths open waitin' to laugh. Grimy Caswell they called him, along of his speckled face—great big man!"

"We travelled for three days and three nights without stoppin'; and would you believe it, that damn fool Lewis—'scuse me, Miss—made us light a lantern at night! A mark for all the reds in the country! I was steerin' the first boat; and signallin' the channel to Dave Sinclair in the boat behind, with my hand; this way and so. But the second day Dave ran her aground. Young Lewis wouldn't allow that we knew how to lift a boat off a shoal up North. I let him break all the ropes tryin' to drag her off; then I showed him. Meanwhile, all this time, Grimy Caswell was dressin' himself up like a redskin in my boat; and smearin' his face with red earth. When it got dusk-like, he hid in the bushes; and by and by Lewis came along the shore. All of a sudden, Grimy in his war-paint popped out in front of him, let out a screech, and sent a shot over his head. Say, that young man near died right there. He turned the color of a lead bullet; and made some quick tracks to the rear boat. Grimy sneaked back to ours and washed and dressed; and all night long he plagued Lewis to light the lantern; but he wouldn't; and the men near died holdin' theirselves in. Oh! Grimy Caswell was a humorous feller, he was!"

"We landed at Fort Pitt on the fourth day; and at the same time the steamboats come up from Battle Run with the whole army. They landed 'em all; and say, they had a brass band; and General Middleton rode a white horse. Never see such a grand sight in all my born days; they must have been all of seven hundred and fifty men!"

AT the foot of another long hill Natalie expressed a wish to walk up; and Garth helped her down. They set off briskly, ahead of the horses; and for the first time found themselves free to talk to each other.

"How good you have been to me!" she murmured.

"Don't think of thanking me," said Garth, almost roughly.

"If I had known how literally you would have to take care of me, I would not have been so quick to ask you."

"It was nothing, really."

"Nothing, you mean to what is before us?" she asked quickly.

"I look for nothing worse," he said.

"Perhaps my appearance is too conspicuous," she suggested with a humility new to her.

"A little, perhaps," Garth admitted.

"What shall I do?" she said. "I have nothing else."

"At the Landing I will dress you in a rough sweater, and a felt hat strapped under your chin," he said with a smile.

Natalie was aggrieved. "I like to look nice," she protested.

"You would—even then," said poor Garth.

She changed the subject. "What a gross beast that big man is!" she said strongly.

"Poor devil!" said Garth unconsciously. He understood from his own feelings a little of what Nick was going through.

Natalie turned a surprised face on him. "Are you sorry for him?" she demanded.

"A little."

"Why?"

"Well—I think perhaps he never saw any one like you before," he said quietly.

"But he hates you!"

"Naturally!"

"Why?" she demanded again—and was immediately sorry she had spoken.

Garth looked away. "He thinks I am—I am more than I am," he said oracularly.

She affected not to hear this. "What shall we do about him?" she asked.

"He won't trouble us after the Landing," said Garth. "He is bound down the river to Lake Miwasa while we go up to Caribou Lake."

"It's a precious good thing for me I didn't start off alone," she said feelingly.

"I'm glad if I've won your confidence a little," said Garth hanging his head.

This meant: "Aren't you going to tell me about yourself?" Natalie's mystery had been a thorn in his flesh all the way along the road.

Natalie understood. "I'll tell you now, gladly," she said at once. "But not here; there isn't time. We have to get in directly."

This was precisely what Garth desired her to say. He longed for her to want to tell him; but for the story itself, he dreaded it, and was quite willing to have the telling deferred.

Later in the day they reached Nell's house, quite a fine edifice built with lumber instead of the usual logs. Natalie, true to her word, allowed herself to be shown through; and did not stint her admiration of Nell's treasures. When they drove on, she looked back with a genuine feeling for the old girl, who was so anxious to please. They left her standing in the doorway in her finery, with the sullen, black-browed bravo slouching beside her.

The way became very much rougher; and Garth was glad of Natalie's having greater comfort on the front seat. About five o'clock they climbed their last hill. At the top Old Paul, pulling up his horses, swept his whip with an eloquent gesture over the magnificent prospect lying below.

"All the water this side goes to the Arctic," he said.

Looking over a wealth of greenery, away below them they saw the mighty Miwasa River coming eastward from the mountains, make its southernmost sweep, and shape a course straight away for the North. The Miwasa River! There was magic in the name; they gazed down at it with a feeling akin to awe. Off to the left lay the roofs of the Landing, farthest outpost of civilization.

Presently they were rattling down the steep village street at a great pace, traces hanging slack; past the factor's house, the "Company's" store, the blacksmith shop and the "French outfit"; with a dash and a clatter that brought every inhabitant running to the hotel. Most of them were already there; for the arrival of the mail is the event of the week. Old Smiley swept up to the gallery at Trudeau's with a flourish worthy of coaching's palmiest days. The passengers alighted; and again the girl with the green wings in her hat became the cynosure of every eye. Garth delivered her into the comfortable arms of Mrs. Trudeau, who took her upstairs. Turning back into the general room, he asked the first man he met where the Bishop lived.

"Look!" she cried. "Isn't it like the frontispiece to a book of adventure!"

"Up the street and to the left a piece" was the reply. "But say—"

"Well?" said Garth.

"The Bishop and his party started up the river two days ago."

Garth, turning, saw Nick Grylls listening with an evil grin.

CHAPTER V

MADAME TRUDEAU is the jumping-off place of civilization here, at Trudeau's, is the last brilliant habitation and the last patio, here, the wilderness keeps for the last time on springs, and cuts the last "white" on the wilderness swallows him. It is at once the rendezvous, the place of exchange, and the exchange of the North; the place where the first approaches the intimate, village spirit in that vast land, where a man's doings are crowded with more particularity than in the smallest hamlet outside. For where there are not, in half a million square miles, enough white men to fill a room, or as many white women as a man has fingers, each individual fills a large space in the picture. Away up in Port Somervell, three months' journey from Prince George, they speak of "town" as if it were five miles off.

And Trudeau's on the river bank, quite imposing with its three stories and its gingerbread gallery, is the nucleus of it all. Trudeau's is a reminder of the jolly bustling inns of a century ago. The traders, the policemen, the mail-carriers, the rivermen and the freighters come and go; each sits for a day or two in the row of chairs tipped back against the wall—for no one is ever in a hurry in the North—gives his news if he be on the way "out"; takes it if he be coming "in"; and appoints to meet his friends there next year. The commonest type of all is the genial dilettante, the man who traps a little, prospects a little, grows a few potatoes, and loafs a great deal. Trudeau's is also the eddy which sooner or later sucks in the derelicts of the country, sons or brothers of somebody, incredibly unshaven and down at heel; capitalists of bluster and laborers with the tongue.

Such was the crowd that witnessed Natalie's arrival open-mouthed; and such the individuals that fastened themselves in turn on Garth, with the determination of extracting a full explanation of the phenomenon. Garth succeeded in avoiding at the same time, giving offense and giving information. But he could not prevent a fine podful of rumors from bursting at the Landing, and scattering seeds broadcast over the North.

He found a letter awaiting him from the Bishop. "I find," he wrote, "that Captain Jack Dexter's steamboat will be going up the river to the Warehouse in the middle of the week; and as my preparations are completed a day or two earlier than I expected, I am starting on ahead with my outfit. You will probably overtake us in the big river, as we have to track all the way; but should you be delayed, I will go on up the rapids; and will see that a wagon is waiting for you at the Warehouse, to bring you to me at Pierre Toma's house on Musquasepi. This will be more comfortable for you, as all this first part of the journey is tedious up-stream work."

The good man little suspected when he wrote it, what a quandary his kindly note would throw Garth into.

After supper, he and Natalie, sitting in the rigid little parlor upstairs, talked it over; while Mademoiselle Trudeau, aged fifteen, sought to entertain them by rendering effete popular songs on the famous piano. From below came the rise and fall of deep-voiced talk, and the incessant click of billiard balls.

Natalie made a picture of adorable perplexity to Garth's eyes as she said: "What would you advise me to do?"

"How can I advise you?" he said, looking away; "I do not know all the circumstances."

"But I can't tell you now," she said appealingly. "Don't you see my reasons for going must not be allowed to influence our decision as to whether I can go?"

Garth did not exactly see this; but unwilling to beg for her confidence, he remained silent.

"My trouble is," she continued presently, "that if we follow the Bishop and overtake him, he'll virtually be obliged to take me; and I do not wish to force myself on him."

"As to that," Garth said, "one has to give and take in the North. It's not like it is outside. Besides, we pay our own score you know; and carry our own grub. I'll answer for the Bishop."

"Then I see no reason why I should not go," she said.

The journey with her stretched itself rosily before Garth's mind's eye, but his instinct to take care of her made him oppose it. "There is me," he said diffidently, "travelling alone with me, I mean. Even in the North a girl is obliged to consider what people will say."

Natalie shook her shoulders manifestly. "There's not the slightest use urging reasons of propriety," she said resolutely. "As long as my conscience is clear, I can't afford to consider it. This is too important. It affects my whole life. Oh! added in a deeper voice, "There's something in there I have to find out!"

Something in this made Garth's heart lift up a little; for she did not speak as one whose heart was in thrall.

Mademoiselle Trudeau concluded her piece with an ear-tearing discord; and turned self-consciously inviting applause.

"How well you play, dear!" said Natalie, the wheedler. "Isn't it nice to have music away up here! Try something else."

The performer, adoring Natalie, promptly turned her pig-tails to them again, and attacked "Two Little Girls in Blue." Garth groaned.

"Discourages listeners," remarked Natalie, indicating the curtained doorway.

"So," she continued presently, "if you haven't any better reason to urge against it, we'll consider the matter settled."

"Couldn't I go for you?" asked Garth.

She resolutely shook her head. "I have promised," she said.

"It was a promise given in ignorance of the conditions," Garth persisted with rough tenderness. "This wild country is no place for you. I could not bear to see you wet and hungry and cold and tired, and all that is before us—besides dangers we may not suspect."

Natalie faced him with shining eyes. "Clumsy man!" she cried—but there was tenderness in her scorn too. "Do you think this is persuading me not to go? I'm not a doll; I won't spoil with a little rough handling! If you only knew how I longed to experience the real; to work for my living, to get under the surface of things!"

Garth, amazed and admiring of her bold spirit, was silenced.

As they were parting for the night, she said: "As soon as the steamboat casts off, and it's too late to turn back, I will tell you what I have to do up there."

NEXT morning Garth sought an interview with Captain Jack Dexter of the Aurora Borealis. At once proprietor, skipper and business manager of his boat, and serenely independent of competition, he was a type new to Garth. His single concession to sea-faring attire was a yachting cap several sizes too small, perched on his spreading brown curls. His face was red; his eyes anxious, blue and bulging. He had the unwholesome, frenetic aspect of the patent medicine enthusiast, not uncommon in the North. Garth interrupted him in a grave discussion of the relative merits of "Pain Killer" and "Golden Discovery."

"I may take a run up to the Warehouse," he said guardedly, in answer to the question. "I'll let you know to-morrow."

"Aren't you sure of going?" asked Garth in some dismay.

"Never sure of nothing in this world," said Captain Jack, with a glance around the circle, sure of applause.

Garth bit his lip. "Haven't you freight to go up?" he asked quietly.

"Plenty of freight offered me," said the skipper coolly. "Plenty to go downstream too."

"But it's highly important I should know what you're going to do," said Garth with increasing heat.

Captain Jack cocked a wary eye at the sky, and spat. "No water in the river," he said at length. "Then you're not going," said Garth.

"Didn't say so," said Captain Jack. "May rain shortly, and bring her up an inch or so."

The sky was clear and speckless as an azure bowl. "Do you mean I've got to wait around here indefinitely on the bare chance of it raining?" demanded Garth.

"Told the Bishop I'd bring you up," said Captain Jack in his detached way. "Reckon I can't break my word to the Church."

"Well, why didn't you say so in the beginning?" said Garth, wondering if this was a joke. "When will you be starting?"

"Oh, to-morrow, maybe," said the skipper without suspecting the least humor in the situation; "or Thursday—or Friday; whenever I can get the boys together. You just stay around and I'll let you know."

With this Garth was forced to be content.

Next there was the business of laying in supplies from the "Company." Garth tasted to the full the sweets of partnership, as he and Natalie gauged each other's appetite, and made their calculations. Paul Smiley accompanied them in the capacity of expert adviser; but the old man was inclined to be scandalized at the extravagant luxuries Garth insisted on adding to the five great staples of Northern travel; viz., bacon, flour, baking-powder, tea and sugar. Garth must have besides, canned vegetables and milk for Natalie; also cocoa, jam and fresh butter. The whole was contained in four goodly boxes.

"Mercy!" exclaimed Natalie. "Fancy our two little selves getting outside all that! Picture us waddling back to civilization."

Garth also made the necessary rougher additions to her wardrobe; and bought her a rifle of small calibre.

In the afternoon, with strict injunction to Natalie to remain indoors during his absence, he set off to a half-breed cabin a mile up the river, to obtain a supply of moccasins for both. Mademoiselle Trudeau undertook to bear Natalie company at home.

He had not been gone long before the Convent-bred child with her precise phrases began to get on the nerves of the irrepressible Natalie. At the same time the exquisite clarity of the Northern summer air, the delicate mantling blue overhead, and the liquid sunshine on the foliage all began to tempt her sorely. Across the road a field of squirrel-tail, dimpling silkily in the breeze, stretched to the river bank, and she saw she could cross it without passing any house. Natalie was never the one to resist such a lure; she sent the child away on an imaginary errand, and slipping out by the side door, crossed the field, and gained the bank without, as she fondly hoped, having been seen by the row of gossipers with their chairs tipped back against the front of the building. Rejoicing in her freedom, she followed the path Garth had taken along the edge of the bank.

NATALIE had not escaped the hotel unobserved; as she went leisurely waving her banners along the river path, a gross, burly figure with downcast head followed, pausing when she paused, and taking advantage of the taller bushes for cover. It was not characteristic of Natalie to look behind her; she continued her zigzag course all unconscious; sweeping her skirts through the grass, and ever and anon whistling snatches like a bird. At last she plumped down on a stone beside the path; and gazing up the unknown river of her journey, thought her bird-like thoughts.

Nick Grylls appeared around the bushes. For the fraction of a second she was utterly dismayed; then sharply calling in her flying forces, she nodded politely, as one nods to a passer-by; and looked elsewhere.

But the man had no intention of taking the hint. He had the grace to pull off his hat—the first time he had bared his head to a woman in many a long day—and he paused, awkwardly searching in his mind for the ingratiating thing to say. What he finally blurted out was not at all what he intended.

"You think I'm a coarse, rude fellow, Miss," he said with the air of a whipped schoolboy.

"You have never given me any reason to think otherwise," she said.

Grylls incessantly turned his hat brim in his fat freckled hands. "I am not as bad as you think," he said dully. "Somehow I seem to have a worse look when I am by you."

"I ain't had early advantages," he continued. "I never learned how to dress spruce; and talk with good grammar. But a man may have good metal in him for all that."

"Certainly!" said Natalie crisply.

"There ain't no reason why we shouldn't be friends."

"None at all," she returned. "Neither do I see any reason why we should be."

"But say, I can help you up here," he said eagerly. "I know the ropes. I have the trick of mastering the breeds. I have money in the country. I can do what I like."

"You wouldn't want me to simulate friendship for the purpose of using you?" said Natalie.

"Yes, I would," he sullenly returned. "I'd take your good will on any terms."

"I can't make believe to be friendly," she said briefly. "I give it gladly when I can."

"Show me what to do to be friends with you," he pleaded, not without eloquence. "I have the time and the money and the determination to do it—anything!"

But it was impossible Natalie should feel the slightest pity for a creature of so gross an aspect. "I cannot show you," she said coolly. "You must teach yourself."

Grylls began to be encouraged by his own rising passion. "All I ask is a fair show," he said in a more assured voice. "Give me a chance as well as this squib of a reporter you picked up in Prince George. What can he do for you? Let me take you to the Bishop. I can carry his whole party through the country at a rate he never thought of!"

Downright anger now came to Natalie's aid. "My arrangements are made," she said curtly. "I do not care to change them."

Grylls's eyes quailed again under the direct look of hers; and a deeper red crept under his skin. "If I can't help, I can hinder," he muttered.

"Threats will not help you," said Natalie, instantly and clearly.

"You don't know what you're up against," he continued, still muttering. "I tell you I carry the breeds in my pocket. No white man knows them but me. I can hold you up wherever I please. I've only to give the word and you'll starve on the trail—you and your reporter!"

Natalie arose. For the moment she was too angry to speak. The man looked on her flashing beauty; and in the madness of his desire to possess it he forgot his awe of her.

"God! How beautiful you are!" was forced from his breast like a groan.

Natalie's breath came like a frightened bird's. Flight she realized was dangerous—but it was as dangerous to stay; and how could she stay listening to him! Nick Grylls's own bulk cut off her retreat in the direction of the settlement—but somewhere in the other direction was Garth.

He made a move toward her. "What's to prevent me from taking you now?" he muttered.

Natalie, turning, fled along the path; running like a bird with incredibly swift, short steps.

Nick Grylls plunged after her, passion lending his great bulk lightness and speed. The path, which is used for tracking boats up-stream, skirted the extreme edge of a high-cut bank bordering the river. On the one hand a single false step would have precipitated them to the beach twenty-five feet below; on the other hand the branches of an impenetrable undergrowth scourged their faces as they ran.

The scene flashed past her like the half-sensed panorama of a hideous dream. She dared not look over her shoulder, but she could hear his heavy steps falling closer and closer. "He can run faster than I," she thought; and a dreadful sinking clutched her heart. She hazarded a fearful glance at the water below. In another instant she would have leapt over; but she felt the ground tremble and give under her feet. She staggered, and with a desperate leap, gained a firm foothold beyond. Behind her, with a rumble and a hissing roar a great section of the bank half slid, half fell to the river beach beneath, carrying down bushes, trees, stones—and her pursuer.

She ran on without a backward look. In her thankful heart she could now spare a glance of pity for the half-crazed man; but it did not carry her to the length of stopping to see what had befallen him.

A little way farther on, the bank flattened down into a little valley, which conveyed a brook to the river. A path struck inland here. Natalie, leaping from stone to stone across the stream, suddenly saw Garth's figure heave into sight around a bend in the path. Instantly she slackened her pace; and her hands went to her breast to control the agitation of the tenant there. She did not intend he should learn what had happened.

So when they met she was perfectly quiet; but her eyes were luminous, and her voice had a new dove-like note.

He instantly started to scold her for venturing so far alone. She was glad to be scolded. She could not help slipping her arm through his for a moment, just to feel that he was there.

"I will be good," she murmured in a moved, vibrant tone, like the deepest note of the oboe. "Hereafter I will do exactly as you say."

Returning, upon reaching the path up the valley, she made him turn inland; and they pursued a round-about course back to the hotel. Nick Grylls, unhurt except as to certain abrasions and furiously sullen, had reached there before them. During the rest of their stay he carefully avoided them; but Garth was more than once conscious of the venomous little eyes fixed upon him.

CHAPTER VI.

NATALIE TELLS ABOUT HERSELF.

THE little stern-wheeler lay with her nose tucked comfortably in the mud of the river bank; and a hawser taut between her capstan and a tree. Every soul on board, except the three passengers, slept. Garth and Natalie were sitting in the corner of the upper deck astern, on the seat which encircles the rail. The third passenger, a mysterious person, who all unknown to the other two had been making it her business to watch them, observing where they sat, had softly entered the end stateroom; and with her head at the window, stretched her ears to hear their talk.

The Aurora Borealis, after the loss of three precious days, during which Captain Jack endlessly backed and filled, and the water in the river steadily fell, had finally cast off that afternoon; and after ascending twenty miles or so, tied up to the bank to await the dawn. It was now about ten; overcast above; velvety dark below; and still as death. For the first time Garth and Natalie missed, with a catch in the breath, the faint, domestic murmur that rises on the quietest night from an inhabited land. It was so still they could occasionally hear the stealthy fall of tiny, furry feet among the leaves on shore. The trees kept watch on the bank like a regiment of shades at attention. The moment provided Natalie's opportunity to fulfil her promise.

"I will try to be very frank," she began by saying, "I am so anxious you should not misunderstand. You have been so good to me!"

"Please don't," said Garth uncomfortably. "Take me for granted as a man would. I shall never be at ease with you, if you're going to be thanking me at every opportunity!"

"I'll try not to," she said meekly. The darkness swallowed the smile and the shine her eyes bent on him.

"I've lived all my days in a Canadian city back East," she began; "too big a place to be simple; and too small to be finished. I never appreciated the funny side of it until I travelled. You have no idea of the complacency of such a place, the beautiful self-sufficiency of the people; you should hear what a patronizing tone they take toward the outside world.

"We've always been as poor as church mice," she continued in a tone of cheerful frankness. "We live in a huge house that is gradually coming down about our ears; the drawing-room carpet is full of holes; the old silver is shockingly dented and the Royal Worcester all chipped. There are other household secrets I need not go into. People are kind enough to make believe not to notice—even when they get a chunk of plaster on the head.

"Everybody says it's my father's fault; they say he's a ne'er-do-weel; and even unkind things. But he's such a dear boy—" Natalie's voice softened—"as young, oh! years younger than you! And everything invariably goes wrong with his affairs," she continued briskly; "but he is always good-tempered, and never neglects to be polite to the ladies. My mother has been an invalid for ten years. We do all we can for her; but, poor dear! she isn't much interested in us! Can you blame her? And I have half a dozen dear, bad little brothers and sisters. We're all exactly alike; we fight all the time and love one another to distraction.

"A man, the first, fell in love with me when I was eighteen—six years ago," she presently resumed. "Of course I do not count all the dear, foolish boys before that—they say in Millerton that the boys attach themselves to me to finish their education—but that's all foolishness. I'm so very fond of boys! I could laugh and hug them all! They're so—so theatrical! But the man was different; he was fifteen years older than I; and alas! another ne'er-do-weel! He had been a football and a cricketer hero; he was very good-looking in a worn-out, dissipated kind of way. He had gone to the bad in all the usual ways I believe—even dishonesty; though I didn't learn that until long afterward.

were spoken the whole extent of the hideous mistake I had made was revealed to me—why is it we see so clearly then? We went direct from the ceremony to the station, where he boarded his train for the West. I have not laid eyes on him since. His name is Herbert Maby—and that, of course, is my legal name, which I have never used. It was his mother you met in Prince George."

Garth drew a deep breath; and carefully schooled his voice. "Is he alive?" he asked.

"Yes," she said. "My journey is to find him."

"Was it necessary for you to come?" he asked.

"There was no one else," she said. "No one but Mrs. Maby and he and I know of the marriage. There were many reasons—and complicated ones. I do wish to be frank with you; but I scarcely know how to explain. Only one thing is clear to me; I had to come; or never know peace again.

"I have a conscience," she went on presently; "a queer, twisted thing; and with every man that became fond of me, thinking I was free, it hurt me more—though perhaps it did them no real harm. And then there was Mrs. Maby—how can I explain to you about her?"

"I think I understand," Garth put in.

"She has been very kind to me all these years; but it was a kind of tyrannical kindness, too—it was as if she was tying me to her with one chain of kindness after another. And I wished to live my own life! And it seemed to me that the only way in which I could discharge my obligations to her, and win my freedom, was by doing this thing, which she so ardently desires. She believes, you see, that I am the only one who can save him."

Garth muttered something which sounded uncomplimentary to Mrs. Maby.

"But I am really fond of her," Natalie said quickly. "She has a mortal disease," she added; "one must make allowances for that."

"Where is he?" Garth asked.

"His last letter, eight months ago, was post-marked Spirit River Crossing," she said. "We gathered from it that he had a place somewhere near there. We know very little. At first he wrote often and cheerfully; he seemed to be getting on; but later, he moved about a great deal; his letters came at longer intervals; and the tone of them changed. His mother thinks his health has broken down. I am to find out; and to save him, if I can."

There was a long silence here. Garth could not speak for the fear of betraying an indignation which could only have hurt her; and Natalie was busy with her own painful thoughts.

"There is something else," she resumed at last in a very low tone. "I have not yet been quite frank with you—and I do so wish to be! You must not think I am undertaking this purely on his mother's account; for there is a selfish reason too. In the bottom of my heart there is a hope—perhaps it is a wicked hope—but if you knew how this collar has galled me!" She stopped; and then quickly resumed. "I married this man with my eyes open; and I will do my part by him—but if—" her voice fell again—"if it has not helped him; if in spite of my honest efforts to save him, and all the letters I wrote, if he has fallen lower than ever, and has ceased to struggle—then I will consider my part done!"

There seemed to be no more to say. Garth's heart was beating fast; and he was longing to tell her that he understood; and that he loved and admired her for what she had told him, but he could not tell her coldly, and he would not tell her warmly. As for Natalie, she waited breathlessly for his first word; mightily desiring his approval, but too proud to ask it. Finally she could stand the suspense no longer and pride succumbed. It took her a long time to get the question out.

"Are you—are you sorry you volunteered to take me?" she faltered.

"No!" cried Garth in a great voice.

She found his hand in the darkness; and gave it a swift, grateful squeeze. "Good-night!" she whispered; and ran to her stateroom.

Garth, with his pipe and the mighty stillness to bear him company, remained on deck until dawn. In the spirit of the North he discovered something akin to his own soul; the solitude and

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 18.)

Natalie paused, and with the ceasing of her voice the great silence of the North woods seemed to leap between them, thrusting them asunder. Garth's heart for the journey was gone.

"He was returning to Millerton after a long absence," she went on; "his people were well known there. He appeared to be perfectly mad about me; and my poor little head was quite turned. His wickedness was vague and romantic; for no one ever explained anything to me of course; and the idea of leading him back into the paths of righteousness was quite distractingly attractive. I had no one to put me right, you see—but perhaps I wouldn't have listened if I had had.

"I won't weary you with all the silly details of the affair. My cheeks are burning now at the thought of my colossal folly. He won his mother over to his side. He was an only child; and she would have chopped off her hand to serve him. She joined her persuasions to his. He swore if I married him he would go out West, turn over that everlasting new-leaf, and make his fortune. He wanted me to marry him before he went, so that he could feel sure of me. I did balk at that; I thought my word ought to be sufficient; but he and his mother pleaded and pleaded with me. Together, they were too much for me; and so, at last, I gave in. I thought I would be saving him; I thought I loved him—it is so easy for children to fool themselves! I married him."

Natalie paused; and with the ceasing of her voice, the great silence of the North woods seemed to leap between them, thrusting them asunder.

Presently she resumed in the toneless voice of one who tells what cannot be mended: "We were married in Toronto. His mother and the clergyman were the only witnesses. The instant the words

A Story of a Poet's Love and Tribute of Sacrifice

The Thirteenth Sonnet

By BEATRICE REDPATH

ILLUSTRATED BY G. W. L. BLADEN

VINCENT CARRES was one of those fortunate beings who seem destined for success. At college everyone knew instinctively that he would amount to something. It would have been quite absurd to think otherwise. He had all the qualities which were necessary, besides possessing a marvellous capacity for work. It was that, perhaps, more than anything else which I felt would serve him best. Not very much can be achieved without sustained effort. Genius and inspiration . . . well I suppose there are such things, but the man who works seems to go farther in the long run.

The son of a wealthy politician, life had been bountiful to Carres from the very beginning, and there seemed no reason to suppose that it would not continue to be so until the end. Tall, slight, with a pleasant manner and a moderate amount of good looks he was generally popular. We all liked him, partly I imagine because of his consistent good fortune, his air of well-being. That was, all except Burnside. There was no doubt in any of our minds that Burnside was fiercely jealous of Carres. In fact he took no trouble to hide it. He frankly and openly detested him, seldom missing a chance of making some scathing comment whenever Carres' name was mentioned. Of course it was simply a devouring jealousy. He felt that Carres would swim forward to success on an easy tide while he struggled helplessly against adverse conditions. And he was intent on success. It amounted almost to an obsession with him. Strugglingly poor, he was working his way through college with a dogged determination, which in the beginning had commanded a certain amount of respect, but gradually we grew tired of his sullen moods. One after the other, he antagonized the entire class, until he was left pretty much to himself.

After I left college I was away on the other side of the world for a matter of ten years, or more. It was curious to come back to familiar faces again and learn what one's friends had made out of life during that time. It was in a way like going to sleep and finding the calendar pushed on ten years, for I had been too much engrossed simply in living my own life to keep up a sustained interest in what had been going on at home. Of course I had heard scraps of news that had filtered through letters and newspapers, but such reports are never very satisfactory.

It was shortly after my return that I ran across Vincent Carres, and felt a genuine pleasure in meeting him again. From what I gathered from stray remarks he had been very successful. He was insistent that I should come down to his country place for the week end and meet his wife and I felt quite eager to do so.

"You remember Burnside at college," he said just as we were parting, "well, he's my secretary. Quite a useful one too."

I exclaimed in genuine astonishment, remembering Burnside's old hatred for Carres. It was distinctly curious.

"Poor devil," Carres went on to say, "he was absolutely at the end of his tether. I ran across him one day on the street. He was literally starving. I never thought he would turn out to be any use, but he saves me no end of trouble one way and another. Answers letters and sees uninteresting people . . . not much of a job, but better than starving."

It seemed utterly incongruous. I remembered Burnside's old enmity for Carres, and I did not imagine that this would in any way lessen it. What irony to be forced into such a position! But I could not feel any particular pity for Burnside. He had been too thoroughly unpleasant. Almost I pitied Carres for having to have such an individual under his roof. But perhaps he did not notice the other man's ill feeling towards himself, or perhaps Burnside had learned that sullenness did not pay towards the hand that fed you.

I discovered Carres' house at Meeds to be a marvellous old place with red roofs and grouped chimneys and long sloping eaves. Wide lawns stretched down to a winding river while along the borders daffodils flamed like a thousand candle fires. There was an aged gardener raking the paths and the tinkle of his rake seemed to scrape against the silence. There was peace here and ample time for living, and I breathed a sigh of envy. As I had always supposed he would, Carres had received from life its undiminished best.

His own pleasure in the place was genuinely simple and unaffected, but I could see that more than anything else he was absorbed in his work.

"Carres and Burnside went off early in the evening, to go over some manuscript, and I was left with Madeleine Carres."

He was bringing out another book shortly, and he seemed almost to grudge a moment away from his desk. The habit of work had grown upon him. He could not help it, he was driven forward by something from within that would not allow him to rest and enjoy all that life had afforded him. Meeting Madeleine Carres I realized more than ever that life had given to him without stint. She was a tall, slender woman who walked with a swaying movement that was all grace and charm. Her eyes were large and gray and fringed with stiff black lashes which gave them an extraordinary star-like quality. They shone big and dark in the slightly pale oval of her face. She greeted me with a soft slurring voice in a manner that was slightly distant, a trifle aloof. She struck me as being difficult to know, there was almost a shade of coldness in her manner.

It was only that evening when she sang to us after dinner in the long airy music room that I recognized her marvellous voice. Madeleine Simon of course! Everyone on two continents had heard of Madeleine Simon, even I had heard of her from the other side of the world, and remembered having once heard her sing. Apparently she had quite willingly given up her career to marry Carres. I wondered, as I sat listening to her, if she had ever regretted it. Carres, so wrapped up in his work, scarcely seemed to be the man for her.

BURNSIDE came into the room just as she had finished, to speak to Carres, and greeted me with a shade of surprise. I found him very much changed. It was only too apparent that life had rolled over him with all the crushing force of a steam roller. I felt that he must bitterly resent my seeing him in his present position, especially if he remembered how in the past he had spoken of Carres. He must most bitterly resent the contrast between his fortune and that of Carres. He had become retiring in manner, almost self-deprecating, as though continually aware of his inferiority. At least that was how he appeared at first. Later I began to see that he had in reality not changed very much. He was merely trying to disguise the old jealousy. Watching him as he spoke to Carres, I still felt that it seethed within. Carres and Burnside went off early in the evening to go over some manuscript, and I was left with Madeleine Carres. She returned to the piano and began to play softly while I leaned back in my chair taking as much pleasure from looking at her as from listening to the music. I spoke of her cruelty in robbing the world of her voice to bestow it solely upon Carres, and she laughed lightly, and then on a sudden grew more serious.

"Happy women don't need careers," she said as she swept the keys with her long, slim hands. "The happy women are the women you don't hear about."

"And so in future we are not to hear of you," I said, wondering a little whether she was actually happy. One could learn very little about her actual feelings. She seemed to be continually throwing up barriers behind which she hid herself.

"No, you will not hear of me, but you will hear more and more of Vincent," she said, letting her hands fall into her lap. "You went to college with him, of course, so I suppose you are not surprised to find out how much he has accomplished already. He has a wonderful mind, and he works, oh how he works! There is no end to it. He never seems to tire. He seems to me like an exhaustless machine that cannot stop. If he hadn't such a splendid constitution, I would be afraid that he would break down from overwork."

"I suppose Burnside helps him quite a lot," I said. "He also used to be a beggar for work at college. I'm surprised that he hasn't done more. He was so determined in those days that he would succeed. He was so sure of himself."

She shook her head, and for a moment a slightly pitying expression crossed her face. She seemed for a moment softened.

"Poor David," she said, and I was surprised for an instant at her use of his Christian name. But of course it was only natural, seeing that he and Carres were old friends. "He is one of those people who are doomed, I'm afraid, to stand by and see other people get all the good things of life . . . all in fact that he himself desires and could never, never have."

I looked at her curiously for a moment, wondering just how much she intended to say.

"It must lead to bitterness of spirit," I said, still wondering a little.

"No," she said, "with some natures it might . . . but not with David. I think he has grown used to it. One can even grow used to ill fortune in time."

I wondered a little at her lack of perception. That was not how I had read Burnside, unless he had greatly changed. From the little I had seen of him since my arrival, I thought there was still the old brooding antagonism towards Carres. But perhaps I was mistaken. She surely should know, living under the same roof. Perhaps he had resigned himself to the inevitable with a good grace and I was merely hearing the echoes of the past. For his own sake I hoped so. Bitterness is not pleasant fare to feed upon.

I went down to Meeds several times that summer, and then there came a disruption in my own affairs, and it was actually two years before I heard anything of the Carres, and then it was in a fashion to leave me shocked, stunned, aghast! Vincent and Madeleine Carres were drowned together while crossing from Naples to Palermo in one of those wretched little packet boats plying their trade between the two ports. There had been a violent storm, and the boat to which the Carres had entrusted their lives had foundered. Nothing much was heard in detail of the disaster. The public, like myself, were left simply dazed by the fact that they had been drowned.

From the reports I read in the different papers I realized that Carres was much of a figure in his own particular world. I had not realized previously to what an extent. There were long paragraphs extolling his wonderful brain, his marvellous energy, the amount of his achievement, the amazing amount of work which he had done in a brief number of years. It was hard to reconcile myself to the fact that he was dead and that Madeleine Simon also was dead, that her beauty was gone, perished forever, and that marvellous voice which had thrilled and charmed and delighted so many was forever silent. Such a shocking waste of life angered one at the casualness of fate, at the very idea that such a catastrophe could occur. It seemed an inexcusable dispensation of Providence, an irreparable loss which nothing could justify. And then following swiftly upon the tragedy, before the public had had time to forget to exclaim over the disaster, came the sonnets, exquisite verses in which Carres made imperishable the love that he bore his wife. It was a marvellous monument, an epitaph without parallel. The sonnets were as though carved in marble, they would make the same of Madeleine Carres ring through the ages. They almost made one forget to brood over the horror of the tragedy since by it had come such a revelation of genius.

They refuted the fact which I had always dimly believed, that Carres' work had been the real love of his life. I had never felt quite certain that there was a great love in Carres' life. He seemed always consuming himself, burning up the fire within him with his ardor for work. But the sonnets denied any such theory. Witherton, as Carres' publisher, was all jubilation over the finding of the sonnets. I dropped in to see him one day in his office in Sloane street and found him keyed up to a pitch of enthusiasm.

"It's the summit of his career," he said, picking up the little volume which lay upon his desk, "these will be remembered when everything else that Carres did will be forgotten. They are exquisite . . . they are inspired!"

"You think Carres had genius," I said meditatively, "I always thought it was just a super-human faculty for work. It seemed to absorb him to the exclusion of everything else in the world."

"These weren't done without genius," Witherton said, "no amount of work could accomplish things like this unless there was a spark of the divine fire within."

"He seemed too absorbed to be capable of a great passion," I said, still lingering over the subject.

"H'm," mumbled Witherton over his pipe stem, "he didn't wear his heart on his sleeve perhaps. He was a bigger man than even the world gave him credit for being. These sonnets go to prove it."

"At any rate, he had an excellent subject for the sonnets," I said. "Madeleine Carres was a very beautiful woman," and I lost myself for a moment in the remembrance of her charm. Witherton recalled me by speaking suddenly.

"I think you said that you knew that man Burnside. Went to college with him, didn't you? Curious duck. I wonder if you could do something to help me. We are bringing out a biography of Carres, and I want to get at some minor points, but I couldn't get a thing out of the man. I ran down to see him, he's still living in the house, indexing the library I believe, but he's like an oyster as far as Carres is concerned. He won't talk. Perhaps he might talk to you. What do you say to running down some day and seeing what you can get out of him. I'll give you a note of some of the points I would like to have cleared up."

I told Witherton that I would do so, but knowing Burnside, I did not imagine that I would have much success. Still I was rather glad of the excuse to run down to Meeds and see the man, for I was curious to see how he would have taken the finding of the sonnets. I rather imagined that he would not be able to conceal his rancor from me. They would be the bitterest blow of all. I began to feel sorry for Burnside. After all, the beggar at the feast is not a particularly enviable position, and as far as Burnside was concerned, there did not seem to be even a crumb to fall to his lot.

THERE was an air of miscellaneous disorder about the house at Meeds the day that I went down, very different to the last time that I had been there. The atmosphere was that in which orderly living had come to a sudden stop, where the servants are without guidance and tasks are left undone. I looked around the room in which Burnside had been sitting at a large desk and saw the bloom of decay on tables and mantelpieces. Life after all was a queer proceeding I thought. The Carres, who had all that life could give, apparently, swept away in the very midst of enjoyment and success, while a man like Burnside, who had nothing especially to hold him to life, remained behind. Too queer to think about, the ordering of Providence. One could only vaguely hope that there was some sense and reason back of it all.

I looked at the book shelves which climbed to the high ceiling and remarked to Burnside on the amount of reading which Carres had apparently done.

"Yes, there was no limit to his energy," he responded in rather a disparaging manner, "it was his chief characteristic. He had notes for a dozen volumes or more. If he had lived, one could not say where he would have stopped."

"If he had lived, the verses would not have been found," I said, "and after all they are what counts. As far as I personally am concerned, all the rest of his work might be put in the fire and not be missed. Of course, I daresay everyone doesn't feel just as I do. I suppose," I said, curious as to his reply, "that the sonnets took you as much by surprise as anyone."

"I don't think I am ever much surprised," he said slowly, "at a thing of that sort. It's not easy to sum up anyone's possibilities. I always believe," he went on in introspective tones, "that each one of us has genius if only he can discover the proper inspiration. Only, unfortunately, there are few of us who ever do," he added, turning to look at me with an ambiguous expression.

So that was the manner in which he consoled himself for his obscure place in life. The inspiration had not come to him, otherwise he might have been as famous as Carres. It was at least a comfortable theory. Perhaps it took the edge off his bitterness.

"We can't all of us be poets," I said to further conciliate him. "Anyway, it wouldn't do. Even genius requires an audience."

Inevitably, he delved into generalities whenever I broached the subject of the sonnets. Otherwise he appeared to be quite willing to speak of Carres. I could see that the subject of the sonnets was bitterly displeasing to him. He resented their existence, he resented them to the point of passion. That much I learned by his steady silences, by his marked unwillingness to make any allusion to them whatever. I felt that he would not allow himself to speak of them at all lest he should give vent to the fury of jealousy that seethed within him. The rest of Carres' work did not count apparently. He tossed it aside with a wave of his hand. But the sonnets . . . there was genius without question. He could not lessen their pure beauty by any words of scorn. And so he left them alone. He ignored them. These strange cloistered characters who live shut up within themselves, what queer passions they so often conceal under a disguise of mildness!

"In those ashes I saw the death of ambition, of wealth, of fame, of everlasting recognition from the world."

I came in that evening from a prowl about the grounds, to find Burnside standing with his back to the door of the long drawing room, lost in contemplation of a small portrait which hung against a narrow strip of black velvet on the gray wall. I saw instantly that it was a portrait of Madeleine. As he turned about with a hint of embarrassment in his manner, I saw his face and a sudden swift and amazing intuition swept through me. It astounded me, it left me perfectly aghast at what was so plainly revealed in his face. There was no disguising it. Burnside's narrow face was positively illumined by an inner radiance. I was embarrassed myself at such an utter revelation, and turned to look at the painting on the wall.

It was quite extraordinarily life-like. The gray eyes were calmly meditative, the lips curved slightly as though Madeleine were just a shade amused by life. It gave one the impression that she had been always an onlooker, more aloof even than I myself had fancied her in the few times I had seen her. The painter had caught more than a passing resemblance.

"She was a very beautiful woman," I said to the silent figure at my elbow.

He sighed an assent to my words.

"She was more than that," he said after a brief pause, "she was a wonderful woman."

"But cold," I said, "I cannot somehow conceive of her as being the recipient of the sonnets. She was like a marvellous statue. Even her voice lacked feeling. It was as clear as crystal and with just as much warmth."

I saw the color flare into his cheeks. He took a few steps away and gave an impatient shrug to his shoulders. His manner was always brusque, almost uncouth, and at present it was almost more markedly so.

"Decidedly," he said with a note of absolute disdain in his voice, "she was not a woman to revel in emotion. She did not steep herself in sensation as so many women do. She was restrained if you like, if you mean that she did not run over with a cheap and silly sentimentality. She abhorred anything of the sort. She did not condescend to walk in the ruck of emotion. She was as distant as a star . . . and as beautiful and mysterious," he said with a sudden deepening of tone.

He was positively uplifted. I had never heard him say so much in all the years that I had known him. His moroseness had fallen from him. He was a different creature. Curious, I thought, this melancholy figure a worshipper at the shrine of the beautiful Madeleine. No wonder he did not wish to speak of the sonnets, no wonder, indeed! Even in death Carres had made her so supremely his. What a life this man must have led, in the very glare of the Carres' romance, conscious as he must have been all the time of the intensity of their love for one another. Poor devil! This was something very different to the old jealousy. That had been engulfed long since, swept quite away, drowned in the very sea of this new bitterness. I no longer wondered at his jealousy or felt it to be any reproach. He would not have been human if he had not bitterly resented the appearance of the sonnets. To Carres, the fame, the applause of multitudes, the love, the glamour, the romance . . . to this man nothing but a pale and formless dream.

HOW the discovery of the sonnets must have tortured him anew. Even after death the world must ring with the story of that great love, with the romance which he had watched all those years, brooding in silence and loneliness of spirit. I felt curiously sorry for him. What lives there are I thought and how little one knows! Great passions abroad under such strange disguises. A shabby uninteresting looking man, a man sullen and morose to a marked degree and beneath what a flame of passion, what depths of desire. I remembered the words that Madeleine Carres had said to me once concerning him . . . that he was of the kind who must stand by and see others get all that he desired. Had she known then? I remembered at the time that I had wondered just all she meant to convey but had pushed the idea aside as too absurd to contemplate. How he must have suffered in his proximity to their love. I could only think of him as a gray moth circling about the very flame that singes its wings.

I was intent on writing down some notes at the large desk in the library which Burnside had placed at my disposal the following morning, when a light breeze from the open window fluttered some sheets of paper to the floor. I stooped to pick them up, and in doing so saw that one of them was a verse the opening line of which seemed vaguely familiar. I read on wondering where I had seen it before, until I realized to my complete amazement that it was one of the sonnets . . . but one which I had not seen. It was the rhythm that was familiar . . . not the words. I laid it down on the desk but continued to read it over in increasing surprise, startled by the fact that lay so clearly before me. It was copied in Burnside's handwriting, I recognized the sprawling capitals, the peculiar flourish to the letters. Why had he withheld this sonnet? Had he withheld others besides? I re-read the lines and found them even more delicately beautiful than the sonnets which had been published. Of course it must be included in the next edition. No matter what the man's feelings might be in the matter, this was definitely dishonest. Then, as I sat there, the verse before me, I saw that Burnside was standing in the doorway, an enigmatic expression in his eyes. I looked towards him steadily and a deep flush suffused his face. He took a quick step forward into the room and then paused, uncertain, hesitating.

"What does this mean?" I asked him showing

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 59.)

A Story of War's Tragedy, Illumined by Youthful Love

"KIA PONO TONU"

By FRANCES AMHERST

ILLUSTRATED BY J. F. WHITE

THEY sat against a bank of poppies, a man and girl, that August of 1917. Above their heads the young wheat waved and at their feet stretched undulating fields of crops, and sheep pasture. A stone's throw away ran "the second most important railway in France," up which one so often cheered the smiling men in khaki or met those silent forms in gray blankets that gray cars with red crosses brought down the line, to be cared for at "No. 1 Can."

Far off a flock of sheep were feeding. At this distance they were like a soft white cloud, moving up the valley. The Camiers gun school was silent, the bees hummed loudly and the sea-birds called behind the dunes.

The girl broke the silence, "When those sheep reach the sky-line we must go back to the base."

The man's answer was not in words, his right hand turned the girl's beautiful head towards him as it lay in the hollow of his arm, they looked into each other's eyes, and with a despairing fierceness, kissed. The girl gave a little shaky laugh, "You had one only yesterday, you know!" "It's a long time between drinks in this war, dear!" said the man, with a touch of grim humor through his passion.

From the very jaws of death these two children were forced to snatch at love, love that would have been their due in the days before the Sacrifice of Youth, before the Altar of the Bloody Ditch snatched greedily at all that was beautiful and young. The girl from her white vine-covered home by Lake Ontario, and the boy from the Land of the Black Swans were equally part of that Sacrifice.

"Oh! You have the Southern Cross even on your buttons," she said, making this discovery when her face was very near his own. "And the ferns on my collar badge," he replied, "you ought to see them in New Zealand, up to the saddle-bow."

She asked him for the translation of the Maori words on his badge, "Kia Pono Tonu"; "Ever faithful, ever true," the boy's face flushed, "like I told you yesterday."

Yesterday they had stolen an hour of glorious life! On Army horses (shades of King's R. and O!) had they galloped along the sands till they were miles away from that town of tin huts and pain, away from where the salt wind blew through the stunted pines and wheeling gulls called raucously over the receding tide. Together they had watched the lights come out in Paris Plage and the twin "Phares" signal to the Channel ships, that carried men to "Blighty." But the Phantom Town had faded into the sunset and to-day was one day nearer when orders for "up the line" would come to the N.Z.I.B.D.

The man's head was cradled in the girl's arms, she bent over him with a maternal tenderness.

"I could sleep here," muttered the man, his lined and sun-baked face relaxed. "Do go to sleep, I'll watch the time," said the girl. She glanced at their bicycles in the tangle of flowers by the hedge, and down the hard white road, where at any moment marching men, an A.S.C. truck or a Staff car (for this was Haig's road to the front) might steal their few moments of peace. His thin brown hand and the dogged looking little wrist watch that had seen Suvla Bay, caressed her neck where the stiff C.A.M.C. collar left a merciful "V."

Life gave her, in those few moments, the strongest draught of happiness it would offer her. Agonizingly she watched the sheep feed up the hill, the moving cloud had already reached the horizon, a coldness fell upon her, the sun had left the dunes.

The man stirred on her stiff arm, "My sweet woman, have I been sleeping all this time?"

The little kit was packed, his new issue of spoon, fork and tin, the bicycles wheeled through the soft sand to the road.

They were late. Matron's light was out in her tin hut as they passed. A lingering touch of hands, and the girl slipped in to the hot courtyard, where the tents stood white and ghostly in the still air.

"Where have you been?" said her tent mate, sleepily, "did you miss the tram from Paris Plage? You are on A Ward to-morrow and there'll be amputations to prepare."

PART TWO

THROUGH the crowded dining-tent, where "tin cow" was served in tin jugs and the flies settled on the limp salad that disguised the bully-beef, came a little perspiring orderly who whispered to the Sister, "A New Zealand h'officer to see you, Sister, he's been looking everywhere and says he's only got a moment." Something leaped in Sister's eyes and died, and the Fear fell upon her.

She excused herself and went through the crashing room, down the duck-walk to Sisters' Quarters.

There he stood, Bob's rein over his shoulders, his insouciant hat at its usual angle, his thin face just a little anxious as he watched the door, but not betraying in attitude or face his consuming impatience.

"Self-control," thought the girl, what had first attracted her towards him in that little world of Etaples, where all was iron control—or license.

He thrust a velvet case into her hand, "See what the boys have given me," and a chunky little travelling clock of London's most practical make, its bird-cage-like protection heavy over its luminous dial, stared at her. "You're going up," she said through stiff lips, "when?"

"To-morrow at seven a.m." Friends came trooping out of the dining-tent, there was laughter, and sugar for Bob, and exclamations over the travelling clock.

But soon, with that tact that friends had in those days, they were left alone to walk down the cinder-path to the road. All her gaiety fell from her, there was nothing to say, and time was so short! She stuffed into his hand the little smiling photograph of herself in civvies, and turned away to hide the tears.

Suddenly went all pretence and the last fragments of self-control. Oblivious of the Sisters' windows, of the Matron's hut or the boys lounging at the doors of the wards, she clung to her man and drank in the blue of his eyes.

Dolls in the back room of a dolls' house seemed the crowded hillside and its men in blue.

Nothing was real but his kiss and the word to the horse as he rode off. Down the cinder path, along the blazing white road to the Base, she watched, before finally relinquishing the sight of him.

The night in her shaky camp bed was torture. While rats squeaked in the courtyard she tossed and turned, envying the men who were spending these last hours at camp with him, comrades closer than any woman could be.

Cocks crowed at last and kitchen huts began to smoke. A bugle sounded "Come away, come away to the war!"

PART THREE.

SPORTS DAY for patients! Big tubs rolled on the floor of the Hut for apple bobbing, apples in this fruitless land, and from British Columbia at that!

A croquet tournament and a pie-eating contest!

Men forgot for a while the throbbing arm with the "toobs" in it, while they watched Sister's coif dipping in the apple tub or the smallest boy from Whitechapel beat the largest Aussie in the Ward at pie-dispatching!

Apart from the throng sat a particularly happy looking lad, a large white ticket at the throat of his blue suit, a comfort bag clutched in his hand, containing all that "Rob All My Comrades" had left in his possession. To him approached Sister and with kind intent to relieve his loneliness, "I see you'll soon be sitting up on a Channel boat with a life preserver round your neck!" Quickly came the response from the little son of Erin, "Shure now, Sister, and I'll soon be sitting up in Ireland with something better round my neck!"

A New Zealand hat at the door, a salute, "Can I speak to you for a minute, Sister?"

His best friend. One look at his face and she knew. "Oh wait! Not here;" At the door they faced the truth, while the smoke from the incinerator blew foully down on them, and shouts of "For he's a jolly good fellow" delighted the ear of the sporting Padre.

"Gone?" the question was unnecessary. She heard him say, "Passchendaele, on the 12th; I came right down to you as soon as they knew at the base."

She heard herself answer, "It was good of you."

"You're going up," she said, through stiff lips. . . When?"

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 58.)

A Sketch Showing the Attractive Force of the Old Home

WE WILL COME BACK.

By M. EUGENIE PERRY

CANADIAN HOME JOURNAL. What a heritage of unrest have our pioneer forefathers left us! We are restless, a restless people of movers-on. Can you not see the restless people picture our restlessness well, in the curious soul following our pioneer down through the generations?

First, when Great-Great-Grandfather and family left, say, Scotland—the Curious Soul, arriving closely upon their departure, is told on enquiry, "They've all sailed for America."

Then dallying somewhat on the way, the Curious Soul braves the Atlantic, to reach the great new land just as the United States of America comes on the map, and the United Empire Loyalists have begun their pilgrimage to the wilderness of the North. "They've all left for Canada," the answer, then.

Following to that staunch little Province, Prince Edward Island; ("The Island," to its inhabitants, who look upon it as a land by itself and quite apart from Canada)—the Curious Soul, a generation later, stands on the shore and propounds the age-old question. But Great-Great-Grandfather has passed on, Great-Grandfather, also, and as for Grandfather and his generous family, "They've all sailed for Canada."

Then to Bruce County, Ontario, the Curious Soul, wearying now of the Great Trek, comes querying, and still the answer sounds: "They've left for Manitoba and the Great Nor'-west."

Perchance the Curious Soul grows tired of us by now, but should it come to seek our children's homes, no doubt 'twill find migration still goes on, the answer then, perhaps, "Follow on to the Peace River Country—the land of furthest West."

An automobile ran smoothly along a road in Bruce County; passing through a beautiful bit of country where abandoned farms were all too many; lovely old houses of brick and stone, falling into decay. Presently the car paused before a senile gate, which was either propped up by, or helping to prop, a decrepit fence; but beyond the gate the staunch old house, having hurled defiance at the elements, for years, stood practically intact. Here and there a pane of glass was shattered; here and there a green shutter swung on one hinge; but the red brick had been laid in days when labor was cheap and laborers honest, and was good for many generations yet.

The driver, a slim, intellectual-looking man of middle age, helped his wife from the car, and together they passed through the tangled weeds of the erst-while drive, and up the steps to the solid front door. Catharine raised the old-fashioned knocker and let it fall, and the sound reverberated hollowly through the empty rooms.

"Sounds as if the ghosts of the house were debating whether or no they should let us in," she said with a shiver.

"The ghosts, if such there are," her husband reminded her, "will be of your own kin, and would surely not forbid your entry. I think you will find the 'Open Sesame' to this cave of fortune, or den of horrors, or whatever you are imagining it, resting serenely in your hand-bag."

She produced the heavy key, which, after some twisting and turning, admitted them to the dusty, musty hall.

Catharine McNair, at forty, was a tall, high-bosomed woman of real Highland type, with wavy black hair, color almost too high, and eyes blue-grey as the misty Highland hills. She looked ambitious, capable of realizing her ambitions, and as if the realization had failed to bring her happiness.

Her husband looked office-tired and world-weary, as he was, taking an enforced rest from his busy Winnipeg law office to prevent a severe break-down. They had been camping in a comfortable cottage on the shores of Lake Huron, and had elected to take a day off and visit Catharine's old home. To spend the whole day with only each other for company, had something of the spice of novelty about it, and they were in a mood of real holiday enjoyment and relaxation.

They glanced first into the room on the left of the hall—the large state parlor, in the days when such a word was permitted. Its chief features were: a large bay window looking onto what had once been a croquet lawn, and a stately mantel above a tilted fire-place.

Behind this room and reached through the back hall was the capacious kitchen.

Standing in the front hall, Catharine gazed up the stairway to the broad empty landing.

"Well, what do you see?" John McNair asked her in an amused voice, "I'll bite."

"Great-Great-Grandfather's clock, the one he brought from Scotland—of course I know it isn't there, it is at my brother's in Winnipeg—but I never before saw this landing without it, and somehow my eyes seem to see it still. Do you suppose a clock has a ghost that hangs around the old accustomed haunts? Perhaps it's the ghost of the old works which had to be replaced years ago."

"When I was quite a girl the old family friend began to grow very rheumatic as to joints and wheezy as to voice. Then it took to striking three times for every once. Imagine being awakened at the witching hour of midnight, by the old clock striking twelve, three times. But this feverish burst of energy was its last great effort—its swan song. One night, one of the big weights fell with a crash that resounded chimney, was presently roaring lustily, the kettle was singing over the spirit lamp, many good things were making their appearance from the basket, and everything seemed so cosy within the room that little recked the McNairs of matters without.

Altogether, it was a most satisfactory picnic (although lacking the crawling insects and smoky tea of the out-door variety), and when the debris was cleared away, Catharine sat down on a cushion, and leaning her head against her husband's shoulder, gazed meditatively into the flames.

"Do you remember," she began her reminiscences, "the good times we used to have in this room in the old days, when you first came to our town as a law-student in Grant's office—the dances, and taffy pulls, and corn-roasts? It seems to me that the youngsters of to-day are much too sophisticated to get out of life the joy which we got, something over twenty years ago. We didn't even despise a barn-raising dance or a hay-ride. Well, each generation to its own variety of pleasure."

Her husband smiled slyly. "Pardon a mere man for venturing to suggest that you take about as much pleasure as the kids in the social doings of our busy town."

Catharine laughed and pinched his ear, "Well," she retorted, "one has to put in the time some way, when one has a husband who spends all his time in money-making, or local politics. My worst night-mare is that I may waken up some morning to find myself a mayoress."

"Now, no puns," he reproved.

"And of course," she went on seriously, "I have to do the best I can for Helen."

"Of course," he agreed; "and that best calls for a good deal of effort from the family money-maker also: but having you to myself for once makes me regret that I don't see more of you. There are days when I doubt if this mad scramble to keep abreast of the times, is the way to get the best out of life."

"I feel a little like that myself, to-day," she admitted. "here in the old house, with the memories of those so-much-less-complex days, crowding us round. Oh, don't you remember the first night you came to the house? We all ran in, breathless from a mad Schottische through the parlor and halls, to find Great-Aunt Bella knitting serenely before the fire; and when we had all gathered round she began the old tale which she never tired of telling, nor we of hearing (to you of course it was quite new). I heard it so often, I can remember almost the very words she used."

"As you know, my dears, when I was young we lived in Prince Edward Island. In those days people believed in generous-sized families (not like the miserable two or three which the young women make such a fuss about nowadays). My father had seven boys and six girls, and to make the numbers even he adopted an orphan girl, and her name was Kitty McCrea. Seven brothers I had and seven fine upstanding, God-fearing lads they were, going their ways to church every Sunday, and honoring their father and their mother as the Bible bade them; so lived they always—a credit to all who called them kin.

"All, that is, except John Ainslie McNair; and how he lived and how he died, I would indeed I knew. There was no real harm in John Ainslie, but he was aye the ringleader in any mischief which seven healthy boys could think up; and, somehow, he seemed unfitted for the quiet life of that country place; and when he cast his eyes on Kitty McCrea, she flouted him with laughter and jest, and tossing her black curls, said she'd wed no country bumpkin, but a city man who could give her silks and satins and a coach and a pair."

"Then one day up rose John Ainslie in his wrath, and vowed he would fare away to some city of the South, and no word should they hear from him till he had made a fortune and proved himself a man among men of the world. So he went, and sent no word; but once there came from a city of the South, a box addressed to Malcolm McNair, and in it my father found many books (of which he had aye too few for his taste), and a dress for mother, and a dress for me, and a dress for Kitty McCrea. And after that for many a day, Kitty watched the road, with wistful eyes (blue-grey as the Highland hills through the Scotch mists of which my Grandfather

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 57.)

AS IT WAS IN THE GOOD OLD DAYS

However motors and aeroplanes may come and go, they cannot quite take the place in winter-time of the time-honored sport of coasting.

through the house; and no amount of effort could ever persuade the old time-keeper to speak again."

TO the right of the hall was the big family sitting room—opening at the back through folding doors into the dining-room. The sitting-room also contained a large fire-place, which was placed corner-wise against the walls between the hall and dining-room. It had been boarded up when furnaces first came into use, but about the time Catharine was growing up, fire-places became fashionable again, and this one, in common with many others, was opened up for use once more.

"Oh, Jack," cried Catharine, "do you not remember how we used to sit in front of the fire and tell ghost stories? I wonder if we could find some wood and start a fire; the room seems so damp and I'd love to sit here and have our tea."

"It looks like a shower," her husband answered, "so perhaps it would be a good idea. I might run the car into the open shed I saw behind the house, and bring the cushions in for us to sit on."

They brought in their tea basket, and found some old boards and chips with which to build a fire; and before their arrangements were completed the storm had arrived. The rain pelted the windows and the wind raced through the big maples and circled noisily around the house, banging the broken shutter and rattling the shattered glass. But in the west room there were no damaged panes, and the fire, though sulky at first, owing to the long disuse of the

Hostels for Newcomers

Splendid types of British womanhood are being brought to Canada under the auspices of the Department of Immigration and Colonization from the British Isles, and are being placed in positions in various parts of the Dominion. On arrival at the Canadian ports they are met by officials of the Immigration Department and women's organizations and accommodated in the various women's hostels until suitable employment is provided.

MONTREAL

TORONTO

ST. JOHN

WINNIPEG

REGINA

HALIFAX

An Article On Our Flower Friends That Make Summer Beauty Everywhere

PLANTS are living, breathing things, and as such, they have a personal influence upon the atmosphere of the home. You know that indoor plants are not exactly as homelike quite different from the which can feel in your mind, especially beautiful ornaments. They are like a companion, the other way round. As a matter of fact, it goes without saying that this. It is because of a demand for one that it is important to have them growing wherever it is convenient indoors. There is the same question of responsibility and interest between you and your plants that there is between you and any human being with whom you come into intimate friendly contact. Your association with all plant life must be mutual. You must give your thought and wisdom and care and effort for the life of your plant, and in return a plant will give you beauty and fragrance and joy. A beautiful peachblow vase may give you a great deal of interest, but it demands nothing from you for its growth and loveliness and for that reason it cannot, except in a very vague way, hold your interest, because interest must be a living thing, a thing that grows with the demands made upon it.

Take, for instance, the cut flowers that we buy by the dozen or by the box from the florist's. They may be full of charm and may add just the needed

The bell-shaped Gloxinia, a pot of which is seen below, makes an excellent house plant, and well repays by its friendly beauty the little care needed for its cultivation.

The Cyclamen, shown above, is a very decorative flower for the home: it is descended from wild flowers which the country children call "Shooting Stars" because they blossom so quickly after the arrival of the spring sun, and because they seem to shoot to earth like a rocket with a trail of splendor behind them.

touch of color and fragrance to our rooms. But somehow, with all their richness, with all their highly cultivated beauty, the product of years of professional experiment and care, they lack that peculiar intimacy, that friendliness which is one of the most lovable qualities of the home-grown plant. That flower that we ourselves have sown or planted, tended, watched in each stage of its development and unfolding up to the time of blossoming, has acquired an individuality that no outside product can possess. In the same way, the wildflowers that we used to gather when we were children were invested with the special halo that clings to things eagerly waited for, lovingly sought. Had the pleasures of the bunch of arbutus that we saw today from a vendor on the city street in early spring, lies in the fact that it recalls so poignantly the times when we wandered through the woods in search of the tiny pink and white blossoms, half hidden among last year's leaves, exquisite starlike faces whose tender perfume well rewarded our careful quest.

Rooms without growing plants are never really perfectly satisfactory in spite of the change of furniture from one place to another, its readjustment with fresh color from time to time. There must always be moments when the inanimate room bores or stifles one, but never a time when a plant lifting up its branches for the blossoming-time will not win your response, your desire to aid it, your joy in its triumph.

And as a matter of truth, they are one of the best means of ethical training that can be imagined, because you cannot neglect your plant and have it live, overfeed it one day and starve it the next, you cannot treat it badly and hope for forgiveness. It demands, in fact, a very high ethical standing. You will find this out if you ever put means in the keeping of a child; plants and little animals can do more to train growing children to a real understanding of generosity, patience and devotion than all the precepts ever uttered.

OUR FRIENDS, THE PLANTS

THEY are in no sense of the word an expensive luxury, but they do demand thought and care. Of course, blossoming plants can be brought from the florist, and with no more care than an occasional watering be made to last a week or two, but plants raised from seeds, bulbs or clippings require a continual, intelligent nursing. They are as sensitive as children to cold draughts, must be fed regularly, washed occasionally and their little peculiarities given considerable attention, but they more than repay for any expenditure of time.

Plants out of doors experience great changes of temperature, of light and of shade. Those in the house to be healthy need similar variation to keep them in the best condition. Their location in a room must be changed occasionally, now a bit of quiet light, then a bath of direct sunshine. They must have plenty of fresh air, yet not be left in a draught; light also is a necessity to their being.

They can do without direct sun, but never without plenty of light, for without light the foliage will be but a sickly, pale green and the plant lack vitality enough to produce blossoms. The leaves must be washed occasionally with soap suds and rinsed with clear water to keep them free from dust and parasites. They require an annual repotting to allow fuller root growth and to provide fresh soil from which they may feed. At such times the old soil should be removed carefully so that the roots will not be injured, and fresh, lightly-sifted soil added. Unless this attention is given them they will become pot-bound, too firmly packed for growth, the earth must be left open and porous, not allowed to become sour.

When plants are taken up from the garden in the fall, the earth must be left clinging to the roots as much as possible, for then it is sweet and full of vitality; but after the plants have lived in the house for some time the soil must be replenished or else enriched by some of the many excellent plant foods placed on the market. The best soil for indoor plants consists of undecayed, organic matter like leaf mold, mixed with a little sand. The earth must never reach to the top of the pot, but enough space be left to hold water and an occasional application of plant food.

MOST people water their house plants too generously. More of these beautiful, living plant friends are lost through too much water than too little. When they are growing rapidly, of course, they require more frequent watering than at their resting times. The condition of the soil at the top gives indication of their need. When the soil is dry it pulls away from the sides of the jar, then water should be applied until it runs through into the saucer. No more water should be given until the plant is dry again. This holds good with nearly all plants with the exception of ferns, which need a continual moisture, though not a soggy condition.

Among the plants suitable for home growing the cinerarias are to be heartily recommended, for they are of an infinite variety of gay colors, easily grown, very hardy, and, being annuals, blossom the first season from seeds. Each plant sends up many stems bearing flowers which reach, under proper care, to a circumference of from seven to nine inches. Most of the colors are crude and primeval-looking, with few half tones to soften their barbaric splendor. Their jaunty gaiety is much in demand to enliven dark rooms, give beauty to a window, brighten a sick-room table. Many good hybrid mixtures can be had at only five cents a package. Hybrid gigantea, a large showy species, is, as the name indicates, of unusual size. It is popular for greenhouses. Grandiflora stellata, a star cineraria, is one of the most popular species. There are large-flowered white, dark blue, azure blue, pink, scarlet, shaded and rimmed varieties, standing well above deeply-veined beautifully shaped leaves.

The bell-shaped gloxinias, startling of form and coloring, make magnificent house plants. One package of mixed seeds will fill the house with Oriental color. There are also wonderful tuberous plants of dwarf habits, which thrive accommodately indoors. Their trumpet blossoms held aloft on stout stems as though gnome buglers were about to pipe a merry tune upon them, are of every conceivable rainbow shade, from dark wine and deep scarlet to light blue and violet. Sometimes they are white-edged, variously striped, or even spotted finely, like the breast of a thrush. Emperor Frederic is red with a white border; Mt. Blanc, pure white; Emperor William, violet blue with white throat; Defiance, a rich, crimson scarlet. In watering this wonderfully colored plant care must be taken not to wet the leaves, else they will spot and lose much of their beauty.

CALCEOLARIA, a compact, strangely-lobed growth, with orchid-like markings of blossoms, and heart-shaped leaves, is another plant which will thrive willingly in sunny windows and hold its matured flowers for many weeks when placed away from direct light in the centre of a dining table. They look as much like harmless little tiger kittens cuddled peacefully among green leaves as the blossoms of the willows, like soft Maltese kittens scampering up a yellow stem. There are several dwarf varieties as well as many giant ones, all notable for freakishly rich coloring. A tiger-spotted superba and a shrub rugosa are favorites for outdoor growing.

Among the giant-flowered cyclamen, that greatest of all house favorites, may be mentioned the Aigburth crimson, white perfection, the Princess May, a white with rose tip; the lilac, peach blossom, rosy morn and salmon. These names, like the names given by the Indians, being descriptive, need no explanation. There is no limit to the shades of cyclamen to be had, for they range from pure white, through pinks, rose, magentas and cerises to the darkest of wine.

And what can be said in praise of the faithful geranium, that humble flower which blossoms as gaily in an old tin can as in the finest of porcelain jars, that good Samaritan of flowers which goes down to the tenements, filling dull rooms with warm glory of coloring! The red geranium in the kitchen window transforms a kitchen into a living instead of a drudgery room. When all else fails, the geranium, pink or red, is to be had for but few pennies and a trifling amount of care.

Schizanthus wisetonensis, the bridal veil, is much in demand for pot culture and exhibitions. It grows well in greenhouses or in a sunny window. The glossy-leaved dracaena, almost more of a favorite than the rubber plant, will stand apparently any amount of neglect, continue to thrust its wine-colored new leaves above the dark green older ones in a way that makes it seem in blossom. Some with brilliant crimson foliage, suffused with pink and white, make almost as gorgeous a display as blossoming plants.

A cluster of orange blossoms is pictured at the left: under favorable conditions this graceful flower will grow indoors, and though it seldom matures fruit it fills the air with sweet perfume.

The plant shown at the right has a profusion of soft pink blossoms which appear in September: as a rule, it does not attain more than a foot and a half in height.

Economy

IVORY SOAP

IT FLOATS
MADE IN CANADA

99  $\frac{44}{100}$  % PURE

FROM every standpoint Ivory Soap is economical.

It is economical in its cost. No soap so big and so good sells for so little.

It is economical in its all-round bath and toilet use. Special toilet soap is not required in the home where Ivory is used.

It is economical in that it floats. You are reminded to take it out of the water instead of having it sink out of sight and waste away.

The use of Ivory Soap is true economy because it gives you everything you want at the lowest price for which all these essentials can be obtained.

The manufacturers of Ivory Soap also make in Canada the following general household soaps: P and G The White Naphtha Soap, Gold Soap, Pearlina and Sopade, thus enabling the housekeeper to use a Procter & Gamble high quality soap for every purpose.

Two On the Trail

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 7.)

the stillness braced him to deny himself manfully what was not manfully his to have. In the act of relinquishing Natalie, he felt, what he would not have supposed possible, a great, added tenderness for her. Before he went in, his sober cheerfulness had returned; but in the morning he was somehow more mature.

CHAPTER VII.

MARY CO-QUE-WASA'S ERRAND.

AT noon next day the little "Aurora Borealis" was reclining drunkenly on a shoal in the river at the foot of Caliper Island, sixty miles above the Landing, and fifteen below the Warehouse. This had been the place of Captain Jack's gloomy forebodings all the way up. The river spread wide, shallow and swift on either side the island, and neither one channel nor the other would permit their ascent. The "Aurora" was having a little breathing space on the shoal, while Captain Jack and St. Paul, the big half-breed pilot, debated below on what to do.

The three passengers looked on from the upper deck. Natalie and Garth tacitly ignored any change in their relation to-day; and no reference was made to Natalie's story. They seemed, if anything, more friendly with each other; nevertheless Constraint, like a spectre standing between them, intercepted all their communications.

The third passenger was a half-breed woman nearing middle age, clad in a decent black print dress, and a black straw hat, under the brim of which depended a circlet of attenuated, grizzled curls. Her face, like that of all the natives in the presence of whites, expressed a blank, in her case a mysterious blank. She was silent and ubiquitous; whichever way they looked there she was. Captain Jack had mentioned to Garth that her name was Mary Co-que-wasa. The off-hand shrug that accompanied the information, between men, was significant. Garth resented it; and his sympathies were enlisted. He had made several efforts to talk to the woman, only to be received with a stupid shake of the head. He thought she could not speak English. Natalie, more keenly intuitive, took an active dislike to her. "I'm sure she listens to us," she had said.

Meanwhile, preparations were undertaken to hoist the "Aurora Borealis" by main strength up the rapids. The "skiff," as they whimsically termed the steamboat's great, clumsy tender—its official name of "sturgeon-head" was more descriptive—was brought alongside; and a half-mile of hawser, more or less, patiently coiled in the bottom. The end of this rope was made fast on board the steamer, and the skiff, pushing off, was poled and tracked up the rapids with heart-breaking labor, paying out the hawser over her stern as she went. The other end of the rope was made fast to a great tree on the shore above, and the skiff returning, the inboard end was turned about the capstan. Steam was then turned on, and with a great to-do of puffing and clanking, the Aurora started to haul herself up hand over hand, as one might say.

Alas! she had no sooner raised her head than the hawser parted in the middle with a report like a small canon, and she settled dejectedly back on the shoal.

Captain Jack refreshed himself with a pull at the Spring Tonic bottle; and started all over. A newer piece of hawser was produced, and the skiff despatched once more on its laborious errand. The loose end was finally picked up and knotted, and the capstan started again. But no better success followed, as soon as the full strain came upon it, the rope burst asunder in a new place. After this they went around the other side of the island and tried there. Each attempt consumed an hour or more, but time is nothing in the North.

At five o'clock, after the failure of the fourth attempt, Captain Jack threw up his hands, and turned the "Aurora's" nose down-stream. The little boat, which had sulked and hung back in the rapids all day, picked up her heels, and hustled down with the current, like a wilful child that obtains its own way at last.

Garth, in dismay, hastened to Captain Jack.

"Where are we going?" he demanded.

Captain Jack cocked an eye, and said with his air of gloomy fatalism: "The Landing's the only place for me."

Garth became hot under the collar, as he always did in dealing with the pessimistic skipper. "But we're only fifteen miles from the Warehouse!" he cried.

"Might as well be fifteen hundred," said Captain Jack. "For all I can get you there."

"Is there no house anywhere near?" The skipper looked at him with gloomy scorn. "Say, do you think you're in a rural neighborhood?" he inquired.

"I asked you a question," Garth repeated. "Is there any one living near here?"

Captain Jack shrugged. "Sometimes there's breeds at Bear Portage below," he said. "But not in the summer."

"Is there no road?"

"Not what you'd call a road. How would you carry your outfit?"

This was a poser, Garth could not deny. "Where are the breeds in the summer?" he demanded.

Captain Jack flung up his hands. "God knows!" he said. "Pitching somewhere about between the East and the West!"

Garth set his jaw. "Well, there's some way of reaching the Warehouse," he said, "and I'm going to find it. You stop at Bear Portage, as you call it, and I'll see what I can do."

"Sure!" said Captain Jack hopelessly. "As long as you like— But you'll never make it!" he added with an atrabilious eye. "Never in God's world! You better take my advice and get out of the country while you can!"

Garth turned on his heel, and Captain Jack revisited his stateroom for consolation. Here, two shelves at the foot of his berth contained his pharmaceutical stock in ancient, torn and fly-speckled wrappers. He bought every new variety of remedy he heard of with the ardor of a collector. One of his most serious occupations was to lie in bed in the morning, making up his mind what to begin the day on. Endless and ingenious were the combinations he made.

They tied up at Bear Portage and had supper. Afterward, three breed boys with their scent for happenings in the bush, as unerring and mysterious as the buzzard's scent for carrion, turned up from nowhere, and at the same time a fourth came nosing under the bank in a crazy dug-out filled with grass. So soft was the arrival of the last that Garth was not aware of it, until he happened to catch sight of Mary Co-que-wasa deep in a whispered consultation with the paddler. Finding Garth's eyes upon her, Mary, with a hasty word to the boy, embarked, and the canoe's nose was turned up-stream. As a possible means of transport later, Garth called after the boy; but he only paddled the faster. The incident caused Garth a vague uneasiness.

In the other three he found a means, such as it was, of extricating them from their dilemma. He learned through St. Paul, who interpreted, that there was a camp of Indians engaged in cutting wild hay, seven miles off, and that a waggon and team could be got there next morning, to carry them and their goods to the Warehouse. At the mention of seven miles, Garth looked dubiously at Natalie, but she stoutly averred her ability to do it twice if necessary and since nothing better offered, Garth hired the boys to show the way and carry the baggage.

The "Aurora Borealis" presently backed off, and blithely kicking up the water astern, disappeared down the river. Her going out severed their last bond with the world of civilization and henceforth they must fend for themselves in the wilderness. Natalie

Add Raisins and You Add a Chef's Touch

To the Plainest of Plain Foods

THE raisin flavor works a charm that makes plain foods epicurean. It brings "luxury dishes" to your table at only a trifle more than plain foods cost.

Boiled rice is a different food with a few raisins added. So is oatmeal. So are prunes when raisins are stewed with them.

And there are scores of low-cost desserts to which raisins lend a chef's touch.

You are missing good things and a chance to save when you don't use raisins freely.

You miss a fine nutrition also, for raisins furnish 1,560 units of energizing nutriment per pound. More energy than an equal weight of eggs, milk, meat or fish.

So while raisins make foods taste better, they also make them better foods.

Try This "Oatmeal Betty"

2 cups cooked oatmeal    ½ cup Sun-Maid Raisins
4 apples cut up small    ½ cup sugar
   ¼ teaspoon cinnamon

Mix and put in mold. Bake one-half hour. Serve hot or cold with raisin sauce. This will serve five people. And it will tell you something of the possibilities of raisins.

SUN-MAID RAISINS

Use SUN-MAID Raisins always for home cooking. Plump, tender, fleshy, juicy and thin-skinned. Made from California's finest table grapes, yet they cost no more than common raisins.

Three varieties: Sun-Maid Seeded (seeds removed); Sun-Maid Seedless (canned without seeds); Sun-Maid Clusters (on the stem). All dealers.

CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATED RAISIN CO.

Membership 10,000 Growers
FRESNO, CALIFORNIA

California Associated Raisin Co.,
Dept. 17, Fresno, Calif.

Please send me, without charge, copy of "Sun-Maid Recipes."

Name _____

Street _____

City _____

Prov. _____

Send coupon for free book, "Sun-Maid Recipes," describing scores of ways to use raisins.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 43.)

What Happened to Ruth

By BEATRICE IMBODEN

Illustrated by WILL GREFÉ

It was Spring on the campus! Fairies had come and suddenly spread over the gray buildings and brown lawns a mystic net interwoven of green and gold, of fragrance and sunlight, of bird twitterings and happy young voices.

But there was no Spring in the heart of a slender, dark-eyed girl crossing the quadrangle. Her sombre expression caught the eyes of a friend.

"Cheer up, Ruthie! Maybe it's not so bad as you think," laughed this rosy-cheeked maiden, slipping her arm in Ruth's. But there was no answering railery.

"Dot, what's the use of it all?" passionately burst out Ruth. Dot looked startled.

"I'm going to give up—quit college! I'm young, alive—I don't want to grind away three more dull years!"

"Why—gracious me!—college is just the place where one can have good times!" began Dorothy.

"You know it is not—for us!" Ruth repressed her almost sternly. "Let's be frank, for once. You and I don't have good times. We just study and go to poky lectures and slip into the back seats at concerts so no one will notice our clothes, and study some more and go to classes. And that's all. No, I'm going to stop! I'll go to the city next year and work. Maybe I can save some money."

"For what?" asked Dot, ready for any revelation now.

"For clothes! Of course! What do you suppose I'm haranguing about?" jerked out Ruth. "Did you think I meant for a cemetery lot? Though I might as well be d-dead!" She turned her head away quickly as Dot squeezed her arm in silence. "I wouldn't care if I could have just one new Spring suit—I wouldn't ask for many clothes!"

"Oh," murmured Dot, knowingly. For a couple were approaching—a tall, laughing boy with an attractive girl who wore jauntily a pretty Spring costume. She greeted Ruth and Dorothy pleasantly, but a bit patronizingly.

"Why, hello Ruth!" exclaimed the boy. "Say, I had a letter from home yesterday. Want to hear the news?"

"I—I haven't time now," Ruth hurried on, dragging Dot with her.

"Why won't you let Alex talk to you?" reproached Dot. "He's a dear—and about the most popular boy in the University."

"In my old blue suit—and Grace Morrison all togged out?" demanded Ruth icily. "A lovely contrast!"

"She isn't as pretty as you," declared Dot with warmth. But Ruth's gloom was compliment-proof.

"Well, goodbye, I'm going upstairs to study," she said as they reached their boarding place. In her room at last, the books lay untouched. She was wistfully recalling a moonlight night last August when she and Alex had planned to spend this Spring together.

They were from the same little town and for years Alex had sent her wonderful valentines and deserted his fine, big home on the hill to spend evenings in Ruth's rather thread-bare little sitting room, where her school-teacher father and dear mother made him welcome. But in Millersville it had been different! There every one knew and loved the Allison—clothes didn't count. At college they did, it seemed.

"I don't think all those pretty, happy sorority girls are snobs," Ruth told herself gloomily. "It's just that I'm strange—they don't know me and my plain clothes make me awkward and shy."

And it certainly was not Alex's fault—he had tried his loyal best to take her into the circle where his good looks, good clothes and good car had quickly placed him. But after one or two unhappy evenings, when Ruth had suffered agonies in her plain white graduating frock, among butterfly girls in tulle and silk, she had refused his invitations. Finally, cut by her refusals, he had ceased to see her.

"I don't care!" muttered Ruth. And to prove it she flung herself on the couch and sobbed—

Saturday, Ruth's Aunt Susanna ran down from the city to see her.

"She's wonderful!" Ruth told Dot. "Uncle Harvey lost his money three years ago but she manages to dress even better than before. She's so clever!"

Aunt Susanna proved chic and fashionable—and wise. She attended a lecture or two, visited classes, and eyed Ruth critically.

"Where are the parties and athletic events and such?" she suggested. "I thought college nowadays was one glad dream for you young folks."

"Not for me," said Ruth shortly.

"Well, well, I must look into this when you come to visit me in June," and Aunt Susanna deftly turned the subject.

